A marriage by banns, where the publication of banns was in the name of John, instead of Bower, the christian name of the man, both parties being at the time of the solemnisation of the marriage aware of such misdescription, was pronounced null. Midgley (f. c. Wood) v. Wood, 30 L. J., Mat. 57.

A marriage by banns, in the publication of which one of the christian names of the man, a minor, was designedly concealed, and which was solemnised in such imperfect name, is void under 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, ss. 7, 22, the judicial committee being of opinion that the circumstances of the man omitting to sign his full christian names in the register indicated his participation in the previous false publication. Tongue v. Tongue, 1 Moore, P. C. 90.

In the publication of banns the woman's name was published as Morumild instead of Wormald. When in the vestry of the church, before the solemnisation of the marriage, the clergyman called out the names from the banns-book in the presence of both parties, the woman thereupon stated that her name was Wormald, and it was so entered by the clergyman in the marriage register:—Held, an undue publication of banns, under 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 22, and the marriage pronounced null. Wormald v. Neale, 19 L. T. 93. And see col. 640.

—— Minor.]—It is doubtful whether the marriage of a minor can be declared null and void by reason of undue publication of banns if there is no parent or guardian whose consent or dissent can be given to such marriage. Holmes v. Simmons, 37 L. J., Mat. 58; L. R. 1 P. 523; 18 L. T. 770; 16 W. R. 1024.

—— Mistake as to Time.]—The due publication of banns of marriage was completed on the 1st July, and the marriage took place on the 1st October following. The 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 9, requires marriages by banns to be solemnised within three months after the complete publication of banns:—Held, that the marriage was valid, it not being found that the parties knowingly and wilfully intermarried without due publication of banns. Reg. v. Clarke, 16 L. T. 429; 15 W. R. 796; 10 Cox, C. C. 474.

Re-marriage after Divorce.]—A wife having obtained a decree dissolving her marriage with her husband, subsequently re-married him. The second marriage was celebrated after publication of banns, in which she was described by her name of marriage, she having in the interval between the decree dissolving her first marriage and the celebration of the second usually passed by her maiden name. On an application to annul such marriage by reason of an undue publication of banns:—Held, that a name acquired by marriage can only be superseded by a reputed name in case where the name had been so far acquired by repute as to obliterate the name acquired by marriage. Fendall (otherwise Goldsmid) v. Goldsmid, 46 L. J., P. 70; 2 P. D. 263. And see Chichester v. Mure (f. c. Chichester), col. 659.

Prohibition for Marrying Without Banns.]—A prohibition was granted to a suit in the spiritual court, for marrying without banns or licence, because it was a matter of temporal jurisdiction. Campbell v. Aldrich, 2 Wils. 79.

District Parish—Incumbent Exclusive Right to Celebrate Marriage by Banns.]—An incumbent of a district parish validly constituted under 58 Geo. 3, c. 45 and 59 Geo. 3, c. 134 has an exclusive right to celebrate marriages by banns, between persons both of whom are resident within the district parish. Tuckniss v. Alexander, 32 L. J., Ch. 794; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 8 L. T. 821; 11 W. R. 938.

iii. Licence.

Presumption.]—The factum of marriage, celebrated by a clergyman of the Church of England in 1815, being proved, the maxims semper presumitur pro matrimonio, and omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter acta, which raise the presumption of law that a special licence existed authorising the marriage, can only be repelled by strong, distinct, satisfactory, and conclusive evidence to the contrary, and every reasonable possibility of a fact in favour of the presumption must be rebutted. Piers v. Piers, 2 H. L. Cas. 331; 13 Jur. 569.

The presumptio juris in favour of the existence of a special licence is not sufficiently repelled by the evidence of the bishop of the diocese, thirty years after the factum, that he never granted a licence for the marriage of the parties in question, stating his reasons why he was certain that he never granted such licence. Ib.

The reasonable possibility (not disproved) that the special licence might have been granted by the late bishop, who died a year and a half before the marriage, is sufficient to support the presumptio juris. Ib.

Marriage of Minor without Consent.]—The marriage of a minor by licence without the consent required by 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 16, is valid, the statute being directory only. Rex v. Birmingham, 2 M. & Ry. 230; 8 B. & C. 29; 6 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 67. So under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 25.

Where, in ejectment, the plaintiff relies on the invalidity of a second marriage, by reason of a former marriage by licence, one of the parties being a minor, and the defendant has notice that the question intended to be raised is whether the first marriage was with the consent of the minor's parent, it lies upon the defendant to disprove consent. Doe d. James v. Price, 1 M. & Ry. 683; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 157.

—— In Scotland.]—A marriage in Scotland by an infant who was an English subject, without consent, was held good by the court of delegates. Compton v. Bearcroft, Bull. N. P. 113.

—— Wrong Name.]—A marriage by licence, not in the man's real name, but in the name which he had assumed because he had deserted, he being known by that name only in the place where he lodged and was married, and where he had resided sixteen weeks, is a valid marriage. Rex v. Burton-upon-Trent, 3 M. & S. 537; 16 R. R. 350.

A marriage by licence under a false name is valid. Lane v. Goodwin, 3 G. & D. 610; 4 Q. B. 361; 12 L. J., Q. B. 157; 7 Jur. 372.

A partial departure from the true name of one of the parties to a marriage in a licence obtained in the altered name by the other party for the purpose of concealing the intended marriage is no cause of nullity if the altered name may represent the person, and if such licence was obtained for and by the direction of that person. Bevan f. c. M'Mahon v. M'Mahon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 230; 30 L. J., Mat. 61; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 218; 3 L. T. 820.

A marriage was solemnised by a licence in which the name of the woman was stated to be "Margaret Bevan," her baptismal name, and that by which she was commonly called being "Margaret Lea Bevan." The licence was obtained in the altered name by the man, who knowingly and by the direction of the woman suppressed the name "Lea" in order that the surrogate might not know who the woman was, and that the intended marriage might be kept secret from her friends:—Held, in a suit of nullity of marriage instituted by the woman on the ground of misnomer in the licence, that as the name "Margaret Bevan" might represent her, and the licence was obtained for her and by her direction, the marriage was not void as having been solemnised without licence. Ib.

A marriage by licence is not invalidated through the husband having been, by mistake, described in the licence as having two additional christian names. Haswell v. Haswell and Gilbert, 51 L. J., P. 15; 30 W. R. 231.

Marriage before Licence Issued.]—A. and B. intermarried at the parish church of Bradford, Yorkshire, on the 18th of June, 1857. The licence for their marriage did not issue until the 19th of June, and the husband knew at the time of the marriage that the licence was not in existence, but the wife was ignorant of the fact and believed that all necessary formalities had been observed:—Held, that the parties had not knowingly and wilfully intermarried without licence within 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 22, and the validity of the marriage was pronounced for. Greaves v. Greaves, 41 L. J., Mat. 66; L. R. 2 P. 423; 26 L. T. 745; 20 W. R. 802.

Jurisdiction of Arches Court.]—The Arches Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit by letters of request against a layman for falsely swearing before a surrogate to an affidavit to lead to the issue of a marriage licence. Phillimore v. Machon, 1 P. D. 481.

Granting Licence—Duty of Incumbent.]—Where a licence is granted, in due form, for a marriage at a particular church, the incumbent is under no obligation to inquire whether there has been a sufficient residence to justify the granting of the licence. His proper course is to assume the regularity of the licence and to perform the marriage ceremony. Tuckness v. Alexander, 4 Drew. & Sm. 614; 2 N. R. 480; 32 L. J., Ch. 794; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 8 L. T. 821; 11 W. R. 938.

Without Banns or Licence.]—A marriage is valid although celebrated without banns or licence first had and obtained, unless both parties were aware at the time of the ceremony of the absence of banns and licence. Greaves v. Greaves, 41 L. J., Mat. 66; L. R. 2 P. 423; 26 L. T. 745; 20 W. R. 802.

—— In Scotland.]—A marriage celebrated in Scotland without banns or licence is good. Hall, Ex parte, 1 Rose, 30.

iv. Consent of Parent.

How far Necessary.]—The provision in 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 17, does not apply to a father who is beyond the seas, or who unreasonably withholds his consent; but only in a case in which he is non compos mentis. I. C., Ex parte, 3 Mylne & Craig, 471; 2 Jur. 463.

The patria potestas of the civil law, as respects the marriage of children, was abolished by the canon law, which is the law by which marriages are governed in this country, except so far as it has been restricted by 4 Geo. 4, c. 76. Sherwood v. Ray, 1 Moore, P. C. 353.

Although a father may withdraw his consent to his daughter's marriage at any time previously to the actual solemnisation, yet his consent when duly obtained will be upheld, though he died before any preliminary arrangements for the marriage could be settled. Yonge v. Purse, 26 L. J., Ch. 117; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 864. See S. C., 26 L. J., Ch. 352; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 603; 5 W. R. 394.

Condition of Marriage with Consent.]—Held, subsequent and not precedent, and its performance having become impossible, by the act of God, was dispensed with. Collett v. Collett, 35 Beav. 312.

Bastard.]—Bastards were within 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, which required the consent of the father, guardian, or mother, to the marriage of persons under age, who were not married by banns. Rex v. Hodnett, 1 Term Rep. 96.

All marriages, whether of legitimate or illegitimate children, were within 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, and a marriage of an illegitimate minor, had by licence with the consent of her mother, was void by s. 11. Priestly v. Hughes, 11 East, 1; 10 R. R. 406.

Presumption of Validity of Marriage.]—On a question of legitimacy there were in evidence a sentence of nullity of the marriage of a minor for want of her father's consent, and a statement in the parish register that the marriage took place by licence with the consent of the mother of the bride, but nothing as to the father's consent. There was, however, evidence leading to the conclusion that the sentence had been obtained by collusion between the husband and wife, and that the father had been aware, and did not disapprove, of the match:—Held, fifty years after the date of the sentence of nullity, that the marriage ought to be presumed valid. Harrison v. Southampton Corporation, 4 De G. M. & G. 137; 22 L. J., Ch. 722; 18 Jur. 1; 1 W. R. 422. S. P., Birch, In re, 17 Beav. 358.

See also Poole v. Poole, Younge, 331, and Adams v. Adams, 8 Ir. Ch., R. 41; Rex v. Brampton, 10 East, 282; 10 R. R. 289; Adrian Birch, In re, and col. 655.

v. In what Places and before Whom.

In England—Clergyman not Officiating.]—A marriage between English subjects, celebrated

according to the rites of the Church of England, but not in the presence of a priest in holy orders, is invalid at common law. Catherwood v. Caslon, 13 M. & W. 261; 13 L. J., Ex. 334; 8 Jur. 1076.

A clergyman of the Church of England performed the ceremony of marriage between himself and A. in a private house. At the performance of the ceremony there were no witnesses present in the room, but a woman in a yard adjoining witnessed the proceedings without hearing what was said. The marriage was consummated:—Held, invalid. Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. Cas. 274; 11 Ir. C. L. R. 514; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 770; 5 L. T. 97.

It must be taken as established, since Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534), that there never could have been a valid marriage in England before the Reformation, without the presence of a priest episcopally ordained; or afterwards, without the presence of a priest, or of a deacon; and as the presence of a priest is declared to be necessary, it is clear that he must be a third party present at the time of making the contract. Ib.

The presence of a priest was not merely for the purpose of securing a religious sanction to the contract of marriage, but one of the objects was to prevent an unlawful contract, which could not be secured unless the priest was a person other than either of the two engaged in the act. The directions contained in the rubric respecting the opening address to the congregation, the adjuration to the persons about to be married as to confessing any lawful impediment to their union, the putting on the ring, &c., are not absolutely essential to the validity of the marriage; the essential part of the service is the reciprocal taking each other for wedded wife and wedded husband. Ib.

Quære, whether the decision in Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534), would apply to a marriage bonâ fide contracted in the colonies, or on board a ship, where it was impossible to procure the attendance of a minister of religion. Ib.

See Culling v. Culling, 65 L. J., P. 59; [1896] P. 116; 74 L. T. 252; col. 634.

A marriage between British subjects, at the celebration of which no ordained clergyman of the Established Church of England and Ireland intervened, is not valid at common law so as to avoid a marriage subsequently solemnised in due form, between one of the parties to the first marriage and a third party, and bastardise the issue. De Moulin v. Druitt, 13 Ir. C. L. R. 212. See col. 633.

—— Number of Witnesses.]—The 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 28, which requires that two witnesses should be present at a marriage, and should sign the register, is merely directory; and a non-compliance with its directions is no ground for annulling a marriage. Wing v. Taylor, f. c. Wing, 2 Sw. & Tr. 278; 30 L. J., Mat. 258; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 737; 4 L. T. 583.

A marriage solemnised in the presence of one witness only is therefore a good marriage. Ib.

—— Before Registrar.]—The superintendent registrar has no power to grant his certificate, pursuant to 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 7, in cases where it is proposed that the marriage shall take place out of his district, and without licence. Brady, Ex parte, 8 D. P. C. 332; 4 Jur. 269.

Where, on an indictment for bigamy, it was alleged that the first marriage took place in a dissenting chapel duly licensed for marriages, and a witness was called who proved that he was present at the marriage, that it took place in the dissenting chapel in the presence of the registrar, that the entry of the marriage in the registrar's book was signed by the witness as a witness to the marriage, and that the parties afterwards lived together as husband and wife for some years:—Held, first, that the parol testimony of the witness sufficiently proved the fact of marriage. Reg. v. Mainwaring, Dears. & B. 132; 26 L. J., M. C. 10; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1236; 5 W. R. 119; 7 Cox, C. C. 192.

Held, secondly, that there was primâ facie evidence that the chapel was duly registered, and was a place in which marriages might legally be solemnised. Ib.

To render a marriage invalid within the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 42—which enacts "that if any persons shall knowingly and wilfully intermarry under the provisions of this act without due notice to the superintendent registrar, the marriage of such persons shall be null and void"—it must be contracted with a knowledge by both parties that no due notice had been given. Reg. v. Rea, 41 L. J., M. C. 92; L. R. 1 C. C. 365; 26 L. T. 484; 20 W. R. 632.

Therefore, where one of the parties under s. 4, which requires that the notice shall state the name and surname of each of the parties intending marriage, gave a notice stating therein a false christian name for such party, but the other party did not know that fact at the time of the marriage, the marriage was held valid. Ib.

In a suit for nullity of marriage celebrated before a superintendent registrar, it appeared that the notice required by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, s. 2, was signed by the husband with a wrong name (his first christian name being omitted), and that it was falsely asserted that both parties were twenty-one years of age. The court held that the validity of the marriage could not be questioned, and dismissed the petition. Prowse v. Spurway, 46 L. J., P. 49; 26 W. R. 116.

A man may change his surname by use and reputation, and if by use and reputation he has acquired a new name, he is not indictable under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 19, s. 2, for using a new name in signing a notice for the purpose of procuring his marriage under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85. Reg. v. Smith, 4 F. & F. 1099.

—— Presumption.]—When a marriage has been solemnised in a registrar's office in the presence of the registrar and deputy registrar, the presumption of law is that the requisites of the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85, s. 21, have been complied with. If it appeared from the evidence that such a marriage took place with closed doors, it would not on that account be held to be invalid, so as to disentitle the husband after the wife's death to have administration granted to him of her effects, a marriage so celebrated not being specified in the 42nd section of the statute as one that is null and void. Campbell v. Corley, 4 W. R. 675. And see col. 655.

—— Due Notice.]—The "due notice" required by the registration acts for the validity of a marriage before a registrar, is a notice conforming to the formalities provided by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, and the words "due notice" will be satisfied, though the contents of the notice in respect of christian names and residences of the parties, or other details, are not accurate. Holmes v. Simmons f. c. Holmes, 37 L. J., Mat. 58; L. R. 1 P. 523; 18 L. T. 770; 16 W. R. 1024.

Since 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, there is no analogy between a marriage by banns and a marriage by notice before the registrar. The decisions as to what constitutes undue publication of banns, under 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, are not therefore applicable to a question of what constitutes undue notice under the registration acts. Ib.

—— In what Churches and Chapels.]—Marriages, since 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, in chapels, not having chapelries or districts annexed to them, and in which banns have not been usually, although often published, were upon the construction of that statute void. Rex v. Northfield, Cald. 115; 2 Dougl. 659.

In an action for crim. con., if the plaintiff's marriage was solemnised in a chapel, he must give some evidence that banns were usually published there before the passing of the Marriage Act. Taunton v. Wyborn, 2 Camp. 297.

An incumbent of a district parish validly constituted under 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, and 59 Geo. 3, c. 134, has an exclusive right to celebrate marriages by banns, between persons both of whom are resident within the district parish. Tuckniss v. Alexander, 2 Drew. & Sm. 614; 2 N. R. 480; 32 L. J., Ch. 794; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 8 L. T. 821; 11 W. R. 938.

—— In Vestry.]—A marriage solemnised in a vestry belonging to and in the church is a good marriage. Wing v. Taylor, f. c. Wing, 2 Sw. & Tr. 278; 30 L. J., P. 258; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 737; 4 L. T. 583.

Primâ facie the vestry is part of the church, and a petition for sentence of nullity, on the ground that a marriage was solemnised in a vestry, which does not aver that the vestry formed no part of the church, is insufficient. Ib.

—— In Building near Church.]—When a marriage was solemnised in a building in a parish situate a few yards from the church, at a time when the church was disused in consequence of undergoing repairs, and divine service had been several times performed in the building, in the absence of any proof that it was licensed by the bishop, it was presumed in favour of the marriage to have been duly licensed. Reg. v. Cresswell, 45 L. J., M. C. 77; 1 Q. B. D. 446; 33 L. T. 760; 24 W. R. 281; 13 Cox, C. C. 126.

—— On Board British Ship.]—A marriage solemnised by an ordained clergyman of the church of England on board a queen's ship, while lying at or off a port within her majesty's dominions, is a valid marriage at common law. Culling v. Culling, 65 L. J., P. 59; [1896] P. 116; 74 L. T. 252. See col. 634.

In Ireland.]—A marriage solemnised in Ireland in 1835 by a non-placed Presbyterian clergyman who had previously had a congregation, but had been suspended and had ceased to have one, is valid. Harris v. Harris, Ir. R. 3 C. L. 294.

—— At House of Clergyman.]—A., a member of the established church in Ireland, went, accompanied by B., a Presbyterian, to the house of C., a regularly-placed minister of the Presbyterians of the parish where C. resided, and there entered into a present contract of marriage with B.; the minister performing a religious ceremony between them, according to the rites of the Presbyterian church. A. and B. lived together for some time as man and wife; A. afterwards, B. being still alive, married another person, in a parish church in England:—Quære, whether the first contract thus entered into was sufficiently a marriage to support an indictment against A. for bigamy. Lords Brougham, Denman and Campbell were of opinion that it was, Lords Lyndhurst, Cottenham, and Abinger were of opinion that it was not. The lords being thus divided, the rule semper præsumitur pro negante applied, and judgment was given for the defendant in error. Reg. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & F. 534; 8 Jur. 717; and see Beamish v. Beamish, col. 633.

—— In Private House.]—A marriage in Ireland, performed by a clergyman of the established church of England, is valid, though it was celebrated in a room of a private house and without any special licence being granted to the parties. Smith v. Maxwell, 1 Car. & P. 271; R. & M. 80. And see Stockbridge v. Quicke, 3 Car. & K. 305.

—— Of Protestant by Roman Catholic.]—A party to a marriage celebrated in Ireland by a Roman Catholic priest, who was born and bred a Protestant, and of a Protestant family, unless he has done some act to denote a change of his religious persuasion, must be deemed to be a Protestant within the 19 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 1, which provides that every marriage celebrated by a popish priest, between a papist and any person that hath been or hath professed himself to be, a Protestant, at any time within twelve months before such celebration, shall be null and void. Yelverton v. Longworth, 4 Macq. H. L. 746; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1209; 11 L. T. 118; 13 W. R. 235.

In Scotland—When Valid.]—A domiciled Englishman and Englishwoman residing in England, after an illicit connection of some years standing, went to Gretna in Scotland, and on their arrival there (before the passing of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 99) contracted a marriage, per verba de præsenti, by making a mutual declaration of marriage before witnesses. At the instance of the man, the certificate of marriage given by the person who officiated at the ceremony was antedated four years. In a suit for nullity of marriage by the man, he repudiated the marriage, on the ground that he had never consented to a marriage, but went through the form of marriage with a simulated object in view, namely, for the purpose of obtaining a certificate to blind inquiries. There was no deception on the part of the woman, who believed it to be a marriage:—Held, that the marriage was valid by the lex loci contractûs, there being reasonable evidence of the intention of the parties to contract, ipsum matrimonium; and that as there was a mutual declaration of present marriage, it was immaterial whether the man had some other motive beside marriage. Bell v. Graham, 13 Moore, P. C. 242; 1 L. T. 221; 8 W. R. 98.

To constitute a marriage in accordance with Scotch law, the agreement to marry must be deliberate and serious, and given mutually with the view and for the purpose of creating thenceforth the relation of husband and wife, and it is not necessary that a contract so made should be followed by cohabitation, nor is it necessary to allege the particular place, or the exact day where and when such consent was exchanged. Yelverton v. Longworth, 4 Macq. H. L. 746; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1209; 11 L. T. 118; 13 W. R. 235.

An unmarried woman, while living with her mother, had two children by H., a single man, who gave bond to the parish to indemnify it against their maintenance. He afterwards changed his residence, and she went with her children to reside in his house, and so resided till his death. Shortly after this change of residence, he obtained from his law agent a form of words necessary by the Scotch law to constitute a marriage; he then wrote this note:—"My dearest Mary, I hereby solemnly declare that you are my lawful wife, though, for particular reasons, I wish our marriage to be kept private for the present. I am your affectionate husband.—A. H." This note was addressed inside to her, but outside to Mrs. A. H. He deposited the note with the law agent, saying it would please and satisfy her, but directed the agent to keep it a secret till his death. He always represented himself to his relations as a single man:—Held, that a valid marriage had been constituted between these parties; that the words of the paper were sufficient for that purpose, so far as the man was concerned; and that his conduct and expressions to the law agent, together with the subsequent residence of the woman with him, must be taken as evidence of her knowledge of the paper, and her assent to it. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 9 Cl. & F. 327.

—— Cohabitation—How far Sufficient.]—Cohabitation, with the required repute, as husband and wife, is proof that the parties between themselves have mutually contracted the matrimonial relation. It demonstrates that interchange of consent which alone constitutes marriage in Scotland. The law of habit and repute, however, is not peculiar to Scotland; although in countries where the facilities of matrimony are less than in Scotland, the evidence to establish the marriage must be stronger. Campbell v. Campbell, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 182.

A connection commencing in adultery may, on ceasing to be adulterous, become matrimonial by consent, and may be evidenced by habit and repute, the parties being at liberty to intermarry. The alteration in the character of the connection from adultery to matrimony need not be indicated by any public act, or by any observable changes in outward demonstration. Ib.

A., a widow, entitled to a pension durante viduitate, cohabited with B. in Scotland. In regard to society, they held themselves out as man and wife; but with respect to the pension, they acted as if they were unmarried; and A., half-yearly, made solemn declarations of widowhood for the purpose of obtaining the pension:—Held, that, on the whole, the finding that no valid marriage had taken place was right. Robertson v. Crawford, 3 Beav. 103.

M. and C. cohabited. There was no direct evidence of the time at which their intercourse began, but M. wrote to C. a letter, which was dated in March, 1826, and was in the following terms:—"Christy,—You and I having lived together as man and wife for some time, I hereby declare you to be my lawful wife, in the event of a child being born in consequence of the present connection between us." This letter was not delivered till 1828:—Held, that it did not in any way constitute a marriage by the law of Scotland. Stewart v. Menzies, 8 Cl. & F. 309.

A., a Scotchman, married in Scotland and went abroad; his wife cohabited with C., and had children by him. To make such children legitimate, it was held necessary, for those who asserted their legitimacy, to prove either a legal origin of the cohabitation, or a change in the nature of it after the death of A. had become known to all the parties. The mere fact that C. and the woman continued to live together was not sufficient for that purpose. Under such circumstances the children were held illegitimate, though born after the date of A.'s death. Lapsley v. Grierson, 1 H. L. Cas. 498.

The law of Scotland accepts the continued cohabitation of a man and woman as spouses, coupled with the general repute of their being married persons, as complete evidence of their having deliberately consented to marry; but in order to sustain that inference their cohabitation must be within the realm of Scotland. Cohabitation outside Scotland will not constitute marriage, although it may be competently founded on, either as corroborative evidence of a ceremony in Scotland, or as evidence that a ceremony proved to have taken place in Scotland was truly intended by the parties as a present interchange of matrimonial consent. A. alleged that she was lawfully married to B. by interchange of mutual consent de præsenti before witnesses in 1844 in Scotland, and that having remained in Scotland for about a month, B. and she cohabited at divers places in England as husband and wife, and that a son now living was born of the marriage in 1863. Between 1844 and 1849, when B. deserted A., three daughters were born, one of whom B. registered as legitimate. In 1851 B. married C. at a parish church in England and had children. A. was informed of this marriage shortly after its celebration, but took no steps to have the validity of the averred irregular Scotch marriage of 1844, or the nullity of the marriage of 1851, judicially declared, until 1880. The alleged witnesses to A.'s marriage were admitted now to be dead, but they were alive in 1853, when they might have been judicially examined in an action brought against B. for the board and lodging of A.:—Held, that the evidence completely disproved the allegation of a marriage between A. and B. Dysart Peerage Case, 6 App. Cas. 489—H. L.

—— Invalid—Status of Children.]—By the law of Scotland, where a marriage between two persons is invalid by reason of the existence of a prior marriage entered into by one of those persons, and either of such persons is, at the time of the solemnisation of such second marriage, justifiably ignorant that any impediment to such second marriage exists, the issue of the invalid marriage has, nevertheless, the personal status of legitimate children. Wilson, In re, Shaw, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 243; L. R. 1 Eq. 247; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 132; 13 L. T. 576; 14 W. R. 161.

In Colonies.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, does not bind all English subjects in all parts of the world, and it would not affect the law of marriage in any conquered colony in which a different law of marriage prevailed, whatever effect it might have in any other colony. Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 422; 4 L. T. 93; 9 W. R. 461.

Marriages of British subjects in British plantations are governed by the common law of England, unless otherwise enacted by the imperial legislature or that of the colony, and evidence of the solemnisation by a clergyman of the Church of England according to the rites of that church and of cohabitation is sufficient proof of a marriage between British subjects in Norfolk Island, a British colony. Limerick v. Limerick, 32 L. J., Mat. 92; 11 W. R. 503.

—— New South Wales.]—A marriage in New South Wales (before a Presbyterian minister), where there was a fact of consent between the parties to become husband and wife, is a valid marriage, notwithstanding a noncompliance with the provisions of a local act, in which there were no words constituting a nullity. Catterall v. Catterall, 1 Rob. Ec. Rep. 580; 11 Jur. 914.

—— Cape—Second Marriage—Wife Living.]—A., born in Ireland, resided at the Cape of Good Hope, first, in her majesty's 45th regiment of foot, and afterwards in the Cape mounted rifles, from 1842 till 1862. In 1850 he married B., resident in the colony. In 1852 the colonial court decreed a dissolution of that marriage; in 1856 A. married C., B. still living. A. died in 1863 intestate; and on a question as to the right to letters of administration raised between C. and the brother and next of kin of A.:—Held, that C. was entitled to administration as the widow of A. Argent v. Argent, 4 Sw. & Tr. 52; 34 L. J., P. 133; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 864; 12 L. T. 768.

In India—Of British Subjects.]—The duplicate registers of marriage kept in the East Indies, and transmitted to this country by the direction of the governing authority there, are admissible. Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe and Anderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 467; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 714; 7 W. R. 726.

A marriage took place in Bombay in 1844, previously to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 40. To prove the marriage, a book was produced from the archives of the East India Company, which purported to contain the quarterly returns of marriages for 1844, from the presidency of Bombay, such returns being authenticated copies of the original registers remaining in India, and made and transmitted by authority:—Held, that as at that time the East India Company, under the sovereignty of the crown, possessed supreme authority over the territories of the company in India, and a registry of marriages was kept in each presidency by its order, and an authentic copy thereof was made and transmitted by the servants of the company to the secretary at the East India House, and that the book produced came from the proper custody, the entries therein were admissible to prove the celebration of a marriage in India. Ib.

—— Of Indians.]—Suit on the ecclesiastical side of the supreme court at Bombay, by wife against husband, for restitution of conjugal rights, and for maintenance. Protest by the husband, that the parties were Parsees, professing the religion of that sect, and that the court had no jurisdiction to administer towards them the ecclesiastical law as at the date of the charter was used and exercised in the diocese of London:—Held, that the supreme court of Bombay, on its ecclesiastical side, had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit, as there existed such a difference between the duties and obligations of a matrimonial union among Parsees from that of Christians, that the court, if it made a decree, had no means of enforcing it, except according to the principles governing the matrimonial law in Doctors' Commons, which were, in such a case, incompatible with the laws and customs of Parsees. Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Peroæeboye, 6 Moore, Ind. App. 348.

In British Territory — Roman Catholic Church.]—A marriage celebrated between British subjects according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church in a country subject to British dominion, but where there is no established church, is valid. James v. James and Smyth, 51 L. J., P. 24; 30 W. R. 232.

Elsewhere.]—The 4 Geo. 3, c. 91, gives validity to the marriage of a British subject in the chapel of the British ambassador abroad, whether the other party to the marriage is a British subject or not. Wright, In re, 2 Kay & J. 595; 25 L. J., Ch. 621; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 465; 4 W. R. 541.

A marriage between an Englishman and a domiciled French lady, at the house of the British ambassador at Paris, by the chaplain to the embassy, is valid under 4 Geo. 4, c. 91. Lloyd v. Petitjean, 2 Curteis, 251.

The marriage of an officer celebrated by a chaplain of the British army within the lines of the army when serving abroad, is valid under 9 Geo. 4, c. 91, though such army is not serving in a country in a state of actual hostility, and though no authority for the marriage was previously obtained from the officer's superior in command. Waldegrave Peerage, 4 Cl. & F. 649.

A marriage contract was entered into in Paris between two English subjects, according to the formalities required by the French law, in anticipation of a marriage to be solemnised "suivant la loi." A valid English marriage took place at the embassy, but no marriage ceremony took place according to the French forms and solemnities:—Held, that the marriage "suivant la loi," was fulfilled by the English marriage, and that the settlement being to regulate an English marriage, was valid here, notwithstanding that, according to the French law, the marriage and the settlement might be inoperative. Este v. Smyth, 18 Beav. 112; 23 L. J., Ch. 705; 18 Jur. 300; 2 W. R. 148.

English subjects on their marriage may stipulate that their marriage rights shall be regulated by the law of a foreign country, and a court of equity will enforce such a contract. Ib.

Foreign Marriages.]—55 & 56 Vict. c. 23, consolidates enactments relating to the marriage of British subjects outside the United Kingdom.

52 & 53 Vict. c. 38, removes doubts as to the validity of certain marriages solemnised in Basutoland and in British Bechuanaland.

vi. Proceedings against Clergyman in respect of.

Non-Performance.]—A declaration in an action against a clergyman for not solemnising a marriage, stated that the plaintiff and Mary were desirous to intermarry; that a licence was obtained authorising the solemnisation of the marriage at any time within three months from the date, between 8 and 12 a.m., and reciting that Mary had resided at B. for fifteen days next before the date; that the defendant was minister of the church; that, by reason of the premises, and by force of the licence, it became his duty to solemnise the marriage in the manner and time specified in the licence, when thereunto requested; that he had notice of the licence, and was requested by the plaintiff to solemnise the marriage in the manner and at the time specified in the licence, yet he wrongfully and illegally refused:—Held, after verdict for the plaintiff, that the declaration was bad, as the request by the plaintiff alone did not show notice to the defendant that Mary was willing to be then married. Davis v. Black, 1 G. & D. 432; 1 Q. B. 900; 10 L. J., Q. B. 338; 6 Jur. 55.

Where a licence from the bishop, duly framed, is produced to the minister, he has no option but to perform the marriage according to the licence, and the responsibility of ascertaining that one of the persons to be married has lived for fifteen days in the district for which the licence has been granted, rests on the ordinary granting it, and not on the officiating minister. Tuckness v. Alexander, 4 Drew. & Sm. 614; 2 N. R. 480; 32 L. J., Ch. 794; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 8 L. T. 821; 11 W. R. 938.

Where a man and a woman, notice of whose intended marriage had been published at the board of guardians, called at the private house of the clergyman of a chapel in the district, at nine o'clock in the evening, and, showing him the superintendent registrar's certificate requested him to appoint a time for their marriage, when the clergyman declared he would marry them when they had expressed a desire to be confirmed, and not till then:—Held, that this was no proper tender of the parties for marriage, nor a legal demand of marriage, and that the clergyman was not liable to an indictment for his refusal at such time and place. Reg. v. James, T. & M. 300; 2 Den. C. C. 1; 19 L. J., M. C. 179; 14 Jur. 940. See now 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, ss. 11, 12.

Celebration by, without Inquiry.]—A clergyman celebrating a marriage by banns, without making the inquiry directed by the marriage act, is liable to ecclesiastical censure at least; perhaps to other consequences. Nicholson v. Squire, 16 Ves. 259.

A prohibition was granted to a suit in the spiritual court, for marrying without banns or licence, because it was a matter of temporal jurisdiction. Campbell v. Aldrich, 2 Wils. 79.

Celebration—Pretence of Holy Orders.]—Where a person is indicted for falsely pretending to be in holy orders and solemnising matrimony according to the rites of the Church of England, the mere licence by the bishop to a curacy, or the institution by him to a benefice, which renders a clergyman compellable to perform the marriage ceremony between competent parties, is no defence if the person charged knows of the invalidity of the letters of orders on which he has been so licensed or initiated. Reg. v. Ellis, 16 Cox, C. C. 469.

Where a person is so indicted it is enough for the prosecution to show the letters of orders which the person charged has held out to be genuine, and has put forward as a justification for presenting himself as a person in holy orders, are spurious; and it is not incumbent on the prosecution to show that he had no other valid orders. Ib.

c. Evidence.

English—Cohabitation for Length of Time.]—Cohabitation for thirty years as man and wife is sufficient evidence of a marriage. Rex v. Stockland, Burr. S. C. 508; 1 W. Bl. 367. And see Poole v. Poole, Younge, 331.

Strong acknowledgments of marriage for eighteen years together are sufficient to establish it inter vivos, though no actual proof can be had; the supposed marriage being previous to 26 Geo. 2, c. 33. Hervey v. Hervey, 2 W. Bl. 877.

—— Proof of.]—Where a marriage is proved to have been solemnised de facto 110 years ago by people who intended that it should be a good marriage, and it is done bonâ fide and openly, the maxim omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta applies. Lauderdale Peerage, The, 10 App. Cas. 692—H. L. (Sc.)

A., then ill of the malady of which he died, and two days before his death, was married in 1772 in New York to B. by C., an ordained clergyman of the Church of England, then assistant minister of Trinity Church, New York. There was produced, inter alia, in support of the marriage, from the custody of the family a certificate signed by C. that he had married A. and B. according to the rites of the Church of England as by law established, and an affidavit signed by the mayor of New York, to the effect that C. had made oath of the truth of the statements in the certificate; a will of date anterior to the marriage, by which A. left all his property to B. and the children then born; copies of letters showing that one of the executors wrote to his co-executor in England, a brother of A., stating that he was a witness to the ceremony of marriage; that B. signed herself in A.'s surname; that the children were recognised and taken care of by members of the family as A.'s children; and also War Office records showing that B. received a pension as A.'s widow:—Held, that there was ample proof of a legal marriage. Ib.

—— Onus on Party Impeaching.]—In a suit by the children of a marriage to enforce payment of their portions, the legitimacy of the plaintiffs having been called in question by the next tenant for life, who was a defendant in the cause:—Held, that a marriage de facto having once been established, it lay on the party impeaching the marriage to show that the same was illegal or void; that sufficient evidence of a marriage de facto having been submitted to the court, the court itself was competent to decide the question of marriage for the purposes of the suit, without directing an issue. Piers v. Tuite, 1 Dr. & Wal. 279.

—— Subsequent Conduct.]—Assuming the marriage to be regular, previous and subsequent conduct of the parties is admissible evidence upon the question of consent. Macneill v. Macgregor, 2 Bli. (N.S.) 393.

—— By Repute.]—A marriage may be established by preponderating repute and by conduct, even though the repute is divided. Lyle v. Ellwood, 44 L. J., Ch. 164; L. R. 19 Eq. 98; 23 W. R. 157.

A. and B. cohabited together as man and wife for thirty years, and until B.'s death in 1835. There was no evidence of any marriage having been solemnised, nor was there any affidavit in support of the marriage made by any member of the family; but there was general reputation that they were married, and proof of the registry of the baptism of several of their children as of A. and B. his wife. C., the brother of B., by his will made in 1871, gave a legacy to one of these children, describing her as "his niece":—Held, that these children were entitled, as legitimate children of A. and B., to share, as next of kin, in a fund as to which C. had died intestate. Collins v. Bishop, 48 L. J., Ch. 31.

Semble, a marriage may be established by repute, even though there may be no positive evidence in support of the marriage, from any member of the family. Ib.

Evidence of marriage had been given by proof of cohabitation and reputation. In addition, an affidavit of the 19th July, 1784, made by the alleged husband for the purpose of obtaining a special licence, and the fiat of the Archbishop of Canterbury, directing the licence to pass as prayed, which was at the foot of the affidavit, were put in, produced from the proper custody. No search had been made for the licence, but it appeared that such licences are not kept in any regular custody. An extract of the parish register was also put in, which stated that a marriage between the parties in question had been celebrated by special licence from the archbishop on the 21st July, 1784. It was objected, that the documentary evidence was inadmissible without production of the licence:—Held, that it was admissible as confirming the evidence by cohabitation and reputation. Doe d. Egremont (Earl) v. Grazebrook, 3 G. & D. 334; 4 Q. B. 406; 12 L. J., Q. B. 221.

General reputation is sufficient evidence of a marriage to entitle a son to inherit property, though the father is still living. Doe d. Fleming v. Fleming, 4 Bing. 266; 12 Moore, 500; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 169; 29 R. R. 562.

—— By Registry.]—The registry of a marriage is evidence between strangers of the time of the marriage. Doe d. Wollaston v. Barnes, 1 M. & Rob. 386.

—— Examined Copy of Registry.]—In order to prove that the defendant was wife of J. G., an examined copy of a register of a marriage between the defendant and one J. G. was put in evidence. A witness was then called, who stated that he knew one J. G., and was acquainted with his handwriting, and that the handwriting of J. G. in the original register was in the handwriting of the J. G. with whom he was acquainted:—Held, that this evidence was receivable without producing the original register. Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Car. & K. 694; 2 Ex. 409; 17 L. J., Ex. 300; 12 Jur. 465.

—— Entries in Church Books.]—The entry of names and titles of persons in a church book, either for marriages or births, cannot be positive evidence of the marriage or birth of any person, unless the identity of person named in such entries is fully proved and strengthened also by circumstances of cohabitation, and the allowance of parties. Draycott v. Talbot, 3 Bro. P. C. 564.

—— Entries in Roman Catholic Chapel Books.]—Entries made in the chapel books by Roman Catholic clergymen, whose death and handwriting have been proved, are evidence of a marriage or baptism recorded thereby. Malone v. L'Estrange, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 16. See Malone v. O'Connor, Macl. & R. 469.

—— Certificates—How far Evidence.]—Certificates of births, baptisms, marriages or deaths are admissible as evidence, without proof of the identity of the persons mentioned in them with the persons as to whom the fact recorded by them is sought to be established. Hubbard v. Lees, 4 H. & C. 418; 35 L. J., Ex. 169; L. R. 1 Ex. 255; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 435; 14 L. T. 442; 14 W. R. 694.

—— Entries in Books at Ambassador's.]—The book kept at the British ambassador's hotel in Paris, in which the ambassador's chaplain makes and subscribes entries of all marriages of British subjects celebrated by him, has not the authenticity of an English parish register. An attested copy of an entry in it is not admissible to prove a marriage. Athlone's (Earl) Claim, 8 Cl. & F. 262.

—— Description in Will.]—It was necessary to prove that W. S. married M. D. There was no certificate of marriage found, but the will of her uncle, S. D., was produced. It was in these words: "All this I give to my nephew, W. S." (who was identified as the W. S. in question), and the act book from Doctors' Commons was produced, granting administration to "W. S., S. D.'s nephew, minor, and universal legatee." Received as proof that a marriage had taken place between W. S. and M. D. Shrewsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Cas. 1.

—— Irish Marriage — Certificate — Copy of Church Register.]—The court accepted as evidence in proof of a marriage solemnised in 1866 in Dublin, according to the rites of the Established Church of England and Ireland, a copy of an entry in the register of marriages, purporting to be signed, and certified as a correct copy of the entry, by the clergyman of the parish where the marriage was celebrated. Wallace v. Wallace, 74 L. T. 253.

—— Entry in Archives of East India Company.]—A marriage took place in Bombay in 1844, previously to the 14 & 15 Vict., c. 40. To prove the marriage, a book was produced from the archives of the East India Company, which purported to contain the quarterly returns of marriages for 1844, from the presidency of Bombay, such returns being authenticated copies of the original registers remaining in India, and made and transmitted by authority:—Held, that as at that time the East India Company, under the sovereignty of the crown, possessed supreme authority over the territories of the company in India, and a register of marriages was kept in each presidency by its order, and an authentic copy thereof was made and transmitted by the servants of the company to the secretary at the East India House, and that the book produced came from the proper custody, the entries therein were admissible to prove the celebration of marriage in India. Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe and Anderson, Sw. & Tr. 467 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 714.

Presumption in Favour of.]—A marriage may be presumed. Wilkinson v. Payne, 4 Term Rep. 468.

Everything is presumed in favour of marriage. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 K. & J. 4 ; 18 Jur. 853 ; 2 W. R. 612.

The factum of marriage, celebrated by a clergyman of the Church of England in the year 1815, being proved, the maxims, Semper præsumitur pro matrimonio, and Omnia præsumuntur rite et solemniter acta, which raised the presumption of law that a special licence existed, authorising the marriage, can only be repelled by strong, distinct, satisfactory, and conclusive evidence to the contrary ; and every reasonable possibility of a fact in favour of the presumption must be rebutted :—Held, that the presumptio juris in favour of the existence of a special licence was not sufficiently repelled by the evidence of the bishop of the diocese, thirty years after the factum, that he never granted a licence for the marriage of the parties in question, stating his reasons why he was certain that he never granted such licence :—Held, also, that the reasonable possibility (not disproved) that the special licence might have been granted by the late bishop, who died a year and a half before the marriage, is sufficient to support the præsumptio juris. Piers v. Piers, 2 H. L. Cas. 331 ; 13 Jur. 569.

The question of the validity of a marriage cannot be tried like any other question of fact which is independent of presumption, for the law will presume in favour of marriage. Ib.

Evidence in support of a plea of coverture that the defendant was married in a Catholic chapel according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church, to a person with whom she afterwards lived as wife, is primâ facie sufficient to show a valid marriage under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, as the law will presume that the chapel was registered, and the registrar present as required by that act. Sichel v. Lambert, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 781 ; 33 L. J., C. P. 137 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 617 ; 9 L. T. 687 ; 12 W. R. 312.

Where the question is whether a certain marriage has or has not taken place, and the fact of cohabitation is established, together with reputation of marriage, a presumption is created in favour of the marriage having taken place, which can only be rebutted by strong and weighty evidence to the contrary. Marriage held to have taken place under such circumstances, notwithstanding some evidence leading to the contrary conclusion, and absence of any positive evidence in corroboration. Fox v. Bearblock, 44 L. T. 508 ; 29 W. R. 661 ; 45 J. P. 648.

In an action against husband and wife for a debt due from the wife before coverture, it is not necessary to give actual proof of the marriage, presumptive evidence of it is sufficient. Tracey v. M'Carlton, 7 D. P. C. 532 ; 1 W. W. & H 550 ; 3 Jur. 124.

In an action against husband and wife, on the note of the wife dum sola, a witness stated that he knew A. B. (the wife) formerly, and had heard that she afterwards married E. F. (the husband). The witness was not cross-examined : — Held, sufficient primâ facie evidence of marriage. Evans v. Morgan, 2 C. & J. 453 ; 2 Tyr. 396.

Second Marriage — Proof of Death of First Spouse.]—The law always presumes against the commission of crime ; and therefore, where a woman, twelve months after her first husband was last heard of, married a second husband, and had children by him :—Held, that the sessions did right in presuming primâ facie that the first husband was dead at the time of the second marriage, and that it was incumbent on the party objecting to the second marriage to give some proof that the first husband was then alive. Rex v. Twyning, 2 B. & Ald. 386 ; 20 R. R. 480.

Where, upon a question as to the validity of a marriage between A. and C., it appears that A.'s first wife, B., was alive in a distant colony twenty-six days before the second marriage, the sessions or a jury are justified in finding the second marriage to be void. Rex v. Harborne, 4 N. & M. 341 ; 2 A. & E. 540 ; 1 H. & W. 36 ; 4 L. J., M. C. 49.

Presumption less Strong where no Issue.]—The presumption of law in favour of the validity of a marriage is less strong where there is no issue, and where the parties to the marriage admit its invalidity. M'Loughlin's Estate, In re, 1 L. R., Ir. 421.

Where Insufficient to Establish.]—To support a defence to an action that the plaintiff was under coverture when the cause of action accrued, although she lived as a single woman, it is not enough to prove a bare declaration by her that she had been married to S., who was still alive, without actual proof of the marriage, or of cohabitation with her supposed husband, particularly if there appears to be any reason to doubt that the marriage was valid. Wilson v. Mitchell, 3 Camp. 393.

Property was bequeathed to the children of A., provided he should marry an English lady. He, in 1859, married a woman named Hannah Tuhi Tuhi, one of the offspring of an alleged marriage between a British subject and a native woman of New Zealand named Tuhi Tuhi. The only evidence of the marriage was that of the alleged husband himself, who said that he was a British subject, born abroad, in 1801, of British parents. He further said that he came to reside in New Zealand in or about 1828, and had resided there ever since ; that in 1829 he inter-married with Tuhi Tuhi, and that such marriage was solemnised at a place in New Zealand, according to the laws, customs, and usages then in force in New Zealand ; that New Zealand was not then a British colony, and there was not then a minister of any Christian church, nor any registry of marriages in the island, and that from and after the marriage Tuhi Tuhi had lived and still lived with him as his wife. The deponent did not state the names of his parents. He said that Hannah, before her marriage, was called Tuhi Tuhi, and not by her father's name, in conformity with the customs of the natives of New Zealand ; but there was no evidence as to what the laws and customs of the natives of New Zealand were :—Held, that the evidence was insufficient to enable the court to presume a marriage. Armitage v. Armitage, L. R. 3 Eq. 343.

—— That Banns had been Forbidden.]—A declaration by a clergyman, that a friend of the wife's had forbidden the banns the second time they were published, is not admissible as a fact but as evidence that the clergyman had confessed that he had married without banns. Standen v. Standen, Peake, 30, 32 ; 6 Term Rep. 331, n.

—— Clandestine Marriage.]—In cases relating to clandestine marriage hearsay evidence and declaration are no defective proof, but have weight with the court, especially when uncontradicted by anything on the other side. Beard v. Travers, 1 Ves. 313.

—— Commission to India Refused.]—A marriage was set up between C., an Englishman in India, and a native woman. C., after the time alleged, married another person in the English form, and had children reputed legitimate, and no claim of such prior marriage was set up till seventeen years after C.'s death in this country: —Held, the evidence being suspicious and weak, no commission ought to be sent to India to procure further evidence, as such a proposal would only tend to encourage perjury. Moorhouse v. Lord, 32 L. J., Ch. 295; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 677; 8 L. T. 212; 11 W. R. 637.

Heir in Tail entitled to Discovery.]—Heir in tail may have discovery of settlement for purpose respecting marriage. Lempter v. Pomfret, Dick. 238.

Scotch—Evidence of Repute and Written Declaration.]—The evidence of neighbours and mere acquaintances of habit and repute must extend through a long series of years to raise the presumption of an agreement on both sides to live together as husband and wife, but if the consensus is once proved lapse of time is unimportant; and where there is evidence of express acknowledgment, a very short cohabitation in accordance therewith will be sufficient for this purpose. Hill v. Hibbit, 25 L. T. 183; 19 W. R. 250. And see cols. 646—8.

H. formed an illicit connection with P. in London. He subsequently moved with her to Glasgow, where they lived together for a year and a half. H. introduced her to his family and acknowledged her as his wife. They afterwards went separately to America, and lived separately for more than thirty years, she resuming her maiden name:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of the change in the nature of the connection, and that the consensus being proved the marriage was valid, and not affected by the short duration of the cohabitation or the subsequent separation. Ib.

A written declaration of marriage de præsenti signed by both and delivered by the man to the woman, conclusively establishes the contract. Forster v. Forster, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 244.

Circumstances under which it was held that direct proof of the wife's signature to the declaration was unnecessary, she possessing the document, and suing upon the faith of it for a declarator of marriage. Ib.

The declaration might be regarded as a promise which when followed but not preceded by copula constitutes marriage. Ib.

—— Twenty-one Days' Residence in Scotland.]—Two persons domiciled in England arrived in Scotland about 4 a.m. of the 1st of July, 1870, remained there until the 21st following, and between 11 and 12 a.m. of that day contracted a marriage by declaration before a registrar:—Held, that they had not lived in Scotland for twenty-one days next preceding the marriage, and that therefore it was invalid. Lawford v. Davies, 47 L. J., P. 38; 4 P. D. 61; 39 L. T. 111; 26 W. R. 424.

J. D. and A. L., who were both domiciled in England, left London for Scotland on the evening of the 30th of June, 1870. They arrived at Edinburgh between five and six o'clock on the following morning, the 1st of July, and they lived in Scotland until the 21st of July, on which day, about 11.30 a.m., they contracted an irregular marriage by declaration before the registrar at Edinburgh. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, it is enacted that "no irregular marriage contracted in Scotland by declaration, acknowledgment, or ceremony shall be valid unless one of the parties had at the date thereof his or her usual place of residence there, or had lived in Scotland for twenty-one days next preceding such marriage":—Held, that the parties had not lived the prescribed time in Scotland, and that the marriage was invalid. Ib.

—— Gretna Green Marriage—Validity.]—On the 5th March, 1846, the mother and father of the petitioner went through a ceremony of marriage at Gretna Green, the lady at that time being fifteen years of age. The certificate was signed by the contracting parties, and by two friends as witnesses to the marriage. The lady having signed her maiden name and made some erasure on the first certificate, a second was signed by the parties and witnesses, and was duly dated. This document was not forthcoming, and the first-mentioned certificate was tendered at the hearing, having been produced by one of the witnesses who attested it, and who had preserved it as a curiosity. After the ceremony at Gretna Green the parties returned home, and were recognised as married by their respective parents and friends. The petitioner was born in Jan. 1847. This petition became necessary to enable him to establish his title to a reversionary interest under the will of a relative, which reversion he had mortgaged. The petitioner's father died in 1878, and the two witnesses were also dead. The petitioner's mother gave the only direct evidence in proof of her marriage:—Held, that the marriage was valid by the law of Scotland, and accordingly a declaration was made of the petitioner's legitimacy in terms of the prayer of the petition. Gardner v. Att.-Gen. 60 L. T. 839.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the only evidence of the marriage being that he and the wife had, in May, 1850, left England together for the purpose of being married at Gretna Green, that they shortly returned and stated that they had been married, and lived together for many years as man and wife, it is sufficient evidence of the marriage. Putrickson v. Patrickson, 35 L. J., Mat. 48; L. R. 1 P. 86; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 30; 13 L. T. 567; 14 W. R. 212.

Marriage in Private House — Witness.]—Where a woman present at a marriage ceremony in Scotland, performed in a private house by a minister of a congregation (but whether or not of the kirk she did not know), stated that she herself had been married in the same way, that parties always married in Scotland in private houses, and that the parties after the ceremony had lived together as man and wife:—Held, that her evidence was insufficient to prove the law of marriage in Scotland, or to establish a marriage in fact. Some person conversant with the law of Scotland as to marriage should have been called. Reg. v. Povey, Dears. C. C. 32; 22 L. J., M. C. 19; 17 Jur. 120; 1 W. R. 40; 6 Cox, C. C. 83.

Jewish.]—Semble, that to prove a Jewish marriage it is not enough to produce witnesses who were present at the ceremony in the synagogue; but the written contract between the parties should be produced, and the execution of it proved. Horn v. Noel, 1 Camp. 61.

A Jewish divorce cannot be proved without producing the document of divorce delivered by the husband to the wife. Moss v. Smith, 1 Man. & G. 228.

Foreign—Register.]—A copy of the register of a foreign marriage is not evidence to prove a marriage. Leader v. Barry, 1 Esp. 353.

In proof of a marriage in Chili, a document was tendered purporting to be an extract from a register of marriages, and signed by the curate rector of the church where it was solemnised; his signature was verified by a public notary, whose signature was verified by other notaries, and their sigatures were verified by the foreign minister of the Chilian republic, and a certificate under the hand and seal of the British consul at Chili was added. On the evidence of a witness that a registry was kept by the curate rector of every church in Chili of marriages solemnised in it, and that a certificate of marriage such as that tendered was in the Chilian courts received in evidence, that he knew the name of the curate rector, and was also well acquainted with several of the persons whose signatures were appended to the certificate as witnesses, the document was admitted as evidence of the marriage. Abbott v. Abbott and Godoy, 29 L. J., Mat. 57.

A certificate of a marriage in a foreign country, not purporting to be a copy of an entry in a registry of marriages kept by the law of that country, but only containing a reference to the registry, cannot be received as evidence of the marriage, although it would be evidence of the marriage in the foreign courts. Finlay v. Finlay and Rudall, 31 L. J., Mat. 149. See also Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe and Anderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 467; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 714: col. 654; and the Foreign Marriage Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 23).

And see EVIDENCE ON PETITION FOR DECLARATION OF LEGITIMACY, col. 669.

d. Remarriage after Dissolution.

Before Decree Absolute.] — Where, after a decree of dissolution of marriage, one of the parties to such marriage was married in fact within the time limited by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, and during the lifetime of the other party to the marriage:—Held, that the latter de facto marriage was null and void in law. Chichester v. Mure f. c. Chichester, 3 Sw. & Tr. 223; 32 L. J., Mat. 146; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 779; 8 L. T. 676; 11 W. R. 990.

On the 1st June, 1860, a final decree of dissolution of marriage was pronounced: parliament was prorogued on the 28th of August, 1860, and on the 20th of November, 1860, when parliament was not sitting, the respondent married again:—Held, that the marriage was void. Rogers, otherwise Briscoe, f. c. Halmshaw v. Halmshaw, 3 Sw. & Tr. 509; 33 L. J., Mat. 141; 11 L. T. 21.

2. FEES.

From 1808 until 1854, fees of 10*s.* to the rector and 3*s.* to the clerk of a parish church were with some immaterial variations paid on every marriage celebrated in the parish church. There was no evidence extending beyond 1808:—Held, that as fees of this amount could not have been payable in the time of Richard I., considering the difference between the value of money at that time and the present time, the objection of rankness applied to the claim, and rebutted the presumption arising from modern enjoyment, of an origin dating from before the time of legal memory. Bryant v. Foot, 9 B. & S. 444; 37 L. J., Q. B. 217; L. R. 3 Q. B. 497; 18 L. T. 587; 16 W. R. 808—Ex. Ch.

New Parish.]—The publication of the banns of marriage and the solemnisation of marriage are "ecclesiastical purposes" within the meaning of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, s. 14, and, where a district becomes within this section a separate and distinct parish for ecclesiastical purposes, the incumbent of such parish has the exclusive right of performing the office of marriage in the case of persons resident in his parish, and of receiving the fees for such marriages, and consequently the incumbent of the mother parish has no right to solemnise such marriages in the church of the mother parish or to receive the fees for the same. Fuller v. Alford, 52 L. J., Q. B. 265; 10 Q. B. D. 418; 48 L. T. 431; 31 W. R. 522; 47 J. P. 423.

District Church—Rights of Rector and Incumbent.]—Under 59 Geo. 3, c. 134, and by an order in council, a district, with a district church, was parted off from the parish of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green; but the order in council directed that, during the incumbency of the rector of St. Matthew, two-thirds of the fees to be received for marriages, baptisms, churchings, and burials at the district church should belong and be paid to the rector, and one-third to the district minister:—Held, that where the minister had actually received the entire fees for marriages, &c., the rector might recover from him the two-thirds in an action for money had and received. King v. Alston, 12 Q. B. 971; 18 L. J., Q. B. 59; 13 Jur. 297.

Held, also, that the act and order in council did not oblige the minister to receive the fees, or any part of them, and that the rector could not maintain assumpsit against him on a supposed duty to take the fees and pay the rector his two-thirds. Ib.

3. CONDITIONS IN RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

See WILL.

4. LEGITIMACY OF CHILDREN.

a. Generally.

Jurisdiction of Divorce Court to make Declaration of.]—21 & 22 Vict. c. 93, enables persons to establish their legitimacy and the validity of marriages, and the right to be deemed natural-born subjects by application to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 7, the right of appeal to the House of Lords given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 56, is extended to all sentences and final judgments on petitions under the act.

The 10th section does not prevent the court from inquiring, in any case, into the merits of a petition, but only that its decree shall not have any effect upon the final judgment already pronounced of another competent court. Shedden

v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170; 30 L. J., Mat. 217; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1163; 3 L. T. 592; 9 W. R. 285.

—— As to Title of Honour.]—The Legitimacy Declaration Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 93) gives the court no jurisdiction to investigate or decide upon a claim to a title of honour, and allegations in a petition, to the effect that by reason of the facts therein set out the petitioner was entitled to a baronetcy, were ordered to be struck out as irrelevant. Frederick v. Att.-Gen., 43 L. J., Mat. 32; L. R. 3 P. 196; 30 L. T. 767; 22 W. R. 416.

—— As to Petitioner's Grandfather.]—The Probate Division has no power under the Legitimacy Declaration Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 93) to make a decree establishing the legitimacy of a petitioner's grandfather. Insufficiency of this act in this respect commented on. Dodds v. Att.-Gen., 42 L. T. 402.

—— As to Property—Lex loci rei sitæ.]—The question of legitimacy having relation to real estate is a question which each country will answer for itself. Fenton v. Livingstone, 3 Macq. H. L. 497, 556; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1183; 7 W. R. 671.

In deciding the title to real estate, the lex loci rei sitæ must always prevail, so that a person legitimate by the law of his birthplace, and of the place where his parents were married, may not be regarded as legitimate to take a real estate by inheritance elswhere. Ib.

In respect to immovable property, the rule is, that the law of the country in which it is situated governs the tenure, the title, and the descent. Ib.

Presumption of Legitimacy.]—On the birth of a child shortly after marriage the presumption of legitimacy clearly exists until rebutted by satisfactory evidence to the contrary. Parsons, In re, 18 L. T. 704.

—— Husband within Four Seas.]—It is a presumption of law that a child born of a married woman whose husband is within the four seas is legitimate, unless there is irresistible evidence against the possibility of sexual intercourse having taken place. Head v. Head, 1 Sim. & S. 150; Turn. & R. 138; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 105.

—— Hurrying on Marriage.]—When, after open courtship and constant intercourse, a man and woman (she being ultimately in an advanced state of pregnancy), hurry on their marriage to prevent, or to mitigate, scandal; and where in less than seven weeks after the marriage she gives birth to a child; the presumption of the husband's paternity to that child is next to insuperable. Gardner v. Gardner, 2 App. Cas. 723—H. L. (Sc.)

The presumption is not a presumptio juris et de jure, but a presumption of fact. Ib.

—— Possibility of Access.]—Where the evidence as to the probability of access between husband and wife is such as to leave any reasonable doubt on the mind of the court, the presumption is in favour of the legitimacy of the child. The onus of proof that the child was not the child of the husband lies on the party contesting the legitimacy. Plowes v. Bossey, 2 Dr. & Sm. 145; 31 L. J., Ch. 681; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 352; 7 L. T. 306; 10 W. R. 332.

When husband and wife have been in such a situation that access may have taken place, the presumption of law is in favour of the issue, but may be rebutted on strong evidence. If access is proved, no inquiry can be made whether the husband or any other person be the parent. Lord Coke's doctrine of "inter quatuor maria" is exploded. Ib. See col. 673.

—— Presumption of Father's consent to Marriage.]—Where a marriage of a minor was celebrated by a licence, to which the consent of the father was requisite, his consent (the presumption of law being in favour of marriage and legitimacy, and against the commission of any crime or offence) must be presumed until proved to the contrary, and the mere fact that the mother's name appeared in the register as the consenting party was not sufficient to contravene the presumption. Harrison v. Southampton Corporation, 4 De G. M. & G. 137; 22 L. J., Ch. 722; 18 Jur. 1; 1 W. R. 422.

—— Sleeping together — Capacity.] — The presumption of law arising from the fact of husband and wife sleeping together is irresistible as to the legitimacy of a child of the wife, unless there is clear and satisfactory evidence that some physical incapacity existed. Legge v. Edmonds, 25 L. J., Ch. 125: 4 W. R. 71.

Where such physical incapacity is satisfactorily made out according to the opinions of the medical witnesses, evidence of the adultery of the wife is still an important ingredient in determining the legitimacy of the child; because, if the wife were of irreproachable character, it would go far to modify the opinion as to the husband's incapacity. Ib.

The declaration of a mother is not admissible to prove non-access on the part of her husband; but where non-access has been established aliunde, the declaration of the wife is admissible to prove the paternity of the child. Ib. And see col. 674.

—— Evidence to Rebut.]—A child born of a married woman is, in the first instance, presumed to be legitimate. The presumption thus established by law is not to be rebutted by circumstances which only create doubt and suspicion, but it may be wholly removed by showing that the husband was, first, incompetent; secondly, entirely absent, so as to have no intercourse or communication of any kind with the mother; thirdly, entirely absent at the period during which the child must, in the course of nature, have been begotten; fourthly, only present under such circumstances as afford clear and satisfactory proof that there was no sexual intercourse. Such evidence as this puts an end to the question, and establishes the illegitimacy of the child of a married woman. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 9 Beav. 552; 10 Jur. 957.

It is, however, very difficult to conclude against the legitimacy, in cases where there is no disability and where some society or communication is continued between husband and wife during the time in question, so as to have afforded opportunities of sexual intercourse; and in cases where such opportunities have occurred, and in which any one of two or more men may have been the father, whatever probabilities may exist, no evidence can be admitted to show that any man, other than the husband, may have been, or probably was, the father of the wife's child. Throughout the investigation the presumption in favour of the legitimacy is to have its weight and influence, and the evidence against it ought to be strong, distinct, satisfactory, and conclusive. Ib.

—— Voluntary Separation.]—In the case of a divorce à mensâ et thoro, baron and feme live separately, and the wife has a child; this is a bastard; for the court will intend obedience has been paid to the sentence during this time. But if in the case of a voluntary separation a child is born, this is legitimate. Secus, where the jury find the husband has had no access to the wife. If the party charges his adversary with anything criminal, it ought to be shown with great plainness and certainty. Sidney v. Sidney, 3 P. W. 275.

On a trial as to the legitimacy of children begotten when the husband and wife were living separate, the fact that they had opportunities of access is not conclusive of the legitimacy; but the presumption of intercourse may be rebutted by circumstances. Reg. v. Mansfield, 1 Q. B. 444; 1 G. & D. 7; 10 L. J., M. C. 97; 5 Jur. 505.

—— Conduct of Wife.]—Husband and wife, after living together for ten years, and having one child, agreed to separate. They accordingly afterwards lived apart, but within such distance as afforded them opportunities of sexual intercourse, the husband not being impotent:—Held, that the presumption of law in favour of the legitimacy of a child begotten and born of the wife during the separation may be rebutted, not only by evidence to show that the husband had not sexual intercourse with her, but also by evidence of their conduct; such as that the wife was living in adultery, that she concealed the birth of the child from the husband, and declared to him that she never had such child; that the husband disclaimed all knowledge of the child, and acted, up to his death, as if no such child was in existence; and also that the wife's paramour aided in concealing the child, reared and educated it as his own, and left it all his property by his will. Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & F. 163; 1 Jur. 911.

The illegitimacy of a child born of a married woman is established beyond all dispute, by evidence of her living in adultery at the time when the child was begotten, and of her husband then residing in another part of the kingdom, so as to make access impossible. Saye and Sele (Barony), 1 H. L. Cas. 507.

Allegation that Petitioner is Heir-at-Law.]—Under the Legitimacy Declaration Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 93), the court cannot determine whether or not the petitioner is heir-at-law to another person, and allegations to that effect in the body of the petition or in the prayer thereto are inadmissible. Mansel v. Att.-Gen., 46 L. J., P. 64; 2 P. D. 265; 25 W. R. 879.

Status of Child depends on Status of Father.]—The status of the child, with respect to its capacity to be legitimated by the subsequent marriage of its parents, depends wholly on the status of the putative father, not on that of the mother. Udny v. Udny, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 441.

According to English law—where at the time of a bastard's birth the father has his domicil in England—no subsequent change of domicil can render practicable the bastard's legitimation. Ib.

Scotch Marriage.]—By Scotch law marriage of a domiciled Scotchman legitimates his children born previous to the marriage, and the same effect is produced even if the marriage takes place on death bed. Lauderdale Peerage, The, 10 App. Cas. 692—H. L. (Sc.)

A Scotch marriage can legitimate the previously-born children of the married persons, so as to enable them to succeed as heirs to real estate in Scotland. The child of a Scotchman, though born in England, becomes legitimate for all civil purposes in Scotland, by the subsequent marriage of the parents in England, if the domicil of the father was and continued throughout to be Scotch. Neither the place of the marriage nor the place of the birth of the child will, under such circumstances, affect the status of the child. Dalhousie v. M'Donall, 7 Cl. & F. 817. See Munro v. Munro, 7 Cl. & F. 842.

In order to entitle the children of a putative marriage, which has been declared void, to the status of legitimacy, under the Scotch law, the parents must be justifiably ignorant of the subsistence of the impediment which led to the nullity, and the impediment must be a matter of fact and not of law only. Shaw v. Gould, 37 L. J., Ch. 433; L. R. 3 H. L. 55; 18 L. T. 833.

Bigamy.]—A man and woman were married in 1874, but the woman having previously gone through a ceremony of marriage with a man whose wife was living at the time, they prayed the court to declare their marriage had in 1874 valid:—Held, that this was included within 21 & 22 Vict. c. 93, s. 1. Shilson v. Att.-Gen., 22 W. R. 831.

Divorce from Lunatic—Suit to perpetuate Testimony.]—A lunatic's wife was divorced for adultery, and it was alleged that the last child born before the divorce was illegitimate. The committee presented a petition for leave to prosecute a suit to perpetuate testimony as to the child's illegitimacy:—Held, that the proper course was for the court to direct a settlement of part of the lunatic's property on his children, so as to give the legitimate children an interest in the property which would entitle them to raise the question of the legitimacy of the child last born and bring a suit to perpetuate the testimony on the subject. Stoer, In re, 9 P. D. 120; 51 L. T. 141; 32 W. R. 1005—C. A.

Domicil of Petitioner not English—No Property in England.]—A petition was filed by a son, a minor, by his guardian, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 93, for a declaration of his legitimacy. The marriage of his parents took place in 1864. In 1856 his mother went through a ceremony of marriage with one Hawkins, who was previously married, and whose wife was then living. The petition contained a prayer that this marriage of 1856 might be declared null and void, in which event the legitimacy of the petitioner would follow as a matter of course. Hawkins was cited to see proceedings. The mother was not cited, but was examined as a witness at the hearing, when it was admitted that the petition could not be sustained under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, the domicil of the petitioner being Australian and not English, and there being no property in England which could be affected by the decree. The court declined to treat the proceedings as if instituted for a declaration of the nullity of the marriage of 1856, and dismissed the petition. Johnstone v. Att.-Gen., 43 L. J., Mat. 3 ; 29 L. T. 547 ; 22 W. R. 208.

Jews.]—A father, who was a Jew, by his will gave his daughters benefits contingent upon their marrying according to the tenets of the Jewish religion, and determinable upon their marrying otherwise. By a codicil he gave his residuary estate to the children of his sons and daughters. The father at his death left a son who had eight children, of whom three were born before marriage, and were the children of his wife. He knew of the facts attending the births of the eight children, all of whom were living at the date of his codicil. By the Jewish law, the subsequent marriage of parents legitimises children born before marriage :—Held, that the children born before marriage did not take under the gift. Levy v. Solomon, 37 L. T. 263 ; 25 W. R. 842.

Disannulling Sentence obtained by Fraud.]—Sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court declaring a marriage null and void, is not conclusive as to the fact of the nullity of the marriage if obtained by collusion or fraud. Harrison v. Southampton Corporation, 4 De G. M. & G. 137 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 722 ; 18 Jur. 1 ; 1 W. R. 422.

On a question of legitimacy there were in evidence a sentence of nullity of the marriage of a minor for want of her father's consent, and a statement in the parish register that the marriage took place by licence with the consent of the mother of the bride, but nothing as to the father's consent. There was, however, evidence, leading to the conclusion that the sentence had been obtained by collusion between the husband and wife, and that the father had been aware and did not disapprove of the match :—Held, fifty years after the date of the sentence of nullity, that the marriage ought to be presumed valid. Ib. S. P., Birch, In re, 17 Beav. 358.

Bastard taking by Purchase—Reputation.]—Bastard may take by purchase, if sufficiently described, and having acquired the reputation of child. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 466.

Child en ventre sa mère—Party to Proceedings.]—A marriage was solemnised between A. and B., but it was declared void by the Ecclesiastical Court. Some years afterwards, a child of A. and B. en ventre sa mère at the time of the sentence, and who necessarily was no party to the proceedings, claimed property in this court as descendant of A. Quære, whether, in such a case, the child, who was bastardised by the effect of the sentence, had any means of showing that the sentence was erroneous. Semble, not. Perry v. Meddowcroft, 10 Beav. 122.

b. Practice to obtain Declaration.

The Divorce Rules are to apply. See D. R. 1865, R. 174.

Petition.]—A form of petition is set out in Shedden v. Att.-Gen., 2 Sw. & Tr. 170 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 217.

When the proceedings are instituted by one who claims real estate in England, circumstances may be stated in the petition to support such claim. Mansel v. Att-Gen., 46 L. J., P. 64 ; 2 P. D. 265 ; 25 W. R. 879.

—— Of Infant.]—A petition, presented on behalf of an infant to establish his legitimacy, can only be so by a guardian assigned to him by the court. Upton, In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 404.

But the court refused to appoint a guardian to an infant, for the purpose of presenting a petition on his behalf until the matter had been referred to the registrar, to ascertain whether the institution of the suit was likely to be of benefit to the infant. Chaplin, In re, 36 L. J., Mat. 49 ; L. R. 1 P. 328 ; 16 L. T. 154.

And the court afterwards, being satisfied from the report that the object of the suit was to prove that the infant was illegitimate, refused to appoint a guardian. S. C., 36 L. J., Mat. 90 ; 16 L. T. 612 ; 15 W. R. 1048.

Who Respondent.]—The attorney-general is the necessary respondent ; petitioners have a right to have their case heard as between themselves and him, and the parties cited, pro interesse suo, cannot sustain a plea of res judicata, as between themselves and the petitioners, in bar of the whole proceedings. Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 217 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1163 ; 3 L. T. 592 ; 9 W. R. 285.

The answer of the attorney-general to a petition should be a formal traverse of the allegations in the petition. Ryves v. Att.-Gen., 35 L. J., Mat. 6 ; L. R. 1 P. 23 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 878 ; 13 L. T. 305 ; 14 W. R. 17.

Joinder in Writ with Claim for Probate.]—A claim for a declaration of legitimacy cannot be joined with a claim for probate in a probate action. It must be made on petition under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858. Warter v. Warter, 59 L. J., P. 45 ; 15 P. D. 35 ; 62 L. T. 328.

Parties to be Cited.]—When a party applying to the court to declare the validity of a marriage has filed a petition, he should ask permission to cite individuals to see proceedings, and show sufficient reason why they should be selected. Shedden, In re, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 151 ; 7 W. R. 463.

The court will not take upon itself to decide who shall be cited to see proceedings. The petitioner should ask leave to cite some person specified, and show that he is a person fit to be cited. Upton v. Att.-Gen., 32 L. J., Mat. 177.

A person not cited, who has no real interest in opposing a petition for a declaration of legitimacy, will not be allowed to intervene. Ib.

—— Citation of Elder Brother.]—In a petition under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 93), the court refused to order the citation, under s. 7, of the elder brother of the petitioner, who was alleged by the petitioner to be illegitimate, as having been born before the date of the marriage of his parents. Mansell v. Att.-Gen., 26 W. R. 316.

—— Practice as to Citing Parties other than the Attorney-General.]—The practice in future under the Legitimacy Declaration Act and the Greek Marriages Act, 1884, will be that, after citing the attorney-general, the parties on applying to have the case set down for trial must lay the state of the case, by affidavit or otherwise, before the registrar, who will direct whether any, and if so which parties shall be cited to see proceedings. The registrar's direction to be subject to the judge in the same manner as all other orders of the registrar. Brinkley v. Att.-Gen., 58 L. J., P. 53; 14 P. D. 83; 60 L. T. 935; 37 W. R. 687; 53 J. P. 425.

Striking out Petition.]—In a petition under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, the court struck out so much of the petition as prayed for a declaration that the petitioner's father was the legitimate child of the petitioner's grandfather, the probate division having no power under the Legitimacy Declaration Act to make a decree establishing the legitimacy of a petitioner's grandfather. Dodds v. Att.-Gen., 28 W. R. 278.

Commission to Examine Witnesses.]—When a motion is made for an order for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, the affidavit on which the motion is founded should set out the names of the witnesses whom it is proposed to examine. Ryves v. Att.-Gen., L. R. 1 P. 23.

Motion for Directions.]—The court dismissed, with costs, an application, made upon a motion, by the petitioner in a legitimacy declaration suit, asking for leave to cite a certain person, other than the attorney-general, and for directions; such motion being contrary to the practice in such cases, as settled in Brinckley v. Att.-Gen., supra. Bain v. Att.-Gen., 64 L. T. 837.

Pleadings — Pedigree to be Set Out.]—The pedigree of parties claiming to be related to a deceased intestate as against the Queen's proctor's allegation of bastardy, must be set out, but it is sufficient to aver that B. was the legitimate child of A., and his lawful wife, without stating the time or place of the marriage, or the name of the wife, or the date of the birth of B. Dyke v. Wallis, 2 Sw. & Tr. 466; 31 L. J., P. 97; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 6 L. T. 227; 10 W. R. 631.

In answer to the Queen's proctor's declaration of bastardy, the steps of the pedigree must be set out, but it is not necessary to plead that a marriage was solemnised at a particular time and place, and that certain issue was born after the date of the marriage. Dyke v. Williams, 2 Sw. & Tr. 465; 31 L. J., P. 90; 6 L. T. 227; 10 W. R. 586.

—— Contents—Amendment of.]—In a petition under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, the petitioner may allege that he claims real estate, and may also state how he claims it; but he cannot allege or pray for a declaration that he is entitled to such estate to the exclusion of some other person—e.g. by reason of the illegitimacy of the person. A petitioner alleged that he claimed real estate as heir-at-law of his father, and that E. B. M. also claimed to be such heir-at-law. Leave to cite E. B. M. was refused, on the ground that E. B. M. was not interested in disputing the only facts which the court was competent to determine—i.e. the legitimacy of the petitioner or the marriage of his parents. The court has power to amend the pleadings at any time, and, if necessary, to order allegations to be re-inserted which it had previously directed to be struck out. Mansel v. Att.-Gen., 48 L. J., P. 42; 4 P. D. 232; 40 L. T. 367; 26 W. R. 316.

Trial of Issues by Jury.]—In an interest suit, in which a question of legitimacy was raised between a person claiming to be the lawful nephew and next-of-kin of a deceased intestate and the queen's proctor, the court directed the issues joined to be tried by a jury, on the application of the next-of-kin, although the application was opposed by the Queen's proctor. Queen's Proctor v. Williams, 4 Sw. & Tr. 221; 31 L. J., P. 86.

The court will generally, at the request of either party to the petition, direct issues raised to be tried by a jury. Bouverie v. Att.-Gen., 2 Sw. & Tr. 548; 31 L. J., Mat. 79; 6 L. T. 692; 10 W. R. 811.

The case cannot be tried by a jury unless an issue has been raised. Ryves v. Att.-Gen., 35 L. J., Mat. 6; L. R. 1 P. 23; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 878; 13 L. T. 305; 14 W. R. 17.

—— Postponement of.]—Where, on an application for the postponement of a trial by the attorney-general, his affidavit stated that certain documents already in his possession were likely to lead, on inquiry, to further information, the court granted the application on this ground. Ryves v. Att.-Gen., 14 W. R. 409.

Costs in Suits.]—Semble, that the court has no power under the Legitimacy Declaration Act to condemn in costs a party who is cited, and who is unsuccessful in his opposition to the declaration prayed for in the petition. Frederick v. Att.-Gen., 43 L. J., Mat. 32; L. R. 3 P. 196; 30 L. T. 767; 22 W. R. 416.

A petitioner, who is resident out of the jurisdiction of the court, cannot be compelled to give security for costs. Shedden v. Att.-Gen., 36 L. J., Mat. 132; 16 L. T. 746; 15 W. R. 1093.

In proceedings under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858, the court has jurisdiction to order a person who has been cited, and has appeared and opposed the petition, to pay the costs of the petitioner. Bain v. Att.-Gen., 61 L. J., P. 135; [1892] P. 261; 67 L. T. 447; 40 W. R. 505—C. A. Affirming 61 L. J., P. 107; [1892] P. 217; 67 L. T. 387.

Settlement Made to raise Question of Legitimacy.]—The court will entertain a suit to declare the rights of children of a marriage to a fund settled by one of their parents, though the fund be settled with the object of determining, by having the individuals comprising the class ascertained, whether a reputed child is legitimate. Gurney v. Gurney, 1 Hem. & M. 413; 32 L. J., Ch. 456; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 514; 8 L. T. 380; 11 W. R. 659.

In December, 1859, a wife eloped from her husband, there being at that time two children of the marriage. Proceedings for obtaining a divorce were immediately commenced by the husband; a decree nisi was pronounced on the 13th of February, 1861, and made absolute on the 22nd of May, 1861. On the 4th of May, 1861, the wife was delivered of a full-grown male child. In order to determine the status of this child, the husband, in January, 1862, vested 2,000*l.* reduced annuities in trustees, for all and every the children then living of his marriage with his wife; and a suit was instituted, seeking that the rights of the parties interested under this settlement might be declared, and the trusts of the settlement might be carried out under the direction of the court: —Held, that although the real object of the settlor might be, and probably was, to obtain a decision from the court that this child was illegitimate, and although the decision might affect property of far greater value, those circumstances were not sufficient to warrant the court in withholding the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction. Ib.

Family estates stood limited to an eldest son for life, with remainder to his male issue in tail, with remainder to the second son for life, with remainder to his male issue in tail, with remainder to the eldest son's female issue in tail, with remainder to the second son's female issue in tail, with remainders over. The eldest son and wife were divorced, at the husband's suit, by a decree of the divorce court; but no child of the marriage having been born during a cohabitation of six years, a female child was born of the wife after an interval of nearly eighteen months after cesser of cohabitation with her husband, a few weeks only after the decree nisi in the divorce court was pronounced, but before the decree absolute was pronounced. The child must have been begotten before the proceedings in the divorce court were instituted. The eldest son taking no steps to raise the question of legitimacy of the child, and neither he nor the second son having any male issue, a smal personal settlement was, after the decree absolute, made by the mother of the eldest son, with the privity of the second, for the express purpose of raising the question, the settlement giving successive interests to the children living at the date of the marriage between the eldest son and his then divorced wife, and to the second son. The latter then filed a bill to have the trusts of the settlement carried into execution, upon an allegation that the trustee declined to act except under the direction of the court, charging the illegitimacy of the child, and claiming an immediate interest in the trust fund. The settlement was admittedly made with a view to settling the succession to the family estates:—Held, that a suit so circumstanced, being merely manufactured for the purpose of compelling the present trial in an indirect way of an important question affecting the title to large estates, namely, the status of legitimacy or illegitimacy of the infant, was not maintainable. Cooke v. Cooke, 4 De G. J. & S. 704; 34 L. J., Ch. 459; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 533; 12 L. T. 468; 13 W. R. 697.

—— Father and Mother Living.]—Where a settlement was made to raise a question of a child's legitimacy the court declined to entertain a suit for its execution when the father and mother are living, and had not concurred in the settlement or the suit, and where the guardian of the child (an infant) disclaimed at the bar. Anon., 2 Hem. & M. 124.

c. Evidence on Petition for Declaration.

General Principle—Presumption in Favour of Legitimacy.]—A child of a married woman must be presumed to be the child of the husband, unless it is proved beyond all reasonable or serious doubt that no sexual intercourse could have taken place at the time within which the husband could be the father. The onus probandi lies entirely on the part of those who wish to show the illegitimacy. Plowes v. Bossey, 3 Dr. & Sm. 145; 31 L. J., Ch. 681; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 352; 7 L. T. 306; 10 W. R. 332; Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & F. 163; 1 Jur. 911.

Plowes v. Bossey (supra), is not an exception to the rule that on a question of legitimacy the evidence of the mother is inadmissible. Atchley v. Sprigg, 3 N. R. 360.

Declarations.]—Declarations of members of a family in questions of legitimacy are not admissible post litem motam, whether the lis is known or not known to the person making the declarations. Shedden v. Att-Gen. and Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170; 30 L. J., Mat. 217; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1163; 3 L. T. 592; 9 W. R. 285.

To constitute lis mota, for this purpose, there must be more than the existence of the state of facts on which the claim is founded, or even of litigation on kindred matters; but there must have been a controversy in respect of the very point in dispute as to which the evidence is tendered. Ib.

On an issue whether the plaintiff was the natural son of H. C., declarations of J. C., brother of H. C., were tendered as evidence of the relationship between the plaintiff and H. C.:—Held, that such declarations did not fall within the exception which admits declarations of members of the family in cases of pedigree. Crispin v. Doglioni, 3 Sw. & Tr. 44; 32 L. J., P. 109; 8 L. T. 91; 11 W. R. 500.

In an administration suit, the only question before the jury was, whether D., through whom the defendant claimed, was legitimate. The defendant, after producing primâ facie evidence of the legitimacy of D., tendered his declarations. The plaintiff objected to the admissibility of these declarations, and tendered evidence on the voir dire for the purpose of showing that the declarant was not a member of the family. The court being of opinion that the defendant had made out a primâ facie case of the declarant's legitimacy, admitted the evidence of the declarations, and rejected the evidence on the voir dire tendered by the plaintiff. Hitchens v. Eardley, 40 L. J., Mat. 70; L. R. 2 P. 241; 25 L. T. 163.

Asserted marriage between A. and B. in 1773. In 1800, C., their eldest son, claimed certain property, to which, if legitimate, he was entitled, but which was then in the possession of D., his maternal uncle. D. answered, saying that he should be ready to defend any action which C. might bring, and communicated the fact that the claim had been made to the paternal uncle of C. C. replied that his object was to establish his legitimacy, and did not follow up the claim to the property by any suit or action. In a proceeding under the Legitimacy Declaration Act to establish the fact of marriage between A. and B.:—Held, that a controversy had arisen in 1800 between C. and D. upon the very question involved in the litigation, and that declarations by members of his family subsequent to 1800 were inadmissible as made post litem motam. Frederick v. Att.-Gen., 44 L. J., Mat. 1; L. R. 3 P. 270; 32 L. T. 39.

A deed, dated 1803, to which members of the family were parties, was tendered for the purpose of proving by means of the recitals in the deed declarations by them, but was rejected on the ground that the declarations were made post litem motam. It was then tendered as evidence of conduct or a solemn act done by the parties:—Held, that it was inadmissible for the purpose for which it was tendered. Ib.

Evidence of declarations by members of the family subsequent to 1800 as to statements made by other members of the family concerning the marriage prior to lis mota was also tendered and rejected as falling within the principle of declarations made post litem motam. Ib.

A deed, of date 1826, made between D. and other parties, was tendered and received for the purpose of showing that the property claimed by C. had been dealt with adversely to his family from the death of B., his mother, down to the present time. Ib.

Of Mother.]—A mother's evidence is inadmissible to prove the legitimacy or illegitimacy of her child born during wedlock. Atchley v. Sprigg, 3 N. R. 360; 33 L. J., Ch. 345; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 144; 10 L. T. 16; 12 W. R. 364.

Where the legitimacy of a party was the question in dispute, and a witness deposed to expressions of the mother tending to bastardise the child:—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 2 Car. & K. 701.

On a summons for maintenance of children against P., the father, P., denied the paternity, his wife having been living apart from him. P. was allowed to deny an alleged admission by him as to the paternity:—Held, that P.'s evidence was not admissible to contradict evidence of other witnesses as to his admission of paternity. Ulverstone Union v. Park, 53 J. P. 629.

Letter from Mother.]—The mother of a child wrote a letter to the alleged father, declaring that he was the father of her child, which was born three months after the death of her husband. It did not appear that this letter was ever received by the person to whom it was addressed, nor even that she had ever voluntarily parted with the possession of it:—Held, that the letter was not admissible as evidence of the conduct of the mother. Legge v. Edmonds, 25 L. J., Ch. 125; 4 W. R. 71.

Of Father.]—A father coming to bastardise his own issue is, though legal, a very suspicious witness. Standen v. Edwards, 1 Ves. 134.

Of Deceased Person.]—In such a case evidence of declarations made by a deceased person, other than the deceased in the cause, is inadmissible, unless the relationship is proved aliunde; but evidence of declarations made by the deceased in the cause is admissible. Dyke v. Williams, 31 L. J., P. 157; 6 L. T. 726.

Of Interested Person.] — The legitimacy of the defendants in an ejectment being in issue, they tendered the declarations of their natural father, made after their birth, that a prior marriage, contracted by him with a woman who was alive at the time of his de facto marriage with the defendant's mother, was invalid:—Held, inadmissible, the relationship not being established except by the evidence itself, and, semble, as being made by an interested party. Plant v. Taylor, 7 H. & N. 211; 31 L. J., Ex. 289; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 140; 5 L. T. 318.

Examination de bene esse.]—Upon a question of legitimacy depending upon a chain of distinct circumstances in the knowledge of different individuals, and the defendant an infant kept out of the way, an examination de bene esse would have been granted, though not within any of the three cases, viz. witnesses of the age of seventy, or quitting the kingdom, or a fact depending on a single witness. Shelly v. ——, 13 Ves. 56.

Personal Resemblance.]—On a question of disputed paternity, evidence of personal resemblance between the child and his alleged father is admissible. Bagot v. Bagot, 1 L. R., Ir. 308.

Entry in Family Bible.]—An entry in a family bible of the births of children, made by their mother shortly after their birth, is good evidence, in the absence of other and better testimony, such children having been neither baptised nor registered. Ashcroft v. Powell, 12 W. R. 301.

Sufficiency—Reputation of Marriage.]—Upon a question of legitimacy, A. produced witnesses, who swore to a marriage in fact between his parents, and he obtained a verdict. On a second trial he declined to produce those witnesses, and rested solely upon a reputation of the marriage. Although he again obtained a verdict, yet this is not sufficient to satisfy the conscience of a court of equity. Sherborne v. Napier, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 224.

On questions of legitimacy, declarations of parents after the birth of the child can have but little weight. Id. 234.

Observation as to the nature and extent of proof necessary to establish a case of adulterine bastardy, and as to what kind of evidence is admissible in such cases. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 9 Beav. 552; 10 Jur. 957.

When a man has been reputed all his life to be the legitimate child of his parents, persons who dispute his legitimacy after his death must produce very strong and unequivocal evidence in support of their contention. Olivant, In re, Haslam v. Cron, 19 W. R. 968.

Disproving—Onus.]—In a suit by the children of a marriage to enforce payment of their portions, the legitimacy of the plaintiffs having been called in question by the next tenant for life, who was a defendant in the cause:—Held, that a marriage de facto having been once established, it lay on the party impeaching the marriage to show that the same was illegal or void; that sufficient evidence of a marriage de facto having been submitted to the court, the court itself was competent to decide the question of the marriage for the purposes of the suit, without directing an issue. Piers v. Tuite, 1 Dr. & Wal. 279.

Reputation—Jew and Christian Woman.]—Marriage presumed between a Jew and a Christian woman, upon the weight of evidence, in the absence of direct proof of a ceremonial marriage. Goodman v. Goodman, 28 L. J., Ch. 745; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 902.

A., a Jew, and B., a Christian woman, cohabited as man and wife for twenty-eight years, and until B.'s death. They had several children, who were brought up as Christians; they cohabited partly in England and partly in foreign parts. There was no evidence of any marriage having been solemnised, but there was general reputation that the parties were married, and proof of the registry of the baptism in England of several of the children, as of A., and B. his wife, and that on a judicial proceeding, the parties gave evidence on oath as "A., and B. his wife." The relatives of A. never recognised the fact of a marriage, and some of them swore that they did not know even of the reputation of marriage.

A., in his will, referred to such of the children as were living as "my legatees":—Held, that the children were entitled, as legitimate children of A. and B., to a fund belonging to A.'s next-of-kin, and that the onus of proof lay upon those who sought to disturb the general reputation and presumption of marriage under the foregoing circumstances. Ib. See col. 655.

Sentence of Court—After-born Child—Right to Impeach Sentence for Collusion.]—A marriage was solemnised between A. and B., but it was declared void by the ecclesiastical court. Some years afterwards, a child of A. and B. en ventre sa mère at the time of the sentence, and who necessarily was no party to the proceedings, claimed property in this court as descendant of A.:—Held, first, that he was bound by the sentence, though he might avoid its effect by showing fraud and collusion in obtaining it; secondly, that such fraud and collusion must be shown to have taken place between the parties to the proceedings; and thirdly, that proof that the costs of the unsuccessful party had been agreed to be paid, that witnesses were not examined and others not cross-examined, and that the difficulties were not interposed which might have been, did not altogether amount to proof of fraud and collusion. Quære, whether in such a case, the child, who was bastardised by the effect of the sentence, had any means of showing that the sentence was erroneous. Semble, not. Perry v. Meddowcroft, 10 Beav. 122.

On appeal, the Lord Chancellor, upon the claimant's undertaking to file a bill to establish his claim as male lineal descendant of the father, allowed the exceptions to stand over, &c. Ib.

In 1798 a marriage was solemnised by licence between a man and a female minor. Three years afterwards, in pursuance of a previous agreement, the woman instituted a suit for nullity of marriage, and a decree of nullity was pronounced, on the ground of non-consent of the minor's father. Early in the following year a daughter was born:—Held, overruling the decision of the court below, that evidence showing that the sentence of the ecclesiastical court had been obtained by fraud and collusion was admissible; and upon its being satisfactorily proved to the court, the legitimacy of the daughter was established. Harrison v. Southampton Corporation, 4 De G. M. & G. 137; 22 L. J., Ch. 722; 18 Jur. 1; 1 W. R. 422.

Claim to Property—Onus probandi.]—Where an issue is raised between the crown alleging the bastardy of, and parties claiming to be related to, a deceased intestate, the burden of proof is on the parties setting up the relationship. Emsley, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 491.

Effect of Proof of Legitimacy.]—Proof of the legitimacy of the offspring is proof of the validity of the marriage. Campbell v. Campbell, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 182.

d. Access.

Access, what is.]—Access is such access as affords an opportunity of sexual intercourse, and where there is evidence of such access between a husband and wife, within a period capable of raising the legal presumption as to the legitimacy of an after-born child, the court will not direct an issue upon evidence showing the continued adulterous intercourse of the wife with another man, and the improbability of the husband being the father; but will declare the legitimacy of the child. Bury v. Philpot, 2 Myl. & K. 349.

Husband within Four Seas.]—It is a presumption of law that a child born of a married woman is legitimate, the husband being within the four seas, unless there is irresistible evidence against possibility of sexual intercourse having taken place. Head v. Head, 1 Sim. & S. 150; Turn. & R. 138; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 105. See also Banbury Peerage Case, 1 Sim. & S. 153.

Access not Presumed.]—Access is not to be presumed between man and wife on account of the mere possibility of its occurrence. Clark v. Maynard, 6 Madd. 364.

The old rule to presume access conclusively, if the parties were within the four seas, is done away. Access or non-access must be proved like any other fact. Shelly v. ——, 13 Ves. 58; Pendrel v. Pendrel, 2 Stra. 925. Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & F. 163; 1 Jur. 911.

Wife Living in Adultery—Husband in another part of Kingdom.]—The illegitimacy of a child born of a married woman is established beyond all dispute by evidence of her living in adultery at the time when the child was begotten, and of her husband then residing in another part of the kingdom, so as to make access impossible. Saye and Sele (Barony of), In re, 1 H. L. Cas. 507.

Child born Six Months after Reunion.]—Where a husband, after a long absence, did not rejoin his wife till the 24th November, 1849, and where she, nevertheless, produced a full-grown child on the 18th May, 1850:—Held, that he could not have been the father, and that she was guilty of adultery. Heathcote's Divorce Bill, 1 Macq. H. L. 535.

Evidence — Admissibility of — Wife's Paramour.]—Evidence of verbal statements made by a wife's paramour previously to the birth of the child is admissible as evidence of conduct tending to show that he was the father of the child. Burnaby v. Baillie, 58 L. J., Ch. 842; 42 Ch. D. 282; 61 L. T. 634; 38 W. R. 125; Ginclay, In re, 17 Beav. 573.

—— Of Parents as to Access.] — Neither husband nor wife can be examined for the purpose of proving non-access during marriage. Nor can either be examined as to any collateral fact, for the purpose of proving non-access; as that the husband, at a particular time, lived at a distance from his wife and cohabited with another woman. Rex v. Sourton, 5 A. & E. 180; 6 N. & M. 575; 2 H. & W. 209; 5 L. J., M. C. 100.

A mother's evidence is inadmissible to prove the legitimacy or illegitimacy of her child born during wedlock. Atchley v. Sprigg, 33 L. J., Ch. 345; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 144; 10 L. T. 16; 12 W. R. 364.

W., by will, bequeathed 1,500*l.* to trustees in trusts for C., the wife of J., for life, and after her death to divide the same equally among the children of the marriage. J. deserted C., who subsequently cohabited with M., and during such cohabitation A. was born. On the death of C.,

A., an infant, by her next friend, applied for maintenance, out of the fund, whereupon J. filed an affidavit denying the legitimacy of A. upon the ground, among others, of non-access to his wife:—Held, that this was not a "proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869, and therefore, the evidence of the husband as to non-access was not admissible. Nottingham Union v. Tomkinson (4 C. P. D. 343) followed. Walker, In re, Jackson, In re, 53 L. T. 660; 34 W. R. 95. See The Aylesford Peerage, infra.

A defendant in a testamentary suit claimed to be lawful nephew and one of the next-of-kin of the deceased:—Held, that the declarations by the defendant's mother as to her marriage with his father were inadmissible without previous proof of such marriage. Dyke v. Williams, 31 L. J., P. 157; 6 L. T. 726.

In an action to try the legitimacy of the child of a married woman, no question tending directly or indirectly to prove or disprove access on the part of her husband can be asked of the husband or of the wife. Hamp v. Robinson, 16 L. T. 29.

Evidence of what occurred during a conversation between the husband and wife, if given by a third person, is receivable as evidence of a fact. Ib.

An agreement executed by husband and wife who have been living apart, to live together again, is receivable to raise a presumption of previous non-access, as being an act done by the parties. Ib.

Evidence of a husband on the question of non-access, and consequent legitimacy of some of the children born during the marriage, is admissible, but not to be acted upon unless corroborated by other evidence. Yearwood's Trusts, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 478; 5 Ch. D. 545; 25 W. R. 461.

A. married B. on the 6th of July, 1865. In September, 1865, they voluntarily separated, but the marriage was never dissolved by sentence of divorce, nor was there any judicial separation. A child was born on the 13th of May, 1866. B. went to live with another man, R., in November, 1866, and lived with him as his wife until shortly before her death in April, 1876. She had three children, born in 1868, 1870, and 1873 respectively, who were described in their baptismal certificates with the surname of R., and were supported by him and reputed his children. On a petition by the child born in May, 1866, to have a fund in court carried over to his separate account as being solely entitled under a gift in a will "in trust for all the children or any the child of B.," an affidavit of A., the husband, admitted to prove non-access to B. since Christmas, 1865, and that he had not seen her since that date, and that consequently the other three children, though born during the continuance of the marriage, were illegitimate. Ib.

Held, also, that though all the children above mentioned were alive at the date of the will, yet, it being possible for B. to have future legitimate children, only legitimate children could take, so that the petitioner, being the only legitimate child, was entitled to the whole of the trust fund. Ib. Gibbs v. Hooper, 2 Myl. & K. 353.

—— Competency of Spouses to give Evidence under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3.]—A petition which sought to establish a claim on the ground that a certain person was illegitimate by reason of the adultery of his mother, who had since been divorced:—Held, not to be "a proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery," within the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3, so as to make the husband competent to give evidence tending to prove the fact of non-access. R.'s Trusts, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 192; L. R. 10 Eq. 41.

Held, also, that independent evidence showing that on the only occasion when the husband visited the place where his wife was residing, he was engaged in collecting evidence with a view to a divorce, would be sufficient to raise a presumption of non-access. Ib.

Notwithstanding the provisions of s. 3 of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, that the evidence of a husband or wife is admissible in a "proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery," the evidence of a husband is not admissible, after the dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, to prove the illegitimacy of a child born in wedlock. Burnaby v. Baillie, 58 L. J., Ch. 842; 42 Ch. D. 282; 61 L. T. 634; 38 W. R. 125.

—— Questions—Admissibility.]—On a question of legitimacy it appeared that the child had been born three months after the marriage. It was suggested that the wife had not seen the husband until immediately before the marriage, and that at the period of conception he was married to another person. In cross-examination of the mother it was proposed to ask her, "How long she had known her husband before her marriage." This question was objected to, but the court allowed her to be asked, "When did you first become acquainted with your husband?" and she answered, twelve months before her marriage; the court would not allow this subject to be further pursued. Anon. v. Anon., 22 Beav. 481; 23 Beav. 273; 4 W. R. 307.

—— Conduct of Wife.]—Where the legitimacy of a child born in wedlock is in issue, previous statements by the mother that the child is a bastard are admissible as evidence of her conduct, although she could not be allowed to make statements in the witness-box. The Aylesford Peerage, 11 App. Cas. 1—H. L. (E.)

A husband and wife lived separate. Eight years afterwards the wife had a child. The husband swore in an affidavit that he had had intercourse with his wife since the separation, but the court refused to admit this as evidence. Patchett v. Holgate, 15 Jur. 308.

The child of a married woman held to be illegitimate on a proof of non-access of the husband, and of conduct and admissions of the wife and her paramour. Sinclay, In re, 17 Beav. 523.

—— In Proceedings before Justices for Maintenance.]—Proceedings by guardians of the poor before justices against a husband, to compel him to maintain a child which, although born of his wife in wedlock, he refuses to maintain on the ground that he is not its father, are not "proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery," within the meaning of the Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 68), s. 3, so as to make his evidence admissible to prove non-access to his wife, and thereby bastardise the child. Nottingham Union v. Tomkinson, 48 L. J., M. C. 171; 4 C. P. D. 343; 28 W. R. 151.

On a summons for maintenance of children against P., the father, P. denied the paternity, his wife having been living apart some time before their birth. Evidence of non-access was given, and P. was allowed to disprove an alleged admission by him of paternity to which another witness testified:—Held, that P.'s evidence was not admissible to contradict evidence given by other witnesses as to his admission of paternity. Ulverstone Union v. Park, 53 J. P. 629.

Presumption—Duration of Pregnancy.]—The presumption in favour of the legitimacy of a child born in wedlock is not a presumptio juris et de jure, but may be rebutted by evidenee, which must be clear and conclusive and not resting merely on a balance of probabilities. Thus, in a suit for declaration of legitimacy, where a child had been born 276 days after the last opportunity of intercourse between the husband and wife, and where there was evidence in the wife's conduct tending to show that she regarded the child as the offspring of her paramour, the president directed the jury that it was for them to say whether, on the whole of the evidence given on behalf of those who asserted illegitimacy, the conviction had been brought home to their minds that the husband was not the father of the child; and read to them the opinion of Lord Lyndhurst in Morris v. Davies (5 Cl. & F. 163). The jury found that the child was illegitimate:—Held, that the direction was right, and that the verdict was not against evidence. Bosville v. Att.-Gen., 56 L. J., P. 97; 12 P. D. 177; 57 L. T. 88; 36 W. R. 79.

—— Birth of Child between Decrees.]—On a petition for variation of settlements after a decree of dissolution of marriage, the court refused to order an inquiry into the legitimacy of a child born between the date of the decree nisi and decree absolute. Pryor v. Pryor, 56 L. J., P. 77; 12 P. D. 165; 57 L. T. 533; 35 W. R. 349.

—— Husband and Wife Separated.]—Doctrine of law as to the presumption of sexual intercourse between husband and wife, who are living apart under a deed of separation, but who occasionally meet; and as to the evidence by which that presumption may be rebutted. Morris v. Davies, 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 177.

—— Husband in Lunatic Asylum—Visits of Wife.]—A married woman in 1837 gave birth to a daughter at a period when her husband was, and had been for more than a year previously, an inmate of a lunatic asylum. The wife, who resided twenty-five miles from the asylum, stated that her husband was the father of the child, they having had sexual intercourse together when she was visiting him. There was, however, no evidence except her own to prove that she had been with her husband at a time when he could have been the father, and it was shown that the officers of the asylum were instructed not to leave the husband and wife alone together. The daughter was christened, and brought up as the husband's child, who always treated it as such. Upon the husband's next-of-kin disputing its legitimacy:—Held, that the daughter was legitimate. That the law will not allow the presumed status of the child of a married woman to be taken away merely on the balance of probability. That the onus probandi rests with the party seeking to make out the illegitimacy, to do which he must show beyond all reasonable doubt that sexual intercourse could not have taken place at a time within which the husband could have been the father. Plowes v. Bossey, 3 Dr. & Sm. 145: 31 L. J., Ch. 681; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 352; 7 L. T. 306; 10 W. R. 332.

Husband and wife, after living together for ten years, and having one child, agreed to separate. They accordingly afterwards lived apart, but within such distance as afforded them opportunities of sexual intercourse, the husband not being impotent:—Held, that the presumption of law in favour of legitimacy of a child begotten and born of the wife during the separation, may be rebutted, not only by evidence to show that the husband had not sexual intercourse with her, but also evidence of their conduct, such as that the wife was living in adultery; that she concealed the birth of the child from the husband, and declared to him that she never had such child; that the husband disclaimed all knowledge of the child, and acted up to his death as if no such child was in existence; and also, that at the wife's death, her paramour aided in concealing the child, reared and educated it as his own, and left it all his property by his will. Morris v. Davies, 5 Cl. & F. 163; 1 Jur. 911. Affirming 3 Russ. 318; 8 L. J., Ch. 120. And see S. C., at law, 3 Car. & P. 215, 427; and on motion for a new trial, 5 L. J., Ch. 177.

—— Rebutting Presumption.]—To rebut the presumption that a child born in wedlock is legitimate, it is not necessary to prove that generative access between the husband and wife was physically impossible, but it is enough to show circumstances in the conduct of the parties, and otherwise, which render the moral presumption against such access irresistible. Gurney v. Gurney, 1 Hem. & M. 413; 32 L. J., Ch. 456; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 514; 8 L. T. 380; 11 W. R. 659.

To rebut the presumption of legitimacy, though it is not necessary to prove impossibility of access on the part of a husband, the evidence must preponderate, so as to convince the mind of the judge that access did not take place at a time and under circumstances which would enable the husband to be the father of the child. Atchley v. Sprigg, 33 L. J., Ch. 345; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 144; 10 L. T. 16; 12 W. R. 364.

Where, however, husband and wife lived together for nine years without having a child, and then separated and never lived together again, and a child was born ten years after the separation, while the wife was in the habit of committing adultery with another man, which child was treated by the paramour as his own, and was called by his surname, and brought up by him, the child, notwithstanding possibility of access on the part of the husband, was held to be illegitimate. Ib.

—— Adultery.] — A husband and wife were married on the 30th of April, 1878, and there were three children born before the marriage was dissolved by reason of the wife's adultery with W. The decree nisi was made on the 3rd of November, 1886, and it was made absolute on the 17th of May, 1887. The three children were born respectively on the 2nd of July, 1881, the 26th of April, 1885, and the 25th of June, 1886. The legitimacy of the eldest child was admitted. That of the other two children was disputed:—Held, on the evidence, that the legal presumption of the legitimacy of the second child was rebutted, and that it was proved not to be the child of the husband. Held, also, on evidence which satisfied the court that the husband could have had no access to the wife between the birth of the second child and the birth of the third child, that the third child was also illegitimate. Burnaby v. Baillie, 58 L. J., Ch. 842; 42 Ch. D. 282; 61 L. T. 634; 38 W. R. 125.

Testator bequeathed government annuities upon trust for his daughter C. for life, and after her decease for her children equally. C. married H. G., and by him had two children at the time when H. G. deserted her and his family. C. went to live with a man named J. H., and while living with him had five children, the eldest of whom was M., who was, according to the evidence, born during the lifetime of H. G. M. claimed a share of the fund in court:—Held, that, considering all the circumstances from which non-access between the husband and wife might be inferred, the presumption of the legitimacy of M. was rebutted, and that she was not entitled to any share of the fund. Hawes v. Draeger, 52 L. J., Ch. 449; 23 Ch. D. 173; 48 L. T. 518; 31 W. R. 576.

—— Strong Evidence Required.]—When, after open courtship and constant intercourse, a man and woman (she being ultimately in an advanced state of pregnancy), hurry on their marriage to prevent, or to mitigate, scandal; and where in less than seven weeks after the marriage she gives birth to a child; the presumption of the husband's paternity to that child is next to insuperable. Gardner v. Gardner, 2 App. Cas. 723.

The presumption is not a presumptio juris et de jure, but a presumption of fact. Ib.

When a man has been reputed all his life to be the legitimate child of his parents, persons who dispute his legitimacy after his death must produce very strong and unequivocal evidence in support of their contention. Haslam v. Cron, Olivant, In re, 19 W. R. 968.

5. Suit for Nullity.

a. Parties.

Who may Petition.]—Under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7, a father has sufficient interest to institute a suit to establish the nullity of his daughter's marriage; but where a father died after such suit was instituted, and the pleadings in it were finished, but before trial:—Held, that the court had no authority to allow the widow and executrix of the father to take up the suit at the point at which it was left at the father's death. Beavan v. M'Mahon and Beavan, 2 Sw. & Tr. 58; 28 L. J., Mat. 127; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 686; 2 L. T. 255; 8 W. R. 453.

In a suit for nullity of marriage, instituted by the father of a minor, it must appear upon the face of the petition whether the father has instituted the suit in his own right, or as guardian of the minor. Wells v. Cottam, f. c. Wells, 3 Sw. & Tr. 364; 33 L. J., Mat. 41; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 10 L. T. 138; 12 W. R. 672.

If the father of a minor petitions for a decree of nullity of his child's marriage, he must make the other party to the de facto marriage a party to the suit. Ib.

Interest of Parties.]—A petition for obtaining a declaration of the nullity of a marriage between two minors on the ground of the absence of parental consent and the misdescription of the husband was presented by the husband's mother, who had married a second time, and her present husband, but the registrar had declined to accept the petition on the ground that she had no interest in the suit. The court ordered the citation to issue, without prejudice to any question which might arise. Prowse v. Spurway and Bowley, f. c. Spurway, 24 W. R. 850.

Death of one of the Parties before Suit commenced.]—The validity of a marriage cannot be impeached on the ground of impotency, after the death of one of the parties. A. v. B., L. R. 1 P. 559; 17 W. R. 14.

The impotence of one of the parties to a marriage does not render the marriage void, but only voidable. The validity of such a marriage can only be questioned in the lifetime of both of the parties and by the party; therefore, the next-of-kin of a deceased married woman cannot oppose the grant of administration to her husband on the ground of his impotence. P. v. S., 37 L. J., P. 80; 19 L. T. 22; 17 W. R. 14.

Ecclesiastical court cannot annul marriage after the death of one party, as it bastardises the issue, but may punish the other for incest or fornication. Brownsword v. Edwards, 2 Ves. 245.

Locus standi of Father to Institute Suit—Liability to Support Children.]—The liability of a father, under the poor laws, to support the children of his daughters, supposing them to be legitimate, was held sufficient to entitle the father to institute a suit in the ecclesiastical court for the avoidance of his daughter's marriage. Sherwood v. Ray, 1 Moore, P. C. 353.

Sentence of Court necessary.]—Sentence of the ecclesiastical court necessary, though the marriage void, as in the case of lunacy. Turing, Ex parte, 1 Ves. & B. 140.

Practice—Summons by Petitioner for Directions—Notice to Queen's Proctor before setting down.]—The president, upon a summons for directions in a nullity suit by a husband, the case being undefended, directed the solicitors for the petitioner to give information of the facts of the case to the queen's proctor, before setting the case down for hearing, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, as amended by 36 Vict. c. 31. Upon receipt by the petitioner's solicitors of an intimation from the queen's proctor that he did not intend to intervene at this stage of the proceedings, the president allowed the case to be set down forthwith, and to be added to the supplemental list of undefended causes just published. M. v. M. otherwise A., 76 L. T. 172.

b. Grounds for.

i. Pregnancy.

Wife Pregnant by a Third Person at Time of Marriage—Husband Ignorant of her Condition.]—The facts that a woman has been unchaste before marriage with a person or persons other than her husband, that she is in consequence pregnant at the time of her marriage, and that she has deliberately deceived her husband as to her previous conduct and present condition, do not constitute a ground on which the court can pronounce a decree of nullity of marriage. Moss v. Moss, 66 L. J., P. 154 ; [1897] P. 263 ; 77 L. T. 220 ; 45 W. R. 635.

ii. Incapacity.

Incurable Malformation and Impotency.]—Incapacity to consummate a marriage is no ground for a decree of nullity, unless the incapacity is permanent. If there is a possibility that its cause may be cured, the court will not pronounce a sentence of nullity, although such cure may be highly improbable. Stagg v. Edgecombe, 3 Sw. & Tr. 240 ; 32 L. J., Mat. 153 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 698 ; 8 L. T. 643 ; 12 W. R. 19.

Impotency, not congenital, but temporarily occasioned by excessive self-abuse, and therefore capable of being cured, is not a ground for a decree of nullity of marriage. Ib.

A woman petitioned for nullity by reason of the man's alleged impotency. The petition was opposed, and at the hearing the court, under the circumstances proved, suspended its decree ; but on affidavits subsequently being produced to the effect that the woman had returned to cohabitation, and that the marriage remained unconsummated, made a decree of nullity, the respondent not appearing on the motion. M., f. c. H. v. H., 3 Sw. & Tr. 592 ; 11 L. T. 317 ; 13 W. R. 108.

Any evidence is admissible in a suit for nullity which tends to throw light on the case set up by the petitioner or the respondent ; evidence is therefore admissible as to disputes between the petitioner and the respondent during their cohabitation, although the only issues raised by the pleadings are the respondent's impotency, and the consummation of the marriage. X., f. c. Y. v. Y., 34 L. J., Mat. 81.

In a suit of nullity it appeared, from the husband's evidence, that whenever he had attempted to have intercourse with his wife the act had produced hysteria on her part, and that, although he had cohabited with her for more than three years, the marriage had never been consummated. The wife refused to submit to inspection. On the evidence of the husband the court made a decree nisi to annul the marriage under the provisions of the 36 Vict. c. 31. H. v. P., f. c. H., L. R. 3 P. 126.

Sentence of nullity of marriage, causâ impotentiæ, pronounced on confession of non-consummation, and refusal to undergo inspection. Harrison v. Harrison, 4 Moore, P. C. 96.

Impracticability of Consummation.]—A marriage is void if consummation is practically impossible, although there is no malformation or structural defect rendering consummation physically impossible. G. v. G., 40 L. J., Mat. 83 ; L. R. 2 P. 287 ; 25 L. T. 510 ; 20 W. R. 103.

Wilful Non-Consummation.]—Wilful wrongful refusal of marital intercourse is not in itself sufficient to justify the court in declaring a marriage null by reason of impotence. S. v. A., otherwise S., 47 L. J., P. 75 ; 3 P. D. 72 ; 39 L. T. 127.

When, after a reasonable time, it is shown that there has been no sexual intercourse, and that the wife has resisted all attempts, the court, if satisfied of the bona fides of the suit, will infer that the refusal arises from incapacity, and will pronounce a decree of nullity of marriage. Ib.

Medical Evidence Necessary.]—As a general rule, a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of malformation will not be granted, unless the existence of incurable malformation is proved by a medical man who has examined the person of the respondent. T. v. M., f. c. T., 35 L. J., Mat. 10 ; L. R. 1 P. 31 ; 13 L. T. 614.

Where the man did not appear, and did not submit to the order of inspection, the medical evidence was not conclusive as to the woman's virginity ; but the court, on her evidence on affidavit, took it to be proved—first, that the marriage was never consummated ; secondly, that this was owing to the impotence of the man ; thirdly, that the physical appearance of the woman was to be accounted for otherwise than by consummation, and pronounced its decree of nullity of marriage. F., f. c. D. v. D., 4 Sw. & Tr. 86 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 66 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 307 ; 12 L. T. 84 ; 13 W. R. 546.

Evidence of Petitioner Unsupported.]—In a suit of nullity by reason of the husband's impotency, the surgical report stated that the physical appearances of the wife were such that she might have had regular connection with her husband during cohabitation. The wife during two years' cohabitation, had not complained to her family on this matter, and had separated from her husband by reason of his alleged violence. The husband affirmed on oath that the marriage had been consummated. The court declined to pronounce the marriage invalid on the unsupported oath of the party seeking to be relieved from its obligation. U., f. c. J. v. J., 37 L. J., Mat. 7 ; L. R. 1 P. 450 ; 16 W. R. 518.

In a suit by a woman for nullity of marriage on the ground of the man's impotency, her evidence being wholly unsupported, the physical appearances being consistent with consummation, and the parties having lived together for eight years without complaint by the woman, the court held that the charge was not made out, and dismissed the petition. Tarernor, f. c. Ditchfield v. Ditchfield, 35 L. J., Mat. 51 ; L. R. 1 P. 127 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 673 ; 14 L. T. 227.

Refusal of Woman to allow Consummation—Inference of Latent Incapacity.]—From the fact of non-consummation of a de-facto marriage after a period of cohabitation, during which one party made repeated attempts and was always willing and anxious to bring about the consummation of the marriage, the court, notwithstanding the apparent competence of both parties, may draw the inference that something more than seemingly mere wilful refusal must have animated the party who has, in fact, persistently refused to allow consummation. In a case where the petitioner, a widower with children, went through the form of marriage in May, 1893, with the respondent, a widow without children, and lived and cohabited with her at divers places until the latter part of October, 1893, during which time he, being admittedly able and anxious to consummate the marriage, made repeated attempts to do so, but was always repelled by the respondent, who refused to allow any attempt at connection : the court, notwithstanding the fact that, upon medical inspection, the respondent exhibited no structural impediment nor signs of virginity, pronounced a decree nisi annulling the marriage upon the ground that it was open to the court to draw from the facts the inference of some latent incapacity on the part of the respondent. F. v. P. (f. c. F.), 75 L. T. 192.

Impotence of Petitioner.]—An impotent man cannot maintain a nullity suit merely on the ground of his own impotency; but if a woman altogether repudiates the relation of wife and the obligations of the marriage contract, the impotent man may show that there is no verum matrimonium, and maintain such a suit. A. v. A. (f. c. B.), 19 L. R., Ir. 403.

—— Evidence — Marriage Voidable.] — A marriage was declared null and void on the ground of impotency, after cohabitation of little more than six months, on strong medical testimony. A marriage is not void but voidable only on the ground of impotency. Ib.

When onus probandi thrown on Respondent.] —After a cohabitation of fourteen years, a woman presented a petition for a decree of nullity of marriage, on the ground of the man's impotence. The report of the inspectors and the medical evidence showed that the woman was virgo intacta et apta viro, and that there was no apparent defect or malformation in the man. The court was satisfied that the marriage had never been completely consummated, but was not satisfied that the non-consummation arose from the incapacity of the man, and therefore dismissed the petition:—Held, that the woman was entitled to a decree that the marriage was null and void, on the ground that the cohabitation had been for a much more lengthened period than was required to raise the presumption against a husband, and that the onus was thrown upon the respondent, either of disproving the facts, or of showing, by clear and satisfactory evidence, that the result was attributable to other causes than his own impotency. Lewis, f. c. Hayward v. Hayward, 35 L. J., Mat. 105—H. L.

Triennial Cohabitation Rule.]—The canon law rule of triennial cohabitation has not been recognised in England beyond this point, that where a husband or a wife seeks a decree of nullity propter impotentiam, if there is no more evidence than that they have for a period of three years lived together in the same house and with ordinary opportunities of intercourse, and it is clearly proved that there has been no consummation, then, if that is the whole state of the evidence, inability on the part of the one or of the other will be presumed. On the other hand, the presumption to be drawn from the fact of non-consummation after three years' cohabitation is capable of being rebutted. And, also, every case need not be fortified with the presumption; for although no presumption can be raised from the absence of consummation within a less period than three years, yet positive evidence may be given, from which the same inference of inability may be drawn. Ib.

The presumption of impotency from the fact of non-consummation does not arise when the cohabitation has been less than three years. Marshall, f. c. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 33 L. J., Mat. 159; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 853; 10 L. T. 787; 13 W. R. 108.

The presumption of impotency arising from non-consummation is liable to rebuttal. Ib.

Where there had been a cohabitation for two years and ten months without consummation, but the court was not satisfied on the evidence that the failure to consummate arose from the impotency of the husband, it suspended its decree, and intimated that the petitioner should forthwith return to cohabitation, in order to give an opportunity for consummation. Ib.

But afterwards, on affidavits to the effect that the woman had returned to cohabitation, and that the marriage remained unconsummated, the court made a decree of nullity, the husband not appearing. S. C., 34 L. J., Mat. 12; 11 L. T. 317.

The object of the triennial cohabitation rule is to provide that sufficient time may be afforded for ascertaining beyond a doubt the true condition of the party complained of. If the court can be satisfied by circumstances that the complaint of the promoter of the suit is well founded, it never ought to be driven sine gravissimâ causa after a cohabitation though less than three years to order a return. U., f. c. F. v. F., 2 Robertson, E. R. 618.

If impotence is clearly proved the court never resorts to the rule. F., f. c. D. v. D., 4 Sw. & Tr. 86.

—— Acquiescence.]—In a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of impotency, there may be facts and circumstances proved which so plainly imply on the part of the complaining spouse a recognition of the existence and validity of the marriage, as to render it most inequitable and contrary to public policy that he or she should be permitted to go on to challenge it with effect, but the doctrine designated as the "doctrine of want of sincerity" in an action of this kind has been too much extended in English decisions, and that doctrine, apart from "approbate" and "reprobate," has never been recognised by the Scotch law. Delay in raising a suit of nullity on the ground of impotency is a material element in the investigation of a case which upon the facts is doubtful; but there is no definite or absolute bar arising from it. G. v. M., 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L. T. 398—H. L. (Sc.) And see col. 688.

—— Where Rule has been Relaxed.]—Marriage declared null and void by reason of the husband's impotency, notwithstanding there had been triennial cohabitation, and there was no visible defect. A., f. c. B. v. B., 1 Spinks, 12.

Although the rule as to triennial cohabitation has been relaxed where the malformation is congenital or manifest and incurable, yet a cohabitation of only a few months will not be sufficient; especially if the impotency is ascribable to a temporary cause. Stagg v. Edgecombe, 3 Sw. & Tr. 240; 32 L. J., Mat. 153; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 698; 8 L. T. 643; 12 W. R. 19.

When the court is satisfied by other evidence, e.g. that of the petitioner herself, of the man's impotence, the rule of apparent virginity, after a cohabitation of three years, does not apply. F., f. c. D v. D., 4 Sw. & Tr. 86; 34 L. J., Mat. 66; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 307; 12 L. T. 84; 13 W. R. 546.

iii. Insanity.

Competency to Contract.]—In deciding whether a party was competent to enter into a contract of marriage, the question for the consideration of the court will be whether there was health or disease of mind at the time. If disease is shown, the court has no means of gauging the extent of the derangement consequent upon that disease, or of affirming the limits within which the disease might operate to obscure or divert the mental power. Hancock and Hancock v. Peaty, 36 L. J., Mat. 57; L. R. 1 P. 335; 16 L. T. 182; 15 W. R. 719.

When a guardian ad litem had been duly assigned by the registrar to a lunatic, a petitioner in a suit for nullity of marriage, the court declined during the hearing of the petition to adjourn the case on the application of the respondent, on the suggestion of the petitioner's recovery, and of her desire for the discontinuance of the suit, or to appoint two medical men to examine her, and proceeded to determine the only issue raised by the pleadings, namely, whether the petitioner was of sound mind at the time of the celebration of her marriage. Ib.

The court, being satisfied by the evidence that the petitioner was not of sound mind at the time of the celebration of her marriage with the respondent, postponed pronouncing its decree, in order to give the respondent an opportunity, if so advised, of establishing the fact of the petitioner's recovery, and intimated, that if satisfied of her recovery it would not pronounce a decree of nullity except at her instance. Ib.

The next of kin having delayed instituting the suit for three years, and the respondent having in the meantime contributed towards the petitioner's support, the court made no order as to costs. Ib.

The guardian ad litem, after the lapse of three weeks from the delivery of the judgment, obtained a rule nisi for the respondent to show cause why a decree of nullity should not be pronounced, and the respondent not showing cause against the rule, the decree of nullity was pronounced. Ib. And see Durham v. Durham, 10 P. D. 80, and Yarrow v. Yarrow, 61 L. J., P. 69; [1892] P. 92; 66 L. T. 383; and col. 628.

—— Alleged Insanity of Petitioner—Guardian ad litem.]—An order ought not to be made under r. 196 of the Divorce Rules assigning a guardian ad litem to a person alleged to be of unsound mind, where there is a substantial and bonâ fide dispute as to the unsoundness of mind of the person to whom it is proposed to assign the guardian. Whether r. 196 applies where the person has not been found lunatic by inquisition, quære. Fry v. Fry, or Routh v. Fry, 59 L. J., P. 43; 15 P. D. 50; 62 L. T. 501; 38 W. R. 615—C. A.

iv. Other Grounds.

Names Falsely Stated — Marriage by Banns.]—A marriage by banns, where, by the consent of both parties, the name of the man was falsely stated, was declared null and void, and the man was condemned in costs because he induced the woman to consent to the undue publication by telling her that it would not render the marriage invalid. Midgeley, f. c. Wood v. Wood, 4 Sw. & Tr. 267. See col. 637.

Fraud.]—The court of divorce has no power to pronounce a decree of nullity of marriage, or to dissolve a marriage, because of fraud in its inducement. Templeton v. Tyree, 41 L. J., Mat. 86; L. R. 2 P. 420; 27 L. T. 429; 21 W. R. 81.

Duress, For.]—See col. 628.

c. Inspection and Examination of Parties.

Appointment of Inspectors.]—When a question of impotence is raised, the appointment of two medical inspectors rests with the court; but it will allow the parties to select them, and should they not agree, each will be allowed to nominate one. C. v. C., 32 L. J., Mat. 12.

In a suit of nullity on the ground of physical incapacity, each party has a right to nominate two medical inspectors to examine him or her. It is not necessary that both parties should be examined by the same inspectors. B., f. c. C. v. C., 32 L. J., Mat. 135.

The petitioner, on moving for an appointment of inspectors, should also move for an order that the respondent submit to inspection. S., f. c. E. v. E., 31 L. J., Mat. 164.

Inspection of Party presenting Petition.]—In a suit for nullity of marriage, on the ground of malformation of the wife, it is not the practice of the court to make an order for an inspection of the husband. B. v. L., 16 W. R. 943.

Submission to Examination.]—In a suit for nullity by a man, on the ground of malformation, no evidence could be given that the respondent was suffering from an incurable defect, as she had never submitted to a medical examination, and, being out of the jurisdiction, had not been personally served with the citation. The court suspended its decree, in order to give the petitioner an opportunity of having her examined if she should hereafter be found within the jurisdiction. T. v. M., f. c. T., 35 L. J., Mat. 10; L. R. 1 P. 31; 13 L. T. 614.

In a suit for nullity of marriage by reason of malformation the respondent refused to comply with the order for inspection. The court declined to issue an attachment against her until after the hearing, but intimated that the attachment would issue forthwith if she attempted to remove out of the jurisdiction. B. v. L., f. c. B., 38 L. J., Mat. 35; L. R. 1 P. 639; 20 L. T. 280.

Report of Inspectors.]—On a petition for a decree of nullity, by reason of malformation of the woman, neither is the court nor are the parties concluded by the terms of the report of medical inspectors, but the inspectors themselves and other medical men may be examined. Williams v. Homfray, f. c. Williams, 2 Sw. & Tr. 240; 30 L. J., Mat. 73; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 4 L. T. 89; 9 W. R. 619.

Upon the question of incapacity, although no application had been made for a monition, or an order for a personal inspection of either of the parties, the court received medical evidence of an examination. Serrell v. Serrell and Bamford, 2 Sw. & Tr. 422; 31 L. J., Mat. 55; 5 L. T. 691.

In a suit by a wife for nullity, on the ground of the husband's impotence, the only evidence of the alleged impotence was that of the petitioner, which was contradicted by the respondent. The evidence of the medical witnesses and the report of the inspectors were not inconsistent with either case. The court declined to grant a decree on the unsupported testimony of the petitioner. U., f. c. J. v. J., 37 L. J., Mat. 7; L. R. 1 P. 460; 16 W. R. 518.

Possibility of Cure.]—A woman married on 22nd of July, and lived with her husband till 23rd of September. She petitioned for a decree of nullity by reason of his inability to consummate the marriage. He did not appear. The report of medical inspectors negatived any apparent or incurable defect on his part, but ascribed the non-consummation to incapacity caused by a long-continued habit of self-abuse, which (as further explained by their vivâ voce evidence) they considered might possibly, but not probably, be cured; the question being one of moral restraint. There was no report of inspectors as to the condition of the woman, and their vivâ voce evidence was equivocal as to proof of non-consummation from examination of her person. The court refused to make the decree. Stagg v. Edgecombe, 3 Sw. & Tr. 240; 32 L. J., Mat. 153; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 698; 8 L. T. 643; 12 W. R. 19.

Where the result of the medical evidence is, that the malformation might possibly, but at great risk to life, and with doubtful success as to the end desired, be removed, the petitioner need not call upon the respondent to submit to an operation; and such a state of things is equivalent to a permanent and an irremovable malformation. Serrell v. Serrell and Bamford, 2 Sw. & Tr. 422; 31 L. J., Mat. 55; 5 L. T. 691.

After a partial cohabitation of two years and eight months, it appeared that the woman was impotent, but that she might probably be cured if she would submit to an operation involving no great risk to life. This she refused to do. The court made a decree nisi of nullity of marriage. L—— v. L——, 51 L. J., P. 23; 7 P. D. 16; 47 L. T. 132; 30 W. R. 444.

Delay.] — Delay in instituting a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence is not an absolute bar to the suit, but renders it necessary that the evidence to support the suit should be of the clearest and most satisfactory kind. Castleden v. Castleden, 9 H. L. Cas. 186; 4 Macq. H. L. 159; 31 L. J., Mat. 103; 5 L. T. 164. Affirming Hall, f. c. Castleden v. Castleden, 1 Sw. & Tr. 605; 29 L. J., Mat. 81; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 348; 1 L. T. 489.

Where, therefore, a woman who had married in 1834, lived with her husband until 1838, then separated from him, in 1853 caused him to be sued for her debts, obtained from him an allowance, which was continued till October, 1858, and in November, 1858, instituted a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of his impotency:—Held, that she was bound to give unequivocal proof of the truth of the allegation in the petition. Ib.

M. married B. in August, 1853, and slept in the same bed with him about two years, when, at his request, she occupied a separate room, but lived in his house till June, 1863, when she left it, and in the early part of 1864 petitioned for a decree of nullity, by reason of his impotency. The medical evidence showed her to be a virgin. He did not submit himself to inspection:—Held, that lapse of time, coupled with indirect motives in bringing the suit, disentitled her to the relief sought. Marriott, f. c. Burgess v. Burgess, 3 Sw. & Tr. 550; 33 L. J., Mat. 203; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 885; 10 L. T. 847.

Relief in suits of this nature is never accorded unless the petitioner is prompt in seeking it, and sincere in the motive for doing so. M., f. c. C. v. C., 41 L. J., Mat. 37; L. R. 2 P. 414; 26 L. T. 321; 20 W. R. 495.

A petitioner made cognisant within four or five years after her marriage of her husband's impotency could not delay proceedings for three years more, without being open to the charge of want of sincerity or promptitude. Ib.

The onus of proof is on the complainant. Cuno v. Cuno, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 300; 29 L. T. 316.

The objection of delay in seeking relief may be got over when the proof of impotency is complete; but not otherwise. Ib.

A wife lived with her husband for one year and nine months after the marriage. After a lapse of nine years she again lived with him for five years and six months, and left him in consequence of his ill-treatment. Twenty-seven years after the marriage, and when she was forty-eight years of age, she brought a suit for nullity of marriage by reason of his impotency. It was proved that she was virgo intacta:—Held, that she was not entitled to relief. Reynolds (otherwise Wilkins) v. Reynolds, 45 L. J., P. 89; 1 P. D. 405; 25 W. R. 25.

A delay of some years in bringing a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of the wife's malformation, will induce the court to suspect that the suit is not bonâ fide, and, unless explained, will be a bar. Ewens v. Tytherleigh, f. c. Ewens, 3 Sw. & Tr. 312; 33 L. J., Mat. 37; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1301; 9 L. T. 424; 12 W. R. 444.

When a husband, who was the petitioner in a suit for nullity on the ground of his wife's malformation, had not instituted the suit until upwards of eleven years after the marriage, the court required him to give an explanation of the delay before making a decree. Ib.

Want of Sincerity.]—At the end of seven years' cohabitation a marriage had not been consummated through the impotence of the alleged husband. The alleged wife subsequently cohabited with another man, and upon the alleged husband discovering her misconduct she instituted a suit for nullity of marriage against him, and he a suit for dissolution of marriage against her:—Held, that the proof of impotence being clear, her conduct did not show such a want of sincerity as to deprive her of her right to have the marriage annulled. When the impotence is undoubted mere delay is not sufficient to disentitle the injured party to relief. M. (falsely called D.) v. D., 54 L. J., P. 68; 10 P. D. 75; 33 W. R. 657.

In a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of impotency, there may be facts and circumstances proved, which so plainly imply on the part of the complaining spouse a recognition of the existence and validity of the marriage, as to render it most inequitable, and contrary to public policy, that he or she should be permitted to go on to challenge it with effect; but the doctrine, designated as the "doctrine of want of sincerity" in an action of this kind, has been too much extended in recent English decisions, and that doctrine, apart from "approbate" and "reprobate," has never been recognised by the law of Scotland. G. v. M., 10 App. Cas. 171; 53 L. T. 398—H. L. (Sc.)

Delay in raising a suit of nullity on the ground of impotency is a material element in the investigation of a case which, upon the facts, is doubtful; but there is no definite or absolute bar arising from it. Ib.

Where a wife seven years after marriage presented a petition for nullity, the court refused to dismiss the petition on the ground of insincerity, merely because of the delay in presenting the petition, and granted a decree nisi. L. (otherwise B.) v. B., 64 L. J., P. 121; [1895] P. 274; 11 R. 673.

Agreement not to Sue—Consideration—Bar.]—In a petition by husband against wife praying that the marriage celebrated between them might be declared null and void on the ground of her incapacity, the respondent pleaded that she and the petitioner after a year's cohabitation had agreed to live apart, and had bound themselves not to make any claim against each other either in a court of law or equity; and that if either party should break the agreement the other should be entitled to an injunction to restrain such breach. That it was further agreed that if the respondent committed a breach of the agreement the petitioner should be entitled to proceed in this court for a declaration of nullity. Averment that there had been no breach of the agreement on the part of the respondent:—Held, that the respondent's agreement not to sue was a sufficient consideration for the husband's engagement to do the like, and that such an agreement although not by deed was therefore a bar to the petition for declaration of nullity. Aldridge v. Aldridge, or A. v. M., 58 L. J., P. 8; 13 P. D. 210; 59 L. T. 896; 37 W. R. 240.

Age of Parties.]—There is no rule as to any particular age constituting a bar to a petition for nullity of marriage by reason of malformation of the woman. Williams v. Homfray, f. c. Williams, 2 Sw. & Tr. 240; 30 L. J., Mat. 73; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 4 L. T. 89; 9 W. R. 619.

Invalidity of Celebration.]—C. and D., being native subjects of France, and domiciled in that country, came over to London in June, 1854, and were married by licence according to the law of England, but without the observance of certain formalities and consents required by the law of France in respect to the marriage of its own subjects in foreign countries. C. and D. returned to France, when D., the man, refused to celebrate the marriage according to the French law, and C. instituted a suit for nullity in the French courts, which D. did not defend, and in December, 1854, C. obtained decree of nullity. C. subsequently came to reside in England, and petitioned for a decree of nullity; personal service of the citation was effected on D. in Naples, who did not appear:—Held, first, that D. having entered into a contract in this country, was subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in this country, in respect of the personal status resulting from such contract. Simonin, f. c. Mallac v. Mallac, 2 Sw. & Tr. 67; 29 L. J., Mat. 97; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 561; 2 L. T. 327.

Held, secondly, that the personal status resulting from such contract is to be ascertained by the law of this country, in which the contract was made, and not any special law of the country of the domicil of the parties to the contract. Ib. And see cols. 625, 730.

e. Intervention of the Queen's Proctor.

Before 36 & 37 Vict. c. 31, the Queen's proctor had no power to intervene in suits for nullity of marriage, however collusive or concerted. D. v. M., f. c. D., 28 L. T. 73; 21 W. R. 417. See col. 892.

f. Procedure.

Service of Citation and Petition.]—When every reasonable effort has been made to trace the respondent for the purpose of effecting a personal service of the citation and petition in a suit for dissolution of marriage, but without success, the court will dispense with such personal service. Appleyard v. Appleyard and Smith, L. R. 3 P. 257. See col. 865.

Suit on behalf of Minor.]—In a suit for nullity instituted by the father of a minor, it must appear upon the face of the petition whether the father has instituted the suit in his own right, or as guardian of the minor. Wells v. Cottam, f. c. Wells, 3 Sw. & Tr. 364; 33 L. J., Mat. 41; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 10 L. T. 138; 12 W. R. 672.

A guardian cannot appear and plead on behalf of a minor without having been duly elected and appointed. Ib.

Under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7, a father has sufficient interest to institute a suit to establish the nullity of his daughter's marriage; but where a father died after such suit was instituted, and the pleadings in it were finished, but before trial:—Held, that the court had no authority to allow the widow and executrix of the father to take up the suit at the point at which it was left at the father's death. Beavan v. M'Mahon and Beavan, 2 Sw. & Tr. 58; 28 L. J., Mat. 127; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 686; 2 L. T. 255; 8 W. R. 453.

Answer.]—A husband presented a petition, praying that his marriage, de facto celebrated with the woman, might be annulled, by reason of her malformation. She denied the malformation, pleaded cruelty, and prayed for a judicial separation by reason thereof:—Held, that in a suit for nullity of marriage, the only question to be decided is, marriage or no marriage, and that consequently a charge of cruelty against the husband, and a prayer for a judicial separation, contained in an answer, must be struck out. Williams v. Homfray, f. c. Williams, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 151; or Humphrey v. Williams, f. c. Humphrey, 2 Sw. & Tr. 30; 29 L. J., Mat. 62.

To a petition by a woman for a decree of nullity of marriage, on the ground of impotence, the respondent pleaded, that since the marriage the petitioner had committed adultery. The court ordered the plea to be struck out as impertinent. Taverner, f. c. Ditchford v. Ditchford, 33 L. J., Mat. 105.

Interrogatories to Party — Jurisdiction of Divorce Division.] — In a suit for nullity of marriage the court has power to order interrogatories. Euston v. Smith, 9 P. D. 57; 32 W. R. 596.

In a suit for nullity of marriage, the court has power to give leave to administer interrogatories between the parties to the suit; for suits of that kind were formerly within the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, which had power to allow interrogatories to be administered between the parties, and now all the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts as to suits for nullity of marriage (including matters of practice and procedure) is vested in the probate, divorce, and admiralty division. And, further, even if the power to allow interrogatories to be administered between the parties did not otherwise exist, it would be conferred upon the probate, divorce, and admiralty division by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873; for at the time of passing that statute the superior courts of common law and the court of chancery had power to allow interrogatories to be administered between the parties to a suit; and by s. 16, all the jurisdiction of those courts, including the ministerial powers and authorities incident thereto, was transferred to and vested in the high court of justice, and by s. 23 the jurisdiction transferred to the high court may (so far as regards procedure and practice) be exercised in the same manner as it might have been exercised by any of the courts whose jurisdiction has been transferred. Harvey v. Lovekin, 54 L. J., P. 1; 10 P. D. 122; 33 W. R. 188—C. A.

—— Application to whom Made.]—Semble, that inasmuch as proceedings for divorce and for other matrimonial causes are excluded from the operation of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, by Ord. LXVIII. r. 1 (d), an application for leave to administer interrogatories between the parties to a suit ought not to be made to a registrar of the divorce division; but it ought to be made in the first instance to one of the judges of the court. Ib.

Proof by Affidavit.]—In a suit for nullity, on the ground of bigamy, the court has no power to permit the facts to be proved by reading affidavits taken in a suit in chancery. Lumley v. Victor, f. c. Lumley, 26 L. T. 141.

In a suit of nullity by a woman, the court, with the consent of the respondent, allowed her evidence to be given on affidavit. B., f. c. C. v. C., 32 L. J., Mat. 135.

Right of Beginning.]—Where, in a suit for dissolution by husband against his wife, she pleaded that the marriage was null on account of his impotency:—Held, that there being substantially a traverse of the marriage, the petitioner had the right to begin. Serrell v. Serrell and Bamford, 2 Sw. & Tr. 422; 31 L. J., Mat. 55; 5 L. T. 691.

Hearing in Camera.]—A suit of nullity of marriage, on the ground of alleged impotency, is unfit to be tried before a jury or in open court; and the judge has a discretionary power to hear in camera all suits which the ancient ecclesiastical courts would have heard privately. A. v. A., or Anstey v. Anstey, 44 L. J., Mat. 15; L. R. 3 P. 230; 31 L. T. 801; 23 W. R. 386.

Decree.]—The legislature having extended to suits for nullity of marriage the provisions of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, whereby a decree nisi for divorce is not to be made absolute under six months, unless the court otherwise directs, the judge ordinary will not exercise his discretion to shorten the period in cases of nullity of marriage except under very special circumstances. M., f. c. B. v. B., 43 L. J., Mat. 42; L. R. 3 P. 200; 30 L. T. 345, 910; 22 W. R. 556.

Costs.]—In a suit for nullity of marriage, instituted by the father of the de facto husband, in which the de facto husband and the de facto wife are both made respondents, and the marriage is pronounced null, he is not liable for the payment of her costs, unless the court, in the exercise of its discretion, thinks proper to order him to pay them. Wells v. Cottam, 3 Sw. & Tr. 593; 34 L. J., Mat. 12; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1208; 11 L. T. 318; 13 W. R. 279.

The court refused to order costs of a de facto wife to be paid by the de facto husband, when it was satisfied that her defence to the suit, instituted by his father, was unnecessary. Ib.

In a woman's petition for nullity of marriage by reason of the impotency of the man, the court dismissed the respondent from the suit on the ground that the petitioner had failed in her proof, but made no order as to costs. On appeal to the House of Lords, the decree of the judge ordinary was reversed, the marriage declared null and void ab initio, and the cause remitted back to the court to do further therein as should be just and consistent with the declaration and judgment of the house, but no order was made as to costs, though they were prayed for on the appeal, and were mentioned at the time of the judgment. The court ordered the judgment of the House of Lords (it being first verified by affidavit) to be placed upon the records, but declined to make any order as to costs. Lewis, f. c. Hayward v. Hayward, 36 L. J., Mat. 76; L. R. 1 P. 293; 15 L. T. 299; 15 W. R. 319.

—— Wife with Separate Estate.]—A wife married in 1863, cohabited with her husband until 1870, and in 1871 instituted a suit for nullity by reason of his impotency. Having failed to establish the charge, her suit was dismissed, and as she had separate property she was condemned in costs. M., f. c. C. v. C., 41 L. J., Mat. 37; L. R. 2 P. 414; 26 L. T. 321; 20 W. R. 495. See cols. 955, 1302.

—— Security for.]—The court has power to order a wife, who is a petitioner in a nullity suit, to give security for costs, but will decline to do so where it is not proved that she has a separate income. De B. v. De B., 44 L. J., Mat. 41; 33 L. T. 263.

The guardian who institutes a suit for dissolution of marriage on the behalf of an infant husband, on the ground of his wife's adultery, will be ordered to pay into the registry, or give security for, a sum of money to meet the wife's costs of the hearing. Beavan v. Beavan, 31 L. J., Mat. 166; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 769.

In a suit for nullity, instituted by the father of the pretended husband in his own right, the alleged wife has no right to an order for the payment of her costs by the petitioner before the hearing. Wells v. Cottam, f. c. Wells, 3 Sw. & Tr. 364; 33 L. J., Mat. 41; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 10 L. T. 138; 12 W. R. 672. And see cols. 955, 1279, 1303.

Cross Suits for Nullity and Dissolution—Cross-examination.]—The parties had presented cross-suits, one for nullity of marriage on the ground of the man's impotence, the other for dissolution on the ground of the woman's adultery:—Held, in the course of the nullity suit that the woman might be cross-examined as to her adultery with the co-respondent in the dissolution suit. M. (f. c. D.) v. D., 10 P. D. 175; 34 W. R. 48.

Alimony—Decree Nisi.]—In a suit for nullity alimony continues payable after the decree nisi until the decree is made absolute. S. (f. c. B.) v. B., 53 L. J., P. 63; 9 P. D. 80; 32 W. R. 756.

—— De facto Marriage—Alimony pendente lite—Decree Nisi.]—In a suit for nullity of marriage brought by the so-called husband, a de facto marriage being established, the court has jurisdiction to order alimony pendente lite, though a decree nisi has been made. Bird v. Bird (1 Lee, 209) followed; Blackmore v. Mills (16 W. R. 893) commented on. Foden v. Foden, 63 L. J., P. 163; [1894] P. 307; 6 R. 633; 71 L. T. 279; 42 W. R. 689—C. A. See col. 828.

Provision for Children — Postponement of making Decree Absolute.]—A decree nisi was made declaring a de facto marriage void, as not having been solemnised according to law. Shortly before the expiration of the period of six months, a petition was presented for a provision for the child of the marriage. On a motion to make the decree absolute, the court held that a provision for the child ought to be inserted in the final decree, and refused to make the decree absolute until materials were furnished for deciding what provision ought to be made:—Held, on appeal, that under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, there is no absolute right to have a decree made absolute at the end of the six months, and that although the judge might have made a provision after the decree absolute, he had jurisdiction to suspend the making the decree absolute for the purpose of inserting in it the provision which he considered necessary, and the court would not interfere with his discretion, there being nothing to show that he had exercised it unreasonably. The act 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 35, enables the court to order a provision to be made for the children of a marriage which the court has declared to be void. Langworthy v. Langworthy, 55 L. J., P. 33; 11 P. D. 85; 54 L. T. 776; 34 W. R. 356—C. A.

Variation of Settlements—Re-transfer of Property.]—After a decree declaring a marriage null, the court upon a petition for variation of settlements, made an order that the property brought into settlement should be reconveyed to the parties, in the proportion in which they had respectively contributed to the settled fund, and freed from all the trusts of the settlement. A. (f. c. M.) v. M. (10 P. D. 178), followed. Leeds v. Leeds, 52 L. T. 373—Butt, J.

By a settlement executed in contemplation of marriage, certain property belonging absolutely to the wife was assigned to trustees upon trust for the wife till the solemnisation of the marriage, and after the solemnisation thereof to pay the income to the wife for life for her separate use, and after her death to pay the income, with certain exceptions, to the husband for life, and after the death of the husband and wife, in trust for the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue to such persons as the wife should appoint, and in default of appointment for the next-of-kin of the wife. The wife obtained a decree declaring the marriage null and void on the ground of her husband's impotence, and afterwards presented a petition for variation of the marriage settlements. The court made an order extinguishing the husband's life interest under the settlements, and afterwards made a further order directing the trustees to retransfer or otherwise put under the petitioner's legal control all the property brought into settlement, for her own use and benefit, free from the trusts of the settlements. A. (f. c. M.) v. M., 54 L. J., P. 31; 10 P. D. 178; 33 W. R. 232. See col. 806.

g. Compromise of Suit.

Validity—Public Policy.]—An agreement to put an end to a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of impotency is not void as against public policy. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405. Affirmed, 1 H. L. Cas. 538. See S. C., 5 H. L. C. 40.

h. Effect on Covenant to Settle.

To a declaration on a covenant in a deed executed in anticipation of marriage whereby the defendant covenanted to pay an annuity during the life of his intended son-in-law, the defendant pleaded on equitable grounds that the marriage was null and void by reason of the husband's impotence, and that the consideration for the deed had wholly failed:—Held, a bad plea. Cavell v. Prince, 35 L. J., Ex. 162.

6. Action for Breach of Promise of Marriage.

a. When Maintainable.

Administrator.]—An administrator cannot maintain an action for a breach of promise of marriage to the intestate, where no special damage is alleged. Chamberlain v. Williamson, 2 M. & S. 408; 15 R. R. 295.

Promise—Third Person.]—An expression to third persons of an intention to marry another, not uttered in the hearing of or communicated to such person by the authority of the party expressing the intention, does not amount to a promise so as to sustain the action. Cole v. Cottingham, 8 Car. & P. 75.

Contract made out of Jurisdiction of Court.]—Two British subjects, being in Germany, became engaged to marry. The plaintiff came to England, and there received a letter written and posted by the defendant in Germany, in which she declined to carry out her engagement. The plaintiff issued a writ of summons under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 18:—Held, that the words "cause of action," in the section, meant the whole cause of action, and do not apply where a contract has been made out of the jurisdiction and the breach has occurred in England. Cherry v. Thompson, 41 L. J., Q. B. 243; L. R. 7 Q. B. 573; 26 L. T. 791; 20 W. R. 1029.

Held, also, that the breach of the contract to marry occurred in Germany, the receipt of the letter only furnishing evidence of the breach and not constituting the breach itself. Ib.

A defendant made a promise of marriage to the plaintiff whilst they were residing abroad. Both afterwards came to England, where the defendant wrote a letter to the plaintiff renouncing the contract. He afterwards left the country. The plaintiff issued a writ of summons for service abroad. The defendant, having been served with the writ abroad, moved to set it aside:—Held, that the writ was rightly issued; but per Pigott and Cleasby, BB., that cause of action in s. 18 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, means the act or omission constituting the violation of duty complained of, and not the whole cause of action. Durham v. Spence, 40 L. J., Ex. 3; L. R. 6 Ex. 46; 23 L. T. 500; 19 W. R. 162.

Mutuality of Promise.]—In an action by a woman for breach of promise of marriage, it must appear, not only that the defendant proposed, or even promised to marry the plaintiff, but that she promised to marry him; for in this case, as in all other cases, a contract must be mutual; and although the assent to the engagement on both sides need not appear to have been strictly concurrent, it must appear to have been within a reasonable time. Vineall v. Veness, 4 F. & F. 344.

A promise to marry by a plaintiff is not essential to the consideration of the defendant's promise to marry a plaintiff. Harvey v. Johnston, 6 D. & L. 120; 6 C. B. 295; 17 L. J., C. P. 298; 12 Jur. 981.

Therefore, where a declaration alleged the consideration for the defendant's promise to be, that the plaintiff, being sole, and unmarried, would go to Lisahoppin, in that part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, called Ireland, for the purpose of marrying him, the defendant:—Held, that the consideration was sufficient. Ib.

Promise by Married Man.]—A declaration averred that in consideration that the plaintiff, being unmarried, at the request of defendant, promised the defendant to marry him within a reasonable time, the defendant promised the plaintiff to marry her within a reasonable time; that the plaintiff, confiding in the defendant's promise, has hitherto remained unmarried, and has always been ready to marry the defendant, until she had notice he was a married man. Breach, that the defendant has not married the plaintiff, but on the contrary, at the time the defendant made his promise he was married, and still is married, to another woman. The plaintiff obtained a verdict. On motion to arrest the judgment:—Held, that the declaration showed a sufficient consideration. Wild v. Harris, 7 C. B. 999; 7 D. & L. 114; 18 L. J., C. P. 297; 13 Jur. 961.

Held, also, that the defendant's promise was not unlawful, there being, at the time the promise was made, a possibility of performance, as the defendant's wife might have died within a reasonable time. Ib.

Held, also, that the allegation that the plaintiff remained unmarried for a reasonable time, was a sufficient consideration, as being a prejudice to her caused by the conduct of the defendant.

A declaration alleged that in consideration that the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, promised to marry him, he promised the plaintiff to marry her. Averments that the plaintiff continued and still is unmarried, and until the discovery of the defendant's marriage, was ready and willing to marry him; that after the defendant's promise the plaintiff discovered that the defendant at the time of his promise was and still is married; and that the plaintiff had not at the time of his promise any notice of the defendant's marriage:—Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that the declaration was good, and that the plaintiff's remaining unmarried was a sufficient consideration to support the defendant's promise. Millward v. Littlewood, 5 Ex. 775; 20 L. J., Ex. 2.

A promise by a married man to marry another woman after his wife's death, is illegal and void. Per Pollock, C.B. Ib.

Renunciation of Promise.]—An action for breach of promise of marriage is maintainable against a man who has promised to marry a woman after the death of his father, and has afterwards absolutely declared his intention never to fulfil his promise, although his father is living at the time when the action is brought. Frost v. Knight, 41 L. J., Ex. 78; L. R. 7 Ex. 111; 26 L. T. 77; 20 W. R. 471—Ex. Ch.

An action for breach of promise to marry at a time certain may be maintained upon a renunciation of the promise before the time fixed for its performance has arrived. Donoghue v. Marshall, 32 L. T. 310.

In an action for breach of promise to marry, the declaration alleged a promise to marry at a time elapsed, and the evidence showed a promise to marry at a time not elapsed, and a renunciation by the defendant of such promise:—Held, that the declaration might be amended at the trial. Ib.

Personal Representatives of Promisor, Action against—Survival of Cause of Action—Special Damage.]—An action for breach of promise of marriage, where no special damage is alleged, does not survive against the personal representatives of the promisor. The special damage which would cause the right of action to survive must be damage to the property, and not to the person, of the promisee, and must be within the contemplation of both parties at the date of the promise. and the action can be brought against the executors for such special damage only and not for general damages. Finlay v. Chirney, 57 L. J., Q. B. 247; 20 Q. B. D. 494; 58 L. T. 664; 36 W. R. 534; 52 J. P. 324—C. A.

Infant, Action against—Ratification.]—The plaintiff and defendant, who were both under age, became engaged to be married in April, 1886. In September, 1886, the defendant came of age. In October, 1886, the plaintiff's father made an assignment of his property to his creditors, and immediately afterwards informed the defendant of the fact, and told him if he wished to be released from his engagement he could. The defendant then refused to be released, and said he was quite willing to marry the plaintiff, and asked her whether she thought they were old enough; to which the plaintiff replied they had better wait awhile. The defendant subsequently broke off the engagement. and refused to marry the plaintiff:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury that there had been a new promise to marry made by the defendant after he came of age. Holmes v. Brierley, 36 W. R. 795—C. A. Reversing 59 L. T. 70; 52 J. P. 711—D.

b. Grounds of Defence.

Physical and Mental.] — Bodily infirmity arising after the contract is a good reason for either of the parties to break off. Atchinson v. Baker, Peake's Add. Cas. 103.

Action by a woman for breach of promise to marry within a reasonable time, that a reasonable time had elapsed, and that the defendant refused to marry. Plea, that after the promise, and before breach, he was and still is afflicted with a dangerous disease, by reason whereof he became and was, and thenceforth hitherto has been, and still is incapable of marriage, without danger to his life and therefore unfit for the married state, whereof the plaintiff had notice before action. The jury found the plea proved, except the notice:—Held, by a majority of the court, that a party cannot set up as an excuse for the breach of a promise to marry, that the performance of the conjugal duties would be dangerous to his life, and that the plea disclosed no good defence to the claim for damages. Hall v. Wright, El. Bl. & El. 746 ; 29 L. J., Q. B. 43 ; 6 Jur., (N.S.) 193 ; 1 L. T. 230 ; 8 W. R. 160—Ex. Ch.

Held, by the minority, that there is an implied condition in a contract of marriage that the parties remain in sufficient health to undergo the excitement of the ceremony of marriage, and to perform the functions of the married state without danger to life ; that the circumstances set forth as to the state of health of the defendant were a bar to the plaintiff's claim to maintain an action for the breach of contract ; and that the averment of notice to the plaintiff was immaterial. Ib.

To an action for a breach of promise of marriage, it is no answer that after the promise the man discovered that the woman had been previously a lunatic, and confined in an asylum as a lunatic. Baker v. Cartwright, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 124 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 364 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1247.

Misrepresentation and Fraud.]—If it appears that the defendant was induced to make the promise, or to continue the connection, either by misrepresentation or wilful suppression of the real state of the circumstances of the family and previous life of the plaintiff ; this goes in bar of the action, and not to the damages only. Wharton v. Lewis, 1 Car. & P. 529; 28 R. R. 785. And see Horam v. Humphreys, Lofft, 80.

If the defence set up is, that the defendant was induced to make the promise through misrepresentations made to him, and it is proved that the plaintiff knew that her father wrote letters to the defendant, in which he made statements respecting her ; such letters are evidence for the defendant, although there is no proof that the plaintiff had read them, or was acquainted with their exact contents ; but the plaintiff could not be considered answerable for the particular expressions contained in them. Foote v. Hayne, 1 Car. & P. 546; R. & M. 165 ; 28 R. R. 788.

Declaration by a woman on an agreement between herself and the defendant to marry one another within a time elapsed before action ; averment, that a reasonable time had elapsed before action, and that the plaintiff had always been ready and willing to marry the defendant, but he had refused to do so. A plea that before and at the time of the agreement the plaintiff and A. had agreed to marry one another, which agreement was in full force as the plaintiff knew, but of which the defendant was ignorant ; and that, though the plaintiff ought fully to have disclosed the same to the defendant before the agreement, and though he would not have made the agreement had the same been disclosed to him before, the plaintiff, at the time of the agreement withheld and concealed the same from the defendant, and he made the agreement whilst he was wholly ignorant of the same, is a bad plea, there being no express allegation of fraud. Beechey v. Brown, El. Bl. & El. 796 ; 29 L. J., Q. B. 105 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 345 ; 1 L. T. 479 ; 8 W. R. 292.

Social and Moral.]—It is a sufficient justification for the non-performance of a woman's promise to marry, if the person to whom she has given the promise turns out upon inquiry to be a man of bad character ; but mere accusation and suspicion is not sufficient. The charges which she makes against him must, if capable of proof, be substantiated, or they go only to the damages. Baddeley v. Mortlock, Holt, 151 ; 17 R. R. 626.

If on the part of the defendant it is proved that the plaintiff is a loose and an immodest woman, and that he broke his promise on that account, it goes in bar of the action ; but if it also appears that, when he made the promise, he was aware of these circumstances, it is no defence. In such an action the defendant may, in mitigation of damages, go into evidence to show that his relations disapproved of the match. Irving v. Greenwood, 1 Car. & P. 350.

In an action for a breach of promise of marriage, the defendant pleaded, first, that after the supposed promise he received information that the plaintiff was an unchaste person, and had committed fornication with A., which information was true ; wherefore he refused to marry her. Secondly, that after the supposed promise, he received information that the plaintiff had committed fornication with some person or persons to the defendant unknown, and was pregnant with a child, which child he averred was subsequently born a bastard ; wherefore he refused to marry the plaintiff :—Held, that the pleas were good. Young v. Murphy, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 54 ; 3 Scott, 379 ; 2 Hodges, 144 ; 6 L. J., C. P. 180.

If a man enters into a promise of marriage in ignorance of the fact that the woman has had an illegitimate child, and discovers that before the marriage, and on that ground declines entering into the marriage, he has a right to do so, although the transaction as to the child may have taken place ten or more years ago, and the conduct of the woman may have been since perfectly correct ; but if the man knew, or had reason to know, at the time of the promise, that the woman had such child, and gave that, afterwards, as his reason for refusing to marry, that would be no defence in point of law. Beach v. Merrick, 1 Car. & K. 463.

Mutual Releases.]—To a declaration founded on mutual promises to marry within a reasonable time, it is a good plea, that after the promise, and before any breach, the plaintiff absolved, exonerated, and discharged the defendant from his promise, and the performance thereof. King v. Gillet, 7 M. & W. 55 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 164.

It was proved that the defendant, having written a letter to the plaintiff desiring to terminate the engagement, called at her father's house, and a conversation took place respecting the return of letters. The defendant returned the plaintiff's letters ; the plaintiff said, "No, I can't give up your letters, it would be like giving you up altogether." The plaintiff left her home and went to reside with an aunt for a long period and no correspondence took place between the parties for two years :—Held, that this was evidence from which a jury might infer that the plaintiff had exonerated the defendant from his promise before any breach. Davis v. Bomford, 6 H. & N. 245 ; 30 L. J., Ex. 139 ; 3 L. T. 279.

Offer to carry out Contract before Writ—Not Communicated to Plaintiff.]—Upon an action for breach of promise, the defendant pleaded that he was ready and willing to marry the plaintiff, in it is laid as special damage, that the defendant debauched the plaintiff and ruined her character. it would be misdirection to tell the jury that they might give her damages as a solatium for the injured feelings of her parents and family; but, where the defendant is a person of property, they may take into their consideration not only the plaintiff's pecuniary loss in not becoming his wife, but the injury done to her future prospects of marriage, her injured feelings and affections, and the mortification she must suffer in not being able to look her family in the face. Berry v. Da Costa, 1 H. & R. 291; 35 L. J., C. P. 191; L. R. 1 C. P. 331; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 588; 14 W. R. 279.

In such action the damages cannot be measured by a known standard, as in commercial cases; but the amount is peculiarly a question for the jury; and where no witnesses were called for the defendant, and it appeared that imputations had been cast upon the plaintiff, a person in humble life, and her witnesses, which failed, and the jury gave 2,500*l*. damages against the defendant, who was a person of property; and a new trial was asked for simply upon the ground that the damages were excessive, the application was refused. Ib.

On Motion for New Trial.]—Upon a motion for a new trial in an action for breach of promise of marriage, on the ground of surprise and excessive damages, the affidavit of the defendant, though required for the purpose of pledging himself to the bona fides of the application, cannot be looked at for the purpose of explaining or contradicting the evidence adduced at the trial. Smith v. Woodfine, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 660.

In such an action, the court will not interfere with the discretion of the jury as to the amount of damages, unless there has been some obvious error or misconception on their part, or it is made apparent that they have been actuated by undue motives. Ib.

Quære, whether an affidavit made by the defendant, contradicting and explaining the evidence given at the trial, can be properly used in support of an application on his behalf for a new trial. Berry v. Da Costa, supra.

7. Jactitation of Marriage.

Who may institute Suit.]—A suit of jactitation of marriage can only be instituted by one of the parties to the pretended marriage. Campbell v. Corley, Campbell, Ex parte, 31 L. J., Mat. 60.

Defences.]—To a jactitation suit there are three defences available—a denial of the boasting, a fact of marriage, and acquiescence. Bodkin v. Case, Milward's Ir. E. C. 356.

Acquiescence.]—The court will not make a decree in favour of the petitioner in a jactitation suit if the petitioner has at any time acquiesced in the assertion of the defendant that the defendant was the husband of the petitioner. Hawke (Lord) v. Corri (2 Hagg. Cons. 280), discussed and approved. Thompson v. Rourke, 62 L. J., P. 46; [1893] P. 70; 1 R. 501; 67 L. T. 788—C. A.

Trial by Jury—Undefended Suit.]—It is not the practice of the court to order a suit of jactitation of marriage to be tried by a jury if the defendant has put in no defence. Thompson v. Rourke, 61 L. J., P. 132; [1892] P. 244; 67 L. T. 137—C. A.

8. Marriage Brocage.

Injunction against Enforcing Note or Bond.]—Where plaintiff gave defendant a note for undertaking to procure him a marriage, and the fact was supported by affidavit, the court made an order upon the defendant to keep the note in his possession, and not assign or indorse it, but would not extend the injunction to prevent his proceeding at law. Smith v. Aykewell, 3 Atk. 566.

Bill of exchange given on marriage brocage consideration; injunction was granted to prevent proceeding on it in hands of indorsee, under the circumstances. Cotton v. Cattlyn, 2 Eq. Abr. 525.

Bond on procuring marriage declared void against one who had married obligee, though she had no provision. Goldsmith v. Bruning, 1 Eq. Abr. 90.

A bond, given as remuneration to obligee for having assisted obligor in effecting an elopement and a marriage without consent of the friends of the wife, declared void, though given voluntarily after the marriage, and without any previous agreement for the same. Williamson v. Gihon, 2 Sch. & Lef. 357.

Demurrer to bill of discovery in support of an action to recover the expenses of entertainment given by the plaintiff, under an agreement with the defendant to introduce him to a woman of fortune, with a view of marriage, allowed. King v. Burr, 3 Mer. 693.

A marriage brocage bond decreed to be delivered up, and a gratuity of fifty guineas, actually paid, to be refunded. Smith v. Bruning, 2 Vern. 392.

A., under a pretence that B. was instrumental in procuring a beneficial marriage for C., obtains a bond from C. to B. for 1,000 guineas as a reward for his services. The bond is paid when due, but in nine years afterwards C. discovers the whole to be a gross imposition in A., and that he received all the money. On a bill brought, A. was decreed to repay C. the whole money with interest and costs. Booth v. Warrington (Earl), 4 Bro. P. C. 163.

Lease set Aside.]—Tenant in tail made a lease to A., in consideration of his procuring a marriage between the lessor and a lady of fortune:—Held, that the consideration was fraudulent, and the lease accordingly set aside. Decree of the Court of Chancery, dismissing the bill for relief against the lease, reversed. Scribblehill v. Brett, 4 Bro. P. C. 144.

Lease granted by tenant in tail, in consideration of procuring a match, set aside at the suit of the remainderman. S. C., 2 Vern. 446; Pre. Ch. 165.

Marriage brocage bond decreed to be delivered up, the marriage being had without the consent of the woman's parents. Such bonds not to be countenanced. Drury v. Hooke, 1 Vern. 442; 2 Ch. Ca. 176. S. P., Arundel v. Trevillian, 1 Ch. Rep. 87.

Bond given to the wife's father in order to obtain his consent to the marriage of his daughter, to repay part of the portion if the daughter dies without issue, where the daughter was entitled to her portion by a collateral ancestor. Bond set aside as a marriage brocage bond. Keat v. Allen, 2 Vern. 588. Anon., Pre. Ch. 267.

Compromise.]—Bond by infant for a just debt. His mother and infant sister (being entitled on death of A. without issue to 4,000*l.* stock for the mother for life, after to her children, according to appointment, if no children to the mother) after death of the son covenanted to pay that debt when either should become entitled to that stock. Upon marriage of the daughter, the mother made an appointment of the stock in her favour; but next day, the husband having notice of and approving the covenants to pay the son's debt, and his reciting his and his wife's intention to secure it as hereafter mentioned, released all their right to that stock to the mother, and covenanted, that when the wife should be twenty-one, all their interest should be vested in her; and a trust was declared, that if the obligee should have a right to recover that debt, it should be paid out of that stock. Afterwards, a bill was filed to set aside the settlement as an appointment by the mother for her own benefit without consideration, the parties were, by agreement, mutually released from the covenant in it; and the husband covenanted, that if the obligee should have a right in life of the mother to recover the debt, it should be paid out of the stock. The mother died intestate before A. Determined that a fair assignee of the debt had no specific lien on the fund, which could be liable only by being brought back into the mother's assets, as taken out in fraud of her creditors; for which it must be said either that there was no pretence for the compromise, or that no pretence for its providing for the debt only, if suable in the mother's life; but the marriage brocage in the settlement was sufficient ground for the compromise, and the bill did not go on the other ground. Therefore, the common decree for account of assets, debts, and funeral expenses, without reference to that fund, was made against the husband and wife, as administrators. The debt of the son was sufficient consideration for the covenants: and if the mother had survived A. there would have been a specific lien. Johnson v. Boyfield, 1 Ves. J. 314.

9. Collusive and Underhand Agreements Respecting.

Frauds on Settlements.]—A. made an absolute conveyance of lands to B. and his heirs, in consideration of 1,500*l.*, which was at that time the full value; but on the next day B. executed a defeasance, declaring that if A. or his heirs should, within sixteen years, pay B. the 1,500*l.*, the conveyance should be void. B. entered and enjoyed the lands; and about three years afterwards made a settlement thereof upon his marriage, and to this settlement A. was privy, but took no notice of the defeasance, or even attempted to refute the general opinion, that B. was the sole and absolute owner of the lands. After B.'s death, A. set up the defeasance, and filed a bill to redeem, to which the son and heir of B. pleaded the purchase deeds and marriage settlement of his father:—Held, that the intent of the conveyance being to enable B. to obtain a marriage, and a considerable portion, such intention was fraudulent, and therefore a perpetual injunction was awarded against A. to stop all further proceedings under the defeasance. Webber v. Farmer, 4 Bro. P. C. 170.

Underhand agreement to defeat an agreement made on marriage set aside as fraudulent. Peyton v. Bladwell, 1 Vern. 240.

A disposition in fraud of a covenant in marriage articles, to give a fourth part of the covenantor's real and personal estate at the time of his death rescinded. Gregor v. Kemp, 3 Swan. 404.

Bond given as a reward for using influence over another's estate for benefit of the obligor, decreed to be delivered up without costs. Bonds in fraud of marriage agreements set aside on public policy. Debenham v. Ox, 1 Ves. 277.

Upon a treaty of marriage between A. and B., the mother of A. being entitled to one-third of a farm and stock of which A. was in possession represented to the father of B. that the farm and stock belonged to A., and that A. was not indebted to anybody. The mother afterwards takes a bond from A. for the amount of her one-third part of the farm and stock, &c., which were settled on the marriage. Equity will relieve A. and B. against that bond, as being a fraud upon the marriage. Quære, whether the wilful concealment by a creditor of his debt (otherwise good) from the parent of a woman upon a treaty of marriage between her and the debtor is alone sufficient to vitiate the debt. Scott v. Scott, 1 Cox, 366.

An obligation procured from an infant by the father of his intended wife in fraud of marriage articles publicly agreed to by infant and his friends is absolutely void. Morisone v. Arbuthnot, 8 Bro. P. C. 247.

A son on his marriage is to have 3,000*l.* portion with his wife, and privately, and without notice to his parents who treated for the marriage, gives a bond to the wife's father to pay back 1,000*l.* of the portion seven years afterwards. This bond void in equity, and will not be made better by being assigned to creditors. Turton v. Benson, 1 P. Wms. 497; 2 Vern. 764; Pre. Ch. 522; 10 Mod. 455; 1 Stra. 240.

—— Secret Indemnity.]—The brother adds 160*l.* to his sister's portion, to make it up the sum desired, but takes a bond from her privately to repay it. The husband and wife both die. Bond put in suit by administrator. Bond to be delivered up as fraudulent. Gale v. Lindo, 1 Vern. 475.

A mother, having the right of dower, to encourage the marriage of her son to A. B., releases her dower, and shows the release to the wife and her relations. It shall bind the mother, though the release was obtained by a fraudulent suggestion. Beverley v. Beverley, 2 Vern. 133.

A widow, on the marriage of her son, agrees to release her jointure, that he might make a settlement, and the son privately agrees to assign a leasehold estate to his mother. This agreement of son's set aside as fraudulent. Lamlee v. Hanman, 2 Vern. 466.

Bond given to refund part of portion without father's privity is void. Kemp v. Coleman, 1 Salk. 156.

Settlement of jointure by father upon marriage of son. Bond of indemnity of same date, by son to father, is void as a fraud on contract. Palmer v. Neave, 11 Ves. 165.

Parent's Consent.]—Bond given to the wife's father in order to obtain his consent to the marriage of his daughter, to repay part of the portion if the daughter dies without issue, where the daughter was entitled to her portion by a collateral ancestor. Bond set aside as a marriage brocage bond. Keat v. Allen, 2 Vern. 588; Anon., Pre. Ch. 267.

Where parent had objected to daughter's marriage with an individual, and she entered into a secret bond to forfeit 500*l.* if she did not marry him in thirteen months after parent's death; on her application for relief against bond, decreed that it should be cancelled, such a transaction being encouragement to disobedience and fraud on parents. Woodhouse v. Shepley, 2 Atk. 535.

Though a parent has no power to prevent the marriage of his child, yet his consent is expected, and by the laws of some countries necessary. Id. 539.

The above transaction, compared to the cases of bonds given before marriage, to return a part of the portion, where the fraud was not between the contracting parties, but on the parents of one of them, who, being deceived in this respect, has induced the court to set aside such bonds. Ib.

Upon a treaty of marriage between A. and the daughter of B.; A. being indebted 200*l.* by bond, B. would not consent to the match; to remove which objection, the brother of A. takes up A.'s bond and gives his own in the room of it, and privately (the daughter of B. being privy to it) takes a counter-bond from his brother to indemnify him. A. dies, the wife administers and is relieved against this counter-bond, though a party to the fraud. A. himself might have been relieved against the counter-bond. Redman v. Redman, 1 Vern. 348.

Covenant to Release Wife's Guardian.]—Covenant before marriage to release wife's guardian within two days after, of all accounts of mesne profits, set aside in equity. Hamilton (Duke) v. Mohun (Lord), 1 Salk. 158; 1 P. W. 118; 2 Vern. 652; 2 Bro. P. C. 239.

Making Good Misrepresentation.]—Injunction granted to restrain defendant from recovering a demand from one of the plaintiffs, he having represented to the agent of the other plaintiffs, on a treaty of marriage with his daughter, that there was no such demand existing. Neville v. Wilkinson, 1 Bro. C. C. 543.

Material representations of circumstances of party contracting marriage, directed to be made good, even at the instance of parties concerned in fraudulently defeating such misrepresentations. De Manneville v. Crompton, 1 Ves. & B. 355.

Creditor, at the desire of his debtor about to marry, gives in a false account of his demand to the father of the intended wife: after the marriage the creditor is bound thereby as against the debtor. Eastabrook v. Scott, 3 Ves. 460.

Fraudulent Assignment.]—A., already married, performed the ceremony of marriage with W., and joined with her in executing an assignment of her life interest in a trust fund to purchaser, B. The fraud practised upon W. by A. did not affect the validity of the assignment, nor was it necessary to make A. a party to suit by B., to obtain the benefit of the assignment. Sturge v. Starr, 2 Myl. & K. 195.

Children not Affected by Fraud of Father.]—In cases of frauds on marriage, though the husband be a party to such fraud, yet his interest cannot be affected if either wife or child (who is an object of such settlement) be living. Thompson v. Harrison, 1 Cox, 345.

Parent not Necessary Party.]—The parent is not a necessary party to a suit to set aside a deed fraudulent on marriage, but is a competent witness to prove the fraud, on a bill filed by the husband and wife. Id. 367.

Treaty on Second Marriage of Father.]—A. treats for the marriage of his son, and in the settlement on the son there was a power reserved to the father to jointure any wife whom he should marry in 200*l.* per annum, paying 1,000*l.* to the son. The father treating about marrying a second wife, the son agreed to the second wife's relations to release the 1,000*l.*, and did release it, but took a private bond from the father for the payment of this 1,000*l.* Equity would not set aside this bond, because it would be injurious to the first marriage, which, being prior in time, was to be preferred. Roberts v. Roberts, 3 P. Wms. 66.

Other Matters.]—A., being a widow, gives a bond to pay B. 100*l.* if she marry again, and B. gives a bond to the widow to pay her executors the like sum if she should not marry again. The widow soon after marries. Her bond decreed to be delivered up. Baker v. White, 2 Vern. 215.

Bond by husband to leave wife so much beyond her jointure is good. Gifford v. Gifford, 1 Eq. Abr. 89.

A power to jointure having been executed under an agreement that the creditor of the husband should have part of the jointure, the appointment was set aside as far as the creditors were to benefit. Lane v. Page, Ambl. 233.

Bond to marry or obtain money established at law, but injunction granted till hearing, on ground of public policy, being an engagement upon expectations under will of third person, though not a relation, from whom it was kept secret, to marry at his death, and no mutual obligation. Cock v. Richards, 10 Ves. 429.

Though a husband have imposed on a wife by giving her a bond void at law, yet the court will establish the agreement according to the intention of the parties. Watkyns v. Watkyns, 2 Atk. 97.

Bond in common form for payment of money, but proved that the agreement was that the obligor should marry such a man, or should pay the money due on the bond, court relieved against the bond. Key v. Bradshaw, 2 Vern. 102.

Marriage a Valuable Consideration.]—Marriage is a valuable consideration. Churchman v. Harvey, Ambl. 340.

Marriage is alone a sufficient consideration for an agreement. Marsh, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 158.

10. Status of Wife—Generally.

a. Control of Husband over Person of Wife.

Where a wife refuses to live with her husband, he is not entitled to keep her in confinement in order to enforce restitution of conjugal rights. Reg. v. Jackson, 60 L. J., Q. B. 346; [1891] 1 Q. B. 671; 64 L. T. 679; 39 W. R. 407; 55 J. P. 246.

Where there is a restraint of personal liberty of a feme covert, the court, in favourem libertatis, will grant a habeas corpus directed to the husband to bring up the body of his wife. Cochrane, In re, 8 D. P. C. 630; 4 Jur. 534.

The husband has, by the common law of England, a right to the custody and control of his wife; she is under his guardianship, and he is entitled to prevent her from indiscriminate intercourse with the world by enforcing cohabitation and a common residence; therefore, when a wife appears at masked balls unprotected by the presence, and without the permission of her husband, he has a right to restrain her from the power to frequent such places. Ib.

A husband, in order to prevent his wife eloping, with a view to live apart from him against his will, may legally confine her in his own dwelling, and deprive her of her liberty for an indefinite time, using no hardship or unnecessary restraint. Ib.

The court will not grant a habeas corpus to bring up the body of a feme covert, on an affidavit that she is desirous of disposing of her separate property, and that her husband will not admit the necessary parties to see her; and that she is confined by illness, and not likely to live long; nor will they, under such circumstances, grant a rule to show case why the necessary parties should not be admitted to see her; for, if there is no restraint of personal liberty, the matter is only cognisable in a court of equity. Rex v. Middleton, 1 Chit. 654; 22 R. R. 826.

Where there are articles of separation, the wife may have a habeas corpus, if her husband confines her. Vane's (Lord) Case, 13 East, 173, n.; 12 R. R. 317.

The court will not deliver a wife to her husband who has used her ill. Rex v. Brook, 4 Burr. 1991.

Where a wife is, by her own desire, living apart from her husband, and is under no restraint, the court will not grant a habeas corpus on the application of the husband, for the purpose of restoring her to his custody. Reg. v. Leggatt, 18 Q. B. 781. S. C., nom. Sandilands, Ex parte, 21 L. J., Q. B. 312; 17 Jur. 317.

But a husband being, until guilty of cruelty, or until judicial separation, entitled to the custody of his wife, and to detain her if she desires improperly to leave him, a habeas corpus obtained on her behalf against him will be discharged in such a case. Price, In re, 2 F. & F. 263.

On a motion for a habeas corpus to a private person on the application of a husband, to bring up the body of his wife, the affidavit must state that she is detained against her will. Rex v. Wiseman, 2 Smith, 617; 8 R. R. 724.

Attorney—No Power to Appoint.]—A feme covert cannot appoint an attorney. Oulds v. Sansom, 3 Taunt. 261.

Managing Legal Proceedings on Behalf of Husband.]—The wife of a plaintiff cannot claim to manage the cause for him at nisi prius, he being absent and in custody. Cobbett v. Hudson, 15 Q. B. 988.

In an application directly concerning his liberty, as a motion for a habeas corpus, the wife may be heard on behalf of her husband. Ib.

Guardian ad litem of Infant—Next Friend.]—Notwithstanding the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman is still incompetent to act as next friend or guardian ad litem. Somerset (Duke), In re, Thynne v. St. Maur, 56 L. J., Ch. 733; 34 Ch. D. 465; 56 L. T. 145; 35 W. R. 273.

Nuisance—Action for.]—A bill was filed by a married woman in respect of her separate property, alleging a nuisance by reason of a noisy trade, which destroyed her rest, and depreciated the value of her property. The evidence as to the nuisance was conflicting, and no action had been brought. Semble, that in respect of the mere personal nuisance the wife could not sue alone; and that as to mere depreciation of her property she could not maintain a bill, as that would not amount to nuisance. White v. Cohen, 1 Drew. 312.

Loss of Consortium of Husband.]—A married woman cannot maintain an action for being deprived of the society of her husband by the slander of another upon her character, though the husband deserts her in consequence. Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; 5 L. T. 291.

Homine Replegiando.]—A wife cannot, either by herself or her prochain ami, bring a homine replegiando against her husband. Atwood v. Atwood, Pre. Ch. 492.

Criminal Proceedings—Wife against Husband—Defamation.]—A wife could not before and cannot since the Married Women's Property Acts take criminal proceedings against her husband for defamatory libel. Reg. v. London Corporation, 55 L. J., M. C. 118; 16 Q. B. D. 772; 54 L. T. 761; 34 W. R. 544; 16 Cox, C. C. 81; 50 J. P. 614.

—— Husband taking Wife's Money.]—It is no offence for a husband to take his wife's money while they are living together; sed aliter while they are living apart. Lemon v. Simmons, 57 L. J., Q. B. 260; 36 W. R. 351.

a. Generally.

Promise during Coverture not Binding.]—A promise during coverture does not bind a wife; but if repeated after the husband's death it is a confirmation. Smith v. French, 2 Atk. 245. And see Watson, Ex parte, 16 Ves. 266.

Undertaking after Discoverture.]—As to the effect of feme covert's subsequent undertaking, when sole, to pay her bond, given during coverture; the creditor was left to law. Lee v. Muggeridge, 1 Ves. & B. 118.

Effect in Equity.]—Equity will not make good against a married woman a contract, on which she cannot be sued at law. Bolton (Duke) v. Williams, 2 Ves. J. 156; 4 Bro. C. C. 297.

Agreement to Join Husband on Levying Fine.]—Where a feme covert agrees to join with her husband in making a surrender, or levying a fine, and he dies before it is done, equity will compel her to perform the agreement. Sed quære. Baker v. Child, 2 Vern. 61.

Joining with Husband in an Act.] — How far wife by joining with husband in any act can bind herself. Hody v. Lun, 1 Rol. Abr. 375; 1 Eq. Abr. 61.

Contract not to have Cause Reheard.]—An heiress-at-law being a married woman cannot contract not to have a cause reheard, nor can she, by her conduct, be in any way bound, nor can her consent inserted in an order establishing a will in any way prejudice her right. Petition of rehearing restored to the file. Decree varied, by striking out the consent of the heiress-at-law and adding words reserving to her if she should survive her husband, and to her heirs if she should die in his lifetime, the right to dispute the will; but although the will was inoperative against the heiress-at-law to bind her inheritance, it was conclusive as against the husband, as tenant by the curtesy, to the extent of his estate; the decree being, in fact, a bargain that all his and his wife's costs, to which he was alone liable, should be costs in the cause, he agreeing that they would no longer dispute the wlll. Turner v. Turner, 2 De G. M. & G. 28; 21 L. J., Ch. 422. Varying 15 Jur. 711.

Compromise of Suit against Trustee.]—The court has jurisdiction to sanction on behalf of a married woman a compromise of a suit to make a trustee liable for a breach of trust in relation to a fund in which she has a reversionary interest. Wall v. Rogers, Wall v. Ogle, 39 L. J., Ch. 204; 381; L. R. 9 Eq. 58; 21 L. T. 654.

De facto Wife—Execution of Deed.]—If a woman married de facto to one whom she knows to have another prior wife, executes a deed as his wife jointly with him, she is bound as a feme sole. Anstie v. Mason, 3 Anstr. 833.

Agreement to leave Land.]—Parol agreement by feme whilst sole, that if she died without issue, she would leave her heir-at-law the land, or 500*l*. Agreement decreed to be executed. Goilmere v. Battison, 1 Vern. 48.

Acknowledgment of Wife's Deposit by Husband.]—Where a wife made deposit as security on part of husband without his knowledge, but he subsequently acknowledged it as proper; from fraudulent conduct on part of husband, court would not decree deposit back again. Naish v. East India Co., 2 Comb. 462.

Wife living Separate from Husband—Property in Goods Supplied in Tradesman.]—A tradesman supplying a married woman, living apart from her husband, with furniture upon hire, does not thereby divest himself of the property in such goods, inasmuch as the married woman was incapable of acquiring it by any contract; and therefore if the sheriff take such goods in execution at the suit of the husband's creditor, trover lies by the tradesman. But if the contract had been valid, the goods being let to hire generally, without any time limited, notice to determine the contract given to the sheriff's officer, and not to the other contracting party, would not be sufficient to determine the contract. Smith v. Middlesex (Sheriff), 15 East, 607.

Plea of Payment to Wife, Effect of.]—To an action for work done and attendance given, by the wife of the plaintiff for the defendant, the latter pleaded payment to the wife, without averring that she had authority to receive it:—Held, bad. Offley v. Clay, 2 Scott (N.R.) 272; 2 Man. & G. 172; 4 Jur. 1203.

b. With Husband.

a. Ante-Nuptial.

Bond to secure Conveyance on Marriage.]—Feme gives a bond to her intended husband, that in case of their marriage she will convey her lands to him in fee. They marry, the wife dies without issue, and then the husband dies: the bond, though void in law, is yet good evidence of an agreement in equity, and the heir of the husband shall obtain specific performance against the heir of the wife. Cannel v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 243. And see Acton v. Pearce, 2 Vern. 480.

Covenant with Intended Wife—Effect on Marriage.]—A man covenants with his intended wife, that she should have power to dispose of 300*l*. of her estate; whether the marriage discharges the covenant, quære. Fursor v. Penton, 1 Vern. 408. And see Darcy v. Chute, 1 Ch. Ca. 21.

Covenant to pay Woman Annuity—Marriage—Suspension of Right.]—A man covenanted to pay a woman an annuity for her life, payable half-yearly, for her separate use, and free from anticipation. The covenantor afterwards married the annuitant, and died leaving her surviving:—Held, that the annuity was not extinguished, but only suspended by the marriage, and that the widow was entitled to recover arrears accrued subsequently to the death of her husband. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 180; 37 L. J., P. C. 44; L. R. 2 P. C. 83.

Intending Husband paying off Wife's Mortgages.]—Previously to a marriage then in contemplation, the intending husband, by his agent, paid off two equitable mortgage debts of the intended wife, secured by a deposit of title-deeds belonging to her. He did this apparently to save the expense of a legal mortgage, which would otherwise have been required by the mortgagees. The title deeds still remained in the custody of the mortgagees. The marriage was solemnised; there was no settlement, or agreement for a settlement. There was no issue of the marriage; the husband predeceased the wife, intestate. His widow took out administration to him:—Held, that the husband did not intend to make a gift to the wife of the money which he had paid for her, and that the debt still existed on the security of the equitable mortgage in favour of the personal estate of the deceased husband. Gooch v. Gooch, 15 Jur. 1166.

Executrix marrying Obligor of Bond.]—Plaintiff being an executrix, and the residuary legatee of her former husband, lent 100*l.* to A. and B., and took a note for it in her own name, and a bond in a trustee's name, and afterwards married B., one of the obligors; the bond is not extinct. Cotton v. Cotton, 2 Vern. 290; 2 Ch. Rep. 138; Pre. Ch. 42.

Power of Wife to Contract.]—A wife can contract in respect of her separate estate with her husband; and if she hands him money, part of the income of her separate estate, upon a contract of loan, she may sue him upon that contract. Woodward v. Woodward, 3 De G. J. & S. 672; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 882; 8 L. T. 749; 11 W. R. 1007.

A wife can contract with her husband whenever the circumstances sufficiently show that she can form an independent judgment, totally free from his control; but such capacity is limited to contract in relation to the circumstances which enable her to be thus independent. Vansittart v. Vansittart, 4 Kay & J. 63; 27 L. J., Ch. 222; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 276; 6 W. R. 238. Affirmed 2 De G. & J. 249; 27 L. J., Ch. 289; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 519; 6 W. R. 386—L.JJ.

The capacity of the wife to contract with her husband is not confined to the case where she has separate estate, and contracts in reference to it. Ib.

Therefore, where a wife has instituted a suit in the ecclesiastical court for a divorce, an agreement between the husband and wife alone for the compromise of the suit will be supported, provided it contains no stipulations which the court cannot enforce. Ib.

But where an agreement for the compromise of a suit for a divorce, provided that the wife should have the custody of two of the children, and should educate them in a particular manner, the first part of such provision being contrary to public policy, and the latter incapable of being enforced against the wife, a demurrer to a bill filed by her for specific performance was allowed. Ib.

A wife's disability to contract with her husband ceases when she is in such relations of antagonism towards him, separation from him, and independence on him, as negative the general presumption of submission to his control, which, in the absence of prescribed safeguards, nullifies her acts, because they are supposed to be wanting in spontaneity and freedom. Cahill v. Martin, 7 L. R. Ir. 361.

—— Without Intervention of Trustee.]—A husband and wife having taken out cross-summonses against each other for assaults, entered into a verbal agreement with each other to withdraw the summonses and to live apart, the husband allowing the wife a weekly sum for maintenance, and the wife indemnifying the husband against any debts she might contract. An action having been brought in the county court by the wife against her husband for six weeks' arrears of maintenance under the agreement:—Held, that the husband and wife had power to contract, without the intervention of a trustee, to live apart, in consideration of their agreeing not to take legal proceedings against one another, and that the action was maintainable. McGregor v. McGregor, 57 L. J., Q. B. 591; 21 Q. B. D. 424; 37 W. R. 45; 52 J. P. 772—C. A. Affirming 58 L. T. 227. And see Moore v. Freeman, Bunb. 205; and Freeman v. Moore, 1 Bro. P. C. 237.

Evidence of Agreement.]—Husband receiving proceeds of a sale of wife's estate, and promising by a note or receipt to lay it out pursuant to to trust relative to other property; this note held evidence of the agreement antecedent to the sale, and estates purchased afterwards by the husband were held to be bound. Att.-Gen. v. Whorwood, 1 Ves. 534.

Release by Wife—Specific Performance of.]—A married woman was entitled by an antenuptial settlement to a jointure real-charge after her husband's death secured upon his real estates in Ireland. The wife having left him, the husband commenced a suit for restitution of conjugal rights; with a view to a compromise by an agreement for separation a document was drawn up and signed by the husband, which stipulated that the wife should release part of her jointure. The wife signed this document with a qualification that no further steps were to be taken in the matrimonial suit, but it was not stayed or dismissed. A deed was prepared to carry out the terms of the compromise and was executed by the husband, but the wife refused to execute it or to return to her husband, and the husband afterwards died:—Held, that the wife was not, when she signed the document, in all respects in the same position as a feme sole, and that even if any final agreement had been come to she would not have been bound by it, there having been no acknowledgment as required by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, ss. 68, 71; and that specific performance of the agreement to release her jointure could not be decreed against her. Hunt v. Hunt (4 De G. F. & J. 221) and Besant v. Wood (12 Ch. D. 605) commented on by the Earl of Selborne, L. C. Cahill v. Cahill, 8 App. Cas. 420; 49 L. T. 605; 31 W. R. 861—H. L. (Ir.)

Agreement as to Separate Property.]—Husband and wife agree that the property settled to her separate use, and also her contingent reversionary interest, in the event of her surviving him, shall be paid to the husband, the agreement carried into execution by decree of this court. Ellis v. Atkinson, 3 Bro. C. C. 565. But see id. n.

Bond by Husband to leave to Wife.]—Bond by husband to leave wife so much beyond her jointure is good. Gifford v. Gifford, 1 Eq. Abr. 89.

Annuity in Consideration of Discontinuance of Cohabitation.]—A contract to grant an annuity, in consideration of the discontinuance of cohabitation, and of the release of an alleged promise of marriage can be enforced in equity. Keenan v. Handley, 2 De G. J. & S. 283; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 905; 10 L. T. 800; 12 W. R. 1021.

Loan by Deceased Wife's Sister to Cohabiting Trader.]—A trader lived with his deceased wife's sister as her husband. In 1858 she received a legacy of 3,000*l.*, which she handed over to him upon an agreement that the money should be advanced and used by him in his business but that as to 2,000*l.* he should be a trustee for her, and a settlement should be executed to carry out that agreement. The money was accordingly used by him in his business, but no settlement was ever executed. The trader having gone into liquidation in 1876:—Held, that inasmuch as by its primary destination under the agreement the fund was to be and was used in the business, no trust could be imposed upon it to the disadvantage of the creditors, and the wife could not prove in the liquidation for any part of it. Corbidge, Ex parte, Beale, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 17; 4 Ch. D. 246; 35 L. T. 768; 25 W. R. 324.

The course is not to establish a deed between husband and wife on her separate estate without the presence of the wife in court, where the trustees put the parties to file a bill. Milnes v. Bush, 2 Ves. J. 500. And see cols. 1054, 1266.

c. Right of Voting.

Municipal Corporation.]—By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 55. s. 9, women are entitled to vote in the election of councillors, auditors, and assessors of municipal corporations.

Neither at common law, nor by statute, are women entitled to vote at parliamentary elections. Charlton v. Lings, 38 L. J., C. P. 25; L. R. 4 C. P. 374; 19 L. T. 534; 17 W. R. 284; 1 Hopw. & C. 1.

There is no provision in the Municipal Franchise Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 55), or in the Married Women's Property Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), which enables a married woman to be placed on the burgess roll and to vote at the election of town councillors. Reg. v. Harrald, 41 L. J., Q. B. 173; L. R. 7 Q. B. 361; 26 L. T. 616; 20 W. R. 328.

d. Other Matters.

Municipal Councillor.]—A woman is not a "fit" person under the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882, to be a town councillor. Hope v. Sandhurst (Lady), 58 L. J., Q. B. 316; 23 Q. B. D. 79; 61 L. T. 150; 37 W. R. 548.

Sexton.]—A woman is capable of being elected to the office of sexton, and may vote at the election of a candidate for such office. Olive v. Ingram, 7 Mod. 263; 2 Strange, 1114.

Governor of Workhouse.]—A married woman may be appointed governor of a workhouse, and may act by deputy. Anon, 2 Ld. Raym. 1014.

Overseer.]—And may be appointed an overseer of the poor. Rex v. Stubbs, 2 Term Rep. 395; 1 R. R. 503.

Deserting Children not Punishable as Vagrant.]—The provisions contained in 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, with reference to persons absconding, and leaving their children chargeable to a parish, do not apply to a wife who has been deserted by her husband, and has not the means of supporting them. Peters v. Cowie, 46 L. J., M. C. 177; 2 Q. B. D. 131; 36 L. T. 107. But see 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 21.

Estoppel.]—A feme covert cannot be estopped by her own act. Parker v. Manning, 7 Term Rep. 539.

If a woman married de facto to one whom she knows to have another wife, executes a deed as his wife jointly with him, she is bound as a feme sole. Anstie v. Mason, 3 Anst. 833.

But a woman who has declared herself to be a feme sole, and as such has executed deeds, and maintained actions, if herself sued as a feme sole, is not estopped from setting up the defence of coverture. Davenport v. Nelson, 4 Camp. 26. And see Bateman v. Faber, 66 L. J., Ch. 721; [1897] 2 Ch. 223; 77 L. T. 71; 46 W. R. 151.

Infant Widow—Funeral Expenses of Husband.]—An infant widow is liable to pay for her deceased husband's funeral expenses. Chapple v. Cooper, 13 M. & W. 252; 13 L. J., Ex. 286.

Judgment confessed to Feme covert.]—A judgment confessed to a feme covert is void, and so is her bond. Roberts v. Pierson, 2 Wils. 3.

But a judgment confessed to a feme covert as if a feme sole, is not void. Haydon v. Shearman, 4 Ir. C. L. R. 169.

11. Restitution of Conjugal Rights.

a. Demand.

Notice or Demand prior to Citation—Form of Notice.]—The written demand for cohabitation and restitution of conjugal rights required to be made before commencing proceedings upon the party to be cited need not be made by the petitioner himself, and therefore where it was made by the petitioner's solicitor at the petitioner's request, such demand is sufficient. Though no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the form of such demand, yet, as a general rule the demand should be conciliatory in its tenour, and therefore where there had been no previous friendly negotiations on the subject, a demand for the restitution of conjugal rights couched in the form of a formal lawyer's letter, is not a compliance with the true meaning of r. 175 of the rules in divorce causes. Field v. Field, 58 L. J., P. 21; 14 P. D. 26; 59 L. T. 880; 37 W. R. 134—C. A.

Written Demand for Cohabitation—Form.]—In a petition by a wife for restitution of conjugal rights it appeared that after eleven years' separation, and before filing the petition, she addressed a letter to her husband expressing a desire to return to cohabitation, and demanding restitution of conjugal rights, and threatening to commence legal proceedings in case of refusal. The husband acknowledged the receipt of his wife's letter, but refused to receive her back:—Held, that the wife's letter was a sufficient demand within the meaning of r. 175 of the Additional Rules and Regulations, 1875, and that she was entitled to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. Field v. Field (14 P. D. 26) distinguished. Smith v. Smith, 59 L. J., P. 9; 15 P. D. 47; 62 L. T. 237; 38 W. R. 276—C. A.

—— Substituted Service.]—Before a citation in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is permitted to issue, the court must be satisfied by affidavit that a written demand for cohabitation and resitution of conjugal rights has previously been made by the petitioner on the party to be cited. Where it was shown that a wife petitioner had forwarded two such demands to her husband through the post by registered letter, both of which had been returned unopened by the husband's solicitor, who subsequently refused to give the husband's address, or that of any third person through whom he might be communicated with, and it was also shown that the husband had left the country, the court made an order for substituted service of such demand upon the husband's solicitor. Tucker, Ex parte, 66 L. J., P. 65; [1897] P. 83; 77 L. T. 140; 45 W. R. 656. And see cols. 724, 725.

Upon the hearing of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights instituted by a wife, where, prior to the institution of any proceedings, friendly and conciliatory applications have been made by the petitioner to her husband, and a letter has been subsequently written by her solicitors, asking the respondent to take his wife back, and threatening proceedings in case of his refusal; and that letter followed by a formal and peremptory demand in writing, by the wife, upon his non-compliance with those requests for cohabitation:—Held, that, taken together, these demands for cohabitation constituted a sufficient compliance with the statute and r. 175. Mason v. Mason, 61 L. T. 304.

Evidence of Incontinence—Allowance.]—Evidence of alleged incontinence on the part of the petitioner for restitution of conjugal rights before marriage, with the view of showing that her child, born after marriage, was not the respondent's child, is inadmissible, on the ground of irrelevance to the issue. The court also refuse to consider, on the hearing of the petition for restitution of conjugal rights, any question as to the amount of allowance which the respondent should be ordered to pay to his wife, in the event of a decree of restitution being pronounced, and of his refusing to comply therewith. Ib.

b. Grounds for Resisting.

Delay in Presenting Petition—Decree—Practice.]—The court will not dismiss a petition for the restitution of conjugal rights solely on the ground of delay in presenting the petition. Beauclerk v. Beauclerk, 6 R. 657; 71 L. T. 376; 59 J. P. 8.

Separation Deed.]—An agreement to live separate is no answer or bar to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights. Spering v. Spering, 3 Sw. & Tr. 211; 32 L. J., Mat. 116; 9 L. T. 24; 11 W. R. 810.

Although a deed of separation is no bar to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, it may be alleged, in answer to an allegation in the petition, that from the date of the deed the respondent has without just cause refused to cohabit with the petitioner. Anquez v. Anquez, 35 L. J., Mat. 93; L. R. 1 P. 176; 14 L. T. 635; 14 W. R. 972.

A covenant on the part of a husband in a separation deed, that it should be lawful for the wife to live separately and apart from him, and that he would not compel her to cohabit with him by any legal proceedings, is enforceable in equity by an injunction against proceedings in the divorce court for the restitution of conjugal rights. Hunt v. Hunt, 4 De G. F. & J. 221; 31 L. J., Ch. 161; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 85; 5 L. T. 412, 778; 10 W. R. 215.

By a deed of separation dated in December, 1862, husband and wife agreed to live separate and apart, the husband to allow the wife an annuity of 200*l.* for their joint lives and twelve months after the husband's death if the wife survived him. The trustee of the deed covenanted with the husband that the wife should not molest him, and that she should not seek to compel him to live with her again, or "bring any citation in the divorce court for the restitution of conjugal rights." The annuity had been duly paid. The wife commenced proceedings in the divorce court for a restitution of conjugal rights. Thereupon the husband filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the wife from further proceedings in the divorce court:—Held, that the wife ought to be restrained from further proceedings until the hearing, the deed not having been impeached—and an injunction was granted, with liberty for her to file a cross bill to impeach the deed, or as she would be advised without filing it in the name of a next friend. Kitchin v. Kitchin, 19 L. T. 674.

Where a deed of separation had been executed between a husband and wife who had continued to live apart, and the wife more than five years afterwards, by counterclaim to an action by the husband to enforce the deed, claimed as against him a judicial separation on the ground of alleged cruelty:—Held, that her right to judicial separation was barred by lapse of time and by the execution of the deed of separation. Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445.

A married woman can contract to live apart from her husband, and the husband is entitled to come to the court to enforce specific performance of such a contract. A husband is not debarred from enforcing a deed of separation and from obtaining an order restraining his wife from commencing an action for the restitution of conjugal rights by reason of trifling breaches of the covenants on his part. Where, in a separation deed, the husband had covenanted to allow an infant child to reside with the wife, and had subsequently concurred as next friend of the infant in a petition under the Infants Custody Act (36 Vict. c. 12) for the removal of the infant from the wife's custody, which had been ordered by the court:—Held, that this was a breach of the husband's covenant. Injunction granted to restrain the wife from suing for restitution of conjugal rights. Ib.

—— Covenant not to Sue for.]—An answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights alleged that the petitioner in a deed of separation covenanted not to compel or endeavour to compel the respondent to cohabit with him; and this averment was held irrelevant, and was struck out. Hunt v. Hunt, 32 L. J., Mat. 168.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the respondent moved for an injunction and stay of proceedings, upon affidavit showing that the petitioner was bound by deed not to institute such a suit:—Held, that such a defence must be alleged by plea, and afforded no ground for summary dismissal of the suit. Marshall v. Marshall, 48 L. J., P. 49; 5 P. D. 19; 39 L. T. 640; 27 W. R. 399.

Upon such defence being subsequently alleged by plea:—Held, that it was such an equitable plea as the divorce court since the Judicature Acts is bound to consider. Ib.

Held, also, that a wife is bound by a deed of separation, containing a covenant not to sue her husband for restitution of conjugal rights. Suit instituted by her in violation of such a covenant dismissed. Ib.

A separation deed, executed by a husband and wife, containing a covenant by trustees for the wife not to sue her husband for the restitution of conjugal rights, is a bar to a suit by the wife for the restitution of conjugal rights. Marshall v. Marshall (5 P. D. 19) approved. Clark v. Clark, 54 L. J., P. 57; 10 P. D. 188; 52 L. T. 234; 33 W. R. 405; 49 J. P. 516—C. A.

The parties in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights had been living apart under a deed of separation by which the wife covenanted not to take any proceedings to compel her husband to cohabit with her. The husband, who had not fulfilled his covenant to pay his wife 200*l.* a year, did not appear in the suit. The court notwithstanding the covenant in the deed, granted the wife a decree of restitution. Tress v. Tress, 56 L. J., P. 93; 12 P. D. 128; 57 L. T. 501; 35 W. R. 672; 51 J. P. 504.

Return Unsafe—Former Suit.]—In a wife's petition for restitution of conjugal rights the husband's answer alleged all the circumstances and the evidence in a former suit for judicial separation, on the ground of her cruelty. It also alleged that he allowed her 260*l.* a year to live separately from him, and it set out at great length a series of subsequent acts tending to show her insanity. The court, on motion to reform the answer, directed all the particulars of the cruelty and the former suit to be struck out, and the fact of the suit simply to be pleaded. It also struck out the allegation of the allowance; and, as to the insanity, directed that only such facts should be pleaded as tended to show that it was unsafe for the husband to live with his wife. Radford v. Radford, 20 L. T. 279.

Dismissed Charges.]—A wife brought a suit for judicial separation against her husband by reason of his adultery, which was heard by the judge without a jury, and was dismissed. The husband subsequently petitioned for restitution of conjugal rights against the wife, who, in her answer, set out the identical charges which she had made against her husband in the prior suit:—Held, that it was not competent for her to plead the identical charges which had been in issue between the same parties in the former suit, and had been disposed of. Sopwith v. Sopwith, 2 Sw. & Tr. 160; 30 L. J., P. 131; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 554; 4 L. T. 256.

Impotence.]—When the wife pleads the impotence of her husband, the court will, upon her application, appoint medical inspectors to examine her. It is convenient that the same medical inspectors should examine both parties. C. v. C., 32 L. J., Mat. 31.

The court refused to allow a jury in a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, the respondent having pleaded impotency of her husband, and prayed for a decree of nullity of marriage. Ricketts v. Ricketts, 35 L. J., Mat. 92; 13 L. T. 761.

Act not amounting to Legal Offence.]—In a wife's suit for restitution the husband's answer set out that she made his home uncomfortable and systematically aggravated him in order that he might commit some act of violence which would entitle her to a judicial separation, and that they had separated by mutual consent:—Held, that these statements were relevant and ought not to be struck out of the answer. Woodey v. Woodey, 31 L. T. 647; 23 W. R. 386.

It is no ground for dismissing a wife's suit for restitution of conjugal rights that she has been guilty of impropriety of behaviour not amounting to a matrimonal offence, nor yet that she has previously refused to permit conjugal intercourse. Rippingall v. Rippingall and Delacour, 24 W. R. 967.

According to the law of Ireland, desertion by the wife, even though wilful, is no bar to a suit by her for restitution of conjugal rights. Manning v. Manning, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 520.

Conjugal rights can be defeated only by acts sufficient to found a decree for a divorce. Ib.

Nothing can be pleaded in bar to a suit for restitution but what would entitle the respondent to a judicial separation. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 2 Sw. & Tr. 303; 30 L. J., Mat. 186; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 610; 4 L. T. 374; 9 W. R. 680.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the court could not reject, on demurrer, an answer which contains only facts which apparently do not constitute a case of legal cruelty. Stace v. Stace, 37 L. J., Mat. 51; 18 L. T. 740; 16 W. R. 1176.

Misconduct of Wife—Effect of Violence and Threats.]—Violent and uncontrollable temper, habitual intemperance, violent conduct in the presence of the husband's guests, assaults on him, acts or threats of violence and offensive language, and false and scandalous statements against his daughters, by which he was obliged to remove them from his house, acts of violence towards his servants—all tending to affect his health and social position—constitute a legal defence to a suit by a wife for restitution of conjugal rights. The court accordingly refused to set aside and amend the respondent's answer pleading them as vague, irrelevant, and raising immaterial issues but ordered the respondent to give particulars of the alleged violence, &c. Cruelty may consist of the aggregate of acts alleged in a pleading, and each paragraph need not allege an independent act of legal cruelty, sufficient in itself to warrant the relief sought. D'Arcy v. D'Arcy, 19 L. R., Ir. 369.

Adultery.]—In a wife's suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the husband pleaded that he had been induced to marry her on a false representation that she was pregnant by him; that she had, since their separation, committed adultery; and that he was not able to maintain her. The court ordered the first plea to be struck out, and allowed the second to stand. The charge of adultery is directed to be pleaded in the usual manner with particulars. Green v. Green, 21 L. T. 401.

A petition for restitution of conjugal rights, to which an answer has been filed charging adultery and praying for a judicial separation, is not a suit or proceeding "instituted in consequence of adultery," and therefore the evidence of the parties is admissible. Blackborne v. Blackborne, 37 L. J., Mat. 73; L. R. 1 P. 563; 18 L. T. 450.

A respondent in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, who alleged adultery of the petitioner and prayed for a judicial separation, was examined in support of the charge of adultery, and a jury found that the petitioner was guilty of adultery. A decree of judicial separation was pronounced on that verdict. Ib.

Adultery by the wife may be pleaded by way of defence to a suit by her for restitution of conjugal rights. Moore v. Moore, 3 Moore, P. C. 84.

Withdrawal of Petition—Prayer for Judicial Separation.]—When an answer to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights contains a prayer for judicial separation, the respondent has a right to proceed and prove the allegations in the answer on which the prayer is founded, notwithstanding the withdrawal of the prayer for restitution by the petitioner. Blackborne v. Blackborne, supra.

Prayer for Restitution in Answer.]—A decree of restitution of conjugal rights is not the relief for desertion contemplated by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 2; therefore a wife who filed an answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage, wherein she denied the adultery charged, and alleged desertion and wilful separation, was not allowed to add a prayer for restitution to the answer. Drysdale v. Drysdale, 36 L. J., Mat. 39; L. R. 1 P. 365; 15 L. T. 512.

Amendment of, after Delayed Demurrer.]—To a petition by a wife for restitution of conjugal rights, the answer of her husband pleaded previous desertion by her, and neglect of their children on her part, whereby one of them in particular had suffered greatly. To this answer the wife, after nearly four years, filed a demurrer, with the subsequent sanction of the judge of the court, who, by his order, reserved liberty to the husband to move to amend his answer. He having applied accordingly, such leave was refused him on the ground that the proposed amendments, either by themselves or in connexion with his original answer, did not set out any valid defence to the suit, as they contained no averment which would afford a foundation for a divorce à mensâ et thoro. The demurrer was subsequently allowed, and a decree for restitution pronounced, whereupon the husband having appealed:—Held, that, having regard to the circumstances of the case and the public interests, the three last-mentioned orders should stand discharged; that accordingly he should be at liberty to file his amended answer within one month; and that, with these declarations, the cause should be remitted to the court. Manning v. Manning, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 365—C. A.

Setting out Cause of Withdrawal.]—An answer, denying that the respondent withdrew from cohabitation without just cause, should state the cause of such withdrawal. If it does not, it is bad on demurrer; but the objection is waived by filing a replication. Ward v. Ward, 32 L. J., Mat. 120.

c. When Decree will be Granted.

The court will decree a restitution of conjugal rights in favour of a wife in every case where she has not been guilty of such misconduct as would entitle the husband to a decree for a judicial separation. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 16 W. R. 734. But as to enforcing, see the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, and col. 727.

Both Parties Guilty of Adultery.]—A wife brought a suit for divorce against her husband, by reason of his adultery; the husband recriminated her adultery, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that both parties were proved to have been guilty of adultery. The wife subsequently instituted a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The husband brought in an allegation pleading in bar of her suit the previous suit and sentence:—Held, that the wife, by reason of her adultery (though the husband had also been guilty of adultery), could not sustain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights. Hope v. Hope, 1 Sw. & Tr. 94; 27 L. J., Mat. 43; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 515; 6 W. R. 585.

A. sued B. (her husband) for restitution of conjugal rights. He pleaded in bar her adultery. A., in her replication, denied her adultery, and recriminated B.'s adultery. The admission of so much of A.'s replication as recriminated B.'s adultery was opposed:—Held, that the doctrine of compensatio criminis applied to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights; that A. was entitled to recriminate B.'s adultery; and that where both parties had been guilty of adultery, the court would, at the suit of one of them, make a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. Seaver v. Seaver, 2 Sw. & Tr. 665, App. II.

Desertion.]—When the court refused to decree a restitution of conjugal rights on the ground of desertion alleged in the answer, and proved in the evidence, it granted a decree for judicial separation prayed for by the respondent on the same ground. Meara v. Meara, 13 W. R. 50.

Cruelty—Judicial Separation.]—A wife persisted in bringing against her husband by word of mouth, and in letters written to members of his family and others, a charge of having committed an unnatural offence, the charge not being true nor believed by her to be true:—Held (Rigby, L.J., dissent.), that she had not been guilty of such cruelty as would entitle the husband to a decree for judicial separation: Held, also, by the whole court, that desertion of the wife by the husband in the circumstances was not desertion without cause entitling her directly to a decree for judicial separation; and that since the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, the court was not bound, on refusing the husband's claim for judicial separation, to grant the wife a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and thus enable her to obtain a decree for judicial separation indirectly under section 5 of that Act. Russell v. Russell (No. 1), 64 L. J., P. 105; [1895] P. 315; 73 L. T. 295; 44 W. R. 213—C. A. Affirmed as to first point in H. L., see post, col. 745; as to second point, debated but not decided.

Conduct of Petitioner falling short of a Matrimonial Offence—Discretion of Court.]—In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights brought by a wife, where the respondent alleged that he was justified in leaving the petitioner on account of her misconduct, although such misconduct fell short of a legal matrimonial offence:—Held, that the effect of the decision in Russell v. Russell (supra) appears to be that in cases where the conduct of the petitioner has led to desertion by the respondent, and has amounted to sufficient cause to disentitle the petitioner to maintain a suit for judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the court is now empowered to refuse to pronounce a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, although such misconduct on the part of the petitioner may not be sufficiently grave to enable the respondent to obtain a judicial separation. In the present case the court held that the misconduct alleged against the petitioner was not sufficiently serious to justify it in refusing to pronounce a decree of restitution. Oldroyd v. Oldroyd, 65 L. J., P. 113; [1896] P. 175; 75 L. T. 281.

Willingness to take Wife back.]—A wife having filed a petition for restitution of conjugal rights, the husband, in his answer, stated his willingness to take his wife home. The court refused to give directions as to the mode of trial, but ordered the matter to be adjourned into chambers, and that the respondent should file an affidavit in support of the averments in his answer. Crothers v. Crothers, L. R. 1 P. 568; 19 L. T. 661.

Cruelty Conditionally Condoned.]—In a husband's suit for restitution of conjugal rights, it was proved that he had been for several years since the marriage a habitual drunkard, but had not given way to intemperance for some twelve months previous to the filing of the petition, during which period he was without any pecuniary means. It was further proved that, while under the influence of drink, he had been repeatedly guilty of acts of violence towards his wife, not of a very serious character, but yet such as to create in her a constant apprehension of bodily injury, and as also to affect her health. The parties had had no matrimonial intercourse for nearly five years before the institution of the suit, but had occasionally resided together during the earlier portion of that time: latterly the husband, who had forfeited all his property by bankruptcy, had been supported by a weekly allowance paid by his wife to a third person, on the discontinuance of which the petition was filed:—Held, that the conduct of the husband amounted to legal cruelty, which had only been conditionally condoned by his wife; that his enforced sobriety could not be regarded as a proof of reformation; and that, as his wife's return to cohabitation would be attended with danger to her health and safety, his petition should be dismissed. Ruxton v. Ruxton, 5 L. R., Ir. 455—C. A.

Respondent Husband a Foreigner.]—Y., whose domicil of origin was Ireland, came over to England when a minor, for the purpose of receiving a military education, obtained a commission in the Royal Artillery, and was afterwards stationed in Scotland. The head quarters of the Royal Artillery have been always in England. He subsequently married in Scotland L., whose domicil origin was England, and was afterwards remarried to her in Ireland, according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church. The parties cohabited together at various places in Scotland, England and France until 1858, when Y. deserted L. in France, and returned to Scotland, where he had since remained, refusing to cohabit with L., and subsequently in Scotland married another woman:—Held, in a suit by L. for restitution of conjugal rights, that, as Y. was a foreigner by origin, had never acquired an English domicil, and had never resided in England except temporarily, and was not in England at the commencement of the suit, he was not subject to the jurisdiction of the court. Yelverton v. Yelverton, 1 Sw. & Tr. 574; 29 L. J., Mat. 34; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 24; 1 L. T. 194; 8 W. R. 134. See DIVORCE, infra, col. 730.

Not unless Marriage Proved.]—In this suit, the court has no jurisdiction to make a decree until the marriage has been formally proved, although the respondent may have filed an answer not taking issue on the marriage. Scott v. Scott, 4 Sw. & Tr. 113; 34 L. J., Mat. 23; 12 L. T. 211.

Unless a respondent can establish a legal defence to the petition, the petitioner will be entitled to a decree, and the court has no discretion to inquire into the sincerity of the petitioner in bringing the suit. Ib.

A decree will not be granted in an undefended suit, upon mere proof of the marriage; evidence of the other facts of the case must be given. Pearson v. Pearson, 33 L. J., Mat. 156.

Custody of Children.]—The court has no power in suits for restitution of conjugal rights to make any order as to the custody of the children of the marriage. Chambers v. Chambers, 39 L. J., Mat. 56; 22 L. T. 727; 18 W. R. 528.

d. Procedure and Practice.

Service of Petition out of Jurisdiction.]—The court has no power to allow service abroad of a petition for restitution of conjugal rights. Chichester v. Chichester, 10 P. D. 186; 34 W. R. 65.

—— Proceedings.]—A wife, by her husband's consent, went temporarily to reside in a convent. She subsequently went away, leaving directions that all letters should be sent to her solicitor. She was found to have gone to Paris, but no further traces of her could be discovered. Neither the lady superior of the convent nor the trustees of the wife's settlement knew where she had gone. The husband having commenced a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the court directed substituted service upon the wife's solicitor of the petition and the demand of cohabitation. Waters v. Waters, 34 L. T. 33; 24 W. R. 190.

When there was reason to believe that the husband was keeping out of the way to avoid a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the court allowed the written demand required by r. 175 to be served on his father, coupled with the requirement that it should be advertised. Sheehy, In re, 1 P. D. 423; 34 L. T. 367.

The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (the Divorce Act, 1858), s. 42, gives the court no power to order service out of the jurisdiction of a petition for restitution of conjugal rights. Firebrace v. Firebrace, 47 L. J., P. 41; 4 P. D. 63; 39 L. T. 94; 26 W. R. 617.

It is not inconsistent with the principle that a wife's remedy for matrimonial wrongs must be usually sought in the place of the husband's domicil, that she may be allowed in some cases to obtain relief against her husband in the tribunal of the country in which she is resident though not domiciled. But where the husband, who, while resident in England, refused to receive his wife into his home, left the country before the institution by her of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the court held that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Ib. See col. 730.

Substituted Service of Proceedings.]—Where in a suit for restitution, the petitioner being unable to ascertain the whereabouts of the respondent, applied for substituted service of—first, the written demand for cohabitation necessary to satisfy r. 175; secondly, the citation; and, thirdly, the petition:—Held, that the demand to return to cohabitation might be served on the respondent's solicitor, but that the citation and petition must be made the subject of a further application. Macarthur v. Macarthur, 58 L. J., P. 70; 61 L. T. 308.

Suit in formâ pauperis.]—Quære, whether a husband, petitioning in formâ pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights, where he alleges in his affidavit that he has no home or property, and it appears in evidence that the wife has no means of her own, is not estopped from prosecuting his suit further. Meara v. Meara, 13 W. R. 50.

Answer — Pleading — Application to Strike out.]—In answer to a petition by the wife for restitution for conjugal rights, the husband pleaded that the petition was not presented in good faith with the object of obtaining the relief sought for, inasmuch as the petitioner had alleged in a former suit for judicial separation, in which she had failed, and inasmuch as she still alleged, that her husband had been guilty of an abominable crime. The respondent further pleaded that this amounted to cruelty on the petitioner's part, and he prayed for a judicial separation on this ground. Upon a summons to strike out the answer on the ground that it contained no allegation of a matrimonial offence and disclosed no bar to the prayer of the petition:—Held, that the case ought to be left to be dealt with on the merits, it being the practice of the court not to strike out a pleading where a reasonable doubt existed as to the legal effect of the allegation therein contained, and, where such legal effect could properly be discussed after all the facts had been elicited in evidence at the trial. Russell v. Russell, 71 L. T. 268.

—— No Answer Filed.]—When no answer was filed, the court allowed the petition to be proved by affidavit. Ford v. Ford, 36 L. J., Mat. 86.

Right to Begin.]—In a petition for restitution of conjugal rights by a husband, to which the wife answered by pleading his cruelty, and the husband took issue thereon:—Held, that substantially, the affirmative issue was on the respondent, and that her counsel had a right to begin. Cherry v. Cherry, 1 Sw. & Tr. 319; 28 L. J., Mat. 36.

When a wife's petition is heard before the court without a jury, her counsel has a right to begin, though the substantive issue may be raised on the husband's answer. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 2 Sw. & Tr. 544; 31 L. J., Mat. 56; 5 L. T. 771.

If before a jury, semble, that the respondent's counsel has a right to begin. Meara v. Meara, 13 W. R. 50.

Evidence of Parties where Counter-prayer.]—If an answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights charges adultery, and on that ground prays for a judicial separation, the evidence of the parties is admissible if the respondent contents himself with resisting the suit for restitution, but not if he seeks to obtain a decree of judicial separation, as the answer will then be considered a proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 31 L. J., Mat. 124; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 624.

When the respondent upon such a state of pleadings is examined at the hearing, and the court finds the charge of adultery established, it will dismiss the petition, but will not decree a judicial separation. Ib.

Plea of Insanity.]—A wife petitioned for restitution of conjugal rights. The husband alleged her insanity and a morbid hatred towards himself, which rendered cohabitation unsafe. The wife's responsive allegation, allowing that she had been insane, but asserting her recovery, and denying the facts on which the husband relied to show continuance of insanity, admitted to proof. Hayward v. Hayward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 81; 6 W. R. 638.

Costs out of Wife's Separate Estate.]—A husband having sued for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife in her answer made charges of serious misconduct against him, which, however, were abandoned at the hearing. The court made a decree in favour of the husband; but the wife evaded service of such decree by remaining out of the jurisdiction of the court. On being satisfied that the wife had a sufficient separate income, the court condemned her in the costs of the proceedings. Miller v. Miller, 39 L. J., P. 4; L. R. 2 P. 13; 21 L. T. 471; 18 W. R. 152.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights against a wife, there being no defence, the usual order was made that she should return to her husband's house within a certain number of days, and certify to the court that she had done so, and, on the court being satisfied that she had a considerable separate estate, it further ordered that she pay the costs of the proceedings. She was abroad, and did not obey the order to return to her husband at all, or to pay the costs until after a long delay. The court ordered a writ of sequestration to issue against her estate, in the first instance, without attachment. Miller v. Miller, 39 L. J., Mat. 38; L. R. 2 P. 54; 22 L. T. 418; 18 W. R. 585. See Milne v. Milne and Fowler, L. R. 2 P. 202, and Morris v. Freeman, 3 P. D. 65.

Hearing Suit in Camerâ.]—The court has power to hear suits for restitution of conjugal rights in camerâ. Anstey v. Anstey, 44 L. J., Mat. 15; L. R. 3 P. 230; 31 L. T. 801; 23 W. R. 386. And see col. 734.

Agreement to Stay Proceedings.]—A wife who agrees, or authorises her solicitor to agree, to stay proceedings in a suit instituted by her for restitution of conjugal rights, on certain terms, will be bound by such agreement, and will not be allowed to set the cause down for hearing. Stanes v. Stanes, 47 L. J., P. 19; 3 P. D. 42; 39 L. T. 46; 26 W. R. 238.

Stay on Equitable Ground.]—In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the respondent moved for an injunction and stay of proceedings, upon affidavit showing that the petitioner was bound by deed not to institute such a suit:—Held, that such a defence must be alleged by plea, and afforded no ground for summary dismissal of the suit. Marshall v. Marshall, 48 L. J., P. 49; 5 P. D. 19; 39 L. T. 640; 27 W. R. 399.

Upon such defence being subsequently alleged by plea:—Held, that it was such an equitable plea as the divorce court since the Judicature Acts is bound to consider. Ib.

Held, also, that a wife is bound by a deed of separation, containing a covenant not to sue her husband for restitution of conjugal rights. Suit instituted by her in violation of such a covenant dismissed. Ib. S. P., Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445. See col. 718.

Rehearing.]—In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by a husband, the respondent appeared, but did not file an answer. After due notice to her the cause was set down for hearing. Subsequently, upon the motion of the petitioner, the court ordered the cause to be heard out of its turn, and a decree was made, the respondent having received no notice of the motion or the order. Upon her application the court reversed the decree, and ordered the cause to be reheard, giving the respondent, who had a defence on the merits, leave to file an answer. Keane v. Keane, 41 L. J., Mat. 41; 25 L. T. 857; 20 W. R. 304.

e. Remedies for Disobedience to Decree.

Under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, s. 5, non-compliance with a decree for restitution may be treated as desertion and a judicial separation decreed.

Service of Decree—Respondent Abroad.]—Where, at the time of pronouncing a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, the respondent was abroad, the court directed that the decree should be served on his return to England, and that it should require him to certify within a fortnight after such service that he had obeyed it. Pearson v. Pearson, 33 L. J., Mat. 156.

Duty of Respondent—Attachment.]—A husband who has been served with a decree in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, ordering him to take his wife home, is bound to take the first step by inviting her to return to him. If he does not, an attachment will be issued. Alexander v. Alexander and Amos, 2 Sw. & Tr. 385; 30 L. J., Mat. 173; 5 L. T. 138; 9 W. R. 620.

If he has not appeared, notice of motion for an attachment is not requisite. Ib.

Sufficient Obedience.]—The duty of the court to issue an attachment for non-obedience of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is the same since the Divorce Acts as it was before. It is not a sufficient compliance by a husband with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights that he has provided his wife with a suitable establishment and sufficient income. Weldon v. Weldon, 53 L. J., P. 9; 9 P. D. 52; 32 W. R. 231.

—— Disobedience — Contempt—Attachment.]—A respondent being in contempt for non-obedience of an order for restitution of conjugal rights, the petitioner applied for a writ of attachment against him:—Held, that since the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, the writ could not be issued notwithstanding that the contempt existed prior to that act:—Held, also, that the writ could not issue for non-payment of costs. Weldon v. Weldon, 54 L. J., P. 60; 52 L. T. 233; 33 W. R. 427; 49 J. P. 517—C. A.

Neglect to comply with Decree—Judicial Separation.]—Where a husband had refused to comply with a decree ordering him to resume cohabitation within fourteen days of the service thereof, the court, under the 5th section of the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1884, granted a decree of judicial separation, although the period of two years had not elapsed. Harding v. Harding, 55 L. J., P. 59; 11 P. D. 111; 56 L. T. 919. And see Bigwood v. Bigwood (57 L. J., P. 80; 13 P. D. 89; 58 L. T. 62; 36 W. R. 928), col. 757.

In Ecclesiastical Courts.]—In the ecclesiastical courts, before a party could be pronounced in contempt for disobedience of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, a monition issued calling upon him to obey the decree. Cherry v. Cherry, 29 L. J., Mat. 141.

The decree should contain an order that it be obeyed within a time specified; if it does not, the court will not grant an attachment until such order has been served. Ib.

Order for Settlement.]—Where a wife had refused to obey a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, and was in the enjoyment of a separate income, part of which was payable under the trusts of the marriage settlement, the court ordered her to settle a permanent maintenance on her husband. Swift v. Swift, 59 L. J., P. 61; 15 P. D. 118; 62 L. T. 669.

—— Periodical Payments — Proportion of Husband's Income payable to the Wife—Deductions from Husband's Income on account of Losses.]—By the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), the court may, after a decree for restitution of conjugal rights upon the application of the wife, order that in the event of such decree not being complied with the respondent shall make to the petitioner such periodical payments as may be just, and such order may be enforced in the same manner as an order for alimony in a suit for judicial separation. Where a husband has not complied with a decree of restitution of conjugal rights obtained by the wife within the time named in the decree, the court ordered that he should secure to her for their joint lives a "periodical payment" equal to one-third of their joint incomes. In estimating the amount of the husband's average income the court refused to allow a deduction in respect of losses sustained by him during the previous three years in a branch of his business which had been closed. Theobald v. Theobald, 59 L. J., P. 21; 15 P. D. 26; 62 L. T. 187.

—— Amount of Allowance—Alleged Misconduct of Petitioner, short of Matrimonial Offence—Admissibility.]—Allegations of misconduct, short of a matrimonial offence, are relevant to a question of what allowance is to be made by a respondent to a petitioner, upon non-compliance with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and such allegations are for the consideration of the learned judge. The registrar is not to reject evidence as to these allegations, but is to leave it, and them, for the learned judge, to whom his report is to be made, to consider and act upon, in his (the judge's) discretion. The court allowed evidence as to alleged misconduct by a petitioner to be given upon affidavit, reserving to the incriminated party leave to cross-examine the deponents thereon, if so desired. Swift v. Swift, 63 L. T. 262.

—— Right to give Evidence as to Conduct of Petitioner to Respondent during Cohabitation.]—On an application for a settlement or allowance by virtue of s. 3 of the Matrimonial Causes

Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), out of the estate of a husband or wife against whom a decree of restitution of conjugal rights has been pronounced in an undefended suit, it is competent for the party making such application to tender evidence as to the conduct of the other party during cohabitation. Swift v. Swift, 60 L. J., P. 14; [1891] P. 129: 63 L. T. 711.

The husband's power of earning money must also be taken into account. Ib.

—— Petition for Settlement—Costs.]—A wife having refused to comply with a decree obtained by her husband for restitution of conjugal rights, he presented a petition under s. 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), for a settlement of her property for the benefit of himself and the children of the marriage; it appeared that the whole of the wife's property had been settled on the occasion of the marriage to her separate use without power of anticipation. The court decided that there was no power to order a settlement of the property, which was subject to restraint on anticipation:—Held, that the petition for a settlement must be dismissed; but that under the circumstances the petitioner ought not to be ordered to pay the respondent's costs of the petition. Michell v. Michell, [1891] P. 305.

—— Restraint on Anticipation.]—The court has not power under s. 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), to order a settlement out of property settled to the separate use of a wife without power of anticipation. Michell v. Michell, 60 L. J., P. 46; [1891] P. 208; 64 L. T. 607; 39 W. R. 680—C. A. See col. 1075.

—— Restraining Removal of Property.]—The court, in the absence of authority, refused, upon an ex parte application, to restrain a respondent, who was in contempt, from removing property out of the country, the object of the application being to put pressure upon the respondent in respect of the decree which had been disobeyed, and which could not be enforced owing to the respondent being now outside the court's jurisdiction. Wallis v. Wallis, 65 L. T. 796.

f. Custody of Children.

Pending Suit.]—The court has no power to make an order as to the custody of children pending a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Chambers v. Chambers, 39 L. J., Mat. 56; 22 L. T. 727; 18 W. R. 528.

—— Service of Order — Disobedience.] — A husband obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, which was not complied with, and the court afterwards made an order giving the petitioner the custody of the only child of the marriage. A copy of the order for custody was left at the house where the respondent was residing, but the respondent had not given up the child to the petitioner. The court, being satisfied that the order as to the custody of the child had come to the knowledge of the respondent, ordered a writ of sequestration to issue against her for non-compliance with the order, without a previous writ of attachment, and ordered the respondent to pay the costs of the motion. Allen v. Allen, 54 L. J., P. 77; 10 P. D. 187; 33 W. R. 826. See also Hyde v. Hyde, 57 L. J., P. 89; 13 P. D. 166; 59 L. T. 529; 36 W. R. 708.

II. DIVORCE.

1. Jurisdiction and Duty of the Court.

Jurisdiction of English Court.] — Great caution ought to be observed in allowing a petition for divorce to proceed in the English divorce court where there is ground for supposing that the parties are domiciled out of the jurisdiction. Sinclair's Divorce Bill, [1897] A. C. 469—H. L. (Ir.)

Where Domicil of Parties English.]—When the domicil of the parties is English, the jurisdiction of the court is founded, though the marriage and adultery may have taken place abroad. Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe and Anderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 467; 29 L. J., Mat. 171; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 714; 7 W. R. 726.

Therefore where the parties to a suit for dissolution of marriage were British subjects, and had their legal domicil in England when the adultery was committed, and when the petition was presented; but the marriage and the adultery relied upon took place in the East Indies:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Ib.

A Scotchman married a Scotchwoman in Scotland, and cohabited with her in Scotland until he discovered her adultery. He thereupon, in 1866, broke up his home and removed to England; and in 1871 he instituted a suit in England for the dissolution of his marriage, on the ground of the adultery committed in Scotland previously to the separation. He swore in his examination that he had left Scotland with the intention of taking up his permanent abode in England. The court, believing his evidence, held that he had abandoned his domicil of origin and acquired an English domicil, and that it had jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Wilson v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Mat. 74; L. R. 2 P. 435; 27 L. T. 351; 20 W. R. 891.

The oath of the person whose domicil is in question as to his intention to change his domicil is not conclusive, but the question for the court is whether, upon a review of all the circumstances, it gives credit to his evidence. Ib.

The domicil of the husband will sustain the jurisdiction of the court over the wife, though married abroad, always after marriage resident abroad, and accused of adultery committed abroad. Gillis v. Gillis, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 597.

Domicil without residence is sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction of the court; and the jurisdiction of the court is not defeated by non-residence, except in cases where the non-residence affects the domicil. Ib.

Long residence abroad raises a presumption in favour of the acquisition of a new domicil, but such presumption may be rebutted by circumstances, showing that there was no intention of acquiring a new domicil. Ib.

Where the jurisdiction exercised is in accordance with the principles of international law, the decree ought to be respected by the tribunals of every civilised country; but where it is derived solely from some rule of the municipal law of the particular country, it cannot claim extra-territorial authority if it trenches upon the interests of any other country to whose tribunals the spouses are amenable. Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, 64 L. J., P. C. 97; [1895] A. C. 517; 72 L. T. 873; 11 R. 527.

There is no such thing as a matrimonial domicil. Ib.

Foreign Marriage — Husband resident in England.]—The court has jurisdiction to dissolve a marriage solemnised between foreigners in a foreign country, on the ground of the adultery of the wife committed abroad, if the husband, at the time when the adultery is committed, and at the time when the petition is presented, is bonâ fide and permanently resident in England; although, for the purpose of succession, he may not have acquired an English domicil. Brodie v. Brodie, 2 Sw. & Tr. 259; 30 L. J., Mat. 185; 4 L. T. 307; 9 W. R. 815.

—— But Residence must be bonâ fide.]—The court has not jurisdiction to entertain a suit for judicial separation when the petitioner is domiciled abroad, and is not bonâ fide resident in England. Manning v. Manning, 40 L. J., Mat. 18; L. R. 2 P. 223; 24 L. T. 196; 19 W. R. 479.

Mere residence in England at the time of the institution of a matrimonial suit is not sufficient to found the jurisdiction of the court. Ib.

The residence of the petitioner must be bonâ fide, and not casual or as a traveller. Ib.

A husband, whose domicil of origin was Irish, having presented a petition for judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the wife appeared under protest and pleaded to the jurisdiction, and although the husband made an affidavit, to the effect that he was permanently settled in England, and had no intention of returning to the place of his domicil of origin, the court came to the conclusion that he was not a bonâ fide resident in England, and therefore dismissed the petition. Ib.

Parties were married in Ireland in 1847. In October, 1872, the husband, who was a medical man, came over to England with the intention, as it was alleged, of purchasing a practice at Lowestoft, but he almost immediately returned to Ireland. The petition and citation were served upon him while lodging in London:—Held, that he had not acquired a residence in the country, and that the jurisdiction of the court did not attach. Burton v. Burton, 21 W. R. 648.

English Subjects — Change of Domicil of Husband.]—D., a natural-born English subject, married C., an Englishwoman, in England; he afterwards left her, acquired a domicil in the United States, and intermarried there with E. C. petitioned for a dissolution of marriage:—Held, first, that C. being a native-born Englishwoman, was entitled to present her petition. Deck v. Deck, 2 Sw. & Tr. 90; 29 L. J., Mat. 129; 2 L. T. 542; 8 W. R. 666.

Held, secondly, that D., being a natural-born English subject, could not shake off his liability to the authority of the laws of his native country, and the court pronounced for the jurisdiction and dissolved the marriage. Ib. But see Le Sueur v. Le Sueur, infra.

C., a natural-born Englishwoman, married B. in England, and lived with him partly in England and partly in Ireland; in the latter country they stayed on one occasion with B.'s father, on another at a house which B. himself was occupying. Cruelty was proved both in England and Ireland, and adultery in Ireland. The citation was served on B. in England, where he was then living; he did not appear:—Held, that C. was entitled to present her petition, and that it did not so distinctly appear that B.'s domicil was Irish as to oblige the court to consider whether its jurisdiction over a foreigner could be maintained, and it pronounced for the jurisdiction. Bond v. Bond, 2 Sw. & Tr. 93; 29 L. J., Mat. 143; 8 W. R. 630.

When a husband was domiciled in Ireland, and had only a temporary abode in England at the date of filing the petition, and the wife appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, the full court dissolved their marriage, which had been celebrated in Ireland, on the ground of adultery committed by the wife in England and on the Continent. Callwell v. Callwell and Kennedy, 3 Sw. & Tr. 259.

Domicil of Husband Foreign.] — A wife having been deserted by her husband, who went to reside in the United States of America, acquired a bonâ fide domicil in England, and instituted a suit for dissolution of marriage against him by reason of his adultery and desertion. The original place of domicil of marriage and of matrimonial cohabitation of the parties was in Jersey, and the adultery proved was committed there. The husband had never had or acquired a domicil in England:—Held, that even if the wife, without a sentence of judicial separation, could acquire a distinct domicil in this country, she could not make her husband amenable to the lex fori of her new domicil. Le Sueur v. Le Sueur, 45 L. J., P. 73; 1 P. D. 139; 34 L. T. 511; 24 W. R. 616.

The court has jurisdiction to grant a divorce against a foreigner. A marriage was solemnised at Gibraltar between a Frenchman and an Englishwoman. The husband resided for several years in England, but being a consul for France he retained his domicil of origin. The wife presented a petition for a divorce, alleging adultery committed in England, and desertion. The husband appeared under protest and prayed to be dismissed:—Held, by James and Cotton, L. JJ., Brett, L.J., dissenting, that the court had jurisdiction to grant a divorce. Niboyet v. Niboyet, 48 L. J., P. 1; 4 P. D. 1; 39 L. T. 486; 27 W. R. 203—C. A.

Declaration of Nullity of Marriage.]—The personal capacity of parties to enter into the contract of marriage depends upon their domicil; and where both parties had a foreign domicil, and by the law of their domicil their marriage was invalid by reason of consanguinity, a marriage which was contracted in England, and which would have been valid according to English law, was held invalid. Sottomayer (otherwise De Barros) v. De Barros, 47 L. J., P. 23; 3 P. D. 1; 37 L. T. 415; 26 W. R. 455—C. A.

Two natives of Portugal, one of whom was domiciled in England, the other in Portugal, contracted a marriage in England in 1866; they were first cousins, and were incapable, according to the law of Portugal, of intermarrying on account of consanguinity without a papal dispensation. The petitioner (the wife) filed a petition praying that her marriage with the respondent might be declared null and void:—Held, that the lex loci contractûs should prevail in the matter; and the marriage being valid, according to the law of England, the court dismissed the petition. Sottomayer (otherwise De Barros) v. De Barros (the queen's proctor intervening), 49 L. J., P. 1; 5 P. D. 94; 41 L. T. 281; 27 W. R. 917.

The court has jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of a marriage in England between foreigners domiciled abroad at the time of the marriage. Simonin, f. c. Mallac v. Mallac, 2 Sw. & Tr. 67; 29 L. J., Mat. 97; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 561; 2 L. T. 327.

A. and B., domiciled French subjects, of the respective ages of twenty-two and twenty-nine, were married by license in England in June, 1854. On the following day they returned to Paris. The marriage was never consummated. In December, 1854, a decree was made by the Civil Tribunal of the First Instance for the Department of the Seine, annulling this marriage, by reason that it had been celebrated without the publications prescribed by the French law, and without the parties having sought or obtained the consent of their parents; and more especially, that the parties, in coming to England, had a formal intention to evade the laws of France. In 1857 A. came to reside permanently in England, and in 1859 petitioned the court to annul the same marriage with B. B. was personally served at Naples with a copy of the citation and of the petition, and did not appear:—Held, that as there is nothing contrary to natural justice in calling upon a respondent to have the validity or invalidity of a supposed contract ascertained and determined by the tribinal of the country where it was entered into, the court of divorce is competent to entertain such a suit. Ib.

Stipulation for an English Residence by Wife.]—An English lady consented to marry the eldest son and heir of a Neapolitan nobleman, on condition of their always having, after marriage, a residence in England, and of their residing there six months at least in each year. The marriage was celebrated in August, 1854, in England. There were five English trustees of the marriage settlements, which contained a proviso that they should be construed according to the law of England. A few months after the marriage a London residence was taken and furnished by the parties, which they occupied for six months in each year, with two or three exceptions, from 1855 to 1872, living for the remainder of the year in apartments in the palace of the husband's father, at Naples, or at other places on the Continent. In 1872, the lady separated from her husband in consequence of his cruelty and adultery, and she continued up to the hearing to reside in their London residence. In 1873 the husband's father died, when he succeeded to his title and estates and palace at Naples, and since then he had resided sometimes at Naples, but principally at other places on the Continent. The petition and citation were served on the husband at Paris, and he had entered no appearance:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Santo Teodoro v. Santo Teodoro, 49 L. J., P. 20; 5 P. D. 79; 42 L. T. 331.

Colonial Domicil treated as Foreign.]—For the purposes of the jurisdiction of the divorce court, the British Colonies, as well as Scotland and Ireland, are deemed to be foreign countries. Firebrace v. Firebrace, 47 L. J., P. 41; 4 P. D. 63; 39 L. T. 94; 26 W. R. 617.

Although a wife's remedy for matrimonial wrongs must usually be sought in the place where her husband is domiciled, it is not inconsistent with this principle that she may be in some cases allowed to obtain relief against her husband in the place where she is resident though not domiciled. Where a husband who had refused to receive his wife into his home while he was resident in England, left England before the institution by her of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the court held it had no jurisdiction. Ib.

Admitting Jurisdiction.]—As to, see col. 871. See also INTERNATIONAL LAW and PROCEEDINGS FOR DIVORCE, col. 860.

Right of Public to hear Cause.]—The judge ordinary has no power, even with the consent of the parties, to exclude the public from court during the hearing of a cause. Barnett v. Barnett, 29 L. J., Mat. 28. S. P., H. f. c. C. v. C., 1 Sw. & Tr. 605; 29 L. J., Mat. 29; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 348; 1 L. T. 489. And see TRIAL, cols. 929, 935.

Hearing Causes in Camerâ.]—Under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 22, the court may hear a suit in camerâ, if brought for nullity of marriage or judicial separation, but there is no authority given to the court by the statute to hear a petition for dissolution of marriage except in open court. C. v. C., 38 L. J., Mat. 37; L. R. 1 P. 640; 20 L. T. 280. And see Anstey v. Anstey, col. 691.

Compromise of Suits.]—So long as a suit remains on the court book, the court cannot consider as binding any agreement to compromise, made by counsel of parties, to a matrimonial suit, but is bound to hear such suit, if either party desires it, after such agreement made. Hayward v. Hayward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 333. And see col. 926.

Counter-charges.]—The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 29, imposes on the court the obligation to inquire into any counter-charge made against any person petitioning for a divorce. Lautour v. Queen's Proctor, 10 H. L. Cas. 685; 33 L. J., Mat. 89; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 325; 10 L. T. 198; 12 W. R. 611.

Adultery alleged to have been committed by a petitioner at any time during the marriage, in which term is included the period between a decree for a divorce à mensâ et thoro and the actual dissolution of the marriage, is a counter-charge into which the court is bound to inquire. Ib. And see col. 884.

Variation of Settlements.]—In proceedings for a judicial separation only, the court has no power to alter settlements. Gandy v. Gandy, 51 L. J., P. 41; 7 P. D. 168; 46 L. T. 607; 30 W. R. 673—C. A. See col. 806.

Jurisdiction of Justices.]—A husband having been convicted of an aggravated assault upon his wife, the justices, under the 41 Vict. c. 19, s. 4, made an order reciting that the wife's safety was in peril, and directing that she should be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband, that the husband should pay to the wife a weekly allowance of 3*l.*, and that the wife should have the legal custody of the only child of the marriage:—Held, that although the act gave the justices no jurisdiction to make an order as to the permanent legal custody of the child, the order was valid until the child should have attained the age of ten years. Grove v. Grove, 39 L. T. 546; 27 W. R. 324. And see col. 816.

2. GROUNDS FOR DISSOLUTION OF MARRIAGE.

The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85) is the principal act governing divorce, i.e. dissolution of marriage and judicial separation. Section 27 enables any husband to petition the court for a dissolution on the ground of his wife's adultery, and any wife on the ground of her husband's incestuous adultery, or bigamy with adultery, or rape, &c., or of adultery coupled with such cruelty as without adultery would have entitled her to a divorce à mensâ et thoro, or of adultery coupled with desertion without reasonable excuse for two years or upwards.

a. Adultery of Wife.

Well-Conducted Wife—Court unwilling to presume Against.]—Where a wife has conducted herself during a married life of twenty years with propriety, the court will not conclude that she has been guilty of adultery, charged to have been committed without the slightest regard for decency or fear of detection, unless established by cogent evidence. Alexander v. Alexander and Amos, 2 Sw. & Tr. 95; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 56; 8 W. R. 452.

Existence of Criminal Intention.]—Shortly after marriage the wife renewed her acquaintance with a young man to whom she had been attached, and carried on a clandestine correspondence with him. During the absence of her husband he visited her at her lodgings during the day, and once during the night, when undue familiarities passed between them; they also walked and rode out together:—Held, that, as the criminal intention existed, and, as shown by evidence, ample opportunities had offered, it must be assumed that adultery had been committed. Davidson v. Davidson, 1 Deane, Ecc. Rep. 132; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 547; 4 W. R. 590.

Wife left without Provision.] — A husband lived separately from his wife for many years, without making any provision for her maintenance from his means, which were sufficient:—Held, not to be entitled to a divorce though the adultery of the wife was clearly proved. Simmon's Divorce Bill, 12 Cl. & F. 339.

Evidence must be Clear.]—A charge of adultery not sustained by the evidence. Winscom v. Winscom and Plowden, 3 Sw. & Tr. 380; 33 L. J., Mat. 45; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 321; 10 L. T. 100; 12 W. R. 535.

No Cohabitation.]—In a suit for dissolution, though the parties had gone through a ceremony of marriage in the district registry ten years before the adultery of the wife, there had been no cohabitation. The court, on being satisfied that the husband had done all in his power to induce his wife to cohabit with him, granted a decree nisi. Waters v. Waters and Gentel, 33 L. T. 579.

It is doubtful whether a husband who has been guilty of cruelty and desertion can obtain a judicial separation on the ground of his wife's adultery. Lempriere v. Lempriere and Roebel, 37 L. J., Mat. 78; L. R. 1 P. 569; 19 L. T. 50; 16 W. R. 1192.

Wife addicted to Drink—Counter-charge—Degree of Cruelty necessary to bar Husband's right to Relief.]—Upon a husband's petition for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, where the adultery is fully established against her, but where she counter-charges cruelty as having been committed by her husband towards her, and where it appears that the wife is a woman of drunken habits, and that what she alleges as violence has been used upon her in consequence of her drunkenness; the court requires a very strong case to be made out against the husband in order to bar his right to relief from the marriage tie. Unless it is proved that he has been guilty of such gross violence towards her as the court cannot allow to be excused on the ground that he was provoked to it by her intemperance, the decree in his favour should not be withheld. Forsyth v. Forsyth, 63 L. T. 263.

Adultery of Wife—Former Decree of Judicial Separation at suit of Wife.]—The wife obtained in March, 1887, a decree for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, and was given the custody of her only child. On the 4th May, 1888, the husband was ordered to pay permanent alimony at the rate of 80*l.* a year from the date of the decree. This he did not pay, though he had the means. On the 17th September, 1888, a deed was executed by the husband and wife, by which the latter relinquished the custody of the child and all her right to alimony, in consideration of a lump sum of 75*l.* then paid to her by her husband. Some little time after that deed was signed the husband became aware that his wife was committing adultery with the co-respondent, with whom she went to live. The husband then filed his petition, asking for the dissolution of his marriage:—Held, that, as the cruelty on the part of the husband was not of such a nature as would induce the court to withhold a decree, and as the deed of release was executed by the wife with her eyes open, the husband should not be refused the relief prayed, and that a decree nisi should accordingly be pronounced in his favour. Badham v. Badham, 62 L. T. 663.

Marriage before Decree Absolute in former Suit by Petitioner—No Intervention by Queen's Proctor—Decree Absolute—Further Ceremony of Marriage with Second Wife—Adultery—Relief not Barred.]—In 1878 the husband obtained a decree nisi against his first wife. Before decree absolute he married the present respondent. The queen's proctor not opposing, the decree was afterwards made absolute. The petitioner and respondent subsequently went through a fresh ceremony of marriage:—Held, upon a petition by the husband, that he was entitled to have this marriage dissolved by reason of his wife's adultery, and that his claim to relief was not barred by reason of his adultery committed prior to the final dissolution of the first marriage. Styles v. Styles, 62 L. T. 613.

As to practice on petition alleging adultery, see col. 862.

b. Adultery of Husband coupled with Cruelty or Desertion.

Bigamy with Adultery of Husband.]—Quære, whether a husband's bigamy condoned by the wife would be revived by his subsequent marital misconduct, so as to found a sentence of dissolution of marriage. Furness v. Furness, 2 Sw. & Tr. 63; 29 L. J., Mat. 133; 2 L. T. 439.

In a suit for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of bigamy with adultery, there should be proof of adultery and bigamy with the same woman. Proof of a bigamous marriage with one woman and of adultery with another is not sufficient. Horne v. Horne, 2 Sw. & Tr. 48; 27 L. J., P. 50.

A., being only sixteen years of age, was privately married to B., aged thirty-six, without the consent of her family. On its being discovered that B. was an unsuitable husband for her, A. was removed to the continent, and never saw him again. He made no attempts to procure cohabitation with her, and subsequently contracted a bigamous marriage:—Held, that there had been a reasonable excuse for the separation, and the marriage dissolved on the ground of B.'s bigamy and adultery. Du Terreaux v. Du Terreaux, 1 Sw. & Tr. 555; 28 L. J., Mat. 95.

—— Abroad.]—Two natural-born English subjects were married in England. The husband afterwards went to America, became domiciled there, and there committed bigamy and adultery; the wife petitioned for a dissolution of marriage. The citation and a copy of the petition were personally served on the husband in America, but he did not appear:—Held, that notwithstanding the husband's change of domicil, the court had jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Deck v. Deck, 2 Sw. & Tr. 90; 29 L. J., Mat. 129; 2 L. T. 543; 8 W. R. 666.

To establish bigamy as a ground for the sentence of the court, there must be proof of such a ceremony as, but for the former marriage, would constitute a valid marriage. If the bigamy relied upon took place abroad or in a colony, it will be necessary to give formal proof of the marriage law of that country or colony. Burt v. Burt, 2 Sw. & Tr. 88; 29 L. J., Mat. 133; 2 L. T. 439; 8 W. R. 552.

Condonation of Cruelty.]—To a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, coupled with cruelty, condonation of the cruelty is no bar. Dempster v. Dempster, 2 Sw. & Tr. 438; 31 L. J., Mat. 20; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 44; 5 L. T. 433.

Where it is necessary for a petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage by reason of cruelty and adultery to establish two points, in order to obtain the prayer of the petition, the court will not, even if dissatisfied with the verdict of the jury on one point, send that down for a new trial, because if a different verdict was found on that point, it would not be sufficient to ground the relief prayed. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 10 L. T. 510.

Adultery subsequent to Separation.]—A wife obtained a decree of judicial separation on the ground of the husband's cruelty, and continued to live separate from him, and he subsequently committed adultery, and upon proof of such adultery, and of the decree for judicial separation, the court made a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage. Bland v. Bland, 35 L. J., Mat. 104; L. R. 1 P. 237; 15 W. R. 9.

After a decree of divorce a mensâ et thoro against a husband for cruelty, the wife sued for dissolution of the marriage, on the ground of adultery committed by him while separate:—Held, that she was entitled to a decree of divorce a vinculo matrimonii. Ritchie v. Ritchie, 4 Macq. H. L. 162.

A wife, who has obtained a decree of judicial separation by reason of her husband's adultery, may afterwards institute a suit to dissolve the marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery committed subsequently to the decree for judicial separation, coupled with his cruelty to her during the cohabitation. Green v. Green, 43 L. J., Mat. 6; L. R. 3 P. 121; 29 L. T. 251; 21 W. R. 824.

Virginity of Wife—Adultery of Husband.]—A. and B. were married in 1845, and lived together till 1853. In a suit brought by A. against B. for adultery, B. pleaded her virginity and recriminated. A. admitted he had not consummated the marriage, and the medical evidence proved the virginity:—Held, that B. was not guilty of adultery, and entitled to a separation on the ground of his adultery, which was proved. Hunt v. Hunt, 4 W. R. 356.

Cruelty — Want of Self-control.] — A wife charged her husband with adultery and cruelty. The cruelty consisted chiefly in acts not of great violence, but showing a want of self-control on the part of the husband when intoxicated, and of indignity:—Held, sufficient, coupled with adultery, to authorise the court to dissolve the marriage. Waddell v. Waddell, 2 Sw. & Tr. 584; 31 L. J., Mat. 123; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 623; 6 L. T. 552.

Adultery of Husband coupled with Desertion—Orders to contribute to Wife's Support.]—A husband deserted his wife, and cohabited with another woman. On two occasions he was taken before magistrates, and compelled to contribute to her support:—Held, that, nevertheless, she was entitled to a dissolution of her marriage by reason of her husband's adultery, coupled with his desertion. Oliver v. Oliver, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 606.

Desertion—Must be against Will of Wife.]—In a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and desertion by her husband, it appeared that the parties were married in 1848, and that shortly afterwards the husband became drunken and dissipated, and on many occasions ill-treated her. In 1852 he sold off part of their furniture to buy drink, told his wife that she might go on the streets for a living, and then left her, telling her that he was going to leave B., where they resided, and that she would never see him again. He then left B., and was absent some years. The wife stayed in the house a fortnight after her husband had left her, and then removed, and took up her abode with her sister, who lived in B., with whom she afterwards resided by maintaining herself, without ever receiving any assistance from her husband. She made no inquiries after him until 1858, when, having discovered that he was living with another woman at B., application was made to him on her behalf to do something towards her support. He refused. It did not appear that the husband knew where his wife resided after he left her. The court refused to decree a dissolution of marriage, holding that desertion was not proved, as there was no evidence that when the parties separated the husband went away against the will of the wife, but, on the contrary, it appeared highly probable that they parted by mutual consent. Smith v. Smith, 1 Sw. & Tr. 359; 28 L. J., Mat. 27; 7 W. R. 382.

—— No Attempt to see Wife.]—In 1856 a husband having obtained an appointment in the Commissariat, left England and his wife for China. During his absence he frequently wrote to her in affectionate terms, expressed regret for past misconduct, and promised amendment, but in no one letter did he suggest a desire to return to cohabitation, and in some he stated an intention never to visit England again. Each letter contained a demand for pecuniary assistance. To another person he stated that he had accepted the appointment in China because he was miserable at home. In 1859 he returned to England, continued to press his wife for money, but gave no address, and made no attempt to see her or her friends. Adultery was proved:—Held, that the wife was entitled to a dissolution of her marriage by reason of the adultery, coupled with desertion, of her husband. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 2 Sw. & Tr. 575; 31 L. J., Mat. 145; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 972; 6 L. T. 550.

—— Imprisonment of Husband.]—A., on the 4th of October, 1854, deserted his wife without reasonable excuse, and never returned to her again. On the 16th of November, 1856, he was arrested on a charge of felony, and was subsequently convicted and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. Between the 4th of October, 1854, and the 16th of November, 1856, he was twice imprisoned for debt; on the first occasion for seven, on the second for nineteen days. These facts having been proved in a suit by the wife, commenced before the expiration of the term of penal servitude, for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and desertion:—Held, that the husband had been guilty of desertion for two years and upwards. Astrope v. Astrope, 29 L. J., Mat. 27.

—— Condition Imposed by Wife as to Renewal of Cohabitation.]—A husband in 1851 left his wife, and never afterwards lived with her or contributed to her support. He visited her occasionally, and at an interview in 1854 the wife offered to renew cohabitation, provided he would give up gambling and drinking. He refused to do so, and only twice went to her again, on one occasion asking her to sign a paper, undertaking not to trouble him any more. Prior to the wife's conditional offer to renew cohabitation, he had formed an adulterous connection with another woman, with whom he continued to live, refusing in 1858 to leave her, and stating that he had washed his hands of his wife, and would have no more to do with her:—Held, that though the wife had annexed a condition to a renewal of cohabitation, the refusal of the husband to abandon his bad habits, when viewed in connection with the other facts of the case, amounted to desertion from that time. Gibson v. Gibson, 29 L. J., Mat. 25.

Desertion by Wife.]—Judicial separation decreed by reason of the wife's desertion of her husband for two years and upwards without reasonable cause. Millar v. Millar, 8 P. D. 187; 32 W. R. 95.

Desertion completed after Commencement of Suit—Amendment of Petition.]—Where an undefended suit (in which no appearance had been entered on behalf of the respondent) for dissolution on the ground of the respondent's adultery and cruelty, was part heard, and the court was satisfied with the evidence adduced on behalf of the petitioner in confirmation of the charge of adultery alleged against the respondent, but adjourned the case for the production of further evidence as to the alleged charges of cruelty: the court granted leave to amend the petition by adding the charge of desertion; the requisite two years, though complete at the time of the making of the application, not having been completed until subsequent to the filing of the petition in the suit. Kettlewell v. Kettlewell, 41 L. T. 737. See col. 750.

Wife's Petition withdrawn at Hearing—Fresh Petition Filed after Delay.]—The respondent eloped with a Miss S. on the 2nd January, 1877, leaving his wife destitute. On the 16th of April, 1877, she filed a petition for divorce on the ground of his adultery and cruelty, but withdrew the petition at the hearing on the 22nd of November, 1877, it being doubtful on the evidence whether the charge of cruelty could be sustained. On the 12th of February, 1880, she filed a fresh petition praying for a decree on the ground of the respondent's adultery and desertion. The respondent had never contributed towards her support since he left her in 1877, and he was still living with Miss S. when the copy petition and citation were served on him on the 25th of February, 1880:—Held, that the petition was well presented, and that the petitioner was entitled to a decree on the ground of the respondent's adultery and desertion. Knapp v. Knapp, 49 L. J., P. 69; 6 P. D. 10; 43 L. T. 384; 29 W. R. 80.

Cruelty, and not Adultery, Proved.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of cruelty and adultery, if one of the charges only is established, the petitioner is entitled to a decree of judicial separation without the consent of the respondent. Bromfield v. Bromfield, 41 L. J., Mat. 17; 26 L. T. 264.

In a suit for dissolution by a wife on the ground of her husband's adultery and cruelty, the husband's cruelty only was established, and the court granted the wife a decree of judicial separation, notwithstanding that she had been proved guilty of adultery. The husband subsequently sought for a reversal of the decree on the ground that the wife's adultery barred her right to relief. The court, on a review of the circumstances, rescinded the decree and dismissed the petition, but intimated an opinion that adultery on the part of a wife does not necessarily bar her right to relief in the case of her husband's cruelty. Grossi v. Grossi, 42 L. J., Mat. 69; L. R. 3 P. 118; 28 L. T. 371; 21 W. R. 551.

The court refused to grant a decree of judicial separation on the ground of the husband's cruelty where the wife had committed adultery, being of opinion that she did not require the protection of the court. Ib.

As to alleging adultery in petition. See col. 862.

3. What constitutes Cruelty.

a. In Husband.

Bodily Injury or Reasonable Apprehension thereof.]—Bodily injury, reasonable apprehension thereof, or injury to health, are the general tests of legal cruelty. Tomkins v. Tomkins, 1 Sw. & Tr. 168.

When a question of cruelty comes before a jury as a ground for judicial separation, the jury is to determine, not only whether the acts complained of were done, but whether they constitute legal cruelty. Ib.

To entitle a person to a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the acts relied on must be of such a nature as to show that further cohabitation is unsafe; there must be proof of ill-treatment and bodily injury, or of a reasonable apprehension of such bodily injury. Curtis v. Curtis, 1 Sw. & Tr. 192; 27 L. J., Mat. 73. Affirmed, 28 L. J., Mat. 55.

Whatever may be the cause or motive of a husband's misconduct, the wife is entitled to the protection of the court, if cohabitation is rendered unsafe, unless she is herself greatly to blame. Ib.

A decree of judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, will not be granted, unless the court is satisfied that further cohabitation is unsafe. Smallwood v. Smallwood, 2 Sw. & Tr. 397; 31 L. J., Mat. 3; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 63; 5 L. T. 324; 10 W. R. 65.

Where the evidence showed that a wife had reasonable ground for apprehending personal violence if she returned to live with her husband:—Held, that she was warranted in presenting her suit, though one object might have been that she might have access to her children. Cooke v. Cooke, 3 Sw. & Tr. 126; 32 L. J., Mat. 154; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 754; 8 L. T. 644; 11 W. R. 957.

Continual quarrels between husband and wife, caused by his acts of adultery, and leading to violence of demeanour, and occasional acts of violence on his part, including mental and bodily suffering in the wife, amount to cruelty. Knight v. Knight, 4 Sw. & Tr. 103; 34 L. J., Mat. 112; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 568; 11 L. T. 252.

A wife is not entitled to a decree for a divorce a mensâ et thoro on the ground of cruelty of her husband, unless it is proved by reliable evidence that he has treated her with violence, physical or moral, dangerous to her life or health, so that cohabitation is for her unsafe; and further, that her troubles are not owing to misconduct of her own. M'Keever v. M'Keever, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 26.

If force, whether physical or moral, is systematically exerted by a husband to compel the submission of his wife, in such a manner, to such a degree, and during such a length of time, as to break down her health and render a serious malady imminent, it is legal cruelty, and she will be entitled to a judicial separation. Kelly v. Kelly, 39 L. J., Mat. 28; L. R. 2 P. 59; 22 L. T. 308; 18 W. R. 767.

Cruelty is in its character a cumulative charge. It must be sustained and evince a continued want of self-control, and it must be referable to permanent causes so as to endanger the future safety of the wife's person or health. Where the charges were confined to three days alone of a cohabitation of three years, the court held that the legal offence of cruelty had not been committed. Plowden v. Plowden, 23 L. T. 266; 18 W. R. 902.

The essential feature of cruelty (such as, when coupled with adultery, will entitle a wife to a divorce) is, that there must be actual violence of such a character as to endanger personal health or safety, or there must be a reasonable apprehension of it. Milford v. Milford, 37 L. J., Mat. 77—H. L. Affirming, L. R. 1 P. 295; 36 L. J., Mat. 30; 15 L. T. 392; 15 W. R. 319.

Single Acts of Violence.]—A single act of personal violence by a husband towards his wife, not producing any considerable injury to the person and not repeated, is not, although unwarrantable, sufficient to found a decree of judicial separation. Smallwood v. Smallwood, 2 Sw. & Tr. 397; 31 L. J., Mat. 3; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 63; 5 L. T. 324; 10 W. R. 65.

But where one act of violence is of such a character as to found a reasonable apprehension of further violence in case of cohabitation, the wife is entitled to the protection of the court. Reeves v. Reeves, 3 Sw. & Tr. 139; 32 L. J., Mat. 178; 8 L. T. 174; 10 W. R. 111.

When the evidence of actual violence used by a husband towards the wife is not sufficient of itself to warrant a decree on the ground of cruelty, the court will take into consideration his general conduct towards her, and if this is of a character tending to degrade the wife, and subjecting her to a course of annoyance and indignity injurious to her health, will feel itself at liberty to pronounce the cruelty proved. Swatman v. Swatman, 4 Sw. & Tr. 135.

Where a husband threatened to cut his wife's throat, but did not accompany the threat with any act of violence, and subsequently, after cohabitation had ceased, broke into the house in which his wife was living, and kicked through her bedroom door:—Held, that these acts did not amount to legal cruelty. Brown v. Brown, 14 W. R. 318.

Acts of Violence under Cerebral Excitement.]—Acts of violence committed under the influence of an acute disorder, such as brain fever, where, the disorder having been subdued, there is no danger of their recurrence, would not be a ground for a decree of judicial separation. Aliter, if the result of such disease is a new condition of the brain, rendering the person liable to ungovernable fits of passion, which would make further cohabitation dangerous. Curtis v. Curtis, 1 Sw. & Tr. 192; 27 L. J., Mat. 73.

A husband for many years led a life of gross intemperance, and on various occasions, apparently whilst suffering from delirium tremens, treated his wife with cruelty:—Held, that as she could not return to cohabitation without incurring great peril of a renewal of the bodily injuries before inflicted on her, she was entitled to a decree of judicial separation. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Sw. & Tr. 312; 28 L. J., Mat. 13; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 46; 7 W. R. 129.

When acts of violence towards a wife were proved, and at times a state of cerebral excitement arising from the fatigues and anxieties of business connected with some of the acts of violence:—Held, that renewed cohabitation would be attended with such a liability to the recurrence of ungovernable passion and cerebral excitement as would make cohabitation unsafe to the wife, and that she was, therefore, entitled to a decree of judicial separation. Martin v. Martin, 29 L. J., Mat. 106; 8 W. R. 367.

—— By Insane Person.]—But cruelty committed by an insane person is no ground for a judicial separation. Hall v. Hall, 3 Sw. & Tr. 347; 33 L. J., Mat. 65; 9 L. T. 810.

Habitual Drunkenness.]—Drunkenness, even when accompanied by acts of considerable violence, is not a substantial ground for a decree of judicial separation. Scott v. Scott, 29 L. J., Mat. 64.

The court will not grant a decree of judicial separation to protect a wife from mere unhappiness resulting from an ill-assorted marriage, nor from the destruction of domestic comfort caused by drunkenness. Hudson v. Hudson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 314; 12 W. R. 354.

But a woman by knowingly marrying a drunkard does not take all risks from his drunken habits. Walker v. Walker, 77 L. T. 715.

On the question of cruelty, the court will not consider the liability of danger which a wife would incur by returning to cohabitation with a husband subject to uncontrollable fits of drunkenness, such husband having used a certain amount of violence to the wife while under the influence of drink; and particular acts of violence will be viewed in connection with the cumulative misconduct of the married life. Power v. Power, 4 Sw. & Tr. 173; 34 L. J., Mat. 137; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 800; 12 L. T. 824; 13 W. R. 1113.

Where a husband prayed for restitution of conjugal rights, and it was proved that he had been an habitual drunkard, but for the last eighteen or twenty months had not given way to intemperance, the court, upon hearing the evidence of cruelty given by the respondent, was not satisfied that she had proved legal cruelty, or that it would be unsafe for her to return to cohabitation, and decreed restitution of conjugal rights. Ruxton v. Ruxton, 5 L. R., Ir. 19.

Neglect and Insult.]—No general rule can be laid down as to what amount of mere insults or offensive conduct on the part of a husband towards a wife—in the absence of acts of physical violence—will amount to cruelty, so as to entitle a wife to a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty. Beauclerk v. Beauclerk, 60 L. J., P. 20; [1891] P. 189; 64 L. T. 35—C. A.

Neglect, coldness and insult, whereby the petitioner's health was injured and entirely gave way, and a continuance of which would, according to the medical evidence, have produced melancholia:—Held, to constitute legal cruelty. Walmesley v. Walmesley, 1 R. 529; 69 L. T. 152.

Degrading Treatment—Isolated Acts of Physical Violence condoned Years before—Deed of Separation not a Bar.]—Upon a petition by the wife for dissolution of her marriage on the grounds of cruelty and adultery, where the only acts of physical violence had long since been condoned:—Held, that wilfully depriving the wife of her proper position in the household, neglecting her, degrading her to the level of a servant, and compelling her to do the menial work of the house and to take her meals and to sleep apart from the rest of the household, was, in itself, cruelty which would entitle the wife to relief; and, although the wife had lived apart from her husband under a deed of separation, when coupled with adultery on the part of the husband, entitled the wife to have her marriage dissolved. Aubourg v. Aubourg, 72 L. T. 295. And see Waddell v. Waddell, col. 738.

Expressions of Hatred and Loathing.]—The husband, from the time of the marriage, repeatedly refused to occupy the same room with his wife, saying that he loathed being with her and hated the sight of her; he told her that her presence made his life a hell. On one occasion when the wife went into his room to speak to him he pushed her roughly away and she fell, but was not hurt. This was the sole act of physical violence deposed to. The health of the wife became very seriously impaired, and two doctors whom she consulted gave it as their opinion that the husband's conduct was accountable for this, and that, if persisted in, her life might even be endangered. During the prolonged absence of the husband on one occasion the wife's health materially improved. The wife was fond of her husband, and bore with his conduct in the hope of ultimately winning his affections. It was found eventually that the husband was carrying on an adulterous intercourse with another woman, the funds for which intrigue were derived from money brought into settlement by the wife. Upon a petition presented by the wife for a dissolution of the marriage on the grounds of cruelty and adultery:—Held, that the petitioner was entitled to a decree nisi for divorce. Kelly v. Kelly (L. R. 2 P. 59) followed. Bethune v. Bethune, 60 L. J., P. 18; [1891] P. 205; 63 L. T. 259.

Indifference, neglect, aversion to a wife's society, and cessation of matrimonial intercourse, without personal violence or words of menace, though the husband may be carrying on an adulterous intercourse with a servant in the same house in which he is living with his wife, do not amount to legal cruelty. Cousen v. Cousen, 4 Sw. & Tr. 164; 34 L. J., Mat. 139; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 656; 12 L. T. 712.

Neglect, silence, shunning the wife's company, and declarations by the husband that he will never cohabit with her, do not constitute that cruelty and maltreatment in respect of which the law would grant to the wife a divorce a mensâ et thoro. Paterson v. Paterson, 3 H. L. Cas. 308.

Actual personal violence, or the immediate menace of it, is not the only ground of maltreatment in respect of which such a divorce will be granted. Ib.

Undue Attention to Servant causing Wife's Jealousy.]—On a wife's petition for judicial separation by reason of her husband's cruelty towards her, certain acts of violence on his part being admitted, which took place in disputes between the parties arising, at least in part, out of the wife's jealousy of a maidservant, the court took into consideration the position in which the wife was placed in the family by reason of any authority or control exercised over her by the servants by the direction of the husband, and the state of the wife's feelings arising from reasonable suspicions of undue familiarity between the husband and a maidservant. Anthony v. Anthony, 1 Sw. & Tr. 594.

Spitting in Wife's Face.]—Spitting in a wife's face, accompanied with pushing, and dragging her about a room, and the admission by the husband that he had once slapped her face, is sufficient for a divorce by reason of cruelty. Saunders v. Saunders, 1 Rob. Ecc. Rep. 549.

Spitting in a wife's face, combined with other acts of violence, constitutes cruelty. A test of injuries, such as spitting in the face, is the sense in which they are received. If not resented at the time, less weight will be attached to the charge when brought forward. Waddell v. Waddell, 2 Sw. & Tr. 584; 31 L. J., Mat. 123; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 623; 6 L. T. 552.

Causing Insult to Wife.]—When a husband assaults his wife in the street in such a manner as to induce a passer-by to believe her to be and to treat her as a prostitute, although he has inflicted no personal injury upon her, yet he is guilty of cruelty. Milner v. Milner, 4 Sw. & Tr. 240; 31 L. J., P. 159.

Constructive Cruelty.]—It is an essential element of constructive cruelty to children that the acts should be done in the presence, and so directly shock the sensibility, of the injured parent. Manning v. Manning, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 417; 7 id. 520.

Acts of cruelty towards children committed in the presence of the mother may amount to cruelty to her. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 489; 28 L. J., Mat. 46; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 127.

A husband constantly abused and swore at his wife, and refused to provide delicacies ordered by her doctor. He also used threats towards her, and on several occasions wantonly beat her child in her presence:—Held, that such conduct did not constitute legal cruelty, it not appearing that the wife had suffered in health in consequence of it, or been apprehensive for her personal safety. Birch v. Birch, 42 L. J., Mat. 23; 28 L. T. 40; 21 W. R. 463.

Semble, that the wanton ill-treatment of a child in the mother's presence and for the purpose of giving her pain, would, if carried to such an extent as to affect the mother's health, constitute legal cruelty. Ib.

—— Maltese Law.]—By the law of Malta grievous wrongs (ingiurie gravi) are grounds for judicial separation, though they may not amount to cruelty such as would entitle to separation by English law, being moral wrongs and not physical injuries. Sant v. Sant, 43 L. J., P. C. 73; L. R. 5 P. C. 370; 30 L. T. 415; 22 W. R. 713.

Semble, that cruelty to children comes under the head of "ingiurie gravi." Ib.

Communication of Disease.]—In support of a charge of cruelty, evidence was given that the wife was infected with disease, and that she had not been unchaste before marriage or unfaithful after it; but there was no evidence, beyond the presumption arising from the state of the wife, that the husband had ever suffered from the disease. The husband positively denied that he ever was diseased. The jury found that the husband was guilty of cruelty:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Morphett v. Morphett, 38 L. J., Mat. 23; L. R. 1 P. 702; 19 L. T. 801; 17 W. R. 471.

To a husband's petition for restitution of conjugal rights the wife pleaded cruelty, viz. the wilful communication of an infectious disease. The husband denied the charge, and on examination by medical men no trace of disease could be found upon him:—Held, first, that it devolved upon the wife to establish affirmatively that her husband having the disease himself, knew, either from medical advice or from the obvious character of the symptoms, that he had a disease, that it was an infectious disease, and that it existed in such a stage and form that connection with his wife was at least distinctly dangerous. Ib.

Held, secondly, that in the absence of actual proof of the existence of disease in him, it was incumbent on the wife, in the medical evidence adduced in support of her charge, to lay the foundation for a scientific conclusion which should take the place of such proof, and from which the jury could argue with reason, first, to the charge of knowledge, and through that to the charge of wilfulness. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the verdict of the jury having, in absence of such actual or scientific proof, been for the wife, the husband was entitled to a new trial, the wife's costs in the previous trial being first paid by him. Ib.

Weight given by the court to a wife's evidence of unnatural connection had or attempted to be had with her by the husband, and to evidence tending to prove the existence of gonorrhœa, and of its wilful communication by husband to wife. N. v. N., 3 Sw. & Tr. 234; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1203; 9 L. T. 265.

But in an undefended suit the court refused to admit evidence that the respondent had infected the petitioner with the venereal disease, there being no allegation in the petition that cruelty of that nature had been committed, although there was a general charge of cruelty. Squires v. Squires, 3 Sw. & Tr. 541; 33 L. J., Mat. 172; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 756; 12 W. R. 1028.

A husband's state of health must be within his own knowledge; therefore, if he is charged with having communicated to his wife a loathsome disease, and being a competent witness, does not come forward to assert his ignorance, the court will hold the charge of wilful infection established. Brown v. Brown, 35 L. J., Mat. 13; L. R. 1 P. 46; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1027; 13 L. T. 645; 14 W. R. 149.

If a husband, knowing that he is in such a state of health that by having connection with his wife he will run the risk of communicating the venereal disease to her, recklessly has connection with her, and thereby communicates the disease to her, he is guilty of cruelty. Boardman v. Boardman, L. R. 1 P. 233; 14 W. R. 1024.

Unnatural Practices.]—A wife's evidence of unnatural connection had, or attempted to be had, with her by the husband, is not sufficient to establish such a charge. N. v. N., 3 Sw. & Tr. 234; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1203; 9 L. T. 265.

b. In Wife.

Personal Violence.]—A husband will be entitled to the protection of the court where the wife's passions, from whatever cause, are so little under control that she is in the habit of using personal violence to her husband, from which habit he may be in danger of bodily injury, though no actual serious injury has been inflicted. White v. White, 1 Sw. & Tr. 591; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 28; 1 L. T. 197.

Though the physical effects of a wife's violence may not generally be so serious to the personal safety of the husband as the effects of his violence towards her, yet the moral result of the wife's violence to all the proper relations of married life is so serious that the court will interfere, and not drive the husband to the necessity of meeting force by force. Pickard v. Pickard, 3 Sw. & Tr. 523; 33 L. J., Mat. 158; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 830; 10 L. T. 789; 13 W. R. 188.

Where a husband petitioned for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, consisting of acts of personal violence by the wife, the court, although it appeared that the husband's safety was not endangered, granted a decree on the ground that by refusing to act in such a case it would impose on the husband the necessity of meeting force by force. Forth v. Forth, 36 L. J., Mat. 122; 16 L. T. 574; 15 W. R. 1091.

Constructive Cruelty—To Child.]—The doctrine of constructive cruelty is confined to cases of cruelty practised by a husband upon the children in the presence of their mother, and ought not to be applied to cases of mere neglect, nor where the wrongdoer is the wife. Cruelty must amount to violence, physical or moral, endangering personal health and safety, and cruelty practised by a mother towards a child in the absence of the father, is not legal cruelty by the wife to the husband. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 489; 28 L. J., Mat. 46; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 127.

Malâ fide Persistence in False Charges—Unnatural Offence.] — The persistence in a false charge of having committed an unnatural criminal offence, made by word of mouth and in writing by a wife against her husband, is not, even when the charge is not believed by the wife to be true, such cruelty as entitles the husband to a decree for judicial separation. Russell (Earl) v. Russell (Countess), 66 L. J., P. 122; [1897] A. C. 395; 75 L. T. 249; 61 J. P. 756—H. L. (E.)

A wife persisted in bringing against her husband by word of mouth, and in letters written to members of his family and others, a charge of having committed an unnatural offence, the charge not being true nor believed by her to be true:—Held (dissentiente Rigby, L.J.), that she had not been guilty of such cruelty as would entitle the husband to a decree for judicial separation. Held also, by the whole court, that desertion of the wife by the husband in the circumstances was not desertion without cause entitling her directly to a decree for judicial separation; and that since the passing of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), the court was not bound, on refusing the husband's claim for judicial separation, to grant the wife a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and thus enable her to obtain a decree for judicial separation indirectly under s. 5 of that act. S. C., 64 L. J., P. 105; [1895] P. 315; 73 L. T. 295; 44 W. R. 213—C. A.

As to alleging in petition. See col. 863.

4. WHAT CONSTITUTES DESERTION.

20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 16, is not Retrospective.]—A husband, in 1833, deserted his wife without cause. They never afterwards lived together. In 1850 the wife rejected an offer made to her by the husband to live with her again:—Held, that the wife was not entitled to a judicial separation on the ground of "desertion without cause for two years and upwards," within 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 16, as that section had not a retrospective operation, and that there had been no desertion since that act passed. Brookes v. Brookes, 1 Sw. & Tr. 326; 28 L. J., Mat. 38; 7 W. R. 143.

Facts constituting, Vary.]—The facts which constitute desertion, as ground for a decree, vary with the circumstances and mode of life of the married persons. So long as a husband treats his wife as a wife, by maintaining such degree and manner of intercourse as might naturally be expected from a husband of his calling and means, he cannot be said to have deserted her. Williams v. Williams, 3 Sw. & Tr. 547.

Must be for Two Years, and against the Will of the Wife.]—A. left his home at Birkenhead in 1843, and left unanswered letters from his wife, telling him that an execution was in the house. She was obliged to go into lodgings, and subsequently supported herself as a governess. In 1844, A. made by letter some vague offer of rejoining her, and in 1848 wrote, bidding farewell for ever.—Held, that there was a wilful desertion of the wife in the winter of 1843-44, and no distinct offer afterwards to find another home. Cudlipp v. Cudlipp, 1 Sw. & Tr. 229; 27 L. J., Mat. 64.

Where the offence of desertion without cause for two years is once completed, the wife deserted has, at least since the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 16, came into operation, a complete right to the relief given by the statute, although the other party may, subsequently to the two years, have made a bonâ fide offer to return. Cargill v. Cargill, 1 Sw. & Tr. 235; 27 L. J., Mat. 69; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 764; 6 W. R. 870.

A husband, having sent his wife to her father's house, together with a letter, in which he expressed a determination never to live with her again, sold his furniture and proceeded to Australia. After an absence of seven years he wrote to his wife, proposing that they should again cohabit together:—Held, that the offence of desertion having been perfected, the wife has a right, of which she cannot be deprived without her concurrence, to proceed for a judicial separation, notwithstanding a bonâ fide offer be subsequently made by the husband to return to cohabitation. Ib.

To sustain the charge of desertion, the act relied on as such must have been done contrary to the will of the person charging it. Ward v. Ward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 185; 27 L. J., Mat. 63; 6 W. R. 867.

A husband who, by his ill-treatment, compels his wife to separate from him, and afterwards refuses to receive her again, is guilty of desertion. Graves v. Graves, 3 Sw. & Tr. 350; 33 L. J., Mat. 66; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 546; 10 L. T. 273; 12 W. R. 1016.

A separation which was never acted upon, either as to the husband and wife living apart, or as to stipulations about money matters contained in it, does not deprive the act of the husband subsequently leaving the wife against her will of the character of desertion. Cock v. Cock, 3 Sw. & Tr. 514; 33 L. J., Mat. 157; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 806; 10 L. T. 726.

Where a husband has been guilty of adultery and desertion for two years and upwards, an offer to return to cohabitation can be no bar to the wife's petition on the ground of adultery and desertion, the offence of desertion being complete before the offer was made. Basing v. Basing, 3 Sw. & Tr. 516; 33 L. J., Mat. 150; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 806; 10 L. T. 756.

To negative a charge of desertion it is not sufficient that a man should merely write to his wife "Come back," or that he should say to a third party that he is willing to take her back. The court will look to the whole of his conduct, and must be satisfied from it that when he offered to take her back, he really intended what he said. Harris v. Harris, 15 L. T. 448. See Harris v. Harris, 31 L. J., Mat. 6.

A husband whilst living apart from his wife, under circumstances which did not constitute desertion, suddenly broke off all communication with her, and formed an adulterous connection with another woman:—Held, that these facts showed that the husband had resolved to abandon his wife, and therefore constituted desertion. Gatehouse v. Gatehouse, 36 L. J., Mat. 121 ; L. R. 1 P. 331 ; 16 L. T. 34.

A husband withdrew from cohabitation and refused to return and live with his wife, unless she wrote a letter exonerating a certain lady of whom she had reason to be jealous. The wife, having grounds for believing that her suspicions were well founded, refused to comply with the condition, but was desirous to live with her husband, and pressed him to return to cohabitation. The husband occasionally met and corresponded with her, but persisted in his refusal to live with her :—Held, that the denial of consortium by the husband amounted to desertion, and that the desertion was without reasonable excuse. Dallas v. Dallas, 43 L. J., Mat. 87 ; 31 L. T. 271.

A husband, having fallen into difficulties, enlisted and went with his regiment to India. He was afterwards discharged, ceased to correspond with his wife in this country, and contributed nothing to her support :—Held, that he had been guilty of desertion. Henty v. Henty, 33 L. T. 263.

—— From what Time.]—The wife petitioned for a divorce on the grounds of desertion coupled with adultery. The marriage took place in April, 1875, and in 1876 or early in 1877 there was a temporary separation, which the petitioner stated to have been on account of the respondent's intemperate habits. In 1877 the respondent, who was a hosier at the date of the marriage, finally left his wife, but they continued to correspond for some years. In or about the year 1884 the wife heard rumours as to her husband's mode of life ; and subsequently, in 1886, she went to Australia, partly with the object of ascertaining the truth of those rumours, and partly with the object of singing at concerts, by which latter means she was supporting herself and child. She found he was living with a woman, and had children by her. The wife made no request to her husband to return to her, or to take her back to live with him. Subsequently she returned to England, and eventually instituted this suit, charging adultery and desertion in and since 1886 :—Held, that, although there was in law no desertion prior to 1886, yet the fact of his taking up with another woman and starting in another home, and not contributing anything to her support, constituted desertion in and since 1886 ; and that the petitioner was entitled to a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage upon that ground, coupled with adultery. Drew v. Drew, 64 L. T. 840.

A husband, in 1880, ceased to reside with his wife on the pretence that his business compelled him to be absent, but he supplied her with necessaries and corresponded with her and visited her occasionally, and a child was born in February, 1884. In January, 1884, the wife discovered that he had for two years been living with another woman :—Held, that his conduct did not amount to desertion for two years. Farmer v. Farmer, 53 L. J., P. 113 ; 9 P. D. 245 ; 33 W. R. 169.

Semble, that desertion commenced from the time when his wife discovered the adultery, and that after a lapse of two years from that time she would be entitled to a dissolution of her marriage. Ib. And see col. 753.

—— Husband willing to return to Cohabitation—Questions for Jury.]—Where a husband professes to be willing to return to cohabitation, the questions that should be submitted to the jury are whether the conduct of the husband was that of a man honestly intending to resume cohabitation with his wife ; whether he was not misrepresenting his real intentions in the letters he wrote ; and whether the real and only object of those letters was to evade the consequences which might ensue, and to deprive the wife of the remedy which she would be entitled to upon the completion of the two years' absence. French-Brewster v. French-Brewster, 62 L. T. 609. And see Harris v. Harris, 15 L. T. 448, col. 748.

Proof insufficient — Adjournment — Supplemental Petition.]—In a suit by the wife for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of adultery coupled with desertion, the adultery was proved, but the evidence of desertion fell short of the required period of two years by several months. The hearing was adjourned, and twelve months afterwards the respondent not having returned to cohabitation, the petitioner filed a supplemental petition charging desertion, on proof of which the court granted a decree nisi. Wood v. Wood, 57 L. J., P. 48 ; 13 P. D. 22.

Two Years' Desertion not complete at the Time of filing original Petition—Amendment—Fresh Petition.]—A petition presented by a wife for dissolution on the ground of adultery and cruelty was filed in August, 1886. In June, 1886, the respondent deserted his wife, and had never afterwards returned to cohabitation, and in July, 1888, she obtained leave to amend her petition by adding a charge of desertion. The court at the hearing, when the charge of cruelty was abandoned, declined to entertain the charge of desertion on the ground that the cause of action was not complete at the time of filing the petition, and while ready to grant a judicial separation on the ground of adultery :—Held, that further relief could only be obtained by filing a fresh petition. Lapington v. Lapington, 58 L. J., P. 26 ; 14 P. D. 21 ; 59 L. T. 608 ; 37 W. R. 384 ; 52 J. P. 727.

Wilful Separation—Reasonable Excuse—Ante-nuptial Incontinence.] — The petitioner, an officer of Marines, when only twenty years of age, in December, 1883, married the respondent, relying upon statements made by her as to her having been previously entrapped into a ceremony of marriage with a man whom she afterwards found had a wife then living. The petitioner, soon after his marriage, found that his wife's statements as to the alleged bigamous marriage were false, and that she had, in fact, been guilty of ante-nuptial incontinence, and was in an advanced state of pregnancy. Still believing, however, that her former statements, as to her being possessed of private means, were true, the petitioner told her to go to her friends, and he never contributed to her support, and did not see her again for about seven years, being most of that time on service. During that time the respondent committed adultery :—Held, that the petitioner's conduct did not disentitle him to relief. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 62 L. T. 705.

Adulteress brought to House by Husband —Wife's Refusal to remain.]—A wife petitioned for the dissolution of her marriage on the grounds of adultery and desertion. The parties were married in 1866, and in 1872 the husband brought to the house a woman with whom he had immoral relations. The wife refused to admit her, but the husband insisted. The wife remained a short time in the house, and then told her husband that either she or the woman must leave the house. The husband told her she might do as she liked, but that the woman would remain. The wife thereupon left, and never afterwards cohabited with her husband:—Held, that the husband was guilty of deserting his wife. Dickinson v. Dickinson, 62 L. T. 330.

Where Husband Lives with a Woman not his Wife.]—A husband left his house in England, with the consent and knowledge of his wife, for Australia, and for some years regularly corresponded with her. The correspondence having suddenly been broken off, and nothing heard of the husband, inquiries were made, when it was found that he had been living with another woman as his wife, who had borne him three children:—Held, that there was evidence of an intention to desert from the time when the intimacy with the woman in Australia commenced, or from the time when the correspondence with the wife at home ceased. Stickland v. Stickland, 35 L. T. 767; 25 W. R. 114.

The fact of a man leaving his wife to live with another woman does not necessarily constitute desertion. Ward v. Ward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 185; 27 L. J., Mat. 63; 6 W. R. 867.

A wife reproached her husband with his connection with another woman, upon which he said that he wished to go from her, and would rather be with the other woman. She said, "Go, if you like, and when you are sick of her, come back to me"; but she made him swear that he would return to her. He never did return:—Held, guilty of desertion. Haviland v. Haviland, 32 L. J., Mat. 65; 11 W. R. 373.

Where the intention of a husband clearly was not to live with his wife (he was, in fact, carrying on an adulterous intercourse before and after marriage), the court held that it amounted to desertion on his part, though the wife actually left the house in which they last resided together, and, after she was aware of the adulterous connection, refused to return unless she was satisfied that such connection was at an end. Graves v. Graves, 3 Sw. & Tr. 350; 33 L. J., Mat. 66; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 546; 10 L. T. 273; 12 W. R. 1016.

At the trial of a petition by the wife for divorce from her husband on the ground of adultery and desertion, it appeared that they were married in 1866, and that after four years' cohabitation it was agreed between them, on the husband falling into difficulties, that a house and shop should be taken for the wife, and that she should carry on business in a separate name. From this time the parties had never lived together, though the husband occasionally visited his wife, and slept with her, and he made her an allowance. His visits were always as far as possible made in secret, and though his wife remonstrated, he refused to recommence open and avowed cohabitation. In 1885 the wife had reason to suspect that her husband was carrying on adulterous intercourse, and she never afterwards cohabited with him. In 1888 she obtained positive proof of his adultery, and thereupon commenced the present suit:—Held, that in the circumstances there was sufficient evidence of desertion for two years without reasonable cause by the husband. Garcia v. Garcia, 57 L. J., P. 101; 13 P. D. 216; 59 L. T. 524; 52 J. P. 584. And see Drew v. Drew, col. 755; and Wynne v. Wynne, 67 L. J., P. 5; [1898] P. 18.

——Willingness to Return to Cohabitation.]—A husband may be guilty of desertion even though he is willing to return to cohabitation with his wife, if at the time he is so willing he is actually cohabiting with another woman. Farmer v. Farmer (9 P. D. 245) and Garcia v. Garcia (13 P. D. 216) followed. Edwards v. Edwards, 62 L. J., P. 33.

—— Judicial Separation.]—In a wife's suit for dissolution on the ground of adultery coupled with desertion the adultery was proved; and with regard to the desertion, it appeared that after twenty-one years' cohabitation it was, in August, 1886, agreed between the parties, who were then resident abroad, that the wife and the children of the marriage should come to live in England. They accordingly took lodgings at Bournemouth, and the wife pressed her husband to return with them, but he refused. She continued willing to receive him and renew cohabitation until February, 1887, when she was shown a letter which convinced her that her husband had been carrying on an adulterous intercourse. Upon this she resolved that she never would live with him again. He wrote several letters to her offering to return to cohabitation, to which she did not reply; but her solicitors, by her direction, informed him that she would never live with him again:—Held, that there being no proof that the husband's offers to live again with his wife were not bonâ fide, she could not treat the separation on which she insisted as desertion by him, and that she was only entitled, therefore, to a judicial separation on the ground of adultery. Lodge v. Lodge, 59 L. J., P. 84; 15 P. D. 159; 63 L. T. 467.

A Bar to Divorce.]—A husband lived separately from his wife for many years, without making any provision for her maintenance from his means, which were sufficient:—Held, not to be entitled to a divorce, though the adultery of the wife was clearly proved. Simmons' Divorce Bill, 12 Cl. & F. 339.

Separation by Mutual Consent.]—A husband having committed several thefts, separated from his wife with her knowledge and consent, for the purpose of avoiding arrest. He was afterwards arrested and imprisoned, and having committed other thefts after his release, he was on subsequent occasions again imprisoned. Whilst he was in prison, and also in the intervals between his imprisonments, he kept up a correspondence with his wife and made repeated endeavours to induce her to return to cohabitation. She refused, and the cohabitation was never resumed. The wife having presented a petition for dissolution on the ground of adultery coupled with desertion, the court held that there was no desertion, the separation being involuntary on the part of the husband. Townsend v. Townsend, 42 L. J., Mat. 71; L. R. 3 P. 129; 29 L. T. 254; 21 W. R. 934.

Husband and wife separated by mutual consent at her instance. The husband, six years afterwards, made an offer to return to cohabitation, which the wife believed to be not bonâ fide, and refused. There was no change in the circumstances which had originally led her to desire a separation:—Held, that there was no desertion. Cooper v. Cooper, 33 L. T. 264.

A husband, without reasonable excuse, obtained from his wife an agreement that they should live apart from each other, which they accordingly did, and she subsequently committed adultery:—Held, that under the circumstances he had deserted her, and that a petition by him for dissolution of the marriage must be dismissed. Dagg v. Dagg and Speake, 51 L. J., P. 19; 7 P. D. 17; 47 L. T. 132; 30 W. R. 431.

A husband and wife were cohabiting in Jamaica, where the husband held an appointment, when the wife was obliged to come to England in consequence of ill health. The husband afterwards, in 1851, asked her to return, and provided funds for her passage, but her health was not sufficiently re-established to enable her to accept his offer. She had no further communication with him, but in 1856 he made her an allowance, which he continued to pay until 1860:—Held, that as she had never made any offer to return to him after refusing his offer in 1851, he had not deserted her. Keech v. Keech, 38 L. J., Mat. 7; L. R. 1 P. 641; 19 L. T. 462.

A husband having left his wife in full possession of the family house, subsequently, and with her assent, visited his children there, but did not remain or return to cohabitation with his wife or hold any communication with her:—Held, that this was not evidence of desertion, but rather of separation by mutual arrangement. Taylor v. Taylor, 44 L. T. 31.

No one can desert who does not actually and wilfully bring to an end an existing state of cohabitation. If the state of cohabitation has ceased to exist, whether by the adverse act of husband and wife, or even by the mutual consent of both, desertion becomes impossible to either, at least until their common life and home has been resumed. The refusal by either, at the request of the other, to resume conjugal relations, does not constitute the offence of desertion. A wife having reason to believe that her husband had been guilty of adultery, separated from him, and instituted a suit for divorce, in which she failed. They never afterwards resumed cohabitation, and neither of them took any step for the purpose of bringing about a reconciliation. The conduct of the husband in holding aloof from the wife, and making no demand of cohabitation, was held not to constitute desertion. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 38 L. J., Mat. 14; L. R. 1 P. 694; 19 L. T. 575; 17 W. R. 264.

—— Intermittent Cohabitation.]—When husband and wife have been living separate and apart by mutual consent, there can be no desertion of the one party by the other, without a prior resumption of cohabitation. There must, in fact, be an active withdrawal from an existing cohabitation. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald (38 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 1 P. 694), and Reg. v. Leresche (60 L. J., M. C. 153; [1891] 2 Q. B 418) discussed. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 66 L. J., P. 31; [1897] P. 24; 75 L. T. 391; 45 W. R. 142; 61 J. P. 8.

—— Married Domestic Servants living under Different Roofs.]—Where a man married a domestic servant and never resided under the same roof with her, but at the same time visited her whenever he was so inclined and had two children by her, the justices held that they were precluded by the decisions in the cases of Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald (38 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 1 P. 694), and Reg. v. Leresche (60 L. J., M. C. 153; [1891] 2 Q. B. 418), from holding that the husband had deserted his wife, within the meaning of s. 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. The court, after explaining and distinguishing the above two cases, held that the cohabitation was sufficient to give the justices jurisdiction, and remitted the case to them for further consideration. Ib.

—— Temporary Separation for Mutual Convenience—Refusal on Part of Husband to Take back or Maintain his Wife.]—During a temporary separation between a husband and wife for mutual convenience cohabitation does not cease and the marital relations are not altered. And the husband, who under such circumstances refuses to take his wife back again or to maintain her, may be guilty of desertion under the Married Women (Maintenance in Case of Desertion) Act, 1886, and liable thereunder. Chudley v. Chudley, 69 L. T. 617; 17 Cox, C. C. 697—C. A. Affirming, 62 L. J., M. C. 97; 57 J. P. 790.

—— Husband's want of Means — Mutual Separation—Correspondence.]—A husband and wife agreed to separate owing to the husband's inability to maintain his wife. They continued to correspond, and numerous letters passed between them, in some of which the husband taunted his wife with not getting a divorce, and said it was cruel of her and her friends to "fetter" him. He also made frequent requests for pecuniary assistance. The wife offered to return to her husband when he informed her in one of his letters that he was ill, but he wrote and refused her. The husband's letters ceased in July, 1885. The wife wrote four times in answer to the last letter from him, but received no reply. She subsequently made inquiries and discovered that, while the correspondence had been going on and since it ceased, the respondent had been residing at various places and keeping up an adulterous connection, and that he was living under his mother's roof with a woman who was not his wife:—Held, that this conduct constituted desertion, and, coupled with the adultery, entitled the wife to a decree of divorce. Smith v. Smith, 58 L. T. 639.

Husband causing Wife to Leave Him.]—A husband charged with desertion traversed the charge. On his examination he admitted that he had insisted that his wife should leave his house, but said that he did so for a good cause, which he stated:—Held, guilty of desertion. Baker v. Baker, 32 L. J., Mat. 145; 11 W. R. 502.

A. married a woman, and after cohabiting with her at her father's house for some weeks, left her. At his request, she shortly afterwards went to him, and remained with him for two or three days. He then sent her back to her father, saying that he could not support her. After the lapse of eighteen months, during which she did not hear from him, he went to her father's house, and asked to be allowed to see her. Her father refused to allow him to have any communication with her until he should be in a condition to support her. He then left, and never returned or asked her to return to him :—Quære, whether these facts established a case of desertion. Harris v. Harris, 31 L. J., Mat. 6. See Harris v. Harris, 15 L. T. 448.

Husband sentenced to Penal Servitude.]—In a wife's suit for dissolution on the ground of adultery and desertion, it appeared that the respondent when he left his wife stated to her that he was going to Ireland for a week's shooting, but in fact he went to Australia to escape arrest on a charge of embezzlement. Up to the time of his flight he had been carrying on an adulterous intercourse with a woman with whom he had made arrangements to go away, and he was found living in adultery with another woman at Sydney. Subsequently he was brought back to this country in custody, tried, and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude :—Held, that the circumstances under which the respondent left his wife constituted desertion, and that the desertion would continue notwithstanding the fact that he was brought back to this country in custody and prevented by his imprisonment from returning to his wife. Drew v. Drew, 57 L. J., P. 64 ; 13 P. D. 97 ; 58 L. T. 923 ; 36 W. R. 927. And see Astrope v. Astrope, 29 L. J., Mat. 27, col. 739 ; and Wynne v. Wynne, 67 L. J., P. 5 ; [1898] P. 18.

Tyrannical conduct of Husband.] — The appellant sued his wife, the respondent, for a divorce by reason of her desertion. By the Scots Act, 1573, c. 55, it is enacted in effect that it shall be sufficient cause of divorce if either spouse leave the other without reasonable cause and remain maliciously absent for four years. In an action by a husband against his wife for divorce on the ground of desertion for the statutory period, it appeared that she had left him because of conduct on his part causing her mental distress sufficient to interfere with her restoration to health, and because of menaces by him sufficient to create in her a well-founded apprehension of physical restraint, and culminating in an act of violence against her person : —Held, that she had reasonable cause for leaving her husband's house, and for declining to return to it, and that there was a good defence to the action. Whether in an action for adherence by a husband, misconduct on his part short of cruelty or other matrimonial offence may be a ground for refusing relief, quære. Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, [1895] A. C. 384—H. L. (Sc.)

Ill Temper.]—Mere frailty of temper unless shown in some marked and intolerable excesses is not "reasonable cause" for desertion. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 37 L. J., Mat. 37 ; L. R. 1 P. 489 ; 18 L. T. 415 ; 16 W. R. 734.

Refusal to Consummate Marriage.]—A husband petitioning for a dissolution of his marriage admitted that he had separated himself from his wife before the adultery complained of, and had not contributed to her support, but alleged that such separation was caused by her persistent refusal to allow him to consummate the marriage, although he was able and willing to do so. The wife did not deny the fact of non-consummation, but alleged that the husband was to blame for it owing to his physical incapacity. The court, without deciding the question of fact whether the non-consummation was the fault of the one or the other, came to the conclusion that he had acted under a bonâ fide belief that she had wronged him, and therefore considered that he had not been guilty of such desertion or wilful separation without reasonable excuse as to deprive him of his right to a decree of dissolution on the ground of her adultery. Ousey v. Ousey and Atkinson, 43 L. J., Mat. 35 ; L. R. 3 P. 223 ; 30 L. T. 911 ; 22 W. R. 556.

Separation Deed.]—A husband deserted his wife. A year afterwards, through the intervention of a mutual friend, a deed of separation was agreed to by which the husband covenanted to make the wife an allowance, and charged it upon his reversionary interest in a sum of money. The deed was fully executed, but no part of the allowance paid :—Held, that the wife had bargained away her right to relief, and could not establish the charge of desertion without cause for two years. Parkinson v. Parkinson, 39 L. J., Mat. 14 ; L. R. 2 P. 25 ; 21 L. T. 732.

When the parties have separated voluntarily under a deed of separation, such separation will not be converted into a desertion merely because one of the parties does not fulfil all the terms of the bargain he entered into with the other on parting. Crabb v. Crabb, 37 L. J., Mat. 42 ; L. R. 1 P. 601 ; 18 L. T. 153 ; 16 W. R. 650.

On a wife's petition for dissolution of marriage, by reason of adultery and desertion, it appeared that subsequently to the desertion a deed of separation was executed by both parties, and that for three months afterwards the wife continued to pay to the husband a small allowance for his support. The court being satisfied that the act of the wife was prompted wholly by affection and humanity, and that she never assented to the desertion, granted a decree nisi. Nott v. Nott, 36 L. J., Mat. 10 ; L. R. 1 P. 251 ; 15 L. T. 299.

Payment of Allowance to Wife.]—A wife is entitled to the society and protection of her husband, and if, after refusing to live with her, he gives her an allowance, the payment of such allowance to her is no answer to the charge of wilful desertion. Macdonald v. Macdonald, 4 Sw. & Tr. 242.

A husband, having refused to cohabit with his wife, or to provide a home for her, offered her 100*l.* on condition that she would not molest him in future by insisting on her conjugal rights. She agreed to the condition, and received the money, and they never afterwards cohabited :—Held, that these facts did not constitute desertion on the part of the husband. Buckmaster v. Buckmaster, 38 L. J., Mat. 73 ; L. R. 1 P. 713 ; 21 L. T. 231 ; 17 W. R. 1114.

A husband who withdraws from cohabitation with his wife may be guilty of the offence of desertion, although he continues to support her. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 37 L. J., Mat. 37 ; L. R. 1 P. 489 ; 18 L. T. 415 ; 16 W. R. 734.

Reasonable Cause.]—A husband may have "reasonable cause" for desertion, though the cause be not such as would entitle him to a decree for a judicial separation. Ib.

Desertion without cause means without reasonable cause. Such reasonable cause is not necessarily a distinct matrimonial offence on which a decree of judicial separation or dissolution could be founded ; but it must be grave and weighty. Ib.

Mere frailty of temper and habits which are distasteful to a husband are not reasonable grounds for depriving a wife of the protection of his home and society. Ib.

Decree for Restitution of Conjugal Rights —Refusal to Obey—Adultery revived.]—In a petition by a wife for divorce on the ground of adultery and desertion it appeared that the husband had failed to comply with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and that he had also been guilty of adultery before the date of the decree :—Held, that sufficient proof of adultery and desertion had been given to satisfy s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, and that the wife was entitled to a decree for divorce. Bigwood v. Bigwood, 57 L. J., P. 80 ; 13 P. D. 89 ; 58 L. T. 642 ; 36 W. R. 928.

a. Generally.

Discretion of Court under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31.]—The discretion to be exercised under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, must be a regulated discretion, and not a free option subordinated to no rules. Morgan v. Morgan and Porter, 38 L. J., Mat. 41 ; L. R. 1 P. 644 ; 20 L. T. 588 ; 17 W. R. 688.

The court cannot grant or withhold a divorce on the mere footing that the petitioner's adultery is more or less pardonable or capable of excuse. Ib.

There must be some special circumstances attending the commission of such adultery, or special features placing it in some category capable of distinct statement and recognition, in order that the discretion may be fitly exercised in favour of a petitioner. Ib.

On the trial of a husband's petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of his wife's adultery, the jury found that he had also been guilty of adultery. The adultery was long antecedent to her misconduct, and it did not appear that it was known to her until after the filing of the petition. The court held, that mere lapse of time would not justify the exercise of the discretion vested in it, and refused a decree. Ib.

In a husband's suit for dissolution, the wife's adultery was proved, and the husband confessed to an act of adultery in the year 1874, which he alleged had been committed under the influence of liquor, and which had been condoned by the wife :—Held, that the petition must be dismissed. Grosvenor v. Grosvenor, 34 W. R. 140.

Where a general verdict of adultery was found against the husband, the petitioner, the issues raised by the counter-charges of adultery in the wife's answer being specific, and the petitioner declined the offer of a new trial, the court, accepting the verdict of the jury as conclusive of his adultery, refused to exercise its discretionary power, and condemned him in the wife's full costs. Barnes v. Barnes and Beaumont, 38 L. J., Mat. 10 ; L. R. 1 P. 572 ; 19 L. T. 526.

The court in the exercise of the discretion conferred on it by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, granted a decree nisi, notwithstanding the judgment against the petitioner in the former suit, the act of adultery, if committed, being an isolated one, and unconnected with the respondent's adultery, and the finding of the jury in the second suit, acquitting the petitioner, having thrown doubt upon his guilt. Conradi v. Conradi, Worrall and Way, 37 L. J., Mat. 55 ; L. R. 1 P. 514 ; 18 L. T. 659 ; 16 W. R. 1023.

Discretion Notwithstanding Condonation.] —On the petition of a husband, the wife's adultery and his cruelty being in issue, the jury, by their verdict, affirmed both the adultery and cruelty ; but as the wife's drunken habits were the probable cause of the husband's violence, the court exercised the discretion given it by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, by dissolving the marriage. The drunken violence of the wife would only justify such force on the part of the husband as might be necessary for her restraint. Pearman v. Pearman, 1 Sw. & Tr. 601 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 54 ; 8 W. R. 274.

Where a petitioner has been guilty of adultery or cruelty, the court may, in the exercise of its discretionary power, refuse to decree a dissolution of the marriage, although such adultery or cruelty may have been condoned. Goode v. Goode and Hamson, 2 Sw. & Tr. 253 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 105 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 317 ; 4 L. T. 122 ; 9 W. R. 552.

Both Parties found Guilty — Cross Petitions.]—In cross petitions by the husband and wife for dissolution of marriage the jury found that the wife had committed adultery, and that the husband had committed adultery with the wife's sister and with another woman, and that the wife had condoned his adultery. The court in the circumstances refused to make any decree, and dismissed both petitions. Stoker v. Stoker, 58 L. J., P. 40 ; 14 P. D. 60 ; 60 L. T. 400 ; 37 W. R. 576.

Agreement for New Marriage — Ignorance of Law.]—A husband and wife signed a paper to the effect that they agreed to separate, and that each was at liberty to marry again. The husband, who was in humble rank, believed this document to be legal and binding, and went through the form of marriage with another person, from whom he separated on learning that the second marriage was not legal. He subsequently petitioned for a divorce :—Held, that as the petitioner acted in ignorance of the law, and in the bonâ fide belief that the second marriage was legal, it was a proper case for the court to exercise its discretion under s. 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, to excuse the adultery of the petitioner. Whitworth v. Whitworth, 62 L. J., P. 71 ; [1893] P. 85 ; 1 R. 509 ; 68 L. T. 467 ; 41 W. R. 592.

Aggravated Assault by Petitioning Husband —Separation and Allowance to Wife.]—Decree dissolving the marriage pronounced in favour of a husband who had been convicted by justices of an aggravated assault upon his wife, and against whom a separation order and an order for an allowance had been thereupon made. Sergent v. Sergent, 64 L. T. 236.

Rape and Cruelty of Husband—Adultery of Wife.]—A husband obtained a decree nisi by reason of his wife's adultery, but the decree was rescinded, and his petition dismissed by reason of his cruelty and adultery. The parties lived together again, and he committed other acts of cruelty, and was also guilty of rape, when the wife filed a petition for dissolution of the marriage. The court under the circumstances granted the wife a decree nisi. Collins v. Collins, 53 L. J., P. 116; 9 P. D. 231; 33 W. R. 170.

Desertion by Petitioner.]—The discretion vested in the court by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, will almost invariably be exercised by refusing to dissolve a marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, if she has been deserted by the petitioner. Yeatman v. Yeatman and Rummell, 39 L. J., Mat. 77; L. R. 2 P. 187; 23 L. T. 283; 18 W. R. 1088. And see col. 747.

Adultery by Petitioner.]—On one occasion subsequent to his marriage a husband had connection with a female with whom he had cohabited before marriage. The fact became known to the wife shortly afterwards, and was by her forgiven, and her cohabitation with her husband was continued for some considerable time:—Held, that the condonation by her was not a fact to justify the court in exercising its discretion in favour of the husband, and therefore it dismissed his petition. McCord v. McCord and Coxon, 44 L. J., Mat. 38; L. R. 3 P. 237; 33 L. T. 264; 23 W. R. 684.

Eighteen months after the marriage a husband, the petitioner, committed adultery on one occasion with a woman by whom he had had a child previously to his marriage. He confessed the fact to his wife, who condoned his misconduct. Subsequently the wife herself was guilty of adultery. The court was of opinion that there was no special circumstance in the case to justify the exercise of its discretion under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, in favour of the petitioner, and declined to pronounce a decree. Ib.

When the petitioner had obtained a decree nisi, with costs against two co-respondents, and the Queen's proctor having intervened and filed pleas, the jury on a second trial found that the petitioner had committed adultery with several females, and infected his wife with a venereal disease; the court reversed the decree, including that part of it by which the co-respondents were condemned in costs. Yonell v. Yonell, Terrass and Burleigh, 33 L. T. 578; 24 W. R. 59.

At the hearing of a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, he, after his case had been proved, tendered himself for examination and confessed that on one occasion, during a temporary separation from his wife, he had been guilty of an act of adultery. The court refused a decree. Clarke v. Clarke and Clarke, 34 L. J., Mat. 94; 13 W. R. 848.

The court will not exercise its discretion in favour of a petitioner who has been guilty of adultery, unless it can be shown that, but for the one lapse proved, he has been a good and faithful husband. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson and Barker, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 491; 14 L. T. 338.

A petitioner satisfied the court that she had been terrified by the threats and ill-treatment of her husband into leading a life of immorality, contrary to her own will and desire:—Held, that it was a fit case for the court to exercise their discretion, and to pronounce for a dissolution of the marriage, the adultery and cruelty of the husband having been proved, notwithstanding the admitted prostitution of the petitioner during the marriage. Coleman v. Coleman, 35 L. J., Mat. 37; L. R. 1 P. 81; 13 L. T. 684.

Bigamy of Petitioner.]—A husband believing that his wife was dead married again, and subsequently discovered that his wife was alive and had committed adultery:—Held, that, notwithstanding the bigamy, he was entitled to a dissolution of his marriage. Freegard v. Freegard, 52 L. J., P. 100; 8 P. D. 186; 32 W. R. 95.

A husband, whose wife had eloped and was living in adultery, contracted a marriage with another woman, under the belief that she was dead, and cohabited with that woman as his wife. The court being satisfied that at the time the second marriage was contracted he really supposed the respondent was dead, granted a decree of dissolution, notwithstanding his adultery. Joseph v. Joseph and Wentzel, 34 L. J., Mat. 96; 13 W. R. 872.

—— Belief in Husband's Death.]—A wife had been deserted by her husband; sixteen years afterwards she, believing him to be dead, went through a form of marriage with another man, and subsequently discovered that her husband was alive and had committed adultery:—Held, that, notwithstanding the bigamy, she was entitled to a decree for dissolution of the marriage. Potter v. Potter, 1 R. 499; 67 L. T. 721.

—— Bona Fides.]—Where a petitioner acts purely in ignorance of the law, and has no intention to commit adultery, being in fact unaware that what he is doing amounts to adultery, the discretion conferred upon the court by s. 31 of the Divorce Act should be exercised in his favour. Snook v. Snook, 67 L. T. 389.

Matrimonial Misconduct by Petitioner.]——Although in a suit for dissolution of marriage the court may grant a judicial separation where the evidence is sufficient to warrant such a decree only, yet it will not do so, but will dismiss the petition if the petitioner has been guilty of misconduct for which the court, acting under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, is of opinion that the petition should be dismissed. Boreham v. Boreham, 35 L. J., Mat. 49; L. R. 1 P. 77; 14 W. R. 317.

When the case of a petitioner, in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, has been proved, and the court does not find that he has been accessory to or conniving at the adultery, or that there has been condonation or connivance, the court is bound to pronounce a decree dissolving the marriage, unless it is established affirmatively that the petitioner has been guilty of one of the acts which, under the proviso to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, gives the court a discretionary power to refuse to dissolve the marriage. Haswell v. Haswell and Sanderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 502; 29 L. J., Mat. 21; 1 L. T. 69; 8 W. R. 76.

Suppression of Material Facts.]—The court will not refuse a petitioner his decree because of the suppression of material facts, if upon the whole case he should appear entitled to relief. Alexandre v. Alexandre, 39 L. J., Mat. 84; L. R. 2 P. 164; 23 L. T. 268; 18 W. R. 1087.

Delay in Presenting Petition.]—The petitioner, after having been separated from her husband for twenty years, presented her petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty. The adultery was proved to have taken place recently. The alleged cruelty was before the separation. The only explanation for the delay suggested by the petitioner was that at first she thought her husband would repent, and latterly she wished to wait until her son, the only child of the marriage, was grown up :—Held, that the delay was so unreasonable as to disentitle her to a decree. Beauclerk v. Beauclerk, 60 L. J., P. 20 ; [1891] P. 189 ; 64 L. T. 35—C. A.

—— Justification—Order for Restitution of Conjugal Rights—Non-compliance—Petition for Dissolution—Adultery and Desertion.]—Where a respondent who had entered into a voluntary deed of separation failed to comply with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and the petitioner presented a petition for dissolution of the marriage under s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, on the grounds of his adultery and desertion, the court granted a decree nisi, being of opinion that, inasmuch as the separation was at first voluntary, the petitioner could not before instituting the suit for restitution of conjugal rights have proved desertion, there had not been such unreasonable delay as would induce the court in the exercise of its discretion to refuse relief :—Query, whether a petitioner can avoid the consequences of delay in presenting a petition for dissolution by obtaining an order for restitution of conjugal rights. Query, whether the fact that there has been delay in applying for restitution of conjugal rights (although such delay is insufficient to refuse that order) is a ground for the court refusing a subsequent petition for dissolution. Beauclerk v. Beauclerk, 64 L. J., P. 102 ; [1895] P. 220 ; 11 R. 654 ; 43 W. R. 655.

—— Wife's Confession—Husband's Separation thereupon—Want of Means.]—A bonâ fide confession of adultery by a wife to her husband, believed in by him, is sufficient excuse for his leaving her. The husband, in 1881, found a letter in his wife's possession, and taxed her with adultery with a certain man. She admitted it, and he (the husband) left her. He was a journeyman jeweller, and had no means at that time to commence proceedings. He, about 1890, found that she was living with another man as his wife, by whom she had four children. The court, finding that he was justified in leaving his wife upon her confession of adultery in 1881, and that his explanation of want of means was sufficient to explain the delay in taking proceedings to have his marriage dissolved, granted him a decree nisi. Faulkes v. Faulkes, 64 L. T. 834. And see col. 888.

Lunacy of Respondent—Whether a Defence.]—At the time of the filing of a husband's petition for dissolution of marriage the respondent was undoubtedly insane. There was evidence that at the time of the commission of the acts of adultery alleged in the petition she was under the delusion that her husband was trying to poison her, and wanted to drive him to get a divorce :—Held, that though a person guilty of adultery may at the time such adultery was committed have been subject to delusions on certain points, yet, if such person was nevertheless capable of understanding the nature of the act he or she had committed and its probable consequences, his or her insanity would be no answer to a petition for dissolution. Semble, that such insanity as would be a defence to a criminal charge would not constitute a defence to a petition for dissolution of marriage. Yarrow v. Yarrow, 61 L. J., P. 69 ; [1892] P. 92 ; 66 L. T. 383.

Assuming that insanity can in any case afford a defence to proceedings for divorce, it is necessary, in order to make insanity a good plea to a petition for divorce, that the plea should state that the insanity is lasting and abiding, and that there is no hope of recovery or amelioration, and not that it is a mere recurrent or intermittent insanity. And where it appears that a husband who returns to the conjugal home after a period of confinement in an asylum is subject to recurring fits of mania, which, though they may assume the form of hereditary disease, endanger the safety of the wife, she is entitled to the protection of the court by the grant of a judicial separation. Hanbury v. Hanbury, 61 L. J., P. 115 ; [1892] P. 222. And see cols. 873-4.

b. Agreement for Separation.

Injunction against Proceedings in Divorce Court.]—By deed a husband covenanted with the trustee of the deed to make an allowance to his wife, and the trustee covenanted, on behalf of the wife, neither to sue for restitution of conjugal rights, alimony, nor to molest, trouble, or disturb the husband. Shortly after the execution of the deed the wife, who had duly received her allowance, commenced proceedings in the divorce court for a judicial separation and for alimony. Thereupon the husband filed a bill in equity against his wife, praying that she might be restrained from continuing the proceedings, and from doing any act to molest, trouble, or disturb him :—Held, that he was entitled to a perpetual injunction of the extent (only) of restraining the proceedings in the divorce court. Flower v. Flower, 25 L. T. 902 ; 20 W. R. 231.

Injunction not granted.]—Upon motion by a wife for an injunction to restrain her husband from proceeding in the divorce court to obtain a dissolution of marriage, on the ground of a contract by the husband (in a separation deed) to condone all former causes of complaint, and not to take legal proceedings in respect thereof :—Held, that as the contract might be set up by way of defence in the divorce court, and as it was executed by the husband in ignorance of the fact that his wife had committed adultery, and on her positive assertion of innocence, a court of equity would not interfere to stay proceedings in the divorce court. Brown v. Brown, 38 L. J., Ch. 153 ; L. R. 7 Eq., 185 ; 19 L. T. 594 ; 17 W. R. 98.

In a separation deed the husband covenanted with the trustee to allow to his wife 50*l.* a year for her support, he being indemnified against all debts and liabilities on her account, and it being agreed on her behalf that she would not in any way endeavour to compel the husband again to live with her, or to allow her "any further or greater or other support, maintenance, or alimony" than the annuity of 50*l.* :—Held, that in the absence of any act showing an unqualified acceptance by the wife of the provisions of the separation deed, or of any attempt to enforce it against her husband, a court of equity would not, upon an interlocutory motion, restrain her from proceeding in the divorce court to obtain an allowance for alimony, as incident to her petition for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, but the court put her under an undertaking to deal with the alimony as the court should direct. Williams v. Baily, L. R. 2 Eq., 731; Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445. And see also col. 717.

c. Condonation.

What is.]—Condonation, being a conclusion of fact and not of law, means a full and absolute forgiveness of a conjugal offence, with knowledge of all that is forgiven: it is not affected by the existence of, and does not operate as a forgiveness of, other unknown adulteries. Condonation being proved, the claim for damages is ancillary to and dependent on the petition, and must be dismissed if the petition is also dismissed. Pomero v. Pomero and Hadley (10 P. D. 174) overruled; Story v. Story and O'Connor (12 P. D. 196) approved. Bernstein v. Bernstein, 63 L. J., P. 3; [1893] P. 292; 6 R. 609; 69 L. T. 513—C. A.

Must be Voluntary.]—Condonation, to be perfect, must be voluntary and unconditional. A forced return to cohabitation is no proof of condonation. Cooke v. Cooke, 3 Sw. & Tr. 26; 32 L. J., Mat. 154; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 754; 8 L. T. 644; 11 W. R. 957. Affirmed on appeal, 3 Sw. & Tr. 246.

Much less is sufficient to destroy condonation than to found an original suit. Ib.

Not Pleaded—Noticed by Court.]—Condonation proved at the hearing will be noticed by the court, although it has not been pleaded. Curtis v. Curtis, 4 Sw. & Tr. 234.

Must be Strictly Proved.]—Condonation on the renewal of conjugal intercourse requires strict proof. In matrimonial causes there are few reasons for delay. Campbell v. Campbell, 5 W. R. 519.

Of Adultery.]—B. received back his wife after adultery by her committed in May, 1856. In June, 1857, he left England for Australia, to ascertain his prospects in settling, leaving his wife in business in Devonshire, close to her own mother. The wife, during his absence, committed adultery with the co-respondent, and sold off the stock-in-trade. The court dissolved the marriage, and condemned the co-respondent in the costs. Wilton v. Wilton and Chamberlain, 1 Sw. & Tr. 563; 1 L. T. 243; 8 W. R. 160.

Condonation of adultery, committed by a wife, with A., is a bar to any proceedings by the husband against A. If such condoned adultery is revived by the wife's subsequent misconduct, so as to entitle the husband to a decree of dissolution of marriage, A., though made a co-respondent, cannot be condemned in costs. Norris v. Norris, 30 L. J., Mat. 111.

Before the court can come to the conclusion of condonation by a husband, it must be satisfied that he continued to live with his wife with full knowledge of the acts of adultery alleged to be condoned. Ellis v. Ellis and Smith, 4 Sw. & Tr. 154; 34 L. J., Mat. 100; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 610; 13 L. T. 211; 13 W. R. 964.

Where, to an action for maintenance, the husband alleged the wife's adultery, but failed to prove it, and afterwards lived with her, the court refused to come to the conclusion of condonation. Ib.

The adultery of a wife, if it has been condoned by her husband, is no bar to a suit by her for judicial separation on the ground of adultery subsequently committed by him. Seller v. Seller, 1 Sw. & Tr. 482; 28 L. J., Mat. 99; 5 Jur. 686; 8 W. R. 5.

Cohabitation after Knowledge of Adultery.]—The fact that a husband continues to sleep in the same bed with his wife after knowledge of her adultery affords a strong presumption of condonation, but such presumption is capable of being rebutted by evidence. Hall v. Hall, 60 L. J., P. 73—C. A. Affirming, 64 L. T. 837.

Discretionary Bar.]—In a suit by the husband for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, the jury found that the wife and the co-respondent had committed adultery, and assessed the damages at 300*l.* The wife in her answer made a counter-charge of adultery committed by her husband, in the house in which he resided with his wife, with a domestic servant in their employment five years before. The husband admitted the charge, but pleaded and proved that his wife had condoned the offence and continued to live with him:—Held, that under the circumstances the husband's adultery disentitled him to a decree, and his petition being accordingly dismissed, that he was not entitled to the damages. Story v. Story, 57 L. J., P. 15; 12 P. D. 196; 57 L. T. 536; 36 W. R. 190; 51 J. P. 680.

Where a petitioner has committed adultery, condonation of the offence by the respondent is not a special circumstance to justify the court in exercising its discretion in the petitioner's favour under s. 31 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. McCord v. McCord (L. R. 3 P. 237) followed. Boucher v. Boucher, 1 R. 494; 67 L. T. 720.

—— Delay—Former Suit Abandoned—Fresh Adultery.]—The petitioner married her husband in 1876, and lived with him till 1880, when he left her, and went to live with another woman. Upon the advice of respondent's brother she instituted a suit for judicial separation on the ground of adultery, but abandoned it at his request, and entered into a deed, the respondent's brother allowing her 1*l.* a week. In 1883 he returned to the petitioner, and she forgave him, and lived with him for a short time, when he again left her, without notice, and had contributed nothing to the support of herself and their four children. She knew that he went back to the woman he had previously been living with, but, having no means, she was unable to take proceedings till now, when her mother lent her the money to do so:—Held, that she had not been guilty of any misconduct disentitling her to a divorce upon the grounds of adultery and desertion. Binney v. Binney, 69 L. T. 498. And see cols. 760, 888.

—— Cruelty.]—To a suit by a wife for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, coupled with cruelty, condonation of the cruelty is no bar. Dempster v. Dempster, 2 Sw. & Tr. 438; 31 L. J., Mat. 20; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 44; 5 L. T. 433.

All condonation is conditional on no offence of which the court can take cognizance being in future perpetrated. Cruelty once condoned may be so revived by subsequent adultery as to form, coupled with that adultery, ground for a sentence of dissolution. Palmer v. Palmer, 2 Sw. & Tr. 61 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 124 ; 2 L. T. 363 ; 8 W. R. 504.

—— Subsequent Adultery.]—Whether adultery by a husband which has been condoned is a bar to his obtaining a dissolution on the ground of subsequent adultery of the wife, quære. Rose v. Rose, 52 L. J., P. 25 ; 8 P. D. 98 ; 48 L. T. 378 ; 31 W. R. 573—C. A.

Subsequent to Decree Nisi.]—It would seem that condonation subsequent to a decree nisi is not a ground on which, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, the court may reverse such a decree when properly obtained. Lewis v. Lewis, 2 Sw. & Tr. 394 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 199 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 831 ; 4 L. T. 772.

Revival of Condoned Adultery.]—The word "condonation" has the same meaning in the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 30, as it had in the ecclesiastical courts ; and the doctrine of revival is equally applicable to it. Dent v. Dent, 4 Sw. & Tr. 105 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 118 ; 13 L. T. 252.

Therefore, although the adultery complained of by the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage may have been condoned, the petitioner is entitled to a decree if it has been revived by subsequent cruelty. Ib.

Semble, that condoned adultery may be revived, so as to found a sentence of dissolution, by subsequent misconduct and improprieties, short of, but tending to, adultery. Winscom v. Winscom and Plowden, 3 Sw. & Tr. 380 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 45 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 321 ; 10 L. T. 100 ; 12 W. R. 535.

—— Incestuous Adultery Revived by Adultery.]—A wife, knowing that her husband had been guilty of incestuous adultery with her sister, signed an agreement that she would forgive him, and would not take proceedings against him on account of such incestuous adultery, in consideration of his retirement from a then subsisting partnership in business with her father and brother. It was further agreed that they should not live together, but that they should see each other from time to time. The agreement also contained this clause :—"The agreement or contract binds me (the wife) only so long as you remain true to me in love and duty." After the date of the agreement the husband was guilty of adultery, but not of incestuous adultery. The court held that this subsequent adultery restored to the wife her right to have the marriage dissolved on the ground of the previous incestuous adultery. Newsome v. Newsome, 40 L. J., Mat. 71 ; L. R. 2 P. 306 ; 25 L. T. 204 ; 19 W. R. 1039.

Condoned incestuous adultery is revived by subsequent adultery not incestuous. Ib.

—— Effect on Costs.]—When a husband has condoned adultery committed with a co-respondent, which has been revived by adultery committed by another person, costs will not be given against the co-respondent whose adultery was condoned. Norris v. Norris, Lawson and Mason, 4 Sw. & Tr. 237.

—— Of Adultery and Cruelty by Misconduct short of Adultery.]—Condonation is only conditional forgiveness, and condoned adultery and cruelty may be revived by misconduct which falls short of adultery. A husband was guilty of adultery and cruelty, which were condoned by his wife. He afterwards made improper overtures to, and attempted to take liberties with, a female servant in his house :—Held, that the husband's misconduct had revived his condoned adultery, and that the wife was entitled to a decree for dissolution of the marriage. Ridgway v. Ridgway, 29 W. R. 612.

—— Of Adultery and Desertion.]—A husband having been guilty of desertion and adultery the wife forgave him and they returned to cohabitation. He subsequently committed adultery :—Held, that the subsequent adultery revived the desertion, and that the wife was entitled to a dissolution of the marriage. Blandford v. Blandford, 52 L. J., P. 17 ; 8 P. D. 19 ; 48 L. T. 238 ; 31 W. R. 508.

—— Scotch Law.]—By the law of Scotland full condonation of adultery (remission expressly or by implication in full knowledge of the acts forgiven), followed by cohabitation as man and wife, is a remissio injuriæ absolute and unconditional, and affords an absolute bar to any action of divorce founded on the condoned acts of adultery. Nor can condonation of adultery—cohabitation following—be made conditional by any arrangement between the spouses. Although the condoned adultery cannot be founded on, condonation does not extinguish the guilty acts entirely, and they may be proved so far as they tend to throw light upon charges of adultery posterior to the condonation. The doctrine laid down in Durant v. Durant (1 Hagg. Ecc. Rep. at p. 761) not approved without qualification. Dent v. Dent (4 Sw. & Tr. 106), direction of Lord Penzance to the jury, questioned on principle, and distinguished from Blandford v. Blandford (8 P. D. 19). Collins v. Collins, 9 App. Cas. 205 ; 32 W. R. 500—H. L. (Sc.)

A wife confessed to several acts of adultery with E. Her husband forgave her and resumed cohabitation on the alleged condition that she should not speak or hold any communication with E. again. Subsequently she met E. by appointment several times under suspicious circumstances ; but, admittedly, no act of adultery could be proved. The husband sued for a dissolution of the marriage on the ground that the condoned adultery was revived by the wife's subsequent conduct :—Held, that to obtain a divorce he must prove adultery subsequent to the condonation, and no less. Ib.

See Lord Watson's opinion, for the terms of a remission of adultery which would not constitute plena condonatio in the law of Scotland. Ib.

—— Doctrine of Revival.]—Per Lord Blackburn :—The doctrine of revival of adultery as a ground on which a divorce has been granted is to be strongly objected to as varying the status of married persons. On principle, a reconciliation being entered into with full knowledge of the guilt and with free and deliberate intention to forgive it, where that reconciliation is followed by living together as man and wife, the status of the couple ought to be the same and not more precarious than if there was a new marriage. Ib.

Per Lord Blackburn :—Assuming it to be now established English law that any matrimonial offence, though forgiven, may be revived by any other matrimonial offence of which the courts take cognizance, it is very modern law and not so obviously just and expedient that this house ought to infer that it either was or ought to have been introduced into the law of Scotland. Ib. See Bigwood v. Bigwood, col. 757.

As to claim for damages after condonation, see col. 783.

Of Cruelty.]—Condonation is not absolute forgiveness, but forgiveness on the implied condition that the misconduct condoned shall not be repeated. Harsh and insulting treatment, though unaccompanied by personal violence, constitutes a breach of such implied condition in a case of cruelty. Curtis v. Curtis, 1 Sw. & Tr. 192 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 73. Affirmed, on appeal, 28 L. J., Mat. 55.

Cruelty generally consists in a series of acts, therefore condonation is not lightly to be presumed from a continuance of cohabitation after the commission of one or even of several acts of cruelty. Ib.

Continuance of cohabitation does not necessarily constitute condonation ; it may be caused by the apprehension of some evil which is considered greater than personal injury, e.g. the privation of children. Ib.

Where, on an issue before a jury of cruelty or not cruelty, condonation by cohabitation continued after the last act of cruelty laid, appears, the court would probably refuse to pronounce a decree on a verdict finding cruelty. But if under such circumstances it would notice condonation, though not pleaded, it would also admit evidence of acts of cruelty subsequently to the condonation, though not pleaded. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 492 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 167 ; 8 W. R. 20.

—— By Wife.]—Condonation is forgiveness of a conjugal offence, with full knowledge of the facts, and in each particular case it is a question to be decided by the jury. Peacock v. Peacock, 1 Sw. & Tr. 183 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 71 ; 6 W. R. 866. S. P., Campbell v. Campbell, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 845 ; 5 W. R. 519.

Condonation will not be pressed against a wife where a probable motive of continuing cohabitation after certain acts of violence was the fear of being deprived of her children, and of leaving them to the sole control of a harsh and an excitable father. Curtis v. Curtis, 1 Sw. & Tr. 192.

Condonation is a blotting out of the offence imputed, so as to restore the offending party to the same position which he or she occupied before the offence was committed. Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, 1 Sw. & Tr. 334 ; 28 L. J., Mat. 57 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 176 ; 7 W. R. 377.

Words, however strong, can at the highest only be regarded as imperfect forgiveness, and unless followed up by something which amounts to reconciliation, and to a reinstatement of the offender in the condition in which he or she was before the transgression, such forgiveness must remain incomplete. Ib.

There can be no condonation which is not followed by conjugal cohabitation. Ib.

—— Revival by Subsequent Misconduct.] —Past cruelty condoned is subject to be revived by subsequent misconduct, such as acts of violence and threats calculated to revive a sense of insecurity and apprehension of danger. M'Keever v. M'Keever, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 26.

All condonation is conditional, and assuming certain acts of personal violence to have been condoned by continued cohabitation : — Held, that subsequent harsh and degrading treatment, short of personal violence, would cause a reasonable apprehension of further violence, and revive the former acts. Curtis v. Curtis, 1 Sw. & Tr. 192.

Acts of violence and cruelty which have been condoned may be revived without actual violence, by threats of such a nature, and so expressed, as to satisfy the court that further cohabitation would be attended with danger to the party threatened. Bostock v. Bostock, 1 Sw. & Tr. 221 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 86 ; 6 W. R. 868.

Cruelty once condoned may be so revived by subsequent adultery as to form, coupled with that adultery, ground for a sentence of dissolution. Palmer v. Palmer, 2 Sw. & Tr. 61 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 124 ; 2 L. T. 363 ; 8 W. R. 504.

Husband and wife separated by mutual consent, in consequence of the conduct of the husband towards the wife, which in itself amounted to legal cruelty : the wife afterwards sued in the Arches Court for restitution of conjugal rights, and by virtue of a decree of that court the parties again cohabited, when the husband renewed his acts of cruelty towards the wife, who continued to cohabit with him notwithstanding for six months. Upon a suit brought by the wife for a divorce, by reason of cruelty, such divorce decreed, the Judicial Committee, in affirming the sentence of the Arches Court, holding that the former cruelty was revived by the subsequent acts, and was not condoned by the cohabitation enjoined by the sentence for restitution of conjugal rights. Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Moore, P. C. 484.

Habitual unkindness may revive prior cruelty condoned. Mytton v. Mytton, 11 P. D. 141 ; 57 L. T. 92 ; 35 W. R. 368 ; 50 J. P. 488.

—— Wife's Petition—Decree Nisi not made Absolute — Petitioner Married again — Resumption of Cohabitation with Respondent.] —In a petition by the wife for a divorce on the ground of adultery and cruelty, a decree nisi was pronounced ; but no steps were taken to make it absolute. The petitioner believing that the marriage was dissolved at the end of six months, went through a form of marriage with a man with whom she cohabited for some years until he died. She then resumed cohabitation with the respondent ; but he was guilty of cruelty towards her, and she left him after living with him a year and nine months :— Held, upon an application by the petitioner to make the decree nisi absolute, the Queen's Proctor intervening, that there was nothing in the circumstances to prevent the cruelty of which the respondent had been guilty during the second cohabitation from reviving the matrimonial offences on the ground of which the decree nisi had been pronounced, and that inasmuch as it must be taken that she went through the form of marriage with another person in the honest belief that her marriage with the respondent was dissolved, the court was entitled to make the decree nisi absolute. Moore v. Moore, 62 L. J., P. 10 ; [1892] P. 382 ; 67 L. T. 539. And see col. 764.

d. Connivance and Collusion.

Connivance—On Part of Husband.]—In order to establish connivance by a husband at his wife's adultery, it must be shown that he gave a willing consent to it; that he was an accessory before the fact; mere negligence, inattention, dulness of apprehension, or indifference, will not suffice; but there must be an intention on his part that she should commit adultery. Allen v. Allen and D'Arey, 30 L. J., Mat. 2.

To establish connivance, it is not necessary to show that the husband was an accessory before the fact, or that he took active measures to bring about the result of adultery; but it must appear that he was cognisant that such a result would follow from transactions of which he approved and to which he consented. Glennie v. Glennie and Bowles, 32 L. J., Mat. 17; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1158; 11 W. R. 28.

A husband who gives a willing assent to an act of adultery by his wife, desiring that it shall be committed, is guilty of connivance, although he may take no active steps towards procuring it to be committed, and may not be an accessory before the fact. Marris v. Marris and Burke, 2 Sw. & Tr. 530; 31 L. J., Mat. 69; 5 L. T. 768.

The word "conniving" in 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 29, means not merely refusing to see an act of adultery, but also wilfully abstaining from taking any step to prevent adulterous intercourse, which, from what passes before the husband's eyes, he must reasonably expect will occur. Gipps v. Gipps, 11 H. L. Cas. 1; 4 N. R. 303; 33 L. J., Mat. 161; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 641; 10 L. T. 735; 12 W. R. 937.

A husband agreed to withdraw his suit for dissolution of marriage in consideration of a sum of money to be paid him by the co-respondent, in lieu of costs and damages, but made no stipulation as to his wife's future conduct. The co-respondent did not fulfil his part of the agreement, and there being a further case of adultery between the same parties, the petitioner filed a second petition. At the hearing, the adultery was proved:—Held, that the petitioner's conduct amounted to connivance at or consent to the wife's intercourse with the co-respondent. Ib.

Connivance is a knowledge of, and acquiescence in, the misconduct complained of. Boulting v. Boulting, 3 Sw. & Tr. 329; 33 L. J., Mat. 33; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 182; 9 L. T. 779; 12 W. R. 389.

A decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of a wife's adultery, will not be granted when the adultery has been brought about by persons acting on behalf of the petitioner, although without his knowledge. Picken v. Picken and Simmonds, 34 L. J., Mat. 22.

If a person employed by a husband to watch his wife for the purpose of obtaining evidence of her adultery, brings about an act of adultery, the husband cannot obtain a decree of dissolution on the ground of such adultery, although he may not have directed or authorised his agent to bring it about. Gower v. Gower, Pearson, Hill and Bann, 41 L. J., Mat. 49; L. R. 2 P. 428; 27 L. T. 43; 20 W. R. 889.

In a husband's suit for dissolution on the ground of adultery, the respondent pleaded connivance, wilful neglect, and conduct conducing to adultery. In support of these pleas it was proved that the petitioner had permitted the co-respondent to visit frequently at his house in his absence, to send provisions into his house, and to make his wife an allowance of 1*l.* a week, and that he had sent his wife to borrow money from the co-respondent, also that he had allowed him to escort her to London; the jury found the issue of adultery in favour of the petitioner, and acquitted him of connivance, but found that he had been guilty of wilful neglect and conduct conducing to the adultery; the court refused to grant a decree nisi, and dismissed the petition. It also condemned him in his wife's costs, but made no order as to the co-respondent's costs. Brown v. Brown and Robey, 21 L. T. 181.

If a husband, whose wife is leading a life of prostitution, pays money, or causes money to be paid, to a person to commit an act of adultery with her, in order that he may obtain evidence to enable him to institute a suit for a dissolution of his marriage, the court will not grant a decree in consequence of the act of adultery so committed with his concurrence. Sugg v. Sugg and Moore, 31 L. J., Mat. 41.

—— On Part of Wife.]—A deed of separation, securing an allowance to a wife, does not prove the wife's connivance at the husband's adultery, in the absence of evidence that, at the time when it was entered into, she was aware of the adulterous intercourse which the husband had then established with another woman, and that she consented to its being continued. Ross v. Ross, 38 L. J., Mat. 49; L. R. 1 P. 734; 20 L. T. 853.

If a wife, although unwilling to consent that her husband should live in adultery, ultimately gives her consent for the sake of obtaining an allowance from him, she is guilty of connivance. Ib.

To constitute connivance on the part of the wife, it is not necessary that there should be a willing consent to the adultery of the husband. She may be unwilling to consent to his living with another woman; but if under pressure of circumstances, short of force in the nature of duress, she should withdraw her scruples, that would amount to connivance. Ib.

A husband and wife executed a deed of separation in 1854, which recited that the husband had for some months been living with a Miss H., and referred to certain articles of agreement concerning certain trust moneys and other property to which Miss H. as well as the husband and wife had been parties. In 1860 the wife petitioned for a judicial separation on the ground of the husband's adultery with H. in 1858-1859:—Held, that the execution of the deed of separation by the wife, knowing at the time that the husband was cohabiting with H., was virtually a consent to the continuance of such cohabitation, and the court dismissed the petition. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 Sw. & Tr. 113; 3 L. T. 180.

A domiciled Englishman, in 1850, left his wife in England and went to America. In 1852 his wife joined him there. In 1856, at her suit, an American court dissolved the marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery, giving both parties liberty to marry again. The husband subsequently married A., and remained in America, but whether he had abandoned his English domicil did not appear. In a suit by the wife for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, the only evidence of adultery was the husband's cohabitation with A. after the American sentence of divorce:—Held, that the cohabitation with A. would not support the charge of adultery; for if the sentence of the American court was valid the husband was at liberty to marry again; and if invalid, inasmuch as it was obtained at the wife's instance, she could not complain of the probable consequences, but might be considered to have connived at the adultery. Palmer v. Palmer, 1 Sw. & Tr. 551; 29 L. J., Mat. 26; 2 L. T. 88.

Collusion.]—Collusion may exist when, both being guilty, the husband and wife agree to present before the court the guilt of one only of the parties, in order to obtain a divorce which they both desire. Gray v. Gray, 2 Sw. & Tr. 559.

Collusion may consist in keeping back evidence of what would be a good answer, or by agreeing to set up a false case. Jessop v. Jessop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 302; 30 L. J., Mat. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 609; 4 L. T. 308; 9 W. R. 640.

In an undefended suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the adultery of the wife, it appeared at the hearing that the wife had given the petitioner's solicitor a photograph of herself, and attended in court at the hearing to aid in her identification, and for so doing received money from the solicitor. The court, notwithstanding, being satisfied upon the evidence that there was no collusion between the petitioner and respondent, pronounced a decree nisi. Harris v. Harris and Lambert, 31 L. J., Mat. 160.

In order to establish collusion against a petitioner and the respondent in a suit for a dissolution of marriage, it is necessary to prove that there was some understanding or agreement between them. Gethin v. Gethin, 31 L. J., Mat. 43.

Though the court may be satisfied that the adultery is proved, and that the petitioner was neither accessory to nor conniving at it, it will dismiss the petition, if it appears that the parties, or their agents with their knowledge, were acting in concert with each other as to the conduct and prosecution of the suit. Lloyd v. Lloyd and Chichester, 1 Sw. & Tr. 567; 30 L. J., Mat. 97.

If it is shown that a husband has promised his wife to commit adultery, in order that she may obtain a divorce, and that the wife follows a course the husband has indicated, to watch him, and that adultery takes place subject to that understanding, and that evidence is obtained accordingly, the court will hold that the parties are acting collusively, and will dismiss the petition. Todd v. Todd, 35 L. J., Mat. 34; L. R. 1 P. 121; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 237; 13 L. T. 759; 14 W. R. 350.

An agreement between the parties to a divorce suit to withhold any relevant evidence from the court amounts to collusion. Bacon v. Bacon and Ashby, 25 W. R. 560.

A husband, before commencing a suit for dissolution of marriage, agreed with his wife that, if no opposition was offered to his petition, he would pay the costs of all parties. The respondent and co-respondent did not appear. After a decree nisi the queen's proctor intervened, and the respondent gave evidence of the husband's promise as to the costs, and also alleged that he had been guilty of cruelty and had connived at her cohabitation with the co-respondent. The court held that the parties had been guilty of collusion, and rescinded the decree nisi. Ib.

If, by agreement between the parties to a divorce suit, pertinent and material facts which might be adduced in evidence in support of a counter-charge against the petitioner by the respondent or co-respondent, be withheld from the court, such agreement will amount to collusion, even though the suppressed facts might not have been sufficient to establish the counter-charge. Hunt v. Hunt and Wright, 47 L. J., P. 22; 39 L. T. 45.

—— Husband Paying Wife Money during Progress of Suit.]—The fact that a husband makes his wife an allowance in lieu of alimony whilst a divorce suit is pending is not of itself proof of collusion. But evidence that a husband had several interviews with his wife both before and after he presented a petition for dissolution, and at these interviews gave her money, and urged her not to oppose the petition, and promised that if she did not he would do no harm to the co-respondent, and would be a friend to her when the decree was obtained, proves collusion, the respondent and co-respondent not having appeared at the hearing, and material facts showing that the petitioner had by his conduct conduced to the respondent's adultery having been withheld from the court. Barnes v. Barnes and Grimwade, 37 L. J., Mat. 4; L. R. 1 P. 505; 17 L. T. 268; 16 W. R. 281.

—— Suppression of Facts material to, though not sufficient to Establish, Counter-charge—Right to Decree Absolute.]—A wife having petitioned for a divorce from her husband on the ground of his cruelty and adultery with several women, the husband presented a counter-petition on the ground of his wife's adultery. During the trial of the petitions, the husband and wife, by their respective solicitors, entered into an agreement that the wife should give evidence of cruelty to the satisfaction of the court, and of the husband's adultery with W., one of the women charged, and that if the court was satisfied on that evidence the decree should go, the wife should withdraw the other charges, and the husband should withdraw his petition. The wife's counsel proceeded with the trial as if the agreement had not been entered into; but the husband's counsel acted in accordance with instructions based on the agreement, and did not cross-examine the wife. The jury found that the husband had committed adultery with W. only, that he had been guilty of cruelty, and that the wife had not committed adultery. On these findings a decree nisi was granted. The queen's proctor intervened, and after a hearing at which further evidence was adduced, the judge left to the jury the questions (1) Were material facts withheld from the knowledge of the court? (2) Was there collusion? (3) Did the wife commit adultery? The jury answered the two first questions in the affirmative, but were unable to agree as to the third:—Held, first, that under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, a wife was deprived of her right to a decree, not only if she had been guilty of a matrimonial offence, but also if her petition had been presented or prosecuted in collusion with the respondent; and secondly, that an agreement between the parties to a divorce suit to withhold from the court pertinent and material facts, which might have been adduced on the trial in support of a counter-charge, amounted to collusion, even though the facts suppressed might not have been sufficient to establish such counter-charge. Alexandre v. Alexandre (L. R. 2 P. 164) considered. Butler v. Butler, 59 L. J., P.

As to Costs.]—A petitioner having been found guilty of collusion, and the suppression of material facts, the decree nisi which he had obtained was rescinded, and the petition was dismissed; but, having incurred expense in preparing to meet a charge of adultery, which was withdrawn, he was not condemned in the costs of the intervention. Ib.

Scotch Divorce obtained by Collusion.]—B., an Englishman, married in England H., an Englishwoman, but they separated, and he lived apart, in adultery with another woman. S. wished to marry H., and he induced B. to go to and reside in Scotland for forty days in order to give the Scotch court jurisdiction to entertain a suit to be brought against him by H. for a divorce; and there was an agreement between S. and B. that S. should pay B. a sum of money, but only in case B. gave no information which should be prejudicial to the divorce. The suit was instituted, and a decree of divorce obtained:—Held, that the Scotch divorce was null and void quoad its operation in England, because the divorce was obtained by collusion. Shaw v. Gould, 37 L. J., Ch. 433; L. R. 3 H. L. 55; 18 L. T. 833.

An agreement by which the former and guilty husband should receive a sum of money for bringing himself within the reach of the Scotch court, so as to enable his wife to institute a suit for divorce, to be determined on its merits, would not be objectionable on the ground of collusion. But an agreement that he should forfeit a sum of money if he, or any one through him, gave information which should be prejudicial to the divorce, would be such a collusion as would have the effect of invalidating the decree of divorce. Ib.

Agreement—Wife to facilitate Proceedings for Divorce.]—Where an Englishman married a Frenchwoman and they resided in France, where their children were born, and suits were instituted between them in both countries, and were compromised by an agreement, of which part was that the wife would facilitate proceedings for a divorce, and another part was, that one of the children should remain with his mother, and a third part related to the payment of an allowance to the wife:—Held, that even supposing the parties to be domiciled in France, and the agreement to be governed by French law, and to be valid according to that law, and to have been performed as to the parts which were invalid according to English law, it could not be enforced here as to any part of it. Hope v. Hope, 8 De G. M. & G. 731; 26 L. J., Ch. 417; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 5 W. R. 387.

Agreement between Husband and Adulterer.]—On the termination of an adulterous intercourse, an agreement was entered into between the husband and the adulterer, officers in the same regiment stationed in India, that the latter should pay the expenses of the wife's return to England, and should allow her 100*l.* a year, and should exchange into another regiment, the husband undertaking that the adulterer should be put to no expense by any proceedings to be taken for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. The adulterer fulfilled the agreement with the exception of his promise to exchange into another regiment:—Held, first, that as the agreement was made, not with a view to the continuation of the adulterous intercourse, but for the purpose of restoring the wife to her friends, it was no bar to a divorce. Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe and Anderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 467; 29 L. J., Mat. 171; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 714; 7 W. R. 726.

Held, secondly, that the adulterer, as he had not fulfilled his promise, ought to be condemned in costs. Ib.

A wife having carried on an adulterous intercourse with the co-respondent from 1852 till January, 1855, then left her home, and went to reside in the house of the co-respondent, and subsequently lived with him as his wife. In February, 1855, a deed of separation was entered into between the husband, his wife, and the co-respondent, by which the husband covenanted with the co-respondent to permit his wife to live separate from him, as if she were unmarried, and to allow her a certain sum for her maintenance; and the co-respondent covenanted that the wife should not molest her husband, that she should maintain a child to which she had given birth in 1853, and that he should indemnify the husband against her debts. The husband was aware of the adulterous intercourse, and he admitted, on being examined by the court, that he had always believed that the co-respondent was the father of the child born in 1853. He had nevertheless allowed the co-respondent subsequently to its birth to visit at his house. A petition being presented by the husband for a dissolution of marriage, was dismissed on the ground that the husband knew of the adulterous intercourse, and that the deed of separation was virtually an assignment by him of his wife to the co-respondent. Walton v. Walton, 28 L. J., Mat. 97. Cooke v. Cooke, 11 W. R. 957; Matthews v. Matthews, 8 W. R. 51.

When Collusion will not be Inferred.]—A husband and wife, after a cohabitation of three years, separated, having first both signed an agreement which concluded in these words:—"Mrs. S. promises that if she does not fulfil her part of the agreement, Major S. shall have the full power of a husband over her, whatever his way of living may be":—Held, that a sufficient meaning is given to these last words if they are construed to apply to the place where, and the mode, as regards his establishment, in which, the husband may choose to live, and that it is not necessary to infer from them that the wife intended to give leave to her husband to commit adultery for the future. Studdy v. Studdy, 1 Sw. & Tr. 321; 28 L. J., Mat. 44; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 22; 7 W. R. 144. Affirmed on appeal, 28 L. J., Mat. 105.

e. Conduct conducing to Adultery.

Discretion of Court.]—The court may, if it thinks the circumstances of the case warrant it in so doing, exercise the discretion given it by s. 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and pronounce a decree nisi in favour of a husband who has been found guilty of "wilful neglect or misconduct conducing to" the adultery of his wife. But no general rule can be laid down for the exercise of such discretion, which must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. Parry v. Parry, 65 L. J., P. 35; [1896] P. 37; 73 L. T. 759.

Semble, that where such discretion is so exercised it ought to be upon the terms of the husband making provision for his wife's maintenance to such amount and in such manner as the court shall think right. Ib.

Neglect or Misconduct conducing to Adultery.]—The petitioner, who was an engine-driver, earning 24*s.* a week, married the respondent in 1876, and in 1878 separated from her because she had run him into debt. She went into domestic service, and subsequently formed an adulterous intercourse with the co-respondent, and continued to cohabit with him as his wife up to the date of the petition, the husband meantime having not in any way contributed to her support or concerned himself about her in any way:—Held, that he had been guilty of such "wilful neglect and misconduct" as justified the court in exercising the discretion vested in it by s. 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and refused to dissolve the marriage. Starbuck v. Starbuck, 59 L. J., P. 20; 61 L. T. 876.

Neglect of Husband must be Considerable.]—The misconduct conducing to adultery intended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, is not mere carelessness. Before a husband is found guilty of such misconduct, it must be proved that there was an intimacy between the respondent and the co-respondent of such a character as to be distinctly dangerous, that he actually knew so much of the intimacy as to perceive the danger, and that he either purposely or recklessly disregarded it, and forebore to interfere. Dering v. Dering and Blakeley, 37 L. J., Mat. 52; L. R. 1 P. 531; 19 L. T. 48.

The "wilful neglect or misconduct" which, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, is made a bar to the husband's right to a decree is not that neglect or misconduct which may have led to any particular act of adultery after the wife's lapse from virtue, but the neglect or misconduct which has directly conduced to her fall. St. Paul v. St. Paul and Farquhar, L. R. 1 P. 739; 21 L. T. 108; 17 W. R. 1111.

The cases are few in which the court would be justified in visiting with the penalty of adultery a guilty wife whose husband has also been found guilty of adultery. Barnes v. Barnes and Beaumont, 38 L. J., Mat. 10; L. R. 1 P. 572; 19 L. T. 526.

The misconduct intended by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, which, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, gives the court an option as to dissolving the marriage, although the case of the petitioner may have been proved, if he has been guilty of such wilful neglect or misconduct as has conduced to the adultery, is misconduct amounting to a breach of marital duty. Cunnington v. Cunnington and Noble, 1 Sw. & Tr. 475; 28 L. J., Mat. 101; 8 W. R. 3. See also Brown v. Brown and Robey, 21 L. T. 181.

Adultery procured by Agent.]—The wife, who was living apart from her husband, employed her solicitors to watch him. Unknown to her, and without her authority, the solicitor's clerk induced the respondent to commit adultery. A decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage was granted on his evidence and the wife's as to acts of cruelty. The queen's proctor intervened on the ground that the petitioner was not entitled to a decree on the ground of such adultery;—Held, that the decree nisi must be rescinded; but, as the intervention of the queen's proctor did not touch the wife's charge of cruelty, the petition would not be dismissed, so as to give her an opportunity of applying for a judicial separation. Gower v. Gower (41 L. J., P. 49) and Picken v. Picken (34 L. J., P. 22) followed. Bell v. Bell, 58 L. J., P. 54.

Refusal by Wife to Consummate—Bigamy and Adultery—Unreasonable Delay—Judicial Separation.]—A husband and wife married in 1872, the marriage was never consummated owing to the wife's refusal to submit to marital intercourse; the parties shortly afterwards separated. In 1874 the husband contracted a bigamous marriage with another woman. In 1886 the wife made inquiries as to her husband's conduct and in 1889 obtained full knowledge of the facts, but did not institute proceedings till 1891, when she prayed for a divorce on the ground of bigamy and adultery:—Held, that the delay was unreasonable, that her conduct was misconduct conducing to her husband's adultery, and therefore a divorce was not granted but only a judicial separation to which latter case neither wilful misconduct nor unreasonable delay constitute any bar. Dixon v. Dixon, 67 L. T. 394.

Pregnancy Dangerous to Wife—Separation—Adultery of Wife.]—The petitioner married the respondent in 1873, and they lived together very happily till the birth of the only child, early in 1874, shortly after which event the respondent's mind became temporarily unhinged, and she was removed to an asylum, from which, towards the end of the same year, she was discharged as cured. The petitioner was, however, advised by his wife's medical attendant that further cohabitation, if it resulted in pregnancy, would probably prove dangerous to the respondent and any future offspring. By the consent of the families of both parties, it was arranged that they should live apart, the wife having the child with her, and the husband making her an allowance. The petitioner corresponded with his wife until 1880, when he refused all further direct communication, but continued the allowance through his solicitor; and throughout the separation he declined all private interviews with his wife, although urgently and repeatedly requested and begged for by her. In 1879 he wrote that she was not to inquire into his mode of life, and he would not interfere with hers:—Held, that he was not disentitled to a divorce, on the ground of his wife's subsequent adultery. Lander v. Lander, 63 L. T. 257.

Conviction of Husband under Criminal Law Amendment Act—Wilful Neglect and Misconduct by Respondent conducing to such Adultery—Discretion of Court.]—The parties to a suit for dissolution of marriage were married in 1863. During the next five years the husband was frequently guilty of adultery and cruelty. In 1868 he left his wife, and finally deserted her in 1870. She did not know where he was, or whether he was alive or dead, and took no trouble to find out. In 1879 she ascertained he was alive, and living at Burton-on-Trent. In 1877, being in distressed circumstances, she made the acquaintance of C., and went to cohabit with him as his wife, and continued to do so till 1892.

In 1895 the husband was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment, under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, for an assault on a young girl. In June, 1896, she obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage, on the grounds of her husband's adultery and desertion. The queen's proctor intervened, alleging the petitioner's adultery with C.:—Held, that the respondent had been guilty of wilful neglect and misconduct conducing to the petitioner's adultery, and that, taking all the circumstances into consideration, the case was one in which the court was justified in exercising its discretion under s. 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. Decree made absolute. No order as to costs, the queen's proctor's intervention being thoroughly justifiable. Symons v. Symons, 66 L. J., P. 81; [1897] P. 167; 77 L. T. 142.

Leaving Wife without Means.]—In a suit for a dissolution of marriage, on the ground of a wife's adultery, it appeared that the husband, a draper's assistant, then twenty-one, married a woman whom he well knew to be a prostitute. A month after the marriage they removed from the lodgings to the house of his father, from which, after a stay of a few weeks, they were compelled to remove in consequence of the wife exhibiting bad temper and making herself disagreeable to the family. Ten days afterwards the husband went to America, not on business, but because he lived unhappily with his wife, leaving her without any means of subsistence, and supplying her with none during an absence of four years. After he left, his family had given the wife a small pittance on one occasion, and had promised to give her further assistance, but in consequence of her annoying them all intercourse with her was broken off. The wife after her husband left, returned to her former way of life:—Held, that there was a wilful separation of the husband from the wife before the adultery complained of, and that it was without reasonable excuse, and, in the exercise of the discretion given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, the court refused to decree a dissolution of the marriage. Coulthart v. Coulthart and Gouthwaite, 28 L. J., Mat. 21.

A husband was proved to have left his wife, with an expressed intention not to return to cohabitation with her; and for many years he had not provided her with a maintenance or a home. On two or three occasions on which he saw her during this period his sole object was to obtain her money:—Held, that the separation could not be taken to be by mutual consent, because the wife in her letters, written after the desertion, made use of casual expressions, wrung from her by his misconduct, purporting that she did not desire to see him or that he should visit her. Meara v. Meara, 35 L. J., Mat. 33; 14 W. R. 349.

Drunkenness of Wife—Delay.]—In a suit by the husband for divorce on the ground of adultery, which was not defended, the husband admitted that on his wife becoming addicted to habits of intoxication he left her, after eleven years of cohabitation, broke up his home and sold his furniture with the intention of getting rid of her. He made her no allowance and never saw her until eight years after the separation, when he met her by accident. Five years after that meeting he filed the petition. The adultery was proved:—Held, that the conduct of the husband disentitled him to a divorce, and that the petition must be dismissed. Heyes v. Heyes, 36 W. R. 527. Affirming, 57 L. J., P. 22; 13 P. D. 11; 57 L. T. 815; 51 J. P. 775.

Leaving Wife with Small Allowance.]—The parties to a marriage separated by mutual consent after a few days' cohabitation, and lived apart for sixteen years. The petitioner allowed his wife a small sum monthly, but never saw her. Subsequently he ascertained that she was living in adultery, and instituted a suit for dissolution; but the court held that he had been guilty of conduct conducing to the adultery, and dismissed the petition. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 54 L. J., P. 94; 10 P. D. 177; 34 W. R. 47.

Husband Living Apart with Reasonable Cause.]—A husband and wife were in service, in the same family, at the time of their marriage. Shortly after the husband, to improve his position, went into service elsewhere, leaving the wife in the same service. The wife committed adultery with a fellow-servant:—Held, that the husband had not been guilty of desertion or wilful separation without reasonable excuse, and the court dissolved the marriage. Davies v. Davies and Hughes, 3 Sw. & Tr. 221; 32 L. J., Mat. 111; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 828; 8 L. T. 703; 11 W. R. 402.

A young man who had just taken his degree at Cambridge married a prostitute, and never afterwards cohabited with her. He had no means of providing a home for her, or of contributing to her support, and the day after the marriage he separated from her, and went to live with his father, who, on being informed of the marriage some months afterwards, caused a deed of separation to be executed, by which an allowance of 1*l.* a week was secured to her. This allowance was paid by the husband's father. After the execution of the deed the wife was guilty of adultery. In a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage:—Held, that the separation, if wilful, was not without reasonable excuse, and that the petitioner was entitled to a decree. Proctor v. Proctor, Smith and Pitman, 4 Sw. & Tr. 140; 34 L. J., Mat. 99; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 531; 12 L. T. 505; 13 W. R. 963.

A ward in chancery who had no means of his own, at sixteen, married clandestinely a prostitute of about the age of thirty-five. The Master of the Rolls, a month after the marriage, ordered that the husband should be delivered into the custody of his guardian, with liberty for the guardian to send him abroad, and that the wife should be restrained from holding any communication with him. In pursuance of this order, he was sent abroad against his will. The wife being left without means of support, she applied to her husband's guardian for money, but it was refused. For some months after the marriage she conducted herself properly, and then relapsed into her former course of life. In a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage:—Held, that as the separation was on the husband's part, involuntary, and he had no means wherewith to contribute to his wife's support, he had not wilfully separated himself from her, nor been guilty of such neglect or misconduct as had conduced to the adultery so as to give the court a discretionary power to refuse to dissolve the marriage. Beavan v. Beavan, 2 Sw. & Tr. 652; 32 L. J., Mat. 36; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1110; 7 L. T. 435; 11 W. R. 155.

Wife Living Apart with Reasonable Cause.]—A girl, aged sixteen, left her home one morning and without the consent or knowledge of any of her friends married a man aged thirty-six, with whom they were unacquainted. Immediately after the ceremony she returned home and informed her mother of the marriage. Inquiries having been made as to the character of the husband, it was found that he was not a suitable husband for her. Her friends accordingly immediately removed her to the continent, where she remained for some years. She never cohabited with her husband, and never saw him after the marriage, nor did he make any attempts to get her to live with him. The husband having subsequently been guilty of bigamy with adultery, the court dissolved the marriage at the suit of the wife, being of opinion, that, under the circumstances, there was reasonable excuse for the separation. Du Terreaux v. Du Terreaux, 1 Sw. & Tr. 555; 28 L. J., Mat. 95.

Imprisonment of Husband.] — A husband, shortly after his marriage, was convicted of felony, and sentenced to transportation. Whilst he was undergoing penal servitude, his wife committed adultery with a man who resided in the house where she went to board. She had been previously much attached to her husband, and from the circumstances of the case there was no reason to doubt that, but for her husband's absence, caused by his own misconduct, she would have remained faithful to him:—Held, in a suit by the husband for a dissolution of marriage, that the felony committed by him, not being a violation of marital duty, was not misconduct within the meaning of s. 31, and, therefore, that the case of the husband having been proved, the court was bound to dissolve the marriage. Cunnington v. Cunnington and Noble, 1 Sw. & Tr. 475; 28 L. J., Mat. 101; 8 W. R. 3.

Held, also, that the felony did not conduce to the adultery as though a sine quâ non, it was not directly or indirectly a causa causans. Ib. See also Astrope v. Astrope, 29 L. J., Mat. 27, ante, col. 739, and col. 755.

—— Of Wife.]—Semble, that the conviction of a wife for an offence against the criminal law is no justification for refusing further cohabitation with her, and that, if such refusal conduces to her adultery, the court will not grant her husband a dissolution of his marriage. Williamson v. Williamson and Bates, 51 L. J., P. 54; 7 P. D. 76; 46 L. T. 920; 30 W. R. 616.

Husband not giving Protection to Wife.]—A husband is bound to give his wife the security and comfort of his home and society so far as his position and business will admit, and if the court is satisfied that the husband has failed in this duty, it will, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to dissolve the marriage by reason of the wife's adultery. Jeffreys v. Jeffreys and Smith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 493; 33 L. J., Mat. 84; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 572; 10 L. T. 309; 12 W. R. 809.

A man having married a woman of loose character, with whom he had previously cohabited, separated from her against her will shortly after the marriage, and sent her to live by herself in a place where she could be accessible to temptation, and where she was guilty of adultery. There was no evidence that there was any reasonable cause for the separation. The court was of opinion that this was conduct conducing to her adultery, and dismissed his petition for dissolution of marriage. Baylis v. Baylis, Trevan and Cooper, 36 L. J., Mat. 89; L. R. 1 P. 395; 16 L. T. 613; 15 W. R. 1092.

A husband shortly after his marriage was, with his wife, residing in the house of his mother. The wife, in consequence of some disagreement with her mother-in-law, insisted on leaving the house, and on her husband declining to do so, she, with his consent, left, and took lodgings elsewhere, where she remained three months; during this time her husband continued to reside apart from her, allowing her a small sum weekly for her maintenance, and visiting her occasionally, but only passed the night with her three times. On calling at her lodgings he frequently found her absent as late as eleven and twelve o'clock at night, she having no occupation which necessitated her absence from home. The wife committed adultery whilst living apart from her husband. The court refused to dissolve the marriage at the suit of the husband, although his case was proved, on the ground that he had been guilty of wilful neglect, which had conduced to the adultery. Groves v. Groves and Thompson, 28 L. J., Mat. 108.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of a wife's adultery, it appeared that the husband had wilfully separated himself from his wife shortly after the marriage; but it was doubtful whether or not he did so without reasonable excuse; the only evidence as to the cause of the separation being a statement by the wife, that "her husband had left her because he had caught her with a young man." The court thinking that the husband might not have had reasonable excuse for leaving her, examined him; when it appeared that he had found her submitting to indecent liberties, and had immediately broken off all intercourse with her:—Held, that as it did not appear affirmatively that there was not reasonable excuse for the separation, the court had no discretionary power, but was bound to dissolve the marriage. Haswell v. Haswell and Sanderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 502; 29 L. J., Mat. 21; 1 L. T. 69; 8 W. R. 76.

6. Damages.

a. In Action for Criminal Conversation.

Action generally.]—To a declaration, for that the defendant debauched and carnally knew the plaintiff's wife, the defendant pleaded not guilty:—Held, that under this issue it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the female, alleged to have been debauched, was his wife. Kenrick v. Horder, 7 El. & Bl. 628; 26 L. J., Q. B. 214; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 441; 5 W. R. 530.

In order to support an action for crim. con. the plaintiff was bound to prove a marriage in fact, i.e. an actual marriage, either valid or voidable, and not yet avoided. Catherwood v. Caslon, 13 M. & W. 261; Car. & M. 431; 13 L. J., Ex. 334; 8 Jur. 1076.

A deed of separation did not preclude the action. Chambers v. Caulfield, 6 East, 244.

If the husband was himself privy to the intercourse, he could not maintain the action. Wasley v. Bissett, 2 Term Rep. 168, n. S. P., Winter v. Henn, 4 Car. & P. 494.

Amount of Defendant's Property not Relevant.]—Evidence on the part of the plaintiff to show the amount of the defendant's property was not admissible. James v. Briddington, 6 Car. & P. 589.

Death of Wife after Action.]—If it appeared that the wife had died since the commencement of the action, the jury was to give damages for the loss of the society of the wife from the time of the discovery of the adultery to the time of her death; and also for the shock to the feelings of the husband; and this was so, although it appeared there was no suspicion of her infidelity till she was on her death-bed, and though the husband continued to treat her kindly up to the time of her death. Wilton v. Webster, 7 Car. & P. 198.

Clandestine Marriage with Actress.]—It was not matter of defence, but only in mitigation of damages, that the plaintiff married an actress, concealed the marriage from her mother, and very seldom saw his wife, but suffered his wife to remain living with her mother, as if a single woman, and allowed her to continue her theatrical performances in her maiden name. Calcraft v. Harborough (Earl), 4 Car. & P. 499.

Complaints of Ill-treatment by Wife.]—Evidence might be given in reduction of damages that the wife, before the criminal intercourse, had complained of her husband's treatment of her. Winter v. Wroot, 1 M. & Rob. 404.

b. Co-respondent to Divorce Petition, against.

Petition—Amount to be stated in.]—Where damages are claimed against a co-respondent, the petition should specify the amount claimed. Spedding v. Spedding, 31 L. J., Mat. 96.

Jurisdiction.]—Per Lindley, L.J.: Claims for damages are placed wholly under the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court, and can only be made by petition, and the damages recovered are placed under the control of the court. The petition must be served on the wife, unless the court dispenses with such service. The petition must be dismissed, if the petitioner has been accessory to or conniving at the adultery complained of, or has condoned the same. The claim for damages is subject to all these overriding provisions. Bernstein v. Bernstein, 63 L. J., P. 3; [1893] P. 292; 69 L. T. 513.

Co-Respondent not Appearing.]—Where a co-respondent, against whom damages are claimed, does not appear, the jury is bound to assume that he is guilty of the adultery charged, and to assess damages against him. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 608; 34 L. J., Mat. 33; 11 L. T. 515; 13 W. R. 414.

Reinstatement of Claim after Withdrawal.]—A claim for damages having been formally withdrawn, the court refused to allow it to be reinstated in the petition, the petitioner having failed to show that it was withdrawn in error, or that an altered state of circumstances had arisen which would justify its reinsertion. Sykes v. Sykes and Smith, 38 L. J., Mat. 12; 19 L. T. 611.

Principle of Assessment.] — In assessing damages against a co-respondent the jury is not to seek to punish him, but is only to give compensation for the loss which the husband has sustained, and is to consider whether this loss has been caused by the action of the co-respondent. In a case where the wife has not been seduced away from the husband by the co-respondent, the jury must take into consideration the conduct of the husband and the protection or assistance which he may have afforded to her after the separation. The means of the co-respondent are not in any way to be considered as a measure of damages. Keyes v. Keyes, 55 L. J., P. 54; 11 P. D. 100; 34 W. R. 791.

Measure of Damages.] — The measure of damages is, the value of the wife of whom the husband has been deprived. Cowing v. Cowing and Wollen, 33 L. J., Mat. 149.

A claim for damages in a divorce case is founded upon the hypothesis that the husband has suffered injury by being deprived of his wife's society through the wrongful act of the co-respondent. In order to award any damages it is necessary to find (1) that the husband has in fact been damnified, (2) that such damage has been brought about by the wrongful act of the co-respondent, without any fault on the part of the husband. It is no part of the functions of the jury to punish the adulterer for his immorality. Their sole duty is to compensate the husband for the injury (if any) which he has suffered through the wrongful act of the co-respondent. If a husband has a virtuous wife taken from him by the contrivance of another man, he is entitled to damages commensurate with the loss of such a wife; but if she has led a loose life before marriage, her value is not the same as that of a virtuous woman. In estimating the amount of damages to be awarded, the fact that the wife was earning money, of a portion of which the petitioner had the advantage, may properly be taken into account; but the co-respondent's means must be left entirely out of the question. Darbishire v. Darbishire, 62 L. T. 664; 54 J. P. 408.

When a petitioner claims damages against the co-respondent, if the adultery of the respondent and co-respondent is proved, the jury is bound to assess the damages at a specific sum, however small. The jury cannot find a verdict that the petitioner has sustained no damage. Anon., 31 L. J., Mat. 96, n.

The jury is to take into consideration the same circumstances as would have been considered by a jury in an action for criminal conversation. Comyn v. Comyn and Humphreys, 32 L. J., Mat. 210.

—— Means of Co-Respondent.]—On the hearing of a husband's petition for dissolution of marriage, in assessing damages against a co-respondent his means are irrelevant; the measure of damages is the injury to the petitioner. Bikker v. Bikker and Whitewood, 1 R. 496; 67 L. T. 721.

As a general rule evidence of a co-respondent's means is inadmissible. Cowing v. Cowing and Wollen, 33 L. J., Mat. 149.

Semble, the jury may take a co-respondent's wealth into consideration if he has used it as a means of seducing the wife. Ib.

On an issue of adultery raised between husband and wife, to be tried by a jury who has also to assess damages against a co-respondent who has not appeared, no evidence which is not admissible against the respondent can be given to show that the co-respondent has been guilty of adultery; but evidence in aggravation of damages is admissible. The jury found a verdict for the respondent, and assessed the damages at one farthing. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, supra.

—— Connivance of Petitioner.]—Where the jury found adultery, connivance on behalf of a petitioner, and assessed the damages at 50*l.*, the court refused to grant a rule nisi for a new trial, holding that there could be no doubt of the substantial meaning of the jury in their verdict of connivance, and that it was sufficiently founded on the evidence. Ellyatt v. Ellyatt, Taylor and Halse, 3 Sw. & Tr. 504; 33 L. J., Mat. 137; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1035; 11 L. T. 44.

—— Marriage Settlements.]—Semble, that the position of a husband as regards the marriage settlements, may properly be submitted to the jury for their consideration in the assessment of damages against the co-respondent. Bell v. Bell and Anglesey (Earl), 1 Sw. & Tr. 565; 29 L. J., Mat. 159; 1 L. T. 243; 8 W. R. 178.

—— Letters of Wife.]—The letters of the wife to her husband and others before the adulterous intercourse were admissible to show the state of her feelings, although they might also state a fact which would not strictly be evidence. Willis v. Bernard, 8 Bing. 376; 1 M. & Scott, 584; 5 Car. & P. 342; 1 L. J., C. P. 118.

Letters written by a wife to her husband (while living apart from each other), proved to have been written at the time they bore date, and when there was no reason to suspect collusion, were admissible without showing distinctly the cause of their living apart. Trelawney v. Coleman, 1 B. & Ald. 90; 2 Stark. 191; 18 R. R. 438.

If, to rebut the presumption that a wife left her husband's house from his cruel treatment of her, letters written by her to her husband in affectionate terms, were offered in evidence, it must have been proved at what time they were written, or, they were not admissible; and the dates of them were not sufficient proof of the times at which they were written. Woolston v. Smith, 2 Car. & P. 24; 3 Bing. 127; 10 Moore, 482; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 200; 28 R. R. 609.

—— Effect of Separation Deed on Amount.]—In a petition by the husband for dissolution of marriage claiming damages, it appeared that the petitioner and his wife had entered into a separation deed in consequence of her intimacy with the co-respondent, and that she committed adultery with him after the date of the deed:—Held, that the petitioner was entitled to the same amount of damages as he would have been had no separation deed been executed. Izard v. Izard, 58 L. J., P. 83; 14 P. D. 45; 60 L. T. 399; 37 W. R. 496.

—— Condonation—Claim for Damages after Condonation.]—At the trial of a petition by a husband for divorce, on the ground of the adultery of his wife with two co-respondents, and claiming damages against one of such co-respondents, the jury found that the respondent had been guilty of adultery with both co-respondents, but that the petitioner had condoned the adultery with the one against whom damages were claimed, and that no damages were payable by such co-respondent in respect of the adultery committed by him. It appeared that the condonation was subsequent to the adultery with both co-respondents, and that at the time of the condonation the petitioner did not know of the adultery with the other co-respondent:—Held, that a decree was rightly granted; for that a condonation by a husband of adultery with one person is not avoided by the fact that the wife had previously to the condonation committed acts of adultery with another person of which he was not aware; and that, although at common law condonation by the husband of an act of adultery was no bar to an action for criminal conversation against the adulterer, but only went in mitigation of damages, the case is different under the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857; and where, on a petition for divorce and for damages against the co-respondent, a divorce is refused on the ground that the adultery has been condoned, the petitioner is not entitled to a judgment, even for nominal damages, against the co-respondent; but the petition will be dismissed, and the petitioner may be ordered to pay the co-respondent's costs. Story v. Story (12 P. D. 196) approved. Pomero v. Pomero (10 P. D. 174) overruled. Bernstein v. Bernstein, 63 L. J., P. 3; [1893] P. 292; 69 L. T. 513—C. A. And see Norris v. Norris, 4 Sw. & Tr. 237.

Petition dismissed.]—If the petition is dismissed the petitioner can get no damages. Story v. Story, 57 L. J., P. 15; 12 P. D. 196; 57 L. T. 536; 36 W. R. 190; 51 J. P. 680. But see Long v. Long, 60 L. J., P. 27; 15 P. D. 218.

Co-Respondent not Answering—No Right to Address Jury.]—A co-respondent who puts in no answer, and yet appears, is not entitled to address the jury in mitigation of damages, or to cross-examine with that view. Lyne v. Lyne and Blackney, 37 L. J., Mat. 9; L. R. 1 P. 508; 17 L. T. 29; 16 W. R. 159. And see col. 872.

Apportionment of.]—A husband obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, and damages were assessed at 250*l.* On motion to make the decree nisi absolute, and to direct application of damages, the court directed all the husband's interest in the damages to be assigned by him to a trustee for the use of the only child of the marriage, and in case of the child's death under twenty-one and unmarried, for the use of the husband, and suspended the decree till such assignment should be made. Clark v. Clark and Bouch, 2 Sw. & Tr. 520; 31 L. J., Mat. 61; 6 L. T. 639; 10 W. R. 810.

The jury having assessed the damages against a co-respondent at 1,000*l.*, and condemned him in costs, the court ordered the damages to be paid to the husband in trust to pay thereout such costs as should not be recovered against the co-respondent, and as to the residue for the children of the marriage in equal shares, to be paid to them on attaining twenty-one. Spedding v. Spedding, 32 L. J., Mat. 31.

The court directed 5,000*l.* damages to be paid to the husband's solicitor; 1,000*l.* to be paid by him to the husband; out of the residue an annuity of 120*l.* to be purchased for the respondent's life, to be paid to her dum casta vixerit, with remainder to two of her daughters; and the remainder to be invested in an annuity for these two daughters. Forster v. Forster and Berridge, 3 Sw. & Tr. 158; 9 L. T. 150.

Upon pronouncing a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of a wife's adultery, the court ordered that the damages assessed by the jury should be applied, in the first instances, to the payment of so much of the petitioner's costs out of pocket as should not be taxed against the co-respondent, and that the residue should be settled upon the respondent for life dum casta vixerit; and after her death, or on breach of that condition, upon the issue of the marriage. Narracott v. Narracott and Hesketh, 3 Sw. & Tr. 408; 33 L. J., Mat. 132; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 640; 10 L. T. 389; 12 W. R. 1064.

Where it was proved on the hearing of a petition that there had been no issue of the marriage, and that at the time of the hearing the respondent was living with the co-respondent, the court made the order for the payment to the petitioner of the damages assessed against the co-respondent part of the decree nisi, instead of postponing it until the decree absolute. Evans v. Evans and Bird, L. R. 1 P. 39.

A jury found that the respondent and co-respondent had committed adultery, and assessed the damages, which they recommended should be entirely settled on the children of the marriage. The court ordered that the petitioner's surplus costs, having been taxed, should be first paid out of the fund, and that the residue should be invested in the name of a trustee, the income to be expended for the maintenance and education of the children until they were of age, when the principal would be divided between them. Billingay v. Billingay and Thomas, 35 L. J., Mat. 84.

A sum of 5,000*l.* damages was apportioned by the court as follows:—1,500*l.* was settled on the youngest child of the marriage, aged five years, the only one remaining in the husband's custody; 1,500*l.* was given to him and also his costs of the suit in addition to those which had been taxed against the co-respondent; the balance was invested in the purchase of a life annuity for the wife, to be paid to her as long as she lived chastely and did not become the wife of the co-respondent; and in the event of her breaking either of these conditions, to be paid to the husband. Meyern v. Meyern and Myers, 46 L. J., P. 5; 2 P. D. 254; 35 L. T. 909; 25 W. R. 115.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the court refused to order any part of the damages assessed to be settled on the wife, but directed them to be applied, first, to the payment of such part of the petitioner's costs as he should not recover from the co-respondent, and subject thereto, to be settled upon the issue of the marriage. Taylor v. Taylor and Wolters, 39 L. J., Mat. 23; 22 L. T. 140.

Not a Voluntary Settlement—Settling.]—It is competent to the court to make an order for the settlement of damages after the decree nisi has been made absolute. Billingay v. Billingay and Thomas, 35 L. J., P. 84; L. R. 1 P. 168.

Damages not "Property" on Bankruptcy.]—Money recovered as damages in a suit by a husband for dissolution of his marriage is not his "property" within the meaning of s. 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Stephenson, In re, Brown, Ex parte, 66 L. J., Q. B. 423; [1897] 1 Q. B. 638; 76 L. T. 328; 45 W. R. 416; 4 Manson, 13.

Agreement between Petitioner and Co-Respondent as to.]—The court is not at liberty to recognise an agreement made between the counsel of the petitioner and co-respondent in respect of the amount of damages to be paid, but is bound by the assessment of the jury. Callwell v. Callwell and Kennedy, 3 Sw. & Tr. 259.

If an order is made that the damages be paid to the petitioner in the suit, there is nothing to prevent him from coming to terms with the co-respondent, and accepting a less sum than that assessed. Dale v. Dale and Macdonell, 15 L. T. 595.

Where there was reason to apprehend that little or nothing would be recovered if the co-respondent was pressed for the full amount of the assessed damages, the court on receiving an assurance that no application would be made on behalf of the petitioner (who declared his ability and willingness to maintain the only child of the marriage) to alter the settlement, ordered the damages to be paid to him, with the view of enabling him to come to terms in respect of them with the co-respondent, who was willing to pay part but unable to pay all. Ib.

But when an order had been made as to the manner in which the damages should be applied, the court refused to sanction an agreement between the petitioner and co-respondent, by which the children were deprived of the benefit conferred upon them by such order; but as the petitioner had been put to further expense by appeals, the court varied the original order so as to give him a larger share of the damages, on the ground that the intent of the original order was to reimburse the petitioner all the expenses he had incurred. Forster v. Forster and Berridge, 4 S. & T. 131; 34 L. J., Mat. 88; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 512; 12 L. T. 504.

Motion to insert "Dum Sola" after Decree Absolute.]—After a decree was made absolute for payment of the income of the invested damages to the wife:—Held, that it was too late to apply to the court to amend the order by inserting in it, after the words "dum casta," the words "et sola." Narracott v. Narracott and Hesketh, 4 Sw. & Tr. 76; 34 L. J., Mat. 54; 11 L. T. 750; 13 W. R. 506.

Enforcing Payment.]—The court has no power to order immediate execution for recovery of damages awarded against a co-respondent, and ordered to be paid to the petitioner. Pounsford v. Pounsford and Bulpin, 2 Sw. & Tr. 389; 30 L. J., Mat. 188; 5 L. T. 139.

Or to order him to pay into court the amount of the damages. Ib. S. P., Forster v. Forster and Berridge, 32 L. J., Mat. 133.

But when damages had been ordered to be paid to a petitioner, and it appeared that he was in danger of losing them, the court made an order on the co-respondent to pay the amount within ten days after the service of the order. Bent v. Bent and Footman, 2 Sw. & Tr. 392; 30 L. J., Mat. 189; 5 L. T. 120; 10 W. R. 448.

And when damages and costs are not paid pursuant to an order of the court, leave will be granted to issue a fieri facias. Reed v. Reed, 29 L. J., Mat. 158.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, damages to the amount of 500*l.* were assessed against the co-respondent. The court granted a decree nisi, and condemned him in costs. On affidavits showing that the co-respondent was removing his effects and evading service of a peremptory order for payment of the damages, the court allowed a fi. fa. to issue forthwith, without requiring personal service of the order. Pritchard v. Pritchard and Bean, 39 L. J., Mat. 46; L. R. 2 P. 53; 22 L. T. 629.

—— Order to Pay into Court—Attachment.]—A co-respondent disobeyed the order of the court to pay into the registry the damages which had been found against him, and as there was no one to institute proceedings against him under the Debtors Act, 1869, the court ordered the damages to be paid to the petitioner, he undertaking to pay them into court. Gyte v. Gyte, 10 P. D. 185; 34 W. R. 47.

—— Receiving Order—"Judgment Creditor"—Order for Payment to Husband.]—In a divorce suit by a husband a decree for dissolution of the marriage was made whereby F., the co-respondent, was ordered to pay into court the amount of damages assessed by the jury. A further order was made that F. should pay the money to the husband for the purposes of settlement upon the children of the marriage. F. failed to pay, whereupon the husband applied to the judge in bankruptcy for a committal order under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869. F. had means sufficient to pay part only of the money. The judge, acting under s. 103, sub-s. 5, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, made a receiving order in lieu of an order for committal:—Held, that the judge had no jurisdiction to make the order, inasmuch as the husband, being a mere receiver or collector for the court of money not to be applied for his own benefit, was not a "judgment creditor" within the meaning of s. 103, sub-s. 5, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; but that an order should be made against F., under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, for payment of the money by instalments. Fryer, Ex parte, Fryer, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 478; 17 Q. B. D. 718; 55 L. T. 276; 34 W. R. 766; 3 Morrell, 231—C. A.

Execution of Deed by Person nominated by the Court.]—The jurisdiction given by the Judicature Act, 1884, s. 14, where any person neglects or refuses to comply with an order directing him to execute any instrument, to order the execution of the instrument by some person, nominated by the court to do so, may be exercised by the probate division of the high court of justice; and the order may be made upon a motion for attachment for non-compliance without formal service of a fresh notice of motion, provided the person to be affected by the order has by himself or his solicitor received notice that the application to the court will be made in the alternative form. Howarth v. Howarth, 55 L. J., P. 49; 11 P. D. 95; 55 L. T. 303; 34 W. R. 633—C. A. Affirming, 50 J. P. 376.

Attachment—Substituted Service.]—In the probate division when personal service of notice of motion to attach for non-compliance with an order cannot be effected, and the original order has been duly served, substituted service by analogy to the practice in the other divisions of the high court, is sufficient. Ib.

Bankruptcy of Co-Respondent.]—Damages having been given against a co-respondent, an order was made that the amount should be paid into the registry within a certain time. Before such order had been made, the co-respondent became a bankrupt, and a trustee of his property was appointed. The damages were not paid into the registry, nor could they be proved under the bankruptcy. In order to facilitate the latter step the court rescinded its former order and directed that the damages should be paid to the petitioner himself. Patterson v. Patterson and Graham, 40 L. J., Mat. 5; L. R. 2 P. 129; 23 L. T. 568; 19 W. R. 232.

Quære, whether the Divorce Court has power to make such an order instead of the usual order for payment into the registry of the court, and if so, whether the person to whom the payment is ordered to be made can prove for the amount under the bankruptcy of the co-respondent, notwithstanding. Ib.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage the co-respondent was ordered to pay into court the damages which had been recovered against him by the petitioner, and also to pay the petitioner's costs. After service of the orders, but before the costs were taxed, the co-respondent was adjudicated a bankrupt on his own petition, and afterwards obtained an order of discharge. Upon an application for an attachment for disobedience to these orders:—Held, that the petitioner, being entitled to enforce payment against the co-respondent by process of contempt, was a creditor within s. 149 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, both as to the damages and costs. That such damages and costs were debts, provable under the bankruptcy, and therefore that the order of discharge covered them, and the co-respondent could not be attached for non-payment. Wood v. Wood and Stanger, 37 L. J., Mat. 25; L. R. 1 P. 467; 18 L. T. 110; 16 W. R. 568.

Damages awarded by a jury in a divorce suit against the co-respondent, and ordered by the court to be paid to the husband, he undertaking to pay the same immediately into court, will not constitute a good petitioning creditor's debt on which to found an adjudication in bankruptcy. Muirhead, Ex parte, Muirhead, In re, 45 L. J., Bk. 65; 2 Ch. D. 22; 34 L. T. 303; 24 W. R. 351—C. A. And see Clayton, In re, Clayton, Ex parte, L. R. 5 Ch. 13; 21 L. T. 342; 18 W. R. 55.

7. Custody of, and Access to, Children.

a. Jurisdiction of Divorce Court.

Prayer for.]—If the permanent custody of the children is claimed a prayer to that effect should be inserted in the petition. Seymour v. Seymour, 1 Sw. & Tr. 332.

20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 35.]—Under this statute, the court, after a final decree, had no power to vary or alter an order as to the custody of children. Curtis v. Curtis, 1 Sw. & Tr. 192; 27 L. J., Mat. 16.

Over Children under Sixteen.]—The court has jurisdiction by its order to regulate the custody of children until they attain the age of sixteen. Mallinson v. Mallinson, 35 L. J., Mat. 84; L. R. 1 P. 221; 14 L. T. 636; 14 W. R. 973.

But the court has no jurisdiction to make any order as to the custody of children upwards of sixteen years of age. Ryder v. Ryder, 2 Sw. & Tr. 225; 30 L. J., Mat. 44; 3 L. T. 678; 9 W. R. 440.

Security.]—Upon a decree for judicial separation when the court has ordered a provision to be made for the children it has no power to order also that the respondent shall secure the payment. Hunt v. Hunt, 52 L. J., P. 98; 8 P. D. 161; 31 W. R. 724.

Scotland.]—The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 86, s. 9, has given the court the widest discretion to weigh the comparative advantages or disadvantages of giving the custody of all, or of any of the children, to the one parent or to the other, and no general rule can be laid down. It is the duty of the court to consider all the circumstances of the particular case. Symington v. Symington, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 415.

Jurisdiction of Justices.]—See Grove v. Grove, 39 L. T. 546; 27 W. R. 324.

b. Interim Orders.

Common Law Rule.]—In making an interim order as to the custody of the children, the court will adhere to, or depart from, the common law rule, according to its discretion. Spratt v. Spratt, 1 Sw. & Tr. 215; 6 W. R. 860. And see Curtis v. Curtis, 1 Sw. & Tr. 75; 27 L. J., P. 16; 6 W. R. 409.

The court has no power to make an order as to the custody of children pending a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Chambers v. Chambers, 39 L. J., Mat. 56; 22 L. T. 727; 18 W. R. 528.

A father is entitled at common law to the custody of the child at its mother's breast, and the court, in making an order as to the custody pendente lite, will not, unless some good cause is shown, take away this right. Cartledge v. Cartledge, 2 Sw. & Tr. 567; 31 L. J., Mat. 85; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 493; 6 L. T. 397; 10 W. R. 672.

In the interval between a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage being pronounced and its being made absolute, the only order the court can make as to the custody of children, is an interim order. Cubley v. Cubley and Smith, 30 L. J., Mat. 161.

Pendente lite—Child over Sixteen—Application by Father.]—Upon a summons by a father that the mother should be deprived of the custody of their eldest child, a girl over sixteen years of age, the judge (in chambers) refused the father's application, and directed that the mother should retain the custody of the child pending suit. B. v. B., 72 L. T. 268.

Wife Taking Possession of Child.]—A wife left her husband's house, with a view of instituting a suit for dissolution of marriage by reason of cruelty and adultery, taking with her their boy, between seven and eight years of age, whom she placed in a school kept by an intimate friend of her own. On an application for an interim order to prevent the father removing him from the school:—Held, that the wife's intimate friend could not be considered an indifferent person between the parties, and the court ordered the child to be given up to the husband's mother, who, from the letters, appeared to be on good terms with the daughter-in-law, and attached to the boy. Boynon v. Boynon, 1 Sw. & Tr. 324.

Pending a suit for dissolution of marriage by a husband by reason of the wife's adultery, she, in an improper manner, obtained possession of an infant child of the marriage, then living with the husband. On the husband again taking the child from her, she endeavoured by violence to get it from him, but failing, applied to the court for an order that it might be restored to her. The court rejected the application, on account of the impropriety of her conduct, and condemned her in the costs of the motion. Allen v. Allen and D'Arcy, 29 L. J., Mat. 166.

Ex parte Application to restrain Removal.]—The court, upon affidavit that the petitioner believed her husband intended to remove the only child out of the jurisdiction of the court, made an order, ad interim, upon the petitioner's ex parte application, restraining the respondent from removing the child. Harris v. Harris, 63 L. T. 262.

c. Access.

Pending Suit—Interests of Children to be Considered.]—In exercising its discretion in the matter of access to children by their parents, pending suit, the court is mainly influenced by considerations for the interests of the children. Philip v. Philip, 41 L. J., P. 89; 27 L. T. 592.

Therefore, when it was satisfied that the visits of the mother to the child, who was in a very sickly state, might retard the child's recovery, it refused the mother an order for access pending suit, though there was reason to apprehend that the separation of the mother from the child would exercise a prejudicial effect on the mother's health. Ib.

—— To whom.]—The court has power to make an order for access merely of one of the parties to a suit to the children pendente lite. Thompson v. Thompson and Sturmfells, 2 Sw. & Tr. 402; 31 L. J., Mat. 213; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1207; 5 L. T. 325; 10 W. R. 96.

—— Motive for.]—On an application for an order of access to children pending a suit on behalf of the mother, the court will require to be satisfied that the motive is natural love and affection for the children, and that the mother has no indirect objects in view, as to which lapse of time in making the application may be material. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 496; 10 L. T. 387.

Application for.]—After a decree of judicial separation has been pronounced, the court will not order that the wife have access to children of the marriage, unless application is made by petition. Anthony v. Anthony, 30 L. J., Mat. 208.

Dismissal of Petition for Dissolution.]—Where a petition for dissolution of marriage is dismissed, the court has no power to make an order as to the custody of, or access to, the children of the marriage. Seddon v. Seddon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 640; 31 L. J., Mat. 101; 7 L. T. 253.

Costs of Motion.]—The costs of an unsuccessful motion by a wife for access to the children of the marriage will not be allowed. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 L. J., Mat. 253.

Where the court decrees a judicial separation in favour of the husband on the ground of cruelty, and the wife afterwards applies on motion for access to some of the children of the marriage, and an order for access is made, the wife is not entitled to have the costs of the motion taxed against her husband, as he has not refused her access to the children since the date of the decree. Bacon v. Bacon, L. R. 1 P. 167.

Respondent Disobeying Order of Court.]—The court, having granted a decree dissolving the marriage between the parties, on the petition of the wife, further ordered that, on certain conditions, and after due notice, she should have access to her children. The respondent for a time removed himself and one child beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and on his return denied to the petitioner access to the child on the terms laid down by the court. On the suggestion that he was again about to leave this country, and in consideration of the approaching vacation, the court ordered that the child should be delivered up to its mother forthwith, and that she should have the custody of it until the fifth day of the following term. Portugal v. Portugal, 35 L. J., Mat. 103 ; 15 W. R. 9. See also Allen v. Allen, 54 L. J., P. 77 ; 10 P. D. 187 ; 33 W. R. 826 ; and Hyde v. Hyde, 57 L. J., P. 89 ; 13 P. D. 166 ; 59 L. T. 529 ; 36 W. R. 708.

d. Final Decree.

Both Parties to be Before the Court.]—The court is not in a position to deal with a petition for custody of children under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4, until both parties are before the court. Stacey v. Stacey, 29 L. J., Mat. 63 ; 8 W. R. 341.

When Made.]—The court will grant the custody of children on the motion for making a decree nisi absolute without petition, notice having been given previously to the other side of the intention to apply for such custody. Davies v. Davies, 15 W. R. 344.

Innocent Party—Primâ facie Right.]—The innocent party has a primâ facie right to the custody of the children ; when, however, under peculiar circumstances, there had been no acts of violence towards the children, the court gave up one of them to the father, the party complained of. Martin v. Martin, 29 L. J., Mat. 106 ; 2 L. T. 118 ; 8 W. R. 367.

Where there appears to be no continuance of immorality, and the husband is affectionately attached to his children, and has always been so, and engaged in a profitable business, an order which should take from him the custody of his sons would not be conducive to their future welfare. It is a very different matter with regard to the daughters. Their mother, against whom nothing has been proved, is the natural person to have their custody. Lymington v. Lymington, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 415.

The court, in a decree for a judicial separation, on the ground of adultery of the husband, on proof that he continued to live in adultery, and that the child of the marriage, a boy of thirteen, resided with him, there being no imputation on the wife, ordered that she should have the custody of the child until the age of fourteen, provision being made for the husband having access to him. Hyde v. Hyde, 29 L. J., Mat. 150.

The court, in its decree for a judicial separation, on the ground of the husband's adultery, ordered that the wife should have the custody of the children under fourteen, until they should attain that age, on proof that the husband continued the adulterous intercourse. Duggan v. Duggan, 29 L. J., Mat. 159.

Where the court decrees a judicial separation at the suit of a wife, by reason of cruelty, it will, in making an order as to the custody of the children, according to the circumstances of the case, exercise a discretionary power, exceeding that which is exercised by courts of law and equity respecting the custody of infants. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Sw. & Tr. 312 ; 28 L. J., Mat. 13 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 46 ; 7 W. R. 129.

In a case, when there was no suggestion that the children had been cruelly or improperly treated by the husband, the court directed the children to remain in the custody of the mother so long as she maintained and properly educated them, without expense to her husband (he to have proper access to them), till they should respectively attain the age of fourteen. Ib.

When a wife succeeds in her suit against her husband, she will generally be entitled to the custody of the children. Boynton v. Boynton, 2 Sw. & Tr. 275 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 156 ; 4 L. T. 258 ; 9 W. R. 620.

Where a husband, by reason of whose misconduct the marriage was dissolved, was living in America, and the children remained in the custody of the mother in this country, the court refused to make any order as to their custody ; for any such order must have been final, and the circumstances and relative positions of the parties might be materially altered in the lapse of years. Robotham v. Robotham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 190 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 61 ; 6 W. R. 736.

A wife having obtained a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the court being satisfied that the children of the marriage would not be brought up as carefully and morally by their father as by their mother, as an act of justice to her, and for the advantage of the children, ordered that she should have the custody of them until they should attain fourteen, with provision for their father having access to them. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 489 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 167 ; 8 W. R. 20.

In determining the custody of children, the interests of the children are paramount with the court. In committing them to the charge of the mother when the innocent party, the court acts upon the principle that a wife ought not to be deprived of the comfort and society of her children by reason of the wrongful act of the husband, but it will depart from the rule when it is for the interest of the children that their education should be free from her control. D'Alton v. D'Alton, 47 L. J., P. 59 ; 4 P. D. 87.

Guilty Wife—Discretion of Court.]—Where a decree for dissolution of marriage has been made on the ground of the adultery of the wife, and the infant children of the marriage have been given into the custody of the husband, the court is not precluded from making an order giving the divorced wife access to them, but as a general rule such an order will not be made. Handley v. Handley, [1891] P. 124 ; 63 L. T. 535 ; 39 W. R. 97 ; 55 J. P. 293—C. A.

When a marriage is dissolved on the ground of a wife's adultery, the court will not order that she have the custody of, or access to, the children of the marriage. Bent v. Bent and Footman, 2 Sw. & Tr. 392 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 175 ; 5 L. T. 139. S. P., Clout v. Clout and Hollebone, 2 Sw. & Tr. 391 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 176 ; 5 L. T. 139.

—— Giving Custody to Husband.]—On a sentence of dissolution of marriage by reason of a wife's adultery, the court will make an order on her to deliver up the custody of the children, rather than leave the husband to the delay and expense of establishing his right as father at common law. Boyd v. Boyd and Collins, 1 Sw. & Tr. 562 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 79 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 56 ; 1 L. T. 243 ; 8 W. R. 160.

Variation of Order—Custody of Child.]—Where a decree for dissolution of marriage had been pronounced on the wife's petition, on the ground of the husband's adultery and cruelty, and the custody of the children of the marriage had been given to her, the court, two years afterwards, being satisfied on affidavit that the wife was unfit to be entrusted with the custody of a little girl, a child of eleven years old, one of two children of the marriage, and that the husband had since the decree was made absolute married again, and had been and was then leading a reputable and moral life, gave him the custody of such little girl, in spite of the fact that he had formerly been found guilty of adultery and cruelty. The other child, a boy, had always remained with the husband. Witt v. Witt, 60 L. J., P. 63; [1891] P. 163; 64 L. T. 121; 39 W. R. 432; 55 J. P. 184.

Payment for Maintenance of Children.]—A wife having obtained a judicial separation from her husband by reason of his adultery, and also the custody of their two children until the court should otherwise direct, presented a further petition praying the court to order the husband to pay to her a sum or sums of money for the past and future maintenance of the children. In answer, he asked the court to order the children to be delivered up to his father and sister, who were quite prepared at their own costs to provide for the maintenance and education of them. The court refused to take the children out of the custody of their mother, and made an order upon the father to contribute in a moderate extent to their maintenance. Milford v. Milford, 38 L. J., Mat. 63; L. R. 1 P. 715; 21 L. T. 155; 17 W. R. 1063.

—— Amount.]—The registrar having reported the income of the husband at 150*l.* a year, the court made an order for payment to the wife, who had obtained a decree for dissolution of the marriage, of 1*l.* per week, and further directed that out of 90*l.* per year, placed in the hands of trustees by the husband and to be applied by them to the maintenance and education of the four children of the marriage in such manner as he should direct, one-third should be paid to the wife for the maintenance and education of the two younger children who were committed to her custody. Prescott v. Prescott, 18 L. T. 35.

In Father's Absence.]—The court decreed the custody of the children, in a suit for dissolution by the husband, who was in India, to the father or his agent, with a view that, in the father's absence, the grandfather should have charge of them. Ling v. Ling and Prior, 13 L. T. 683.

Where Queen's Proctor has Intervened.]—In a suit for dissolution, the petitioner obtained a decree nisi, and before the decree absolute the queen's proctor intervened and charged the petitioner with connivance, and conduct conducing to the respondent's adultery. On an application by her for an order for the custody of the children, and the payment of an allowance for their maintenance, the court refused to treat it on the same principles as an interim order, and, on the ground that the suit had gone far enough to convict the respondent of adultery, refused to make the order. Shewell v. Shewell and Fox, 20 L. T. 404.

Who may Intervene.]—When a petition for the custody of children after a final decree of dissolution is before the court, persons other than the parents may intervene, and bring before the court such facts as in their opinion the interests of the children may require. The form of such intervention is by petition, and the interveners act at their own risk as to costs. Chetwynd v. Chetwynd, 4 Sw. & Tr. 151; 34 L. J., Mat. 130; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 958; 13 L. T. 197; 14 W. R. 184.

After a decree of judicial separation in favour of the party in whose custody children of the marriage have been placed, the court may allow the intervention of any person in their behalf to question the propriety of the continuance of such custody. Godrich v. Godrich, 43 L. J., Mat. 2; L. R. 3 P. 134; 29 L. T. 465; 22 W. R. 71.

When relations intervene in an application for the custody of a child, they do so at the peril of being condemned in costs, if their intervention is unsuccessful. March v. March and Palumbo, L. R. 1 P. 437.

Both Parties Unfit to have Custody.]—When a marriage has been dissolved on the ground of the misconduct of the husband, the court, although it may deem him unfit to have the care of the children of the marriage, will not deprive him of his legal right to their custody in favour of the wife if she also is unfit to be entrusted with them. In such a case it will give the custody of the children to some third person. Chetwynd v. Chetwynd, 35 L. J., Mat. 21; 13 L. T. 474.

Society of Children Necessary for Wife's Health or Solace.]—The court made an order, giving the custody of two infant children—the one being of the age of between three and four years and the other of eighteen months—to the mother, the respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground that the mother's health was suffering from being deprived of their society, and that they were living with a stranger, and not with the father. Barnes v. Barnes and Beaumont, L. R. 1 P. 463; 16 W. R. 283.

Where a wife had obtained a decree for judicial separation by reason of her husband's misconduct, the court refused to give her the custody of one of the children of the marriage, who was an idiot and of the age of twelve, on the ground that the court would only deprive the father of the custody of his child in favour of the innocent wife, when it was for her solace that she should have such custody. Cooke v. Cooke, 3 Sw. & Tr. 248; 32 L. J., Mat. 180; 11 W. R. 957.

Husband Leading Dissolute Life—Espionage.]—When a father, after a decree dissolving his marriage, is shown to be leading a notoriously dissolute life, the court will hold him disqualified to have the custody of his child. March v. March and Palumbo, L. R. 1 P. 437.

The court views with disfavour an attempt to get up a charge of adultery against a husband, who has obtained a decree dissolving his marriage, by tracking him from place to place, with a view to obtain an order depriving him of the custody of his children. Ib.

Delivery — Personal Service of Order — Writ of Sequestration — Discovery in aid of Execution.]—On the application by a husband, who had obtained a decree nisi for divorce against his wife, an order was made that the wife should deliver up into the custody of the husband the children of the marriage. The wife knew of the order, but evaded service of it, and disobeyed it. On the application of the husband an order was then made declaring the wife contumacious and in contempt, and directing that a writ of sequestration should issue against the estate and effects of the wife, and that her mother, sister, and brother-in-law should attend the court to be examined as to her whereabout:—Held, on appeal—first, that as the wife knew of the order for delivery up of the children, and evaded service of it, personal service of the order upon her was not necessary to give the court jurisdiction to issue the writ of sequestration; secondly, that the general form of the writ of sequestration against "the estate and effects" of the wife, without any express limitation therein to separate property of the wife not subject to a restraint on anticipation, was right, but that the writ would only operate on her separate property which was not so subject; thirdly, that the court had no jurisdiction to order the attendance of third parties for examination. Scott v. Morley (20 Q. B. D. 120), distinguished. Miller v. Miller (L. R. 2 P. 54), explained. Hyde v. Hyde, 57 L. J., P. 89; 13 P. D. 166; 59 L. T. 529; 36 W. R. 708—C. A. See also Allen v. Allen, 54 L. J., P. 77; 10 P. D. 187; 33 W. R. 826.

—— Disobedience—Attachment—Knowledge of Contents of Order.]—An order was made in a divorce suit that "the child, issue of the marriage between the petitioner and respondent, be forthwith delivered up to and remain in the custody of the petitioner until further order of the court, but . . . that such child be not removed out of the jurisdiction of the court without its sanction." This order was brought to the knowledge of the respondent, who took the child out of the jurisdiction and retained its custody. Legal service was not effected upon him. The court, upon ex parte application by the petitioner, ordered a writ of attachment to issue against the respondent. Favard v. Favard, 75 L. T. 664.

Wife Unable to Support Children.]—A wife living separately from her husband, and who has obtained the custody of their child under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, but is herself unable to support it, may pledge her husband's credit for reasonable expenses incurred by her in providing for the child. Baseley v. Forder, 9 B. & S. 599: 37 L. J., Q. B. 237; L. R. 3 Q. B. 559; 18 L. T. 756. And see INFANT.

Restitution of Conjugal Rights—Power of Court.]—The court has no power, in suits for restitution of conjugal rights, to make any order as to the custody of the children of the marriage. Chambers v. Chambers, 39 L. J., Mat. 56; 22 L. T. 727; 18 W. R. 528.

e. Practice.

Affidavits.]—The court will not allow affidavits to be read as to the truth or falsehood of charges brought by the parties to the petition against each other. Ryder v. Ryder, 2 Sw. & Tr. 225; 30 L. J., Mat. 44; 3 L. T. 678; 9 W. R. 440.

Upon an application by a husband for the custody of the child, pendente lite, the wife asked for time to answer the affidavit upon which the application was founded. The court granted time, upon an undertaking being given by her that the child should not be removed out of the jurisdiction of the court until further order. Carter v. Carter, 29 L. J., Mat. 167.

Upon what Evidence Court will Act.]—The court will not, at the hearing of a cause, entertain an application for the custody of children if it is founded upon evidence not admissible in the cause. It should be made on a motion day. But at the hearing the court may direct that the petitioner have the custody of children until further order, if the facts proved would warrant such an order, e.g. if the adultery of the respondent be proved. Wallace v. Wallace, 32 L. J., Mat. 34; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1082; 11 W. R. 30.

Postponement of Decree Absolute.]—A decree nisi having been pronounced on petition of the wife, to whom was entrusted the custody of the only child of the marriage, the court was moved to declare the respondent to be "a person unfit to have the custody" of such child within s. 6 of 49 & 50 Vict. c. 27. The court postponed making the decree absolute and adjourned the application for further materials. Robinson v. Robinson, 57 L. T. 118; 51 J. P. 39.

Petition.]—The court will not, at the hearing of a suit for dissolution of marriage by reason of the wife's adultery, order the petitioner to have the custody of the children of the marriage, unless the petitioner prays for such custody. Boddy v. Boddy and Grover, 30 L. J., Mat. 163.

Non-Appearance of Respondent.]—A respondent who is served with a copy of a petition for dissolution of marriage, containing also a prayer for the custody of the children of the marriage, if he does not appear, is not entitled to notice of the application. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 30 L. J., Mat. 200, n.

Sanity of Wife.]—An application of a wife for the custody of the children was opposed on the ground that she was not of sound mind. The evidence of medical men adduced by the parties was conflicting, and it appeared that they were not much conversant with affections of the brain; the court, therefore, directed a personal examination of the wife by an eminent physician, and upon his certificate gave her the custody of the children. Duggan v. Duggan, 29 L. J., Mat. 159.

Order as to Access—Refusal to Vary.]—After the verdict in a petition for dissolution the court refused to vary the order as to access to children and to prohibit the guilty wife from seeing her children, until the time for moving for a new trial had expired. The controversy between the parties is not ended until the period in which a new trial can be moved is exhausted. Godrich v. Godrich, Lara, Forder and Kelsey, 19 L. T. 611.

Maintenance of Child in Custody of Mother.]—Where alimony had been allotted to the wife and the only child of the marriage left in her custody, pendente lite, the court refused to order the husband to contribute to its maintenance. Cranwell v. Cranwell, 19 L. T. 611.

Judicial Separation, in Case of.]—See col. 798.

Under Guardianship of Infants Act.]—See INFANT.

8. JUDICIAL SEPARATION.

a. When Granted or Refused.

By the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 16), a sentence of judicial separation (which is to have the effect of a divorce a mensâ et thoro under the old law, and such other legal effect as therein mentioned), may be obtained either by the husband or the wife on the ground of adultery, or cruelty, or desertion, without cause for two years and upwards.

Adultery by Husband without Cruelty—Desertion by Wife—No Bar to Judicial Separation.]—A wife petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery and cruelty. The husband in his answer charged her with adultery, and also with having deserted him without reasonable cause. The jury found that the wife had not committed adultery, that the husband had been guilty of adultery, but not of cruelty, and that the wife had left her husband without reasonable excuse before he had committed adultery:—Held, that the wife was entitled to a decree of judicial separation, and that the desertion of her by her husband was not a bar to her obtaining a judicial separation on the ground of his adultery. Duplany v. Duplany, 61 L. J., P. 49; [1892] P. 53; 66 L. T. 267. See col. 735.

Cruelty by Husband—Misconduct of Wife—Right to Relief.]—A wife who has been guilty of adultery since the commencement of the suit is not entitled to a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. Drummond v. Drummond, 30 L. J., P. 177; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 762; 4 L. T. 416.

A judicial separation can only be granted where the petitioner comes to the court with a pure character, and is free from all matrimonial misconduct. Accordingly, where a husband and wife had both been found guilty of adultery, and the husband had also been found guilty of cruelty:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to make a decree of judicial separation on the ground of such cruelty, however aggravated its character might be. Drummond v. Drummond (30 L. J., P. 177), approved. Otway v. Otway, 57 L. J., P. 81; 13 P. D. 141; 59 L. T. 153—C. A.

—— Lapse of Time.]—Lapse of time is not an absolute bar to a suit for judicial separation for cruelty. Matthews v. Matthews, 8 W. R. 51.

—— Counter-Petitions—Verdict of Cruelty and Adultery — Decree Nisi Rescinded — Judicial Separation on Ground of Cruelty.]—The court refused to pronounce a decree for a judicial separation upon the application of a wife, who had obtained a verdict of cruelty and adultery against her husband, but who had subsequently, upon the intervention of the queen's proctor, been found guilty of colluding with her husband. Butler v. Butler, 63 L. T. 256.

—— Condonation—Revival.]—A wife, who had suffered such acts of cruelty from her husband as would probably have been sufficient to enable her to have then obtained a decree for judicial separation, returned to his house and lived with him for five years, during which time he treated her with continual unkindness, though he never struck her. His wife was eventually so terrified by his conduct that she finally left her husband:—Held, that even if these later acts did not amount to legal cruelty, they did nevertheless constitute such a revival of the earlier cruelty as to warrant the court in pronouncing a decree for judicial separation. Mytton v. Mytton, 11 P. D. 141; 57 L. T. 92; 35 W. R. 368; 50 J. P. 488.

Desertion, As to.]—See cols. 747—757.

Molestation after Decree for Judicial Separation—Contempt of Court.]—Where a husband had obtained a decree for judicial separation against his wife, and, after such decree, the wife molested her husband, there is no jurisdiction to attach her for contempt for such molestation. Smith v. Smith, 59 L. J., P. 15.

Children—Custody—Death of Parent obtaining Order—Application by Third Person.]—By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4, the court, after a final decree of judicial separation, &c., may, upon application for this purpose, make from time to time orders with respect to the custody of the children the marriage of whose parents was the subject of the decree, as might have been made by final decree:—Held, that upon the death of the parent of a child who was entitled to the custody of it under a decree for judicial separation, the court had no jurisdiction under s. 4 to entertain an application by a stranger for the custody of the child. Davis v. Davis, 58 L. J., P. 88; 14 P. D. 162.

—— Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886—Declaration annexed to Decree.]—The court, while declining to lay down any general principles which should guide the court in making, or refusing to make, at the suit of a successful petitioner, a declaration under s. 7 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, to the effect that the respondent is a person unfit to have the custody of the child or children of the marriage, made such a declaration in a suit by the wife for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, where the misconduct proved included the taking of the only child of the marriage, an infant at the time under a year old, out of the house in its night-dress, and of threats culminating in a murderous assault upon the petitioner and her mother, for which the respondent was sentenced to a term of penal servitude. Handford v. Handford, 63 L. T. 256. And see col. 788.

—— Maintenance till Twenty-one.]—Maintenance of children may be ordered up to the age of twenty-one. See Thomasset v. Thomasset, 63 L. J., P. 140; [1894] P. 295; 71 L. T. 148; 42 W. R. 658—C. A.

Variation of Settlements.]—In proceedings for a judicial separation only the court has no power to alter settlements. Gundy v. Gundy, 51 L. J., P. 41; 7 P. D. 168; 46 L. T. 607; 30 W. R. 673. See col. 806.

9. EFFECT OF ADULTERY AND DIVORCE.

a. On Property.

Statute.]—By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 25, in every case of a judicial separation the wife shall, from the date of the sentence, and whilst the separation shall continue, be considered as a feme sole with respect to property of every description which she may acquire, or which may come to or devolve upon her; and such property may be disposed of by her in all respects as a feme sole, and on her decease the same shall, in case she shall die intestate, go as the same would have gone if her husband had been then dead:

Provided, that if any such wife should again cohabit with her husband, all such property as she may be entitled to when such cohabitation shall take place shall be held to her separate use, subject, however, to any agreement in writing made between herself and her husband whilst separate.

On Property in Reversion.]—The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 25, applies to property to which a wife is entitled in reversion at the date of the decree, and which subsequently falls into possession. Insole, In re, 35 Beav. 92; 35 L. J., Ch. 177; L. R. 1 Eq. 470; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1011; 13 L. T. 455; 14 W. R. 160.

A wife, having obtained a decree for judicial separation, may avoid a mortgage made by her and her husband of a reversion in personalty which falls in during the joint lives. Ib.

A wife's reversionary chose in action had, by a settlement entered into during coverture, been assigned upon trust (in the events which happened) for the survivor of the husband and wife. A divorce having taken place under the Divorce Act of 1857, the reversion then fell in, and the husband survived his divorced wife:—Held, that since the marriage contract had been dissolved before the property fell into possession, the husband acquired no interest in it, and that the post-nuptial settlement was an absolute nullity so far as the wife was concerned. Wilkinson v. Gibson, 36 L. J., Ch. 646; L. R. 4 Eq. 162; 16 L. T. 733; 15 W. R. 983. And see Codrington v. Lindsay, 42 L. J., Ch. 526; L. R. 8 Ch. 578; 28 L. T. 177; 21 W. R. 182.

On Choses in Action not Reduced into Possession by Husband.]—By a decree of judicial separation the wife's choses in action not reduced into possession at the date of the decree become, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 25, her absolute property as if she were a feme sole. Johnson v. Landor, 38 L. J., Ch. 229; L. R. 7 Eq. 228; 19 L. T. 592. Wells v. Malbon, 31 Beav. 48; 31 L. J., Ch. 344; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 249; 6 L. T. 39; 10 W. R. 364.

Where a wife instituted a suit to enforce her equity to a settlement of a trust fund, and while the suit was pending obtained a decree of judicial separation from her husband on the ground of cruelty, the Court of Chancery ordered the fund to be paid to her, and refused the husband his costs. Johnson v. Landor, supra.

—— Annuity—Desertion by Husband—Appropriation of Accumulations.]—A husband deserted his wife immediately after her marriage, in 1846, and she was supported by her sister. In 1848 an annuity was bequeathed to her for her life, which the trustee accumulated until 1862, when the wife obtained a decree for a judicial separation. In 1863 the court, on the petition of the wife and her sister, ordered the accumulations to be paid over to the sister, to the exclusion altogether of the husband. Ford, In re, 32 Beav. 621; 33 L. J., Ch. 180; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 740; 8 L. T. 625; 11 W. R. 845; 2 N. R. 349.

Property subsequently Acquired.]—A wife who has obtained a decree for judicial separation is to be considered as a feme sole with respect to such property only as she may acquire or which may come to or devolve upon her after the decree: s. 25 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), not applying to property to which the wife was entitled in possession at the date of the decree. Cooke v. Fuller (26 Beav. 99) distinguished. Waite v. Morland, 57 L. J., Ch. 655; 38 Ch. D. 135; 59 L. T. 185; 36 W. R. 484—C. A.

—— Covenant to Settle After-acquired Property.]—Where a marriage settlement contained a covenant to settle all property (except jewellery and money up to 200*l.*) which the wife, or her husband in her right, might acquire "during the intended coverture," and after a decree for judicial separation the wife became entitled to certain stocks:—Held, that by virtue of s. 25 of the Divorce Act, 1857, the stocks belonged to her as a feme sole, and that the covenant to settle "during the coverture" had become inoperative. Dawes v. Creyke, 54 L. J., Ch. 1096; 30 Ch. D. 500; 53 L. T. 292; 33 W. R. 869.

Appointment of Fund—Wife a Feme Sole.]—An appointment by a married woman, under a general power created after a decree for judicial separation, makes the fund assets for her creditors. Hughes, In re, Brandon v. Hughes, 67 L. J., Ch. 279; [1898] 1 Ch. 529—C. A.

Adultery not a Cause of Forfeiture.]—The husband does not forfeit his estate by the curtsey, nor the wife her jointure, by adultery. Walker, In re, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 326.

Mrs. D. being entitled to 3,000*l.* in reversion expectant on her aunt's death, the aunt consented, at the request of Mr. and Mrs. D., to relinquish her life interest in 2,000*l.*, part of the 3,000*l.*, in consideration of Mr. D. agreeing that the remainder of the 3,000*l.*, when payable, should be paid to trustees for his wife's separate use, and that he would immediately settle 2,000*l.* out of his own funds, and also the first-mentioned 2,000*l.*, so as to provide for the maintenance of himself and his wife, and the survivor of them. The agreement was carried into effect by a deed which directed the trustees to pay the interest of the two sums of 2,000*l.* to Mr. and Mrs. D. during their joint lives, and to stand possessed of the principal for the survivor of them. Mr. D. afterwards separated from his wife, in consequence of her having committed adultery:—Held, that he was entitled to receive the whole of the interest of the trust fund, and was not bound to maintain his wife out of it, notwithstanding she was destitute of the means of support. Duncan v. Campbell, 12 Sim. 616; 6 Jur. 667. And see Buchanan v. Buchanan, 1 Ball & B. 203; 12 R. R. 16; Moore v. Moore, 1 Atk. 272.

Nor Dissolution of Marriage.]—The trusts of a marriage settlement as regarded real and personal estate brought into it by the wife and her father, were for the wife for her life for her separate use, and after her death for the husband for his life, and after the death of both wife and husband for the children of the marriage (subject to a joint power of appointment to them by the husband and wife), who, being sons, should attain twenty-one years, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under it, and, if there should be no child of the marriage who should attain a vested interest in the trust fund, for the wife if she should survive the husband, and if she should die in his lifetime for such persons as she should by will appoint, and in default of her appointment for her father absolutely. There were two children of the marriage; one only was born alive, and it died without any appointment having been made in its favour by the husband and wife. The wife petitioned against the husband for a divorce, and obtained a decree on the ground of adultery and desertion. Then she filed a bill asking for a declaration that she was entitled to the trust funds brought into settlement on her part without regard to the husband's life interest:—Held, that the husband's rights were not forfeited by the dissolution of the marriage, and that the bill must be dismissed with costs. Fitzgerald v. Chapman, 45 L. J., Ch. 23; 1 Ch. D. 563; 33 L. T. 587; 24 W. R. 130.

A dissolution of marriage creates no forfeiture of the interest of the guilty party under a marriage settlement of the other's property. Burton v. Sturgeon, 45 L. J., Ch. 633; 2 Ch. D. 318; 34 L. T. 706; 24 W. R. 772—C. A. And see Careth v. Prince, 35 L. J., Ex. 162.

Jurisdiction of Court of Equity.]—A court of equity has no jurisdiction to relieve a husband from the stipulations in his marriage settlement, upon a decree of dissolution of marriage being pronounced by the court for divorce and matrimonial causes. Evans v. Carrington, 29 L. J., Ch. 330; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 268; 1 L. T. 229; 8 W. R. 113. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENTS, infra, col. 806.

But where a married woman, having become absolutely entitled during her coverture to shares in property for her separate use, had, by a post-nuptial settlement to which the husband was not a party, assigned the property to trustees in trust, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, to pay the proceeds to herself for her sole and separate use, with remainder to herself absolutely or as she should appoint, and the marriage was dissolved at the wife's suit, the court being of opinion that the settlement had in the events which had happened become inoperative, held the wife absolutely entitled. Jessop v. Blake, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 537; 6 L. T. 454; 10 W. R. 643.

Election.]—Where a post-nuptial settlement had been made before 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, and the marriage having been dissolved, the divorced wife instituted a suit to set aside the settlement so far as it affected certain reversionary interests of hers which had fallen into possession, the court held her bound to elect between the relief and the benefits given her by the settlement. Codrington v. Lindsay, 45 L. J., Ch. 650; L. R. 7 H. L. 854; 34 L. T. 221; 24 W. R. 648.

Law of Scotland—Adultery of Wife—Forfeiture.]—By the law of Scotland a married woman divorced for her adultery forfeits all the provisions made for her by her husband or his relations by marriage contract, and she is considered, with regard to such provisions, as if she were naturally dead. Drummond, In re, 12 L. T. 172.

Custom of London — Forfeiture.] — A wife divorced a mensâ et thoro forfeits her right to her widow's chamber under the custom of London. Pettifer v. James, Bunb. 16.

Protection of Property.]—Where the divorce court has made an absolute order for the dissolution of marriage, and an order for permanent alimony, and the late husband is dissipating his property, or putting it out of his power, a court of equity will grant an injunction and receiver to protect it for the benefit of the former wife. Sidney v. Sidney, 17 L. T. 9.

—— Attempted Mortgage by Husband.]—A fund in court belonging to a married woman residing with her husband at the Cape of Good Hope was, whilst he was temporarily in this country, assigned by him by way of mortgage. Afterwards the husband and wife were divorced by the proper tribunal at the Cape. The fund was never reduced into possession by the husband during the coverture. On a petition by the wife as feme sole:—Held, that the attempted mortgage was inoperative, and that she was absolutely entitled to the fund. Heath v. Lewis, Johnston, Ex parte, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1093; 11 L. T. 333; 13 W. R. 129.

Maintenance of Children of Eloping Wife out of Separate Property.]—A ward of court, entitled in her own right to large real and personal property, was married under age, and without the consent of the court, which marriage was subsequently annulled. Upon her coming of age, the husband petitioned to be at liberty to make proposals for a settlement of the ward's property, and to have a legal marriage celebrated, undertaking to execute such settlement as the court should direct. Proposals having been laid before the master, he approved of a draft settlement, whereby all her property was limited to her for life, for her sole and separate use, and afterwards to her children; but the chancellor declined making any order as to the execution of this settlement, the amount of the property then in litigation not being ascertained. A second marriage having been celebrated by direction of the court, there was issue thereof two children. The wife subsequently eloped:—Held, that the children had no right, during the life of their mother, to be maintained out of her separate estate:—Held, also, that the proposed settlement, though not executed, having been acted upon by the court by different orders, could not be varied. Hodgens v. Hodgens, 4 Cl. & F. 323; 11 Bli. (N.S.) 62; Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 533. See Wade v. Scruton (nom. Wade v. Broughton), 2 Ves. & B. 172. Baseley v. Baseley, 4 Cl. & F. 378, n.

Settlement, on marriage, of stock belonging to the wife in trust, after the death of the wife, if the husband survived, for him for life; if no issue the whole to revest in the wife, with power of appointment; if none, to her next of kin. The wife eloped, and lived in adultery. On the bill of the husband to have the dividends paid to him during their joint lives, evidence of such intent, or that they should be to the separate use of the wife, refused; but held to belong to the husband for the mutual support of both. Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. Jun. 191; 4 Bro. C. C. 339; 2 R. R. 197.

Bequests in Wills — "Wife."] — A testator left shares in his residuary estate in trust for his sons for life, and from and after the decease of each son, in trust to permit any wife of such son to receive the income of his share during her life. One of the sons married, was divorced from his wife and died :—Held, that the divorced wife was not entitled to the life interest in his share. Bullmore v. Wynter (22 Ch. D. 619) disapproved. Hitchins v. Morrieson, 58 L. J., Ch. 80 ; 40 Ch. D. 30 ; 59 L. T. 847 ; 37 W. R. 91.

—— "Sole and Unmarried."]—A testatrix, by her will made in 1860, bequeathed a fund to trustees, on trust to pay the income to her husband for his life, and on his death to divide the fund into four equal parts, and, as to one of the parts, "upon trust to pay the same to J. H., spinster, if she be then sole and unmarried, but, if she be then married," the testatrix directed her trustees to pay the income of the fourth part to J. H., for her life, for her separate use, and after her death to hold it in trust for her children. In June, 1878, the testatrix died, and her husband died in April, 1883. In April, 1861, J. H. married, and in November, 1878, a decree absolute was made for the dissolution of her marriage. There were three children of the marriage. J. H. did not marry again :—Held, that the words "then sole and unmarried" meant "not having a husband" at the time of the death of the tenant for life, and that in the events which had happened, J. H. was absolutely entitled to the one-fourth share. Lesingham's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 333 ; 24 Ch. D. 703 ; 49 L. T. 235 ; 32 W. R. 116.

Legacy to Guilty Wife.]—A testator by a will which was made before the Divorce Act of 1857, devised property to trustees, to pay out of the rents to his son and to his wife the annual sum of 150*l.*, jointly, and to accumulate the rest for his family ; and also, out of the rents of "the property so left in trust for his son," to pay to the wife, surviving, 50*l.* a year ; but if his son survived, he gave him 100*l.* annually. The son and his wife were, after the death of the testator, divorced by reason of her adultery, and the son subsequently assigned the annuity, by way of mortgage. Upon a claim by the wife for a moiety of the payments of the annuity from the time of separation :—Held, that the rights of the husband and of the mortgagee remained unaffected by the divorce, and that the wife was not entitled to any share in the annuity. Knox v. Wells, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1252 ; 13 W. R. 228.

On Fund paid out of Court to Husband and Wife jointly.]—A woman being entitled to a fund in court, applied shortly before her marriage for a loan on the security of the fund. Before the transaction was completed she married, and the money was then advanced to her husband, who joined with his wife in assigning the fund by way of mortgage. The fund was then carried over to the joint account of the husband and wife, and a stop order put upon it in favour of the mortgagee. In June, 1867, a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage was pronounced by the Divorce Court, which became absolute in January, 1868. In the interval the mortgagee presented a petition, on which an order was made by a court of equity in November, 1867, for payment of his debt out of the fund in court : Held, first, that the mortgage by the husband and wife did not bind the wife's right by survivorship, and that the pre-nuptial negotiation by the wife made no difference. Prole v. Soady, 37 L. J., Ch. 246 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 220 ; 16 W. R. 445.

Held, secondly, that the carrying over the fund to the account of the husband and wife was not a reduction into possession by the husband. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that on the decree for dissolution of marriage becoming absolute, it took effect from the date of the decree nisi, and consequently the order made in the interval on the petition was of no avail to reduce the fund into possession. Ib.

On Property in Settlement over which Wife has Power of Appointment.]—By a marriage settlement property of the wife was settled upon her for life for her separate use, and after her death, in case there should be no issue of the marriage and her husband should survive, upon trust for her next of kin, with power for her to appoint by will part of the property, and in case she should survive, then for her absolutely. The marriage having been dissolved on the petition of the wife, and there being no issue of the marriage, a bill was filed in equity by her in her maiden name against her former husband and the trustees of the settlement :—Held, that she was absolutely entitled to the property. Fussell v. Dowding, 41 L. J., Ch. 716 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 421 ; 27 L. T. 406 ; 20 W. R. 881.

Reversionary Interest in Stock.]—By a decree of the court of divorce, a marriage between a husband and wife was declared to be dissolved. At the date of the decree the wife was entitled to a reversionary interest in stock which was not settled before her marriage, and had been the subject of a post-nuptial settlement. After the decree the fund fell into possession, and the divorced wife took steps to realise the fund, but before it was recovered she died :—Held, that the same consequences as to property must follow the declaration of dissolution by the divorce court, as if the marriage contract had been annihilated and the marriage tie broken on that date ; that those rights of the divorced husband which depended upon the contract ceased at the same date ; and that the executors of the divorced wife were entitled to the fund. Wilkinson v. Gibson, 36 L. J., Ch. 646 ; L. R. 4 Eq. 162 ; 16 L. T. 733 ; 15 W. R. 983.

Joint Tenancy—Tenancy by Entireties—Effect of Divorce.]—Where land has been conveyed to husband and wife before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, in such a way as, apart from the marriage, would constitute them joint tenants, a decree absolute for divorce makes their holding a joint tenancy. Thornley v. Thornley, 62 L. J., Ch. 370 ; [1893] 2 Ch. 229 ; 3 R. 311 ; 68 L. T. 199 ; 41 W. R. 541.

Where land has been conveyed to husband and wife jointly after the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the wife after a divorce takes a joint tenancy for her separate use, and is entitled to an account from the date of her ceasing to live with her husband. Ib.

Appointment by Wife to Herself.]—A marriage settlement vested funds in trustees for the children of the marriage, and in default as the wife should appoint. The wife was divorced a vinculo, and there being no children, appointed to herself :—Held, a good appointment. Bond v. Taylor, 2 John. & H. 473 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 784 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1090 ; 5 L. T. 445 ; 10 W. R. 169.

Children of a second marriage of the wife and divorced husband would not be children of "the marriage" contemplated by the settlement. Ib.

Adultery a Defence to Restitution.]—Adultery by the wife may be pleaded by way of defence to a suit by her for restitution of conjugal rights. Moore v. Moore, 3 Moore, P. C. 84.

No Bar to Specific Performance of Marriage Articles.]—Where the wife sues the husband for a specific performance of her marriage articles, and that he may settle such and such lands upon her in jointure, it is no bar to her to demand that she has eloped with an adulterer, much less if this be not put in issue in the cause by the husband. Sidney v. Sidney, 3 P. W. 269.

In the case of a divorce a mensâ et thoro, baron and feme live separately, and the wife has a child; this is a bastard, for the court will intend obedience has been paid to the sentence during this time: but if in the case of a voluntary separation a child is born, this is legitimate: secus, where the jury find the husband has had no access to the wife. If the party charges his adversary with anything criminal, it ought to be shown with great plainness and certainty. Articles to settle lands in jointure are in nature of an actual jointure, which is not forfeited by an elopement, like dower. Id. 275.

Chancery will not Aid Eloping Wife.]—If wife elope, chancery will not assist her in recovering property settled to her separate use. Lee v. Lee, Dick. 321.

Supplicavit no Justification of Elopement.]—The obtaining a supplicavit does not justify a wife's elopement. Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 550.

Husband, possessed of term in right of wife, was divorced a mensâ et thoro, and he being about to sell term, injunction was granted to prevent him. Anon., 9 Mod. 43. See Shute v. Shute, Pre. Ch. 111.

Expenditure by Husband on Wife's Property.]—A husband having laid out money in repairs and improvements upon his wife's property is not entitled after a divorce by reason of her adultery to any charge upon the estate for the money so laid out. Hamer v. Tilsey, 1 Johns. 486; 29 L. J., Ch. 32; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1344; 1 L. T. 54; 8 W. R. 20.

Release by Divorced Husband—Resettlement by Wife.]—A settlement was made of the choses in action of a female infant, on her marriage, in trust for her husband for life; and after his decease in trust for her for life; and after the death of the survivor, and in default of children, in trust for such persons as she should by will appoint, with ultimate trust for her next of kin. The marriage, of which there was no issue, was dissolved by act of parliament, and the husband executed a release of his rights in her property under the settlement:—Held, that the property of the wife was not bound by the settlement, and that she was at liberty to resettle it on her second marriage. Hastings v. Orde, 11 Sim. 205.

Bankruptcy of Husband.]—Divorce obtained by wife after husband's bankruptcy does not entitle her to whole of fund bequeathed to her which came into possession after bankruptcy, though no settlement was made on her at her marriage, and her husband at that time received 1,500*l.* stock with her. Green v. Otte, 1 Sim. & S. 250; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 87.

Petition for Settlement to Separate Use by Guilty Wife.]—Husband and wife living separate under a divorce a mensâ et thoro obtained against the wife for adultery, she petitioned that a sum of money belonging to her might be settled to her separate use; he petitioned that it might be paid to him, the court refused to make any order. Carr v. Eastabrooke, 4 Ves. 146.

Infant Wife Absolutely entitled after Death of Husband.]—A woman, married during her infancy, was deserted by her husband and obtained a dissolution of the marriage. Under articles of settlement executed prior to the marriage, there being no issue of the marriage, personal estate belonging to her was held on trust for her absolutely after the death of her husband in her lifetime. She never assented to the settlement:—Held, that she was entitled to have the whole fund paid or transferred to her. Swift v. Wenman, 39 L. J., Ch. 336; L. R. 10 Eq. 15; 21 L. T. 194; 18 W. R. 480.

b. Name.

Marriage confers a name upon a woman. The name so conferred becomes her actual name, and continues to be so even after a decree of divorce, until she has acquired by repute some other name which, so to speak, obliterates it. Fendall, otherwise Goldsmid v. Goldsmid, 46 L. J., P. 70; 2 P. D. 263.

10. Variation of Settlements and Deeds.

Jurisdiction—Settlement in Scotch Form.]—A decree for dissolution of marriage having been granted on the husband's petition, it appeared that the respondent, a Scotchwoman, was married in Scotland to the petitioner, an Englishman, and that in contemplation of the marriage there had been a settlement of her property according to the Scotch law:—Held, that under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5, the court had power to order a variation of the settlement. Nunneley v. Nunneley, 15 P. D. 186; 63 L. T. 113.

—— Parties domiciled in Scotland at Time of Marriage—Parties domiciled in England at Time of Divorce.]—The powers of the court to vary settlements after dissolution of marriage under s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), are not affected by the fact that the parties were domiciled in Scotland at the time of the marriage. Nunneley v. Nunneley, supra, explained and followed. Forsyth v. Forsyth, 61 L. J., P. 13; [1891] P. 363; 65 L. T. 556.

—— Infant Children.]—The court cannot vary settlements to the detriment of infant children. Ib.

—— Nullity of Marriage—Decree of Foreign Court—Jurisdiction.]—The power to vary settlements conferred upon the court by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 45, and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5, can only be exercised where the decree upon which the application to vary the marriage settlement is founded has been pronounced by the court. Therefore, where a decree of nullity has been pronounced by the colonial court, and the parties afterwards returned to this country and applied for leave to file a petition for the variation of their marriage settlement:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain such application. Moore (f. c. Bull) v. Moore or Bull, 60 L. J., P. 76; [1891] P. 279.

—— Concurrent Jurisdiction of Chancery Division.]—The chancery division has the same jurisdiction as the judge of the probate division to modify settlements, but where the matter has already been gone into in that division, a judge of the chancery division will not interfere. After dissolution of marriage on the husband's petition, an order was made that trustees of the marriage settlement should pay an annual sum out of settled real property of the wife to the husband for the maintenance of the infant child of the marriage. The husband having died, the widow became absolutely entitled to the property, and a further order directed that the trustees of the settlement should pay the annuity to the guardians of the infant. There were, in fact, no trustees at that time. The annuity was subsequently declared to be perpetual. On the application by the child of the marriage, the court ordered execution of a deed securing the annuity on the settled property, but allowed no costs of the application, as the order might have been obtained by summary process in the probate division. Blackett v. Blackett, 51 L. T. 427.

—— Husband's Petition for—Inquiry before Final Decree—Security for Costs.]—The court has jurisdiction before pronouncing a final decree for dissolution of marriage, or judicial separation, against a wife for adultery, to direct an inquiry as to her property, so that it may be enabled to order a settlement to be made of such property as soon as the final decree is pronounced; and in making such an order, the court will direct the husband to give security for the costs of the inquiry, in case no final decree should be made. Midwinter v. Midwinter, 61 L. J., P. 1; [1892] P. 28; 65 L. T. 438; 40 W. R. 33—C. A.

—— Power to alter Order.]—The power given to the court by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5, of varying settlements after a final decree for dissolution of marriage, is a power to be exercised once for all, and an order made under it is not liable to be varied on the ground of a change of circumstances since the date of the order. Benyon v. Benyon, 59 L. J., P. 39; 15 P. D. 54; 62 L. T. 381—C. A.

—— Maintenance of Children.]—The court has power to make provision for the maintenance of children above the age of sixteen years. Thomasset v. Thomasset, 63 L. J., P. 140; [1894] P. 295; 71 L. T. 148; 42 W. R. 658. Overruling Blandford v. Blandford, 61 L. J., P. 97; [1892] P. 148; 67 L. T. 392.

—— Death of Petitioner.] — The court has no power under s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, to order the executor of a deceased petitioner (the husband) to be made a party for the purpose of continuing proceedings to vary a settlement where the petitioner is dead, there are no children, and the proposed variation would not be for the benefit of the wife. Section 5 is applicable for the benefit of living persons only. Thomson v. Thomson, 65 L. J., P. 80; [1896] P. 263; 74 L. T. 801: 45 W. R. 134—C. A.

Acceleration of Infant's Interest by Divorce of Parents—Powers of Petitioner.]—Upon a petition to vary two post-nuptial settlements after decree absolute for divorce, it appeared that the whole property was in land, and that, if the respondent's interests were extinguished, the petitioner would, by virtue of a clause in one of the settlements, have power to call upon the trustees to raise forthwith a sum which, at the present time, would exceed the sale value of the whole of the settled property, and which would, therefore, if exercised by the petitioner, absolutely blot out all interests of the infant child of the parties under the settlements. The registrar, notwithstanding this, recommended that the respondent's interests should be extinguished as if he were dead:—Held, that, inasmuch as the child's interest was accelerated by the extinguishment of the respondent's interests, the child was thereby obtaining a certain gain against an uncertain loss if the petitioner should now exercise the power conferred upon her by the settlement. Report of the registrar confirmed. Creagh v. Creagh, 74 L. T. 430.

No Means, except Income from Settled Property—Costs out of Corpus.]—The petitioner, a widow with one child by her first husband, settled, upon her second marriage, certain property, producing an annual income of about 750*l.*, upon trust to pay the income to herself for her life, then to her husband, the respondent, for his life, and, in the events which happened, with remainder to her said only child, if he should attain twenty-one, with ultimate remainder to the petitioner. The petitioner obtained a decree absolute dissolving her marriage, and, in her petition to vary the settlement, she prayed that the respondent's life interest in the trust funds should be extinguished; and, further, that the trustees should be ordered to pay to her a sum of 1,000*l.*, or such other sum as the court should direct, to cover the costs and other incidental and additional expenses of the petitioner arising out of the respondent's misconduct. The registrar reported in favour of the first, but submitted in regard to the second part of the prayer, that, as it would be to some extent prejudicial to the child's interests, no order ought to be made directing any payment out of the corpus of the fund until the infant was represented. Upon motion to vary the registrar's report, the court ordered an adjournment, so that the infant might be represented, and thereupon made an order extinguishing the respondent's interest and directing the trustees to raise and pay to the petitioner a sum of 450*l.* to cover costs, including the costs of this application. Douglas v. Douglas, 74 L. T. 384.

Mistake — Declaration — Terms.] — A post-nuptial settlement had been varied by the probate and divorce division on the mistaken supposition that it included certain property. An action was brought in the chancery division for a declaration that the settlement was void in respect of this property:—Held, that the plaintiff ought only to be granted relief upon the terms of her undertaking not to dispute the jurisdiction of the probate and divorce division further to deal with the property. Allcard v.

Service of Petition—Respondent and Surviving Trustee both uncertificated Bankrupts—Notice to Official Receiver.]—The court dispensed with service of a petition to vary a marriage settlement in a case where the respondent and the surviving trustee of the settlement were both uncertificated bankrupts, and where notice of the application to dispense with service had been given to the chief official receiver in bankruptcy. Snelling v. Snelling, 63 L. T. 263.

Interests of Parties affected—Notice—Three Trustees—Two appearing—Costs.]—A wife had obtained a decree dissolving her marriage, and petitioned for variation of the settlement whereby she had settled a fund in trust for herself for life, then on her intended husband for his life if he survived her, and at the death of the survivor on trust for such one or more of the children of a former marriage (of which there were five living), and of the then intended marriage in such manner as she should appoint, and in default of appointment then among all her present or future children in equal shares. The settlement further provided that in case she should survive her husband and there should be at his death no children of this marriage, then the trustees should hold the said trust fund for her absolutely. There were no children of the marriage. Upon application to extinguish the husband's interests in the said fund and for an order that the settlement should be varied by directing the trustees to hold the fund in trust for the wife absolutely :—Held, that such an order could be made, and the court, being satisfied that notice had been given to four of the children of the former marriage, and that they did not object, and that the fifth child had no notice of the proceedings owing to his whereabouts being unknown, made the order as prayed, and ordered that as two only of the three trustees had appeared, their costs should be paid as if the third trustee were party to the order. Storer v. Storer, 6 R. 635 ; 71 L. T. 704.

Service of Notice on Trustee resident in Australia.]—The court, while refusing to allow substituted service of a petition for variation of settlement upon a trustee resident in Australia, dispensed with service upon him, it appearing that his co-trustee in England had been duly served, and that neither of the trustees was entitled to any beneficial interest in the settled property. Taylor v. Taylor, 66 L. T. 267.

Post-nuptial Settlement — Amount reduced —Dum sola et casta Clause inserted.]—The husband and wife were married in 1884, and separated in 1889 under a deed, by which the husband paid his wife 200*l.* a year, without any dum casta clause. He afterwards found that she was living with the co-respondent under the petitioner's name. He thereupon petitioned to have the marriage dissolved, and a decree nisi was pronounced, which was in due course made absolute. Upon petition to vary the post-nuptial deed :—Held, that the allowance to the respondent should be reduced to 100*l.* per annum, and that this should be payable to the respondent only dum sola et casta vixerit. Saunders v. Saunders, 69 L. T. 498. See col. 857.

Inclusion of Post-nuptial Settlement of Respondent's Property—Second Marriage of Respondent—Settlement on Second Marriage—Trustees — Purchasers for Value.] — The wife divorced her husband on the ground of cruelty and adultery. The decree nisi was pronounced in December, 1891, and the decree absolute on the 22nd November, 1892. The petitioner was ordered to have the custody of the three children of the marriage. A settlement of the wife's property was made in 1877, upon the marriage, and no contest arose as to the extinguishment of all interest of the respondent thereunder. By a post-nuptial deed executed in 1878, the respondent brought property into settlement. Under that deed the respondent took the first life interest (subject to an annuity of 300*l.* a year payable to the petitioner until her death or re-marriage) and after his death the property was to go to the respondent's children by the petitioner or by any future wife, as he should appoint, and in default of appointment it was to be equally divided among all his children by the petitioner or any other wife. He was also empowered to raise a sum of 4,000*l.* upon mortgage of his life interest, and there was also a proviso empowering him under certain conditions to appoint the income accruing after his death to any future wife for life, and it gave him power to appoint new trustees. On the 17th December, 1892, the respondent married again after executing on the previous day a settlement substantially in favour of his second wife, and exercising his power of appointment under the post-nuptial deed of 1878 in favour of the child or children (if any) of his second marriage, to the exclusion of the three children of the first marriage. The respondent during the year 1888 charged his life interest under the deed of 1878 with various sums advanced to him. In March, 1891, the respondent was adjudicated bankrupt, and in September, 1892, his life interest under the settlements of 1877 and 1878 were sold by auction by the trustee in bankruptcy, the purchase being completed on the 30th December, 1892. The conditions of sale contained a notice of the divorce and consequent possible application to vary the settlements. The registrar recommended that all interest of the respondent in the property comprised in the settlement of 1877 should be extinguished, and that his powers of appointment under the deed of 1878 should also be extinguished :—The court confirmed the first recommendation, but ordered that the powers of appointment under the deed of 1878 should be extinguished only to the extent of leaving the children of the first marriage to take as if there had been a default of appointment, and that this extinction should only operate during the petitioner's life or until she married again. Nevill v. Nevill, 69 L. T. 463.

"Net Annual Income"—Cross-examination of Petitioner by Respondent as to Deductions from Gross Income.]—The husband having in 1888 divorced his wife on the ground of her adultery, subsequently by leave of the court filed his petition, in 1891, for variation of the marriage settlements. The registrar reported that the present "net annual income" of the petitioner was 840*l.*, and that of the respondent about 125*l.*, and that the latter would be increased by a further 200*l.* a year upon the death of the respondent's mother, upon the happening of which event the registrar recommended that 160*l.* should be paid annually by the respondent to the petitioner for the benefit of the children of the marriage, who were in the custody of their father, the petitioner, by order of the court. The registrar refused to allow the respondent to cross-examine the petitioner as to the deductions he claimed to make from his gross income :—Held, that the fact of the respondent being an adulteress did not bar her right to cross-examine her husband as to his means, it not being suggested against her that the proposal to cross-examine was vexatious ; and as it appeared to the court to be desirable, in the present case, in order to arrive at a correct estimate of the petitioner's net annual income, the court referred the matter back to the registrar for further investigation and report. Driffield v. Driffield, 65 L. T. 795.

Unsettled Property Squandered—Income from Settled Property—Large Proportion Awarded.]—Where a respondent (husband) had recently squandered the bulk of the property over which he had free control, the court awarded to the petitioner more than one-third of the income from the property which had been brought into settlement by the respondent upon the marriage, and further ordered that, after the respondent's death, the award should be increased to more than one-half of that income, but limited dum sola vixerit. Bashall v. Bashall, 76 L. T. 165.

Reversionary Interests — Permanent Maintenance in excess of one-third of Joint Income secured to Wife in presenti.] — The wife obtained a decree absolute on the grounds of adultery and cruelty, and presented a petition for variation of the marriage settlements and for permanent maintenance. The present joint income of the husband and wife amounted to nearly 1,500*l.* a year. Both were entitled to considerable property in reversion. The registrar recommended either that a present income of 700*l.* a year should be secured to the wife for her life, or, in the alternative, that she should have secured to her an annual sum equal to one-third of the present joint income, such annual sum to be increased upon the falling in of the husband's reversionary interest. On behalf of the husband, it was stated, that, if one of these two courses were to be adopted, he should, of the two, prefer the former. The court thereupon ordered that the husband secure to the petitioner, by way of permanent maintenance, the sum of 700*l.* a year for her life. Warren v. Warren, 63 L. T. 264.

Respondent's Interest only Partially Extinguished—Right to Appoint New Trustees—Probable increase in Husband's Income.]—After final decree dissolving the marriage upon the ground of the adultery of the respondent with the co-respondent, the petitioner presented a petition for variation of two settlements executed in 1882 in contemplation of the marriage. Substantially, the settlements gave the wife a first life interest in half the income of the fund brought into settlement by herself, and further conferred upon her conditional benefits in certain contingencies, the principal one being that, upon the death of the respondent's mother, now aged about seventy, the respondent's income would be immediately increased from about 300*l.* to about 650*l.* a year. There was also a power of appointing new trustees by the petitioner and respondent during their joint lives, and by the survivor of them during his or her life. The registrar recommended, as to the property brought into settlement by the petitioner, that the whole of the wife's interest and powers should be extinguished ; and as to the property brought into settlement by the respondent that the terms of the settlement should be varied by ordering the trustees to pay 50*l.* a year to the petitioner for the maintenance and education of the infant child of the marriage during her minority, and after twenty-one to the said child ; and that upon the death of the respondent's mother the allowance for the child should be increased to 150*l.* a year. Further, that the respondent's power of appointment amongst the children or remoter issue of the said marriage should be extinguished. It was left for the court to say whether her power of appointing, or joining in the appointment of, new trustees should be extinguished as prayed by the petitioner. The registrar refused to take into account the great probability of the husband's promotion in the office held by him in Her Majesty's household, by which promotion, it was said, that his income would be increased by about the amount of income which would accrue to the respondent on the death of her mother :—Held, that the registrar was right in not taking the husband's probable future promotion and consequent increase of salary into account. But held, that, as the wife's increase of income was a vested interest to which she was absolutely entitled in reversion, the registrar's report as to the increased amount to be paid by the respondent for the benefit of the child upon the reversion falling in was not unreasonable nor contrary to the practice :—Held, also, that, as the wife was still to retain an interest in the fund brought into settlement by herself, her right to appoint, or join in the appointment of, new trustees must be retained in her favour. Tupper v. Tupper, 62 L. T. 665.

Payment of Annual Sum to Husband.]—Upon application to vary a marriage settlement after a decree for divorce on the husband's petition, it appeared that the wife's income under the settlement amounted to 1,050*l.* a year. The husband possessed an income of about 603*l.* a year, part of which arose from money received from the respondent. There were no children of the marriage. The court varied the trusts of the settlement by ordering the trustees to pay the husband 300*l.* a year during the joint lives of husband and wife. Farrington v. Farrington, 55 L. J., P. 69 ; 11 P. D. 84.

Freedom from Trusts—Child born.]—On a petition for variation of settlements after a decree for dissolution of marriage by reason of the wife's adultery, where a child had been born between the date of the decree nisi and decree absolute, and fourteen months after the wife had eloped from her husband, the court refused to transfer funds in settlement to the parties free from the trusts of the settlement. Pryor v. Pryor, 56 L. J., P. 77 ; 12 P. D. 165 ; 57 L. T. 533 ; 35 W. R. 349.

—— Division of Trust Fund.]—By a post-nuptial settlement a husband assigned certain property to trustees on trust to pay him the income during his life, or until he had incurred a forfeiture, and on a determination of his interest, to his wife for her life, with further discretionary trusts for the benefit of the husband's next of kin, or for the benefit of a second wife, or the issue of a second marriage. The husband became bankrupt, and by a compromise sanctioned by the Chancery Division a portion of the fund was assigned to his trustee in bankruptcy, and his interest in the remainder was assigned to the trustees of the settlement. Subsequently the marriage was dissolved on account of the wife's adultery, and on a petition for variation of settlements the registrar proposed that the trusts of the settlement should be extinguished, and that seven-twelfths of the fund should be paid to the husband, and five-twelfths to the wife. Both parties agreed to this, but the trustees of the settlement objected, and the court refused to sanction a division of the fund, but ordered that the income of five-twelfths of it should be paid to the wife, and that in all other respects the trusts of the settlement should remain in force. Smith v. Smith, 56 L. J., P. 51; 12 P. D. 102; 57 L. T. 375; 35 W. R. 459.

Power to deal with Capital—Discretion of Judge.]—On a petition for variation of a settlement the judge refused to give the wife, the petitioner, any part of the capital of the fund, which had been all settled by the husband, although there were no children of the marriage, or to order payment of the petitioner's costs out of the funds. And he gave a portion only of the income to the wife:—The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision, holding that although the court had undoubted jurisdiction to deal with the capital, it was not for the benefit of the wife to give her any portion of it; and the court refused to interfere with the discretion of the judge as to the amount of income awarded to her. Ponsonby v. Ponsonby, 53 L. J., P. 112; 9 P. D. 122; 51 L. T. 174; 32 W. R. 746—C. A.

Power of Appointing New Trustees.]—In the variation of settlements the court has jurisdiction to extinguish a joint power of appointment of new trustees. Oppenheim v. Oppenheim, 53 L. J., P. 48; 9 P. D. 60; 32 W. R. 723.

—— Wife's Power of Appointment.]—In a petition for variation of settlements after a decree of dissolution on account of the wife's adultery, the registrar by his report recommended that the power of appointment over the fund given to the wife by the settlement should be extinguished, and that she should be deprived of the power of appointing or joining in the appointment of new trustees. The petitioner had signified his willingness that the respondent should continue to receive 100*l.* a year out of 150*l.* settled on her. The court confirmed the first of these recommendations, but disallowed the second, on the ground that as the respondent was to continue to receive an income from the fund she had an interest in the appointment of trustees. An order extinguishing the power of appointment of funds in the settlement is an order made, within the words of the section, "with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled." Bosville v. Bosville, 57 L. J., P. 62; 13 P. D. 76; 58 L. T. 640; 36 W. R. 912.

Wife's Interest Extinguished — Payment of Half of Property—Reversion—Power of Appointment.]—Property was brought into settlement by both the husband and the wife, with a joint power of appointment in favour of the children of the marriage; but with regard to the wife's property, which included a reversionary interest, the settlement gave her, in certain events, a power of appointment in favour of a second or subsequent marriage. The marriage was dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, the husband having the custody of the two children of the marriage. The court varied the settlements by absolutely extinguishing the wife's interest in the property brought into settlement by the husband, thus leaving their respective incomes nearly equal. The court further ordered that one-half of the wife's property should be paid to the husband and children, without taking into account the amount of the wife's costs of the suit; and also that one-half of the wife's reversionary interest should, upon its falling into possession, be assigned to the husband and children. The court also extinguished the wife's power of appointment under the joint power, and varied the wife's power of appointment over her own property in favour of a future husband or the children of a future marriage, by restricting its benefit to any husband married after the death of the petitioner, and to children of a subsequent marriage born after the death of the petitioner. Noel v. Noel, 54 L. J., P. 73; 10 P. D. 179; 33 W. R. 552.

—— Payment of Income to Husband.]—A sum of money, the wife's fortune, had been settled on marriage to the separate use of the wife for life. A decree of divorce having been pronounced against her at the suit of the husband, judge ordinary made an order, under the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5, that the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of the fund, in trust for the person who, under the settlement, would have been entitled were the wife dead. The fund being in court, the husband, as the person so next entitled, applied for an order for the payment of the income to him:—Held, that the Court of Divorce had jurisdiction, and the income was ordered to be paid to the husband. Pratt v. Jenner, Jenner, Ex parte, 35 L. J., Ch. 682; L. R. 1 Ch. 493; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 557; 15 L. T. 183; 14 W. R. 852.

Power of Appointment on Second Marriage in case Wife should survive the Husband.]—Where a settlement gives a wife, after the death of her first husband, power to appoint in favour of children by a subsequent marriage, the court refused to vary that power after a decree for divorce, so as to enable the wife to exercise the power before her first husband's death. Pollard v. Pollard, 63 L. J., P. 104; [1894] P. 172; 6 R. 594; 70 L. T. 815.

Post-nuptial "Settlement" — Absolute Assignment.]—An absolute assignment by a wife to her husband during the marriage of freehold property is not a "settlement" within the meaning of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5. Chalmers v. Chalmers, 1 R. 504; 68 L. T. 28.

Costs out of Wife's Fund—Guilty Wife—Consent of Infants.]—On a motion for variation of settlements after a decree for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, the court, on the recommendation of the registrar, and with the consent of the guardian ad litem of infant children of the marriage, allowed the costs of all parties to be paid out of the wife's settled fund. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 1 R. 506; 68 L. T. 467.

Wife's Costs not Considered.]—Where a marriage has been dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, the court will not, when directing the variation of the marriage settlements, take into consideration the amount of costs incurred by the wife. Noel v. Noel, 54 L. J., P. 73; 10 P. D. 179; 33 W. R. 552.

Guilty Wife—Variable Amount—Allowance to Children for Life.]—On a husband's petition, under s. 45 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, for settlement of property to which the wife, who had been found guilty of adultery, was entitled, the court refused to make the allowance variable to meet a possible fall in the respondent's income; or to limit the husband's receipt of his allowance to such a time as he should be unmarried; or to limit the allowance to the children to the time when they should be under sixteen years of age. Midwinter v. Midwinter, 62 L. J., P. 77; [1893] P. 93; 1 R. 512; 68 L. T. 262; 41 W. R. 560.

No Children — Reconveyance to Settlor.]—Where a marriage has been dissolved (there being no issue), and the rights of children of a future marriage are the sole limitation to the settlor's absolute right of enjoyment of the settled property, the court will order the trustees to reconvey the property to the settlor for his own use. Meredyth v. Meredyth, 64 L. J., P. 54; [1895] P. 92; 11 R. 651; 72 L. T. 898; 43 W. R. 304.

Vesting Order—Trustee Act, 1893.]—Where a vesting order was required to carry into effect an order for variation of settlements, the court exercised jurisdiction under the Trustee Act, 1893, s. 35, and made a vesting order. Storer v. Storer, 11 R. 618.

Consent Order — Mistake — Amendment — Costs.]—The court, upon the application of the testamentary guardians of an infant child of the marriage of the petitioner and respondent, directed, after various references to the registrar, that an order made by Butt, J., in 1886, upon the consent of the petitioner, respondent, and trustees of the marriage settlement, be amended by extinguishing the respondent's interest in a portion of the settled funds; and further directed that the costs of all parties be paid out of the said portion of the trust funds or the income thereof. Arkwright v. Arkwright, 73 L. T. 287.

Motion to Confirm Registrar's Report.]—A motion to confirm a registrar's report ordering a variation of a settlement after a decree for dissolution of the marriage, need not be made within fourteen days after notice of the filing of the report in the registry by the petitioner. Farrington v. Farrington, 55 L. J., P. 69; 11 P. D. 84.

Husband's Petition for—Refusal.]—The husband obtained a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent. He petitioned that certain jewellery belonging to his wife should be sold, and a settlement made of the proceeds, giving her a life interest in the income arising from the investment of those proceeds, with remainder to himself. His income was substantial, his wife's only 72*l.* a year. The court refused to order any settlement. Schofield v. Schofield, 64 L. T. 838.

Inquiry before Final Decree — Jurisdiction.]—The court has jurisdiction before the final decree of divorce or judicial separation is pronounced against a guilty wife, to direct an inquiry as to what property the wife is entitled to, in order that the court may be in a position when the final decree is pronounced to order a settlement to be made of the wife's property upon the innocent party or the children of the marriage. Midwinter v. Midwinter, 61 L. J., P. 1; 65 L. T. 438; 40 W. R. 33—C. A.

Judicial Separation.]—In proceedings for a judicial separation only the court has no power to alter settlements. Gandy v. Gandy, 51 L. J., P. 41; 7 P. D. 168; 46 L. T. 607; 30 W. R. 673. See col. 797.

11. Protection Orders and Maintenance in Case of Desertion.

a. Protection Orders.

Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878—Jurisdiction.]—By the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 4, if a husband is convicted summarily, or otherwise, of an aggravated assault within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 43, upon his wife, the court or magistrate before whom he is convicted may, if satisfied that the future safety of the wife is in peril, order that the wife shall be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband, and the order is to have the force and effect in all respects of a decree of judicial separation for cruelty.

The order may provide (1) for payment of a weekly sum by the husband to the wife, (2) the custody of the children under ten. The two last provisions do not apply if the wife has committed adultery uncondoned.

This act is amended and enlarged by the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.

Magistrates at petty sessions have power to order a judicial separation for an aggravated assault, even though they only inflict the penalty of fine or imprisonment for a common assault. Woods v. Woods, 10 P. D. 172; 33 W. R. 323; 50 J. P. 199.

—— Aggravated Assault—Conviction and Order for Separation and Maintenance—Right of Husband to give Evidence.]—Where after the conviction of a husband of an aggravated assault upon his wife under s. 43 of the Offences Against the Person Act, 1861, the justices are asked to make an order under s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, the husband is entitled to be called as a witness in the same manner as if the proceedings had been instituted in the divorce court. Powell v. Powell (14 P. D. 177) overruled. Jones v. Jones, 64 L. J., P. 84; [1895] P. 201; 11 R. 614; 72 L. T. 662; 43 W. R. 656; 59 J. P. 360.

—— Appeal to what Court.]—An order under

s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, or a refusal by the justices to vary such order, is subject to appeal to the probate and admiralty division, although the justices have stated a case for the opinion of the queen's bench division, which has not been determined. Ib.

A husband having been convicted of an aggravated assault on his wife was sentenced to one month's imprisonment and the justices ordered a judicial separation and an allowance to the wife of 2*l.* a week; notice of appeal to quarter sessions against the conviction was given, and pending the appeal the husband applied to the probate, divorce and admiralty division to have the order varied:—Held, that the court would hear the appeal, though the appeal to quarter sessions was pending. Goodwin v. Goodwin, 51 J. P. 583.

Appeals from justices under s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, should be made to a divisional court. Bluett v. Bluett, 1 R. 500; 68 L. T. 260; 57 J. P. 25.

—— Resumption of Cohabitation, Effect of.]—Upon the conviction of a husband for an aggravated assault on his wife, justices made an order, under s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, that the wife should be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband, and that he should pay to her a weekly sum for her maintenance. The wife subsequently resumed cohabitation with her husband for a time, and then again left him:—Held that the order was annulled by reason of the subsequent resumption of cohabitation, and therefore that the wife could not enforce payment of weekly sums alleged to have become due under it after she again left her husband. Haddon v. Haddon, 56 L. J., M. C. 69; 18 Q. B. D. 778; 56 L. T. 716; 51 J. P. 486.

—— Reduction into Possession.]—Where a wife, entitled to property which is reversionary, or which had not been reduced into possession by the husband, has obtained a protection order under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 19, s. 4, and has afterwards resumed cohabitation with her husband, on the property coming or being reduced into possession, the wife is entitled to it absolutely under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 25, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 8. Emery's Trust, In re, 50 L. T. 197; 32 W. R. 357.

—— Husband Entitled to Legacy—Injunction—Order by Magistrate for Weekly Allowance.]—In a petition by the wife for dissolution of the marriage, it appeared that before the petition, the husband having been convicted of an aggravated assault on his wife, a magistrate made an order under 41 Vict. c. 19, s. 4, that the wife be not bound to cohabit with her husband, and that he should pay to her the sum of 1*l.* weekly. In the suit in this court orders had been made on the respondent to pay 16*l.* and secure a further sum of 45*l.* to defray the wife's costs. The husband was entitled to the sum of 1,400*l.* under the will of a deceased testatrix, and the wife had obtained an ex parte injunction restraining the husband from receiving any part of the legacy. On an application for the continuation of the injunction and the appointment of a receiver, the court continued the injunction in regard to the costs until the trial or payment of them, but declined to make any order for the enforcement of the magistrate's order for an allowance. Gillett v. Gillett, 58 L. J., P. 84; 14 P. D. 158; 61 L. T. 401; 38 W. R. 144.

—— Application to vary Order—Evidence of Wife's Adultery.]—Where an order has been made under s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, authorising a wife to refuse to cohabit with her husband, the presumption of non-access applies from the date of the order as in the case of a judicial separation; and the justices on an application to vary the order on account of the wife's adultery cannot refuse to receive the direct evidence of the husband or the admissions of the wife in proof of the paternity of a child born more than nine months after the separation. Hetherington v. Hetherington, 56 L. J., P. 78; 12 P. D. 112; 57 L. T. 533; 36 W. R. 12; 51 J. P. 119, 294.

—— Application to Discharge Order for Payment—How made.]—Where an order has been made under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 4, for the payment of money by the husband or custody of children by the wife, an application to discharge the order on the ground that the wife has been guilty of adultery must be made to the court or magistrates by whom the order was made, and not to the probate and admiralty division. Ib.

Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895—Separation Order—Appeal from Justices—Court to which Appeal Lies.]—The only appeal under s. 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, from an order of justices made under s. 4 of the act, is to the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the high court of justice. Manders v. Manders, 66 L. J., Q. B. 296; [1897] 1 Q. B. 474; 45 W. R. 287; 61 J. P. 105.

—— Subsequent Application for Payment of Weekly Sum—Jurisdiction.]—Where a husband has been convicted of an aggravated assault, and an order made for a judicial separation only, the court has no jurisdiction to make an order for the payment by him of a weekly sum to his wife upon a subsequent application. Woodhead v. Woodhead, [1895] P. 343; 11 R. 659.

—— Persistent Cruelty—Retrospective Operation.]—Section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, is retrospective in its operation; therefore a married woman is entitled to apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for an order under the act where her husband has been guilty of persistent cruelty towards her, although the acts of cruelty alleged were committed previous to January 1, 1896, the day on which the act came into force. Lane v. Lane, 65 L. J., P. 63; [1896] P. 133; 74 L. T. 557; 60 J. P. 345.

—— Costs—Unsuccessful Proceedings Instituted by Wife—Right of Wife's Solicitor to Recover Costs from Husband.]—Section 5 (d) of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, confers upon justices exclusive jurisdiction over costs, and upon the dismissal of a wife's summons against her husband for a separation order, under s. 4, by justices who decline to make any order as to costs under s. 5, the solicitor who acted for the wife cannot recover his costs in an action against the husband. Cale v. James, 66 L. J., Q. B. 249; [1897] 1 Q. B. 418; 76 L. T. 119; 45 W. R. 317; 61 J. P. 230.

—— Evidence — Notes — Reasons of Magistrates.]—For the purposes of an appeal under the act full notes of the evidence before the magistrates ought to be taken, and copies furnished to the court. The magistrates should also give their reasons. Robinson v. Robinson, [1898] 1 P. 153 ; 78 L. T. 392. And see col. 823.

Divorce Act, 1857—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21.]—It was doubted whether a woman resident within the city of London could obtain a protection order under the words of this section. See Aldridge, Ex parte, 1 Sw. & Tr. 88.

Thereupon 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, was enacted.

—— Jurisdiction to Grant.] — A married woman applied to the justices of Plymouth for a protection order, she having since desertion lived outside the borough whilst her husband resided within :—Held, that the county justices had jurisdiction. Reg. v. Plymouth JJ., 44 J. P. 168.

—— Retrospective Effect.]—A woman having been deserted by her husband acquired some property by her own exertions, which she disposed of by will. Subsequently she obtained an order from a magistrate protecting her earnings and property :—Held, that such order had a retrospective effect, extending back to the commencement of the desertion ; and that the will was a valid instrument to pass the property acquired by her during such desertion. Elliott, In goods of, 40 L. J., Mat. 76 ; L. R. 2 P. 274 ; 25 L. T. 203 ; 19 W. R. 1072.

—— As to what Property — Proceeds of Brothel.]—An order protecting the earnings or property of a wife deserted by her husband is confined to money or property acquired by lawful industry, and does not extend to property acquired by keeping a brothel. Mason v. Mitchell, 3 H. & C. 528 ; 34 L. J., Ex. 68 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 89 ; 11 L. T. 714 ; 13 W. R. 349.

—— As Executrix—Power to transfer Stock.]—A wife deserted by her husband, obtained a magistrate's order under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21. Previously to the date of the order, but subsequently to the desertion, the wife had been appointed executrix, and also residuary legatee, by the will of K., who had died in that interval. After the order, the wife alone took out probate. Part of the testator's residuary estate consisted of stock, which the bank refused to allow her to transfer :—Held, even before 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 7, that she was entitled to transfer. Bathe v. Bank of England, 4 Kay & J. 564 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 630 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 505 ; 6 W. R. 612.

—— Reversionary Interest.] — A married woman, entitled in reversion to a legacy, having been deserted by her husband, obtained a magistrate's order, which, in terms, only affected to protect property acquired by her own industry, or to which she was entitled as trustee :—Held, that, notwithstanding the form of the order, the effect of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 8, was to include in it the reversionary interest. Whittingham, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 818 ; 10 L. T. 368 ; 12 W. R. 775.

—— Legacy.]—A wife who has obtained an order for protection is entitled to payment of a fund in court, representing a legacy bequeathed to her. Kingsley, In re, 26 Beav. 84 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 80 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1010 ; 6 W. R. 849.

—— Fund to Separate Use.]—A wife was deserted by her husband : afterwards her father bequeathed a fund for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and she subsequently obtained a protection order :—Held, that she was entitled to payment. Cooke v. Fuller, 26 Beav. 99.

—— Acquisition of Property since Date of Order.]—A wife became entitled, on the intestacy of an uncle, to shares, and the shares were, in pursuance of an agreement between husband and wife, transferred into the joint names of the husband and wife. The husband subsequently deserted his wife, and she obtained a magistrate's protection order. Capital subsequently became payable on account of the shares :—Held, that the shares had not been reduced into possession, and that the return capital payable on them belonged to the wife, as being property acquired since the date of the desertion. Nicholson v. Drury Building Estate Co., 47 L. J., Ch. 192 ; 7 Ch. D. 48 ; 37 L. T. 459 ; 26 W. R. 76.

When a wife, entitled to a legacy charged on real estate which had not been reduced into possession by her husband, obtained a protection order, in consequence of her husband's desertion, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21 :—Held, that the legacy, on being paid to her after the date of the order, was property which then came to or devolved upon her within ss. 21 and 25, and that her receipt was a good discharge. Coward, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 384 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 179 ; 32 L. T. 682 ; 23 W. R. 605. And see Hughes, In re, Brandon v. Hughes, 67 L. J., Ch. 279 ; [1898] 1 Ch. 529—C. A.

—— Desertion must be Continuous.]—The desertion must be continuous. A bonâ fide offer of the husband to provide for his wife, even at the time she claims the order, will deprive her of a right to it. Cargill v. Cargill, 1 Sw. & Tr. 235 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 69 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 764 ; 6 W. R. 870.

—— Proof of.]—When, upon the further consideration of an administration suit instituted by a married woman, who had obtained a protection order, suing as a feme sole under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, ss. 21, 25, 26, it was proposed to pay to her her share of the testator's estate :—Held, that evidence must be produced that the separation was a continuing one, but her affidavit was accepted as to this fact, and also as to no settlement or agreement for a settlement having been made. Ewart v. Chubb, 45 L. J., Ch. 108 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 454.

—— Where for Employment.]—The absence of a husband in his ordinary occupation as a mariner does not constitute desertion ; and the court cannot take into consideration an actual desertion in past years, which has been terminated by a return to cohabitation. Aldridge, Ex parte, 1 Sw. & Tr. 88 ; 6 W. R. 507.

A wife resided with her husband for four years. He then went to London in search of employment, and during the sixteen subsequent years he only on one occasion communicated with his wife. During the first years of absence he wrote several affectionate letters, urging his wife to correspond with him ; the two last were not answered by her, nor did the wife during any period of the absence apply to her husband to return to cohabitation :—Held, that there was no desertion. Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 231 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 65 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 717 ; 6 W. R. 867.

Absence, to constitute desertion, must be without the consent, direct or indirect, of the party deserted, and in spite of her wish. Ib. See cols. 752, 824.

Order—Service of.]—Service of a citation on the husband is not necessary. Hall, Ex parte, 27 L. J., Mat. 19.

The application may be founded on an affidavit of the wife alone. Ib.

But it should state sufficient facts to satisfy the court of the fact of desertion. Sewell, Ex parte, 28 L. J., Mat. 8.

Notice of an application on the part of a wife, deserted by her husband, for a protection order, must be served on him if his whereabouts is known. Matthew v. Matthew, 19 L. T. 662.

—— Form of.]—An order should be in general terms, the court having no power to decide what title the wife may have to specific property. Mullineux, Ex parte, 1 Sw. & Tr. 77; 27 L. J., Mat. 19 ; 6 W. R. 356.

—— Entry of, with Registrar of County Court.]—A married woman obtained a protection order for her property on the 12th April, 1861 ; she made a will on the 19th, and died on the 24th. The order was not entered with the registrar of the county court till the 24th, being more than ten days after it was obtained :—Held, that the requirement of the above provision, as to the entry of the order with the registrar, was directory and not imperative, and, on affidavits from the executors that they were ignorant of the husband's place of abode, probate was granted, limited to the property acquired since the date of the desertion. Farraday, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 369 ; 31 L. J., P. 7 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1252 ; 6 L. T. 57.

Effect of Petitioning without Next Friend.]—A married woman, under a magistrate's order of protection, can petition in equity without a next friend, and can obtain an order for payment without serving her husband. Rainsdon, In re, 4 Drew. 446 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 334 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 55 ; 7 W. R. 184.

—— Payment out—Petition—Service on Husband.]—On a petition presented by a wife, who had been deserted by her husband, to draw out of court certain sums of money to which she became entitled :—Held, that notice of the petition must be served upon the husband, notwithstanding that a protection order had been obtained protecting from the husband the property of the feme covert. Sutcliffe, Ex parte, Dundas, In re, 22 W. R. 676.

—— Actions by Wife—Adultery after Order.]—An action is maintainable by a wife for earnings after an order of a police magistrate upon desertion by her husband, notwithstanding that ever since the desertion she has been living in adultery, it not appearing that she had begun the adultery before the time specified in the order. Thomas v. Head, 2 F. & F. 88.

—— Commenced before Order made.]—An order obtained by a woman deserted by her husband, for the protection of property acquired since desertion, will not enable her to maintain an action commenced before the date of the order for injuries to, or in respect of, such property. Midland Ry. v. Pye, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 179 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 314 ; 4 L. T. 510 ; 9 W. R. 658.

—— For Libel.]—A wife who has been deserted by her husband, and has obtained an order of protection, can bring an action in her own name for libel. Ramsden v. Brearley, 44 L. J., Q. B. 46 ; L. R. 10 Q. B. 147 ; 32 L. T. 24 ; 23 W. R. 294.

—— On Liability of Husband for Maintenance.]—Justices at petty sessions refused to make an order, under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 101, s. 5, upon a husband to maintain or contribute towards the maintenance of his wife, who was a lunatic chargeable to the union, on the ground that a protection order, which she had obtained under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21, and which had not been discharged, absolved him from such liability :—Held, that, under the circumstances, the husband was liable, and that the justices were wrong. Oxford Union v. Barton, 33 L. T. 375.

—— On Separate Estate of Married Woman.]—A protection order obtained by a married woman, who has been deserted by her husband, under s. 21 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, only constitutes her a feme sole in respect of her earnings and property acquired after the desertion ; it has no effect on property acquired before the desertion. Waite v. Morland (38 Ch. D. 135) followed. Hill v. Cooper, 62 L. J., Q. B. 423 ; [1893] 2 Q. B. 85 ; 4 R. 418 ; 69 L. T. 216 ; 41 W. R. 500 ; 57 J. P. 663—C. A.

—— On Alimony pendente lite.]—By obtaining an order of protection, a wife does not deprive herself of her right to alimony pendente lite, in a suit subsequently instituted by her for dissolution of marriage. Hakewill v. Hakewill, 30 L. J., Mat. 254.

—— For Necessaries.]—An order for protection, obtained by a wife, will bar an action for necessaries against the husband. Tempany v. Hakewill, 1 F. & F. 438.

After Wife's Death.]—Where a married woman obtained a protection order, and died intestate, leaving her husband and children by him, who were minors, and her husband her surviving, the probate court, in the lifetime of the father, who was abroad, granted administration, for the use and benefit of the children, to their uncle, who had been duly elected by them as their guardian for that purpose. Weir, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 451 ; 31 L. J., P. 88 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 393 ; 6 L. T. 131.

A wife, having been deserted by her husband, obtained a protection order. On her death, in the lifetime of her husband, intestate, the court decreed letters of administration, limited to such personal property as she had acquired, or become possessed of, since the desertion, without specifying of what that property consisted, to be granted to one of her next of kin. Worman, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 513 ; 29 L. J., P. 164.

Discharge of Order.]—A husband may come to the divorce court at any time, and apply for a discharge of the order. Hall, Ex parte, 27 L. J., Mat. 19.

An application to discharge a protection order is not limited to the lifetime of the married woman. Mudge v. Adams, 50 L. J., P. 49; 6 P. D. 54; 44 L. T. 185; 29 W. R. 307.

An order of protection to a married woman granted by a police magistrate or justices, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21, could only be discharged by the magistrate or justice by whom it was made. Sharpe, Ex parte, 5 B. & S. 322; 33 L. J., M. C. 152; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1018; 10 L. T. 458; 12 W. R. 756.

b. Maintenance in Case of Desertion.

Under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, 58 & 59 Vict. c. 39.

Jurisdiction of Justices—"Desertion."]—By the Married Women (Maintenance in Case of Desertion) Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 52), s. 1, any married woman who has been "deserted" by her husband may summon him before justices, and the justices, "if satisfied that the husband, being able wholly or in part to maintain his wife and family, has wilfully neglected or refused so to do, and has deserted his wife," may order that he shall pay her a weekly sum for her support. Upon a summons by a married woman under the act, it appeared that disputes had arisen between her and her husband, and that they had lived apart under an agreement for separation, by which he undertook to pay her a weekly allowance so long as she should live chastely and should not molest him. He had ceased to make and refused to continue the weekly payments under the agreement. He charged his wife with adultery, but the justices found that the charge was not proved:—Held, that the refusal of the husband to pay his wife the weekly allowance and to carry out the agreement of separation was not sufficient evidence of "desertion" within the act to warrant the justices in making an order against him for her support. Pape v. Pape, 57 L. J., M. C. 3; 20 Q. B. D. 76; 58 L. T. 399; 36 W. R. 125; 52 J. P. 181.

In order to constitute "desertion" of a wife by a husband, in the legal sense of the term, there must be an existing cohabitation broken by some wrongful act of the husband. But cohabitation does not necessarily imply that a husband and wife are living together physically under the same roof. Married domestic servants and other classes of persons, who from circumstances cannot live night and day under the same roof, may yet be said to cohabit together in the wider sense of the term. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 66 L. J., P. 31; [1897] P. 24; 75 L. T. 391; 45 W. R. 142; 61 J. P. 8. And see col. 747.

—— Retrospective Effect of Act.]—In 1881 a husband deserted his wife and left the kingdom. On his return from abroad in 1886 his wife applied at petty sessions, under the act passed in that year, for maintenance, and the justices made an order:—Held, that the order was properly made, the question of desertion being purely one of fact for the justices. The act of 1886 was retrospective without express words. It was intended to cure an existing evil, and to afford to married women a remedy for desertion, whether such desertion took place before the passing of the act or not. Reg. v. Birwistle, 58 L. J., M. C. 158.

Duty of Justices.]—In administering the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, courts of summary jurisdiction should be careful not to interfere too much in matrimonial life. Harling v. Harling, 70 L. T. 559; 60 J. P. 377.

Residence of Wife.]—A married woman whose husband has deserted and refused to maintain her may obtain an order, under 49 & 50 Vict. c. 52, against him for her support from any magistrate or justices within whose jurisdiction she resides at the time of such refusal or desertion, whichever act is the latest. Reg. v. Leresche, 56 L. J., M. C. 135; 35 W. R. 805.

Where such an order did not contain the name of the place where the refusal to maintain took place, the court refused to make absolute a rule for a certiorari to bring up and quash the same, it being admitted that the wife's residence was within the jurisdiction. Ib.

Voluntary Separation—Offers to resume Cohabitation by Wife—Alleged Desertion of Husband—Delay in Application for Maintenance.]—In 1880 the appellant, a labourer, married the respondent. In 1881 the respondent, with the appellant's consent, went to her mother's house for her confinement. During her absence the appellant broke up their home and took a room in his father's cottage, where the wife refused to live with him on the ground that there was inadequate accommodation. Subsequently the appellant refused the respondent's request to take her back to live with him. In 1894 an order was made by justices adjudging the appellant to pay alimony to the respondent:—Held, that the appellant's request that the respondent should live with him at his father's house was not unreasonable, and that there was no evidence of desertion within the meaning of s. 1 of the Married Women (Maintenance in Case of Desertion) Act, 1886, to warrant an order for alimony after the lapse of so many years from the time when the parties ceased cohabitation. Jones v. Jones, 43 W. R. 424.

Separation by Mutual Consent—Offer of Wife to return to Cohabitation—Refusal of Husband.]—A husband and wife by deed agreed to live apart, and the husband further covenanted to contribute a certain sum weekly towards the support of his wife. The parties lived apart, but the husband, after a time, failed to continue to contribute to the maintenance of his wife. The wife offered to return to cohabitation, but this offer was refused by the husband who would not allow her to enter his house:—Held, that the husband had not deserted his wife within the meaning of s. 1 of 49 & 50 Vict. c. 52, so as to justify an order for alimony being made upon him by justices under that section. Reg. v. Leresche, 60 L. J., M. C. 153; [1891] 2 Q. B. 418; 65 L. T. 602; 40 W. R. 2; 17 Cox, C. C. 384; 56 J. P. 37—C. A. And see col. 752.

Limit of Time — Desertion more than Six Months before Date of Summons or Complaint.]—By s. 8 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, all applications under the act are to be made in accordance with the summary jurisdiction acts—that is to say, they must be made within six months from the date of the offence complained of, in accordance with s. 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. But desertion must be regarded as a continuous act, and therefore a summons by a wife against a husband under s. 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, need not be taken out within six months from the date on which he first left her. Heard v. Heard, 65 L. J., P. 111; [1896] P. 188; 60 J. P. 426.

Persistent Cruelty and Neglect to maintain, causing Wife to live separate and apart.]—"Persistent cruelty or wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance," causing a wife to leave her husband within the meaning of s. 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, are not continuing acts so as to avoid the necessity imposed upon the wife by s. 8 of taking proceedings within six months, in accordance with the provisions of s. 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. Ellis v. Ellis, 65 L. J., P. 124; [1896] P. 251; 75 L. T. 390; 45 W. R. 144; 60 J. P. 823.

Neglect to maintain Wife—Reasonable Allowance—Husband's Means.]—Before making an order under ss. 4 and 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, against a husband who has been found guilty of neglecting to maintain his wife, it is the duty of the justices to inquire into the fact whether the husband has means or the capability of earning means. It is not sufficient for the justices to make an order against the husband under s. 5, leaving it to him to apply under s. 7 "to alter, vary, or discharge" such order on the ground of his want of means. Earnshaw v. Earnshaw, 65 L. J., P. 89; [1896] P. 160; 74 L. T. 560; 60 J. P. 377.

Order Obtained by False Statements and Concealment of Material Facts without Notice to Husband.]—A husband went to America on on the 2nd of March, 1867, with his wife's full consent and approval, to look for employment, and remained away from home until the end of 1876. He left his wife in a lodging-house furnished by him, as landlady of which she made a good living. During his absence he never communicated with his wife by letter, and only sent her one verbal message, which there was no evidence to show she had ever received. There was, however, evidence that he could not write. When he returned home his wife refused to receive him, and shut the door in his face. Next day she went before a police magistrate and obtained a protection order under s. 21 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), on the ground that her husband had deserted her in March, 1867. She did not, however, inform the magistrate that her husband had left England with her consent, or that he had left her in occupation of a lodging-house furnished by him. The husband had no notice of the application for the protection order, nor was he aware of its existence, until it was found among her papers after her death. The husband and wife never lived together again, but they met from time to time on friendly terms at family gatherings:—Held, that the order must be set aside as having been obtained without notice to the husband, and by a false and fraudulent allegation of desertion, and concealment of material facts. Mahoney v. M'Carthy, 61 L. J., P. 41; [1892] P. 21.

Divorce Act, 1857—Payment out of Share of Estate—Evidence of Separation.]—When upon the further consideration of an administration suit instituted by a married woman, who had obtained a protection order, suing as a feme sole under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, ss. 21, 25, 26, it was proposed to pay to her her share of the testator's estate:—Held, that evidence must be produced that the separation was a continuing one, but her affidavit was accepted as to this fact, and also as to no settlement or agreement for a settlement having been made. Ewart v. Chubb, L. R. 20 Eq. 454.

Desertion existing at Date of Order.]—To enable justices to make an order for maintenance under the Married Women (Maintenance in Case of Desertion) Act, 1886, it is sufficient that, at the time when the order is made, there is evidence of the husband's desertion of the wife. It is not necessary to fix on any particular day as the date when the desertion began. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 58 J. P. 415.

Under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878—Summons to vary Order—Refusal—Discretion.]—Justices made an order under s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (inter alia), that a husband should pay his wife 30*s.* a week. This order was not appealed against. More than a year afterwards the husband applied to the justices for a summons calling upon his wife to show cause why this order should not be varied by reduction of the weekly payment, upon the ground that his means had diminished. The justices having heard what the husband had to say refused to issue the summons:—Held, that the justices had a discretion to grant or refuse a summons, and had exercised it properly; and also, that such discretion was not, under the terms of s. 4, the subject of review. Reg. v. Huggins, 60 L. J., M. C. 139.

—— Order for Separation—Conviction for Aggravated Assault—Appeal to Probate Division—Jurisdiction.]—Section 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), does not give an appeal to the probate, divorce, and admiralty division from a conviction for aggravated assault, but only from the order for judicial separation, made by virtue of the provisions of the above act, as one of the results of the conviction. Lewin v. Lewin, 60 L. J., P. 85; [1891] P. 254; 64 L. T. 834; 39 W. R. 575; 17 Cox, C. C. 314; 55 J. P. 296.

—— Order obtained by Guardians—Wife leaving Workhouse.]—K., in 1877, deserted his wife, who went into the workhouse in 1881; the overseers obtained an order upon K. for maintenance. In 1886 the wife left the workhouse, and applied for an order of maintenance under 49 & 50 Vict. c. 52:—Held that the justices had jurisdiction, and that as the former order was revoked by the wife leaving the workhouse, and as K. had never made any bonâ fide offer to resume cohabitation, she was a deserted wife. Kershaw v. Kershaw, 51 J. P. 646.

—— Custody of Children—Magistrates' Order—Appeal—Fresh Evidence—Case remitted.]—Where the magistrates, who had rightly granted a separation order to the wife, refused to determine in a judicial manner, in the interests of the children, the question of their custody, this court, on appeal, declined to deal with the matter, by receiving fresh evidence, and remitted the case to the magistrates upon the points as to the wife's fitness or unfitness, and as to the amount of her allowance. Foulkes v. Foulkes, 69 L. T. 461.

—— Evidence at Hearing—Appeal—Affidavits.]—A husband having been summarily convicted of an aggravated assault on his wife within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 43, the justices before whom he was convicted made an order that the wife should not be bound to cohabit with him, and that he should pay her a weekly sum for her maintenance; and they refused to hear the husband's evidence as to his means:—Held, that the justices were warranted in refusing to allow the husband to be called as a witness, as it was not the intention of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), that there should be any further hearing of the case by the justices after the conviction for assault:—Held, also, that on the hearing of the appeal affidavits as to the merits of the case could not be admitted. Woods v. Woods (10 P. D. 172) followed. Powell v. Powell, 14 P. D. 177; 61 L. T. 436; 53 J. P. 519.

—— Right of Rehearing — Evidence of Adultery.] — A wife applied to justices for an order of maintenance against her husband under 49 & 50 Vict. c. 52. He suggested adultery against her, but was not prepared to prove it. The justices offered to adjourn it, so as to give time to obtain evidence, but he declined. The justices made the order against the husband:—Held, that he could not afterwards insist on a rehearing on the ground that he had since obtained evidence of the wife's adultery. Reg. v. Oldham JJ., 51 J. P. 647.

The power given to justices by s. 2 of the Married Women (Maintenance in Case of Desertion) Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 52), to "rehear any such summons at the instance of the husband at any time" is, on the true construction of the act, confined to the cases mentioned in the 2nd proviso to the 1st section, in which proof is offered that the wife has since the making of the order been guilty of adultery. Sephton v. Sephton, 58 L. T. 281; 52 J. P. 356.

Practice — On Appeal.] — Unless and until special rules are made in the Probate Division regulating the practice as to appeals under s. 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, the practice as to appeals under s. 4 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, will apply to them—that is to say they will be regulated by Ord. LIX., rr. 4A, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12 and 16, and those rules will be the only practice applicable. Swoffer v. Swoffer, 65 L. J., P. 82; [1896] P. 131; 60 J. P. 344.

Upon appeals under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, the divisional court will not reverse a finding of fact, unless it be shown that the court of summary jurisdiction was clearly wrong in the conclusion at which it arrived. Harling v. Harling, infra.

—— Costs.]—As a general rule, the established practice of allowing a wife her costs will be applied to appeals under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, in all cases where the wife is the respondent, but this rule has no application to cases in which the wife is the appellant. Earnshaw v. Earnshaw, supra.

Magistrates' clerks should take notes of the evidence and of the grounds upon which decisions are based, and the costs of such notes will be allowed in the costs of appeals under the act. Harling v. Harling, 74 L. T. 559; 60 J. P. 377.

12. Alimony and Maintenance.

a. Alimony.

i. Pendente lite.

a. When Obtainable by Wife.

In General.]—In allotting alimony pendente lite the wife must be considered as innocent. Smith v. Smith and Tremeaux, 4 Sw. & Tr. 228; 32 L. J., Mat. 91; 11 W. R. 257. S. P., Crampton v. Crampton and Armstrong, 32 L. J., Mat. 142.

Her omission to file an answer to a petition charging her with adultery is no ground for refusing to allot alimony or for allotting less than the usual amount. Ib.

In what cases a court of equity will decree a wife alimony, though she may have a sentence for it in other spiritual courts. Angier v. Angier, Pre. Ch. 496; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 152.

The court has not power generally to provide an alimony for the wife's separate use, but if the court has a continuing power over the wife's own property, it will seize on it to maintain her during desertion. Walker, In re, Ll. & G., t. Sugd. 327.

Decree operates In personam.]—Decrees in the spiritual court for alimony and maintenance are only against the person of the husband, but affect not his estate so as to take it from his creditors. Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 511.

Creditors in bankrupt cases are entitled to the interest the husband has in the wife's chose in action during his life. Ib.

Effect of Protection Order on.]—By obtaining an order of protection of her property or earnings, a wife does not deprive herself of her right to alimony pendente lite, in a suit by reason of her husband's adultery, subsequently instituted by her for dissolution of marriage. Hakewill v. Hakewill, 30 L. J., Mat. 254.

Wife in Prison.]—A wife undergoing a sentence of imprisonment for felony is entitled to alimony pendente lite. Kelly v. Kelly, 4 Sw. & Tr. 227; 32 L. J., Mat. 181; 11 W. R. 958.

After Proof of Adultery.] — Where alimony pendente lite has been allotted to a wife in a petition for divorce, such alimony ceases upon a verdict finding her guilty of adultery, but the court may in its discretion make an order for the alimony to continue. Wells v. Wells (3 Sw. & Tr. 542) discussed. Dunn v. Dunn, 57 L. J., P. 58; 13 P. D. 91; 59 L. T. 385; 36 W. R. 539—C. A.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of a wife's adultery, alimony pendente lite will be allotted to the wife at any time before the case comes on before the full court, even though on an issue raised by her in the suit a jury may have found that she has been guilty of adultery. D'Oyley v. D'Oyley, 4 Sw. & Tr. 226; 29 L. J., Mat. 165.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage instituted by a husband, who has previously obtained a divorce a mensâ et thoro, in an ecclesiastical court, on the ground of his wife's adultery, the wife is not entitled to alimony pendente lite; she is however entitled to costs de die in diem. Holt v. Holt, 28 L. J., Mat. 12.

On the last day of the sittings the judge allowed the petitioner's witnesses to be examined though the case was not in the list for the day, on the understanding that if the respondent and co-respondent intimated their intention to defend the suit, the case should be reheard. The evidence proved adultery. On a subsequent application for alimony pendente lite, the judge held that the respondent could not be prejudiced by the evidence so taken, notice in the meantime having been given that the respondent and co-respondent intended to defend. Phillips v. Phillips and Medlyn, 4 Sw. & Tr. 129; 34 L. J., P. 107.

Voluntary Payments by Husband.]—A wife being entitled to alimony pendente lite, the voluntary gift of money during the progress of a suit by him for a divorce, does not per se prove collusion. Barnes v. Barnes and Grimwade, 37 L. J., Mat. 4; L. R. 1 P. 505; 17 L. T. 268; 16 W. R. 281.

—— Under Separation Deed.]—An allowance under a deed of separation is no bar to a wife's petition for alimony pendente lite. Powell v. Powell and Jones, 43 L. J., Mat. 9; L. R. 3 P. 186; 29 L. T. 466; 22 W. R. 62.

Effect of Plea to Jurisdiction.]—The fact that there is a plea to the jurisdiction of the court in a suit for dissolution of marriage does not affect the power of the court to allot alimony pendente lite. Ronalds v. Ronalds, L. R. 3 P. 259.

When there was a substantial question of jurisdiction, and some months were to pass before it could be determined, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, allotted alimony pendente lite. Ib.

Husband not Filing Answer.]—A husband who has not filed an answer on oath to the petition for alimony pendente lite cannot cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the petition, on the motion for an allotment, or contradict their evidence. Constable v. Constable, 39 L. J., Mat. 17; L. R. 2 P. 17; 21 L. T. 401.

Answer Insufficient—Application for Cross-examination—Partnership Accounts—Right to Disclosure of.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the husband's petition, the wife filed a petition for alimony pendente lite. In his answer, the husband admitted that his income arising from his business amounted to 3,000*l.* per annum, but objected to produce his books, on the ground that they would disclose the partnership accounts:—Held, that the husband's answer was insufficient, and that he must file a fuller and further answer; but that he ought not, at any rate until such further answer had been filed, to be ordered to disclose the partnership accounts, or to be cross-examined upon them. Tonge v. Tonge, 61 L. J., P. 87; [1892] P. 51; 67 L. T. 390.

Wife Taking Property from Husband's House.]—Allegation by a husband in his answer, that the wife had taken from his house furniture of the value of 800*l.* to 1,000*l.* The court refused to make any order for alimony pendente lite on such a state of facts, the wife declining to accept the sum offered by the husband, but allowed the wife to reply to the allegation. Bremner v. Bremner and Brett, 3 Sw. & Tr. 249; 32 L. J., Mat. 119; 8 L. T. 611; 11 W. R. 687.

Wife Living with Co-respondent.]—A wife is not entitled to alimony whilst she is living with the co-respondent as his wife and supported by him. Holt v. Holt and Davis, 38 L. J., P. 33; L. R. 1 P. 610; 19 L. T. 662.

On Appeal.]—Alimony is payable to a wife on an appeal, unless it appears that the appeal is frivolous and vexatious, or she has been guilty of laches. Jones v. Jones, L. R. 2 P. 333; 20 W. R. 320. Affirmed on appeal, 41 L. J., Mat. 53; 26 L. T. 106; 20 W. R. 449.

Petition for Dissolution by Husband—Request to Withdraw.]—A husband petitioned the court for a dissolution of his marriage, by reason of his wife's adultery. In her answer the wife denied such adultery and made countercharges against the petitioner, of adultery and cruelty, which he denied, and directions were given as to the mode of trial of the facts in issue. The petitioner then moved for leave to withdraw the petition on payment of the wife's costs. A few days before the motion was made, the respondent filed a petition for alimony:—Held, that, if a wife uses due diligence in claiming alimony, the husband will not be allowed to withdraw his petition until he has paid the alimony allotted to her up to the time of the withdrawal; but that if the wife delays to present her petition up to the last moment, so that the husband has not had time to answer it, the court will not refuse to allow him to withdraw, until he has filed an answer to such petition, and paid what the court may allot upon it. Twisleton v. Twisleton and Kelly, L. R. 2 P. 339; 26 L. T. 265; 20 W. R. 448.

Arrears—Application of Ord. XIV.]—A claim for arrears of alimony pendente lite is not a claim for "a debt or liquidated demand in money," within the meaning of Ord. III. r. 6, so as to entitle the plaintiff to judgment under Ord. XIV. r. 1. Bailey v. Bailey, 53 L. J., Q. B. 583; 13 Q. B. D. 855—C. A. Affirming, 50 L. T. 722; 32 W. R. 856.

—— Executors of Wife cannot Recover.]—A bill by the executors of a married woman against her husband, to recover arrears of alimony due at her death, is not sustainable. Stones v. Cooke, 8 Sim. 321, n. Reversing, 3 L. J., Ch. 225. And see Kerr v. Kerr, 66 L. J., Q. B. 838; [1897] 2 Q. B. 439; 77 L. T. 29; 46 W. R. 46, and col. 860.

Separation Deed—Covenant not to Molest.]—By a separation deed the husband covenanted to make an allowance to the wife determinable upon her molesting him. The husband subsequently discontinued the allowance on the ground that the wife had broken her covenant not to molest him. The wife afterwards instituted a suit for judicial separation, and applied for an allowance of alimony pendente lite:—Held, that she was entitled to such allowance. Wood v. Wood, 57 L. J., Ch. 1; 57 L. J., P. 31; 57 L. T. 746; 36 W. R. 33—C. A.

Substituted Service of Petition.]—On a motion for substituted service of a petition for alimony pendente lite, in a case where substituted service of the petition for divorce had previously been ordered by service upon the respondent's agents, the court granted the motion, and as it appeared that a copy of the petition for alimony had already been sent in a registered letter to the agent's address, ordered that further service should be dispensed with. Odevaine v. Odevaine, 58 L. T. 564; 52 J. P. 280.

Injunction to restrain Removal of Property.]—The court will not, in order to protect a wife's right to alimony, restrain a husband from removing his property out of the jurisdiction of the court before an order for alimony has been made. Newton v. Newton, 55 L. J., P. 13; 11 P. D. 11; 34 W. R. 123.

Not a "Final Judgment" for Bankruptcy Purposes.]—An order for the payment of alimony pendente lite is not a "final judgment" against the husband within the meaning of sub-s. 1 (g) of s. 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and a bankruptcy notice cannot be issued against the husband in respect of arrears due under such an order. Moore, Ex parte (14 Q. B. D. 627), distinguished. Henderson, Ex parte, Henderson, In re, 57 L. J., Q. B. 258; 20 Q. B. D. 509; 58 L. T. 835; 36 W. R. 567; 5 Morrell, 52—C. A.

Payment by Instalments.] — On January 30, 1888, an order for alimony pendente lite, and on February 1, 1888, an order for permanent alimony was made in the probate and divorce division. The sum of 130*l.* being due under these orders, a judgment summons in respect thereof was issued by the wife:—Held, that a receiving order in lieu of committal could not be made by the court against the husband under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, and that an order directing payment by monthly instalments of 10*l.* should be made. Otway, Ex parte, Otway, In re, 58 L. T. 885; 36 W. R. 698; 5 Morrell, 115.

Non-payment — Order for Attachment.] — Where, in an order for payment of alimony, the periods for payment are specified, an absolute order for an attachment under the Debtors Act may be made, without any preliminary order for payment by instalments. Daly v. Daly, L. R. 17 Ir. 372.

Order for Continuation of Alimony after two Trials—No Verdict of Adultery against Wife—Fi. fa. refused.]—On the trial of cross petitions presented by husband and wife, the jury found that the husband had, but the wife had not, committed adultery, and a decree nisi for dissolution of the marriage was accordingly pronounced by the court. The Queen's proctor having intervened, a second trial took place, when the jury found that both parties had acted in collusion to suppress material facts, but they could not agree as to the charge of adultery, brought by the Queen's proctor against the wife. The court rescinded the decree nisi. The wife appealed, and the husband had ceased to pay the alimony:—Held, that a writ of fi. fa. to enforce the arrears of alimony could not be granted, but that the order for payment of the alimony ought to be renewed until further notice. Butler v. Butler, 59 L. J., P. 11; 15 P. D. 13; 62 L. T. 123.

Judicial Separation—Injunction to restrain Husband from Parting with Property.]—The court, in a suit for judicial separation, where the wife (petitioner) had obtained an order for alimony pendente lite, refused to grant an injunction to restrain the respondent from parting with certain leasehold property of which he was possessed. Carter v. Carter, 65 L. J., P. 48; [1896] P. 35; 44 W. R. 400.

Petition for Nullity of Marriage.]—In a suit for a decree of nullity of marriage the court will not grant alimony pendente lite should the marriage be plainly null and void on the face of the petition and answer taken together. Blackmore v. Mills (f. c. Blackmore), 18 L. T. 586; 16 W. R. 893.

In a suit for nullity, alimony continues payable after the decree nisi until the decree is made absolute. S., f. c. B. v. B., 53 L. J., P. 63; 9 P. D. 80; 32 W. R. 756.

After Decree Nisi.] — The court refused to make any order for alimony pendente lite, after a decree nisi had been obtained for a dissolution of marriage, by reason of the wife's adultery, the wife having allowed some months to elapse after the commencement of the suit before she filed her petition. Noblett v. Noblett and Kershaw, L. R. 1 P. 651; 20 L. T. 716.

A decree nisi, if not appealed from, puts an end to the lis between the parties. Latham v. Latham, 2 Sw. & Tr. 298; 30 L. J., Mat. 163; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 219; 4 L. T. 308; 9 W. R. 680.

The court has power to order alimony pendente lite notwithstanding a decree nisi has been made for dissolution of marriage. Latham v. Latham (2 Sw. & Tr. 298), overruled. Ellis v. Ellis, 52 L. J., P. 99; 8 P. D. 188; 49 L. T. 223; 31 W. R. 942—C. A.

Pending Hearing of Application.]—A suit was instituted by the wife for restitution of conjugal rights. She also filed a petition for alimony, and then applied, on the ground of present distress and destitution, that the respondent be ordered to pay her a small sum of money pending its hearing:—The court declined to entertain the application. Ford v. Ford, 36 L. J., P. 86; 15 L. T. 595.

b. What Regulates Amount Payable.

Husband's Income—Nil.]—A petition set forth, as the only source of income of a husband, that on the death or second marriage of his mother he would be entitled to a share in the residuary estate of his father, provided he attained twenty-one. He was still a minor:—Held, that there was no income out of which the court could allot alimony pendente lite. Beavan v. Beavan, 2 Sw. & Tr. 652; 31 L. J., Mat. 166; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 769; 7 L. T. 435.

Where a master pilot in the Bengal pilotage service, on six months' leave of absence without pay, was in the receipt of no income, and was possessed of no property whatever, the court refused to allot to the wife alimony pendente lite. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 2 Sw. & Tr. 434; 31 L. J., Mat. 82; 6 L. T. 134; 10 W. R. 448.

So where a husband had no income, and his only property was a legacy of 500*l.*, not payable until eleven months after the application for alimony, the court refused to allot alimony pendente lite. Brown v. Brown and Simpson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 217; 32 L. J., Mat. 144; 9 L. T. 118.

When, upon a husband's answer, it appears that he has no means, the court will refuse to allot alimony; but the wife will be entitled to her costs of moving for an allotment. Gaynor v. Gaynor, 31 L. J., Mat. 144.

A husband in his answer alleging that he was in insolvent circumstances, and that his only income was weekly wages of meat, drink, washing and lodgings, and 4*s.* a week, the court refused to allot alimony pendente lite. Capstick v. Capstick, Furness and Winder, 33 L. J., Mat. 105.

—— Small Payment already Made.]—When it appeared that a husband had only 60*l.* a year, and that on separating from his wife he had handed to her 70*l.*, the amount of her fortune, the court refused to allot alimony pendente lite. Coombs v. Coombs, L. R. 1 P. 218; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 673; 14 L. T. 294.

—— Not immediately Obtainable.]—In a petition for alimony pendente lite, the husband was admitted to have a sum invested in business, the profits of which, by the deed of partnership, were to accrue, and were not to be drawn out of the business until they had brought up his capital to a certain amount. The court allotted alimony on this sum so invested at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum. Wilson v. Wilson and Howell, 26 L. T. 108; 20 W. R. 320.

Husband's Income Large.]—Where the husband's income is large, the practice is not to allot a fixed proportion of it as alimony pendente lite, but to give the wife an income suitable to the position which she has hitherto occupied; and the amount is subject to the discretion of the registrar. Sykes v. Sykes, 66 L. J., P. 162; [1897] P. 306; 77 L. T. 150—C. A.

Wife's Income.]—Where both parties are almost penniless, the power of the wife to maintain herself by her own exertions ought to be taken into account. Nicholls v. Nicholls, 30 L. J., Mat. 163, n.

Not only a wife's income derived from separate property will be taken into account in allotting alimony pendente lite, but income of which she is in the actual enjoyment, though earned by herself. Goodheim v. Goodheim and Frankinson or Tomkinson, 2 Sw. & Tr. 250; 30 L. J., Mat. 162; 4 L. T. 449; 9 W. R. 853.

—— Sufficient for her Support.]—Where in his answer a husband alleges that the wife's income exceeds his, if the wife disputes this, the proper course for her to adopt is to deny the allegation by her replication on oath. Watts v. Watts, 28 L. J., Mat. 125.

If it should appear on the face of a petition for alimony pendente lite that the wife has a large separate property, the court would probably not compel the husband to set out in his answer a detailed account of his income. Blackburne v. Blackburne, 36 L. J., Mat. 88; 16 L. T. 435; 16 W. R. 29.

Alimony pendente lite refused to a wife, who for some time before the institution of the suit had been, and still was, supporting herself in service. George v. George, 37 L. J., Mat. 17; L. R. 1 P. 553; 16 W. R. 112.

If a husband can prove that his wife has sufficient means of support independently of him, even although they are derived from the co-respondent, semble, she will not be entitled to an allotment of alimony. Madan v. Madan and De Thoren, 37 L. J., Mat. 10; 17 L. T. 326; 16 W. R. 712.

When husband and wife have been living apart for many years before the institution of the suit, and the wife has supported herself during the separation and is still able to do so, alimony pendente lite will not be allotted. Thompson v. Thompson and Johnson, L. R. 1 P. 553.

—— Pin-Money.]—Pin-money is not subject to deduction for alimony, as it is clear of maintenance. Ball v. Coutts, 1 Ves. & B. 292.

In a suit for alimony, separate maintenance or pin-money is not a good plea. Colmer v. Colmer, Mos. 121.

Rule and Rate of Allowance.]—Alimony will be allotted on the average annual earnings of a husband, although at the moment when his answer to the petition for alimony is sworn he may be temporarily out of employment. Thompson v. Thompson and Johnson, 37 L. J., Mat. 33; L. R. 1 P. 553; 18 L. T. 212.

As a rule, alimony pendente lite is allotted in the proportion of one-fifth of the joint income, but the allotment and amount are in all cases in the discretion of the court. Powell v. Powell and Jones, 43 L. J., Mat. 9; L. R. 3 P. 186; 29 L. T. 466; 22 W. R. 62.

Where an allowance of 40*l.* a year was secured to a wife under a deed of separation executed in 1862, at which time the income of the husband was about 210*l.* a year, but in 1867 he came into the possession of property which brought him in an income of 1,700*l.* a year, and the wife continued to receive the allowance of 40*l.* a year, and did not allege in her petition for alimony pendente lite that her status had been in any way changed by the suit which her husband had instituted against her, the court refused alimony. Ib.

According to the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, the court is not at liberty to allot more than one moiety of the joint income to the wife, although she may have brought more than one moiety of the property into settlement. Haigh v. Haigh, 38 L. J., Mat. 37; L. R. 1 P. 709; 20 L. T. 281.

On an annual income of 8,000*l.*, the court allotted alimony at the rate of 1,000*l.* a year, pending the wife's suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Edwards v. Edwards, 17 L. T. 584.

A husband's income must be estimated at the amount of the previous year, and not by an average of years. Kelly v. Kelly, 1 Spinks, 412.

Where a husband had, under a deed of separation, allowed his wife a certain sum, and had ceased to pay it after the date on which he alleged that he had obtained evidence of her adultery, the judged ordinary, on the wife's petition for alimony pendente lite, directed payment by way of alimony pendente lite to be made at the same rate. Weber v. Weber, 1 Sw. & Tr. 219 ; 6 W. R. 867.

The institution of vexatious suits by a wife against her husband is a ground for allotting alimony pendente lite at less than the usual rate. Hakewill v. Hakewill, 30 L. J., Mat. 254.

Allowable Deductions.]—A husband may deduct from real property the expenses of ordinary current repairs, but not of extraordinary and permanent improvements, which ought to be charged on the corpus of the income. Hayward v. Hayward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 85 ; 28 L. J., Mat. 9 ; 6 W. R. 639.

The general rule in estimating a husband's income is, that he is not entitled to deduct sums paid by way of premium to maintain a policy of insurance on his life ; but where a policy was under settlement for the benefit of his wife and children after his death, and the premium was deducted and paid over to the office by his employers, the court allowed him to deduct the amount of such premium in estimating his income. Forster v. Forster and Thomas, 2 Sw. & Tr. 553 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 84 ; 6 L. T. 693 ; 10 W. R. 810.

If a husband has contracted to pay off a debt by annual instalments, the amount of each instalment may be deducted from his income. Patterson v. Patterson, Curtis and Dore, 33 L. J., Mat. 36.

—— Payments made since Citation.]—Payments made by the husband and wife since the service of the citation will be deducted from alimony pendente lite. Crampton v. Crampton and Armstrong, 32 L. J., Mat. 142.

—— Wife's Adultery.]—The adultery of the wife is no ground for allotting less than the usual amount of alimony pendente lite, and the averment of such adultery in the answer is irrelevant. Ib.

—— Maintaining Children by Former Marriage.]—The circumstance that a husband has to maintain several children, the issue of a former marriage, is no ground for allotting less than one-fifth of his income as alimony pendente lite. Hill v. Hill, 33 L. J., Mat. 104 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 371.

Under ordinary circumstances, the expense of educating and maintaining children by a previous marriage does not form a legitimate deduction from a husband's income in allotting alimony pendente lite. Grafton v. Grafton, 27 L. T. 768 ; 21 W. R. 292.

On a wife's motion for allotment of alimony pendente lite, the husband stated that he had two children by a former marriage, and asked that 200*l.* for their cost of maintenance should be deducted from his annual income of 892*l.* before calculating the amount of alimony. The court refused to allow any deduction, but intimated there might be circumstances, as, for instance, a very large family by a former marriage, in which it might be assented to. Ib.

—— Pension Granted to Wife.]—In estimating the amount of alimony to be allowed to a wife after a separation, on the ground of cruelty, the husband is not entitled to a deduction out of what would otherwise be payable by him out of his income, in respect of money left by wills since the marriage to his wife's separate use, nor in respect of his wife's salary as a lady-in-waiting to the queen ; but he is entitled to such a deduction in respect of a pension from the crown granted to his wife. Westmeath (Marquis) v. Westmeath (Marchioness), 3 Knapp, 42—P. C.

Property to be Considered.]—All the valuable property of the husband will be taken into account in alloting alimony, although he may derive no income from it. Crampton v. Crampton and Armstrong, 32 L. J., Mat. 142.

Therefore, the value of shares in a company, although no dividend is payable on them, and the annual value of houses occupied by the husband or by others rent free, should be stated in an answer. Ib.

The court will not look minutely into the figures when the income to be dealt with is of large amount. Edwards v. Edwards, 17 L. T. 584.

—— Inspection of Ledgers.]—A registrar has power under r. 191 of the Divorce Court Rules, in the course of a proceeding for alimony pendente lite, to order the inspection of a ledger relating to the partnership accounts of the respondent and his partners. Carew v. Carew, 61 L. J., P. 24 ; [1891] P. 360 ; 65 L. T. 167. See cols. 839, 840.

—— Voluntary Allowances to Husband.]—A wife cannot include in her husband's income liable to alimony any purely voluntary allowances made to him ; though possibly there might be circumstances under which the wife might be entitled to alimony out of income to which the husband might have no strict legal right. Haviland v. Haviland, 3 Sw. & Tr. 114 ; 32 L. J., Mat. 67 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 208 ; 7 L. T. 757 ; 11 W. R. 550. But see Bonsor v. Bonsor, 66 L. J., P. 35 ; [1897] P. 77 ; 76 L. T. 168 ; 25 W. R. 304.

Although a husband's income consists only of a voluntary allowance from his father, yet the court will order him to make his wife some allowance, and will stay his suit until he has undertaken to do so. Moss v. Moss and Bush, 15 W. R. 532.

Decrease or Increase of Faculties—Of Husband.]—In April, 1857, in a suit for nullity of marriage by a husband against his wife, alimony pendente lite was agreed upon at 300*l.* per annum, and confirmed by an order of the court. On an application for a reduction of such rate of alimony, on the husband's affidavit that his income in 1857 was 1,200*l.* and now only 949*l.*, but not explaining how such reduction had been caused, nor stating when or how a sum of 10,000*l.* had been spent, the court refused to interfere. Shirley v. Wardropp, 1 Sw. & Tr. 317.

—— Of Wife.]—In a suit followed by a decree for separation for divorce à mensâ et thoro, by a wife against her husband, a sum had been allotted as alimony by consent. Eight years afterwards her father died, and left her, by will, a small yearly income ; the husband thereupon applied for a reduction of the alimony :—Held, that he was not entitled thereto. Saunders v. Saunders, 1 Sw. & Tr. 72 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 147 ; 6 W. R. 328.

Separation Deed—Agreement by Wife not to claim more than £50.]—In a separation deed, the husband covenanted with the trustee to allow to his wife 50*l.* a year for her support, he being indemnified against all debts and liabilities on her account, and it being agreed on her behalf that she would not in any way endeavour to compel the husband again to live with her, or to allow her "any further or greater or other support, maintenance, or alimony" than the annuity of 50*l.* :—Held, that in the absence of any act showing an unqualified acceptance by the wife of the provisions of the separation deed, or of any attempt to enforce it against her husband, the court would not, upon interlocutory motion, restrain her from proceeding in the Divorce Court to obtain an allowance for alimony, as incident to her petition for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, but the court put her under an undertaking to deal with the alimony as the court should direct. Williams v. Baily, L. R. 2 Eq. 731.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 81—94 ; Rr. 1875, rr. 189—192.

Petition and Appearance.]—Semble, that the court has no power to allot alimony pendente lite in a suit in which the husband has not appeared. Deane v. Deane, 28 L. J., Mat. 23.

Where a husband has appeared to the wife's citation in a suit for judicial separation, the court will entertain an application for alimony pendente lite. Secus, where no appearance has been given by the husband. Tomkins v. Tomkins, 1 Sw. & Tr. 163.

Where a husband, a respondent, has not entered an appearance, alimony pendente lite by consent will not be allotted. Clarke v. Clarke, 31 L. J., Mat. 165.

Filing Answer and Appearance.]—The husband shall, within eight days after the filing and delivery of a petition for alimony, file his answer thereto upon oath. R. 84 (1865).

The husband, being respondent in the cause, must enter an appearance before he can file an answer to a petition for alimony. R. 85.

Where before these rules a husband appeared in the suit, but filed no answer to the wife's petition for alimony pendente lite, the court made an order that he should file one within a specified time, in order that if disobeyed he might be proceeded against for contempt. Roberts v. Roberts, 29 L. J., Mat. 158.

Since these rules, under such circumstances the wife may, after notice, examine the witnesses in support of her petition for alimony. Ib.

Answer.]—If an answer alleges that property of which the husband is owner is mortgaged, it should state the date of the mortgage, the name of the mortgagee, and the amount of the mortgage deed. Crampton v. Crampton and Armstrong, 32 L. J., Mat. 142.

—— Property and Income must be Set out.]—Where a petition alleges that the husband has a "net annual income of," &c., he must in his answer state the amount of his gross income, and specify any deductions claimed. Nokes v. Nokes, 3 Sw. & Tr. 529 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 24 ; 12 W. R. 443.

It is not sufficient if he states merely the amount of his net annual income. Ib.

In stating the income derived from land, the answer should state the gross rental, and specify the outgoings. Ib.

An allegation "to the best of my judgment I value my stock-in-trade at," &c., is sufficient. Ib.

But it is not necessary to specify the value of the husband's stock-in-trade. Such an allegation is irrelevant. Hick v. Hick and Kitchin, 12 W. R. 444, n.

The answer should state what the husband's income has been during the three years prior to the commencement of the suit. It may, however, add to this a statement of any facts from which the court may draw a conclusion as to his present income. Williams v. Williams, 36 L. J., Mat. 39 ; L. R. 1 P. 370 ; 15 L. T. 249 ; 15 W. R. 288.

—— Averment that Wife is Living with Co-Respondent.]—An averment in an answer to a petition for alimony pendente lite that she is living with the co-respondent is immaterial, and need not be noticed by her ; but, otherwise, where the allegation is that she is supported by him. Madan v. Madan and De Thoren, 37 L. J., Mat. 10 ; 17 L. T. 326 ; 16 W. R. 211.

A wife is not entitled to alimony whilst she is living with the co-respondent as his wife and is supported by him. Holt v. Holt and Davis, 38 L. J., P. 33 ; L. R. 1 P. 610 ; 19 L. T. 662.

—— Husband Failing to File.]—A husband who has not filed an answer on oath to a petition for alimony pendente lite, cannot cross-examine or contradict the evidence of witnesses produced in support of the petition, either on a motion for an allotment of alimony pendente lite, or on the hearing of a cause as to an allotment of permanent alimony. Hicks v. Hicks, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 175.

A wife filed a petition for alimony, to which the husband did not answer, and the court made a peremptory order upon him to file an answer to the petition for alimony within a week. Snowdon v. Snowdon, 40 L. J., Mat. 29 ; L. R. 2 P. 200 ; 24 L. T. 763 ; 18 W. R. 760.

Where a husband filed no answer, the court, in order to save expense, allowed the wife to prove the husband's faculties by affidavits ; but it required that he should have notice of the filing of the affidavits served on him, and also of the motion to ask for alimony upon them. Mumby v. Mumby, 38 L. J., Mat. 72 ; L. R. 1 P. 701 ; 21 L. T. 155 ; 17 W. R. 1115.

—— Reforming Answer.]—Where an answer is ambiguous (e.g. where it does not appear what are the deductions made by the husband from his gross income), the court will order it to be reformed, by inserting an explanation of the ambiguous statements. Hopper v. Hopper, 28 L. J., Mat. 26.

Amendment of Petition.]—A wife filed a petition for alimony, in which she set forth certain property which she asserted she held to her separate use, and the respondent answered the petition on oath. The court subsequently permitted the wife to amend her petition, by adding an allegation of further income of the husband, and a denial of a greater part of the income which she had attributed to herself in her petition. Harker v. Harker, 37 L. J., Mat. 11.

Reference to Registrar to Ascertain Amount.]—When the accounts of the husband's income, in his answer to a petition for alimony, are complicated, the court may refer it to the registrar to ascertain what is the amount of income admitted by the answer. Smith v. Smith, 30 L. J., Mat. 207.

Examining Husband to Support Petition.]—A wife who has presented a petition for alimony, has a right to subpœna her husband for the purpose of examining him as a witness in support of her petition. Anderson v. Anderson, 37 L. J., Mat. 64; L. R. 1 P. 512; 18 L. T. 371.

A wife, when she is entitled to examine witnesses in support of her petition for alimony, may subpœna her husband as a witness. Jennings v. Jennings, 35 L. J., Mat. 12; L. R. 1 P. 35.

A husband who had filed no answer to his wife's petition for alimony was subpœnaed by her to attend at the hearing, and to be examined in support of the petition. He did not answer to his subpœna, and on the service being proved, the court made an order that he should attend on the next motion day, and that an attachment should issue in the event of his non-attendance. Ib.

Where the answer of a husband to a petition for alimony pendente lite is not merely insufficiently explicit, but clearly evasive, he will be ordered to attend the hearing, that he may be examined in open court. Senior v. Senior, 15 W. R. 91.

The court will only permit the husband to be cross-examined on a petition for alimony, when his answer is evasive on the face of it. Parker v. Parker, 26 L. T. 108.

Where the answer of the husband is not sufficiently explicit, he will be ordered to give a further and fuller answer, but he will not be ordered to attend the hearing that he may be examined in open court, unless his answer is evasive. Clark v. Clark, 31 L. J., Mat. 32.

Cross-Examination of Husband — Power of Court to order Attendance.]—The court has no power to order that the husband should attend at the hearing of a petition for alimony pendente lite that he may be cross-examined as to the statements in his answer as to the amount of his income. If the answer is ambiguous the court will direct it to be reformed by inserting an explanation. Hopper v. Hopper, 28 L. J., P. 26.

—— By Wife—Reading Evidence Beforehand — Evidence of Proceedings before Registrar — Rules 86 and 191 of Divorce Court Rules.]—On a petition for alimony pendente lite the wife has not an absolute right to cross-examine her husband. On an application for alimony pendente lite the registrar is entitled to read the evidence beforehand instead of doing so in the presence of the parties. Affidavits ought not to be filed to show what took place before the registrar; if the court desires information on this point it will consult the registrar himself. Where the husband's income is large, the practice is not to allot a fixed proportion of it as alimony pendente lite, but to give the wife an income suitable to the position which she has hitherto occupied; and the amount is subject to the discretion of the registrar. Sykes v. Sykes, 66 L. J., P. 162; [1897] P. 306; 77 L. T. 150—C. A.

Husband's Books — Inspection of.]—On a motion by a wife that her husband be ordered to give a further and fuller answer to her petition for alimony pendente lite, the husband stated his inability to do so. The court ordered that his books should be submitted for inspection to the wife and such other person as might be agreed upon between the parties or named by the registrar. Newton v. Newton and Allen, 27 L. T. 768; 21 W. R. 292.

Partnership Books of Husband—Refusal to Produce.]—In a petition by the wife for dissolution of the marriage, she applied for an allotment of alimony pending suit. The respondent in answer filed a balance-sheet, showing a loss on his whole business for the year, and the registrar made an order on the respondent and his partner to produce their account books. They accordingly produced a ledger for the last year, but refused to allow it to be inspected:—Held, that the registrar had power under Rule 191 of the Divorce Court Rules to require an inspection of the ledger, and issued a writ of attachment to enforce compliance with his order. Carew v. Carew, 61 L. J., P. 24; [1891] P. 360; 65 L. T. 167.

Fraudulent Conveyance — Setting Aside.]—Pending a suit which was instituted by a wife against her husband for a divorce, the husband conveyed his freehold and personal estates to trustees, upon trust to pay out of the income certain mortgages affecting the real estates, and certain scheduled bond creditors, and an annuity to himself, another annuity to his sons, and an annuity of 100*l.* to his wife, if she withdrew the proceedings which were then pending against him, and should not institute any others. The wife prosecuted the suit, and succeeded both in the courts below, and ultimately before the Judicial Committee on appeal. A sentence of divorce was pronounced, and a permanent alimony ordered for her support. Writs of sequestration were issued to enforce payment, not only of that, but of arrears of interim alimony, which had been allowed the wife, and of her costs of suit. The sequestrators being unable by reason of the deed of conveyance to seize the property of the husband, the wife filed her bill to set aside the deed as fraudulent and void as against her. The court declared the deed of conveyance fraudulent and void, and affirmed the order of the court below so far as it gave the plaintiff relief for arrears of alimony and the costs of the several proceedings, but reserved the question as to whether the decree was right in giving the plaintiff a charge on the estates for further alimony. Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp, 1 De G. M. & G. 495; 21 L. J., Ch. 401; 16 Jur. 787.

Examination of Witnesses.] — In a suit by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the court having allowed substituted service of the petition, and petition for alimony pendente lite, and the husband not having appeared, the court allowed the wife to examine witnesses in support of her petition for alimony, without giving the usual four days' notice. Robinson v. Robinson, 41 L. J., Mat. 40; 26 L. T. 108; 20 W. R. 260.

In a petition for alimony pendente lite, the court ordered a commission to issue to examine witnesses in Scotland, as to the husband's faculties, but it declined to make an order on him to give security for the wife's costs for the commission. Wilson v. Wilson and Howell, 26 L. T. 107.

Semble, that a wife, by applying to the court for an allotment of alimony, upon the husband's answer is not precluded from afterwards examining witnesses in support of her petition. Capstick v. Capstick, Furness and Winder, 33 L. J., Mat. 105.

Entry in Court Book.]—An original order for payment of alimony is entered in the court book, and an office copy of it is delivered to the party in whose favour it is made. Parr v. Parr and White, 32 L. J., Mat. 91 ; 11 W. R. 550.

Service of Order.]—The proper mode of effecting service of such an order is to leave a copy, and at the same time to produce the original office copy. Ib.

Registering.]—A decree, requiring a husband to pay alimony to his wife, was registered in the common pleas. On an application to have the entry expunged, the court of common pleas refused, leaving the husband to his remedy, if any, in the court of chancery. Holden, Ex parte, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 641 ; 32 L. J., C. P. 111 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 948 ; 7 L. T. 791 ; 11 W. R. 437.

Costs of Obtaining.]—A co-respondent when condemned in costs is liable for the costs of the proceedings to obtain alimony. Gill v. Gill and Hogg, 3 Sw. & Tr. 559 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 43 ; 10 L. T. 137 ; 12 W. R. 808.

—— To Whom Payable.]—See 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 24.

—— When to Wife's Solicitor.]—An order that alimony pendente lite be paid to a wife will, on her application, be varied by making the alimony payable to the wife or to her solicitor, but she must bear the costs of the application. Kelly v. Kelly, 4 Sw. & Tr. 227 ; 32 L. J., Mat. 181 ; 11 W. R. 958.

Where a wife was undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, the court refused so to vary the order without an affidavit by her that she wished the alteration to be made. Ib.

When alimony is, by the terms of an order allotting it, made payable to the wife, the husband is not bound, at her request, to pay it to her solicitor. The court allowed such an order to be amended by making alimony payable to the wife's solicitor, but refused to allow her the costs of the motion. Parr v. Parr and White, 32 L. J., Mat. 90 ; 11 W. R. 257.

An order for the payment of alimony to the wife's solicitor or proctor will not be made except upon the written application or with authority of the wife. Margetson v. Margetson, 35 L. J., Mat. 80. S. P., Brown v. Brown, 4 Sw. & Tr. 144 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 102.

When alimony is so paid the solicitor is not entitled to charge for receiving it. Ib.

Enforcing Payment.] — Where there was a balance due from the petitioner (the husband) for alimony and costs, and there had been an arrangement between the parties, that the balance should be paid by monthly instalments of 20*l.*, and that an attachment should be granted against him to remain in the registry until he made default in payment of one of the instalments, the court dismissed the petition, and decreed an attachment on the terms arranged. Bremner v. Bremner and Brett, 3 Sw. & Tr. 378 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 202 ; 10 L. T. 99 ; 12 W. R. 444.

The dismissal of a petition does not prevent the court from enforcing, by attachment, the payment of alimony and costs previously ordered to be paid by the petitioner. Ib.

An attachment for non-payment of alimony was granted, although the order did not state to whom payment was to be made, where it appeared that the wife and her solicitor had at the same time demanded payment of the husband, and that he had paid neither. Ladmore v. Ladmore, 32 L. J., Mat. 157.

—— Charge on Land.] — Section 25 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, enacting that the court shall have the like powers for enforcing its orders as are vested in the court of chancery in relation to suits depending therein, does not constitute an order of the probate court for payment of money a charge on land within 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13. Pratt v. Bull, 1 De G. J. & S. 141 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 144 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 239 ; 7 L. T. 702 ; 11 W. R. 295 ; 1 N. R. 298.

—— When Husband Cannot be Found.]—Substituted service of orders to pay wife's costs and alimony pendente lite will be allowed by leaving them at the last known residence of the husband, at his solicitor's office, and at the address given in the appearance-book. Nuttall v. Nuttall, 31 L. J., Mat. 164.

—— Motion for Attachment—Affidavit of Petitioner.]—An affidavit of non-payment of arrears of alimony to the person to whom they are ordered to be paid, cannot be read on a motion for an attachment if filed subsequently to the notice of motion. Symons v. Symons and Pike, 30 L. J., Mat. 215. See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 110—112.

—— When Refused.]—The court refused to allow an attachment to issue against a common workman dependent upon his weekly earnings of 24*s.* a week, and whose sole property consisted of furniture of the value of 4*l.*, for non-payment of 2*l.* 4*s.* arrears of alimony pendente lite, but gave the wife leave to sue out a fi. fa. for the sum. Ward v. Ward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 484 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 17.

—— On Bankruptcy of Husband.]—A wife cannot prove in bankruptcy against her husband's estate for arrears of alimony. Rice, Ex parte, 10 L. T. 103. See Linton, In re ; Hawkins, In re, and Kerr v. Kerr, cols. 859, 860.

An order of discharge in bankruptcy protects a husband from any proceeding to enforce payment of alimony in respect of which he has been attached before the order of discharge was granted ; and a rule to show cause why sequestration should not issue against his estate will therefore be discharged. Dickens v. Dickens, 2 Sw. & Tr. 645 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 183 ; 7 L. T. 395.

—— By Filing Bill in Equity.]—A bill in equity lies for arrears of alimony after the death of the wife. Stones v. Cooke, 3 L. J., Ch. 225.

—— Fund in Court—Solicitor's Lien.]—On non-payment of certain sums due for alimony and costs, a writ of sequestration issued against the husband's property, and an order was made on K. to pay into court a sum of money awarded in an action to be paid by K. to the husband. On motion on behalf of the wife to order such sum to be paid out in part satisfaction of her attorney's taxed costs and her own alimony, the court refused to make such order, the husband's attorneys in the action having satisfied the court that they had a lien for costs in that cause exceeding the sum so paid into court. Munt v. Munt, 2 Sw. & Tr. 661; 31 L. J., P. 134; 7 L. T. 438. See also Harrison v. Harrison, col. 857. And see col. 858.

Ne exeat regno against Husband.]—Ne exeat regno will be granted in case of alimony decreed by spiritual court. Pearne v. Lisle, Ambl. 76.

The writ of ne exeat regno does not issue for alimony after a decree in the ecclesiastical court, pending an appeal from that decree. Street v. Street, Turn. & R. 322.

The writ of ne exeat regno is in the nature of equitable bail: therefore in the case of alimony marked only for the arrears actually due, and not carried further by analogy to the case of a judge holding to bail for uncertain damages upon a personal tort. Haffey v. Haffey, 14 Ves. 261.

Ne exeat issues in cases of alimony, but only for sums actually due, and costs. Shaftoe v. Shaftoe, 7 Ves. 171. S. P., Dawson v. Dawson, 173; Oldham v. Oldham, id. 410.

Upon a suit in ecclesiastical court by wife for alimony, quære whether before the decree court will not grant writ of ne exeat regno against husband. Coglar v. Coglar, 1 Ves. J. 94.

Ne exeat granted to prevent husband from avoiding payment of alimony. Whitmore, Ex parte, Dick. 143.

Semble, the court will not interfere, either to compel or to restrain the payment of alimony, as such, except so far as to grant a writ of ne exeat against the husband. Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 8 Sim. 315; 7 L. J., Ch. 270; 2 Jur. 738. S. C. on appeal, 5 Myl. & C. 229; 3 Jur. 1116. And see col. 858.

d. Commencement and Duration of Payment.

When Commencing.]—Alimony pendente lite is payable from the date of the service, not of the return, of the citation. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 31 L. J., Mat. 165.

The respondent cohabited with and was supported by the co-respondent for some time after the filing of the petition and the service of the citation. In allotting alimony pendente lite, the court ordered that the alimony should run from the date at which the respondent ceased to cohabit with the co-respondent, instead of from the service of the citation. Holt v. Holt and Davis, 38 L. J., Mat. 33; L. R. 1 P. 610; 19 L. T. 662.

A husband is liable for reasonable expenses incurred by his wife till the decree for alimony is made. Where several months had elapsed from the return of the citation, 50*l.* had been paid on account, by order of the court, an alimony, pendente lite, of 120*l.* per annum, was decreed payable from the date of the decree. Hayward v. Hayward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 85; 28 L. J., Mat. 9; 6 W. R. 639.

A wife is entitled to an allotment of alimony pendente lite at any time before the hearing, although evidence has been taken de bene esse in support of the petition which proves that she has been guilty of adultery. Phillips v. Phillips and Medlyn, 4 Sw. & Tr. 129; 34 L. J., Mat. 107.

Duration of.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, when the case is tried by jury, alimony pendente lite ceases when the time for moving for a new trial has elapsed. Madan v. Madan and De Thoren, 19 L. T. 612; 17 W. R. 265.

A decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, if not appealed from, puts an end to the lis between the parties, and alimony pendente lite will not therefore be due after the date of the decree nisi; but where a husband moved to have a decree made absolute, he being resident in India, and it appeared that a sum of money was due to the wife on account of alimony pendente lite, the court refused to make the decree absolute. Latham v. Latham and Gethin, 2 Sw. & Tr. 298; 30 L. J., Mat. 163; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 219; 4 L. T. 308; 9 W. R. 680. But see Ellis v. Ellis, ante, col. 832.

Semble, that alimony pendente lite in a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage continues payable after a decree nisi, and until it is made absolute. Nicholson v. Nicholson and Ratcliffe, 32 L. J., Mat. 127; 9 L. T. 118.

Suspension of.]—The trial of a suit by the wife for judicial separation being postponed at her instance, the court directed the payment of the alimony pendente lite which had been allotted to her to be suspended from the date of the postponement until the cause was tried. Rogers v. Rogers, 34 L. J., Mat. 87.

Adultery of Wife.]—A wife obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage by reason of her husband's adultery and cruelty, with costs. Subsequently the queen's proctor intervened, and proved that she had been herself guilty of adultery, and the petition was dismissed. Alimony had been allotted pendente lite:—Held, that the wife was entitled to be paid by the husband alimony up to the day on which her adultery had been proved, and costs, only to the extent of the money paid into the registry to meet the expenses of the suit. Whitmore v. Whitmore, 35 L. J., Mat. 39; L. R. 1 P. 96; 13 L. T. 723.

Alimony pendente lite ceases when a wife's adultery is conclusively proved; that is, on the pronouncing the decree nisi in cases heard before the court itself, or in cases heard before a jury, when the time has elapsed for moving for a new trial before the court; and if that is refused by the court, when the further time for appealing from such refusal has elapsed. Wells v. Wells and Hudson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 542; 33 L. J., Mat. 151; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 755; 10 L. T. 696.

Refusal of Court to Rescind Order.]—The court refused to rescind an order for alimony pendente lite on an allegation, supported by affidavits, that the wife was maintaining herself by prostitution; the wife in her affidavit denying the truth of the allegation, and the charge of prostitution being the main question in the suits. Patch v. Patch, 38 L. J., Mat. 27; 19 L. T. 662; 17 W. R. 265.

ii. Permanent Alimony.

a. Generally.

Not Chargeable by Wife with Debts.]—Permanent alimony is a different thing from, and not analogous to, the wife's separate property; is variable in amount at the discretion of the judge of the ecclesiastical court, and is not chargeable by the wife with payment of her debts. Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 8 Sim. 315; 7 L. J., Ch. 270; 2 Jur. 738. But see S. C. on appeal, 5 Myl. & C. 229; 3 Jur. 1116, where the Lord Chancellor reversed the order of the Vice-Chancellor on the ground that part of the sum charged was not alimony.

A married woman divorced from her husband, and entitled to alimony under the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, accepted a bill of exchange for articles of dress supplied to her by the drawer, and made payable at her bankers, to whom her alimony was paid:—Held, that she did not thereby charge her alimony. Ib.

Not Provable in Husband's Bankruptcy.]—A liability to pay alimony is not a debt provable in bankruptcy. Linton v. Linton, 54 L. J., Q. B. 529; 15 Q. B. D. 239; 52 L. T. 782; 33 W. R. 714; 49 J. P. 597.

Nor are arrears. Hawkins, In re, Hawkins, Ex parte, [1894] 1 Q. B. 25; 10 R. 29; 69 L. T. 769; 42 W. R. 202. Kerr v. Kerr, 66 L. J., Q. B. 838; [1897] 2 Q. B. 439; 77 L. T. 29; 46 W. R. 46. See cols. 859, 860.

Previous Agreement.]—In deciding questions of alimony on a dissolution of marriage the attention of the court is not to be confined to the terms of a previous agreement for separation, where the agreement contains no covenant not to sue and the circumstances have changed, but all the facts must be considered. An agreement between parents cannot deprive the court of jurisdiction to give maintenance to children. Bishop v. Bishop, 66 L. J., P. 69; [1897] P. 138; 76 L. T. 409; 45 W. R. 567.

A wife petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage. Before the case came on for hearing she withdrew her petition and compromised the suit, her husband agreeing to pay her the sum of 130*l.* per annum during their joint lives for the maintenance of herself and the only child of the marriage. The agreement entered into between the parties contained the following passage:—"This allowance to be paid in any event, whether they remain married or whether the marriage should hereafter be dissolved." Subsequently the husband was guilty of adultery and also of statutory desertion, and the marriage was dissolved on those grounds:—Held, that the wife was not precluded by the existence of the above agreement from filing her petition for permanent maintenance in the usual way. Ib.

Damages Obtained against Co-Respondent.]—Although the court has authority to include, in its decree for a dissolution of marriage, an order upon the husband to make provision for the future maintenance of the wife, it will only do so under very special circumstances. It will be more ready to settle upon her whatsoever sum of money may be recovered by way of damages against the co-respondent. Latham v. Latham and Gethin, 30 L. J., Mat. 43; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 218.

Assignment of Allowance out of Lunatic's Estate.]—On a decree for judicial separation an order was made for payment of 60*l.* a year to the wife as permanent alimony. The husband was afterwards found lunatic by inquisition, and by an order in lunacy and chancery the dividends of a sum of stock to which he was entitled in a chancery suit were ordered to be carried to his account in the lunacy, and 60*l.* a year to be paid out of them to his wife in respect of her alimony till further order. The wife assigned the annuity to a purchaser, who presented a petition in lunacy, and in the suit, to have the annuity paid to her:—Held, that the petition must be refused, on the ground that whether the annuity was considered as alimony or as an allowance made to the wife by the court in lunacy, it was not assignable. Robinson, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 986; 27 Ch. D. 160; 51 L. T. 737; 33 W. R. 17—C. A.

Guilty Wife—Judicial Separation.]—The court has jurisdiction to order permanent alimony to be paid to the guilty wife after a decree for judicial separation in a suit instituted by the husband. Gooden v. Gooden, [1892] P. 1; 65 L. T. 542; 40 W. R. 49—C. A.

Release of Past and Future Payments—Consideration.]—A promise to release arrears and future payments of alimony is not supported by a consideration of a sum less than the arrears. Cumber v. Wane (1 Str. 426) and Foakes v. Beer (9 App. Cas. 605) followed. Underwood v. Underwood, 63 L. J., P. 109; [1894] P. 204; 6 R. 604; 70 L. T. 390; 42 W. R. 372—C. A.

Inquiry as to Husband's Means on Application for Alimony pendente lite.]—When alimony pendente lite has once been awarded, no evidence can be given on any subsequent application for permanent alimony in the same suit except for the purpose of showing that an alteration has taken place in the husband's means Bonsor v. Bonsor, 66 L. J., P. 35; [1897] P. 77; 76 L. T. 168; 45 W. R. 304.

b. Amount Payable.

General Principles.]—The amount of permanent alimony does not vary with the amount of marital delinquency. Hooper v. Hooper, 30 L. J., P. 49.

In the absence of proof that a husband's income has altered, permanent alimony will be awarded upon the income upon which alimony pendente lite was allotted, and neither party will be allowed to dispute the correctness of the estimate then taken. Franks v. Franks, 31 L. J., Mat. 25.

Although the wife may since have discovered that his income at that time was greater. Greenwood v. Greenwood, 32 L. J., Mat. 136.

In allotting permanent alimony, the court will take into consideration the circumstance that the husband is obliged, in order to earn his income, to live in a more expensive place than his wife, and when that is the case, will not allow her the usual proportion of such income. Lewis v. Lewis, 35 L. J., Mat. 92; L. R. 1 P. 230; 14 L. T. 770; 14 W. R. 1023.

The court can order an annuity to be secured to the wife only on making the decree; the order, therefore, would be permanent, and incapable of being varied to meet the varying fortunes of the husband. Rawlins v. Rawlins, 4 Sw. & Tr. 158; 34 L. J., Mat. 147; 13 L. T. 212.

Where the husband's income was professional, and the wife was entitled to a sum of money in reversion, which was imminent, the court refused to make any order under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32. Ib.

The court ought also to consider the conduct of the parties. Ib. See also Medley v. Medley, col. 851.

In decreeing alimony the court is governed by the same rules as the ecclesiastical courts, and it will not therefore make an order for securing permanent alimony, which would have the effect of charging the husband's property with its payment, whatever alteration might take place in his circumstances at a future time. Hyde v. Hyde, 4 Sw. & Tr. 80; 34 L. J., Mat. 63; 12 L. T. 235; 13 W. R. 545.

A wife applied for permanent alimony on a decree for judicial separation by reason of cruelty. The husband stated on affidavit, that since the petition for alimony pendente lite an answer had been filed, he had parted with his business (which was the principal source of income) for a yearly payment of 300*l.* for seven years, and five per cent. on the value of warehouse, stock-in-trade, debts, &c. The court held that, in allotting alimony, the 300*l.* yearly must be taken as income, observing that, if the income really failed, the husband could apply for a reduction of alimony. Moore v. Moore, 3 Sw. & Tr. 606; 34 L. J., Mat. 146; 11 L. T. 459.

Where the only income of a husband was 60*l.* a year, derived from independent property, and he turned his wife out of doors, and his mistress was living with him, the court awarded a moiety of the income as permanent alimony. Avila v. Avila, 31 L. J., Mat. 176.

Where a husband's income was 1,650*l.*, alimony at the rate of 500*l.* per annum was ordered. Willcocks v. Willcocks, 32 L. J., Mat. 205.

Judicial Separation.]—A wife who has obtained a final decree of judicial separation in her favour, and has previously thereto filed her petition for alimony pending suit, on such decree being affirmed on appeal to the full court, or after the expiration of the time for appealing against the decree, if no appeal be then pending, may apply to the judge ordinary by motion for an allotment of permanent alimony; provided that she shall, eight days at least before making such application, give notice thereof to the husband, or to his proctor, solicitor, or attorney. R. 91 (1865).

The eight days must be reckoned exclusively of the day on which the notice is given and of that on which the motion is made. Robinson v. Robinson, 30 L. J., Mat. 189.

When a husband obtains a judicial separation on the ground of the wife's cruelty, the court will require him to make a provision for her maintenance. Pickard v. Pickard, 3 Sw. & Tr. 523; 33 L. J., Mat. 158; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 830; 10 L. T. 789; 13 W. R. 188.

A judicial separation, on the ground of the wife's cruelty, will not be decreed, except on the condition that the husband makes some reasonable provision for her maintenance. The husband will not be required to give a bond with sureties to secure the payment of such provision. Forth v. Forth, 36 L. J., Mat. 122; 16 L. T. 574; 15 W. R. 1091.

The court is bound by the practice of the ecclesiastical courts in allotting permanent alimony after a decree of judicial separation. Haigh v. Haigh, 38 L. J., Mat. 37; L. R. 1 P. 709; 20 L. T. 281.

—— Subsequent Decree nisi for Dissolution.]—If permanent alimony has been allotted to a wife on her obtaining a decree of judicial separation, and the husband afterwards obtains a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage on the ground of her adultery, the court will not, before that decree has been made absolute, discharge the order for payment of alimony. Stoate v. Stoate, 30 L. J., Mat. 108.

Dissolution—Husband in Fault.]—The principles by which the court will be guided in exercising that discretion are, that a wife having by her husband's misconduct, been deprived of her position, she ought not to purchase redress at the cost of being left destitute; that it would be impolitic to give a wife any great pecuniary interest in obtaining a dissolution of the marriage tie; and that such provision should be payable only so long as the wife remains chaste and unmarried. Fisher v. Fisher, 2 Sw. & Tr. 410; 31 L. J., Mat. 1; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 103; 5 L. T. 364; 10 W. R. 122.

Basis of Calculation of Amount to be Secured.]—A decree absolute having been made for dissolution of a marriage on the ground of the husband's cruelty and adultery, and the custody of the children having been given to the wife, the proper basis of calculation of the sum to be secured by the husband for his wife's maintenance is the amount the husband could draw out of his business without his partner's consent, and not the amount of the husband's share of profits. Hanbury v. Hanbury, 63 L. J., P. 105; [1894] P. 315; 6 R. 591; 70 L. T. 569; 42 W. R. 434—C. A. Appeal compromised, [1895] A. C. 417; 11 R. 302; 72 L. T. 480—H. L. (E.)

—— Deductions Allowable.]—In estimating the amount of alimony to be allowed a wife after a separation, on the ground of cruelty, the husband is not entitled to a deduction out of what would otherwise be payable by him out of his income, in respect of money left by wills since the marriage to his wife's separate use, nor in respect of his wife's salary as a lady-in-waiting to the Queen: but he is entitled to such a deduction in respect of a pension from the crown granted to his wife. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 3 Knapp, 42—P. C.

—— Debts of Wife.]—A suit in the ecclesiastical court for separation was promoted by a wife against her husband. Alimony pendente lite was allotted, and when sentence was given in favour of the wife, permanent alimony was allotted. The alimony pendente lite had not been obtained without delay and compulsion, and permanent alimony had not been paid at all. The wife had incurred debts which the husband had been compelled to pay. He sought to deduct these amounts from the future payment of alimony:—Held, that he was not entitled so to do. Harmer v. Harmer, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 168; 5 W. R. 413.

—— Income Tax.]—When an allotment of permanent alimony has been made to a wife upon a calculation of the husband's income, in which calculation the income and property tax has been deducted, the husband is not allowed under the Income Tax Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), ss. 102, 103, to deduct the tax from his payments of alimony to the wife. Frankfort v. Frankfort, 4 Notes of Cases, 280.

In payments on account of alimony, the party paying may deduct income tax. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 2 Notes of Cases, 17.

After a decree nisi for a dissolution of marriage at the petition of a husband, the wife filed a petition for permanent alimony, or for some payment in lieu thereof, setting forth the amount and sources of her husband's income. On motion on behalf of the husband, the court directed the petition for alimony to be struck off the file of the court, and refused to allow the costs to be taxed against the husband. Winstone v. Winstone and Dyne, 2 Sw. & Tr. 246; 30 L. J., Mat. 109; 3 L. T. 895. See also Laxton v. Laxton, 30 L. J., P. 208.

Examination of Husband.]—After a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage at the suit of a wife, the husband will not be ordered to attend in court that he may be examined on his answer to the petition for alimony pendente lite, with a view to getting an order that he secure a provision to the wife under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32. The wife may, however, examine witnesses to show the husband's means. Mead v. Mead, 31 L. J., Mat. 30.

Where an answer is filed to a petition for alimony pendente lite, but no such alimony is allotted, and the wife afterwards applies for permanent alimony, she will not be allowed to file a fresh petition, but, upon giving notice, may examine witnesses to contradict the statements in the husband's answer in the petition for alimony pendente lite. Sykes v. Sykes, 31 L. J., Mat. 38.

Application for.]—An application for permanent alimony should be made on motion. Wallace v. Wallace, 32 L. J., Mat. 34; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1082.

Varying.]—The court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 3, has jurisdiction to vary a decree of the ecclesiastical court allotting permanent alimony. Harmar v. Harmar, 32 L. J., Mat. 118; 8 L. T. 291; 11 W. R. 750.

Under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, the court can order an annuity to be secured to a wife only on making a decree; the order, therefore, would be permanent and incapable of being varied to meet the varying fortunes of the husband. Rawlins v. Rawlins, 4 Sw. & Tr. 158; 34 L. J., Mat. 147; 13 L. T. 212.

The 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 1, empowers the court in every case, from time to time, to vary an order for permanent maintenance, and to order monthly payments, whatever the amount of the allowance. Jardine v. Jardine, 51 L. J., P. 4; 6 P. D. 213; 30 W. R. 91—C. A.

—— For Decrease of Alimony.]—Where a husband's income has diminished since allotment of alimony pendente lite, he may, upon the application for permanent alimony, bring that fact before the court by affidavit. Davies v. Davies, 32 L. J., Mat. 152.

It is not necessary that he should file a petition alleging such a diminution. Ib.

—— For Increase of Alimony.]—If upon an application for permanent alimony a wife desires to show that the husband's income has increased or that her own has diminished since alimony pendente lite was allotted, her proper course is to file a petition alleging such increase or diminution. Fisk v. Fisk, 31 L. J., Mat. 60.

Notice of an application for an increase of permanent alimony should be given to the husband. Notice to the attorney who conducted the suit for him is insufficient. Louis v. Louis, 41 L. J., Mat. 18; 25 L. T. 856; 20 W. R. 215.

—— Covenant not to sue for.]—A covenant not to sue for increased alimony in the event of a divorce grounded on future misconduct will not be implied in an agreement for separation. Gandy v. Gandy, infra (51 L. J., P. 41; 7 P. D. 77, 168; 54 L. J., Ch. 1154; 30 Ch. D. 57) explained. Jardine v. Jardine, supra.

Order—Form of Decree.]—The order for permanent alimony under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, must be embodied in the decree dissolving a marriage, if such a decree has been pronounced and registered. Vicars v. Vicars, 29 L. J., Mat. 20.

Any such decree in s. 32 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, taken in connection with 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, must be read as the decree (absolute) which finally dissolves the marriage; and therefore the order securing permanent alimony to the wife under the provisions of the section need not form part of the decree nisi. Charles v. Charles, 36 L. J., Mat. 17; L. R. 1 P. 260; 15 L. T. 416.

An order for permanent provision for a divorced wife, made under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, must form part of the decree dissolving the marriage. In making such an order the judge ordinary exercises a power which could only have been exercised by the full court before the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, and the appeal from the order lies, not to the full court, but to the House of Lords. Sidney v. Sidney, 35 L. J., P. 46; L. R. 1 P. 78; 13 L. T. 682; 14 W. R. 317.

—— Husband out of Jurisdiction.]—Where a husband is out of the jurisdiction of the court, the only power which the court has, in case of dissolution of marriage, to make provision for the wife, is to make an order on the husband to secure a sum of money to her. Robotham v. Robotham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 190; 27 L. J., Mat. 61; 6 W. R. 735.

—— Payment of Arrears.]—The court, contrary to the usual practice, made an order for the payment of arrears of alimony, specifying the amount, where it appeared probable that the husband, who was an officer serving in India, would be compelled by the India Office to obey such an order. Louis v. Louis, 41 L. J., Mat. 19; 25 L. T. 856; 20 W. R. 215.

Suspension of Decree until Secured.]—A husband sued for a judicial separation on the ground of his wife's cruelty, and established his case. Since the cessation of cohabitation the husband had made his wife an allowance, and at the hearing said he would continue it. The court intimated that the allowance should be secured to the wife by deed, and, on the husband objecting, suspended the decree until its suggestion should be carried out. Phillip v. Phillip, 21 W. R. 392.

Mode of Serving Order.]—Service of an order for the payment of alimony is effected by showing to the party to be served an office copy of the order, and by leaving with him a copy of it. Parr v. Parr and White, 4 Sw. & Tr. 229.

Enforcing, as to.]—See col. 858.

Maintenance of Children.]—A wife had an income from property settled on her by the husband of 196*l.* a year. The husband had an income of 367*l.* a year. There were three children of the marriage who were in the custody of the wife. The court, in allotting permanent alimony, ordered that in addition to the 196*l.* a year which the wife enjoyed under the settlement, the husband should allow her 30*l.* a year for the maintenance of each of the children. Todd v. Todd, 42 L. J., Mat. 62; 29 L. T. 252.

Husband's Property Abroad.]—The provisions of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, respecting permanent maintenance, empower the court to order a gross or annual sum to be secured for the benefit of the wife, but not to make a direct order on the husband to pay a gross or annual or other periodical sum to the wife. The qualification that the maintenance is to be for the wife "dum sola et casta vixerit" is not usually inserted in the order but in the deed of security. The provisions of 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, respecting the payment of monthly or weekly sums to the wife, do not apply to the case of a husband who has property abroad sufficient and available for a security. Per Jessel, M.R.: An order for maintenance cannot be made in the alternative for securing a gross or annual sum of money, or else for the payment of monthly or weekly sums by the husband. Medley v. Medley, 51 L. J., P. 74; 7 P. D. 122; 30 W. R. 937—C. A.

Undertaking by Third Party to Pay.]—The father of the respondent on her marriage undertook, in a letter to the husband, to make her an allowance of 100*l.* per annum during his life. Such allowance had been paid for some years in one sum in a particular month of the year. The court refused to grant to the wife alimony out of her husband's income, which did not much exceed her allowance, the month in which it might be expected that the allowance would be paid not having arrived. Eaton v. Eaton and Campbell, L. R. 2 P. 51; 21 L. T. 733.

Alimony — Separation Deed — Agreement by Wife to take Fixed Sum for Maintenance —Subsequent Judicial Separation on Suit by Wife — Maintenance — Increase of Alimony — Change of Circumstances.]—Where a decree of judicial separation is pronounced between husband and wife who have been living apart under a separation deed, which deed contains no covenant by the wife not to sue for increased alimony, but does include an acceptance by her of a fixed sum for maintenance, the court has jurisdiction—if the circumstances have changed so as to throw on her an increased burden—to allot to her a larger allowance. Gandy v. Gandy (51 L. J., P. 41; 7 P. D. 77, 168; 54 L. J., Ch. 1154; 30 Ch. D. 57) explained. Judkins v. Judkins, 66 L. J., P. 76; [1897] P. 138; 76 L. T. 409; 45 W. R. 567—C. A.

Husband's Means inquired into on application for Alimony pendente lite.]—When alimony pendente lite has once been awarded, no evidence can be given on any subsequent application for permanent alimony in the same suit except for the purpose of showing that no alteration has taken place in the husband's means. Bonsor v. Bonsor, 66 L. J., P. 35; [1897] P. 77; 76 L. T. 168; 45 W. R. 304.

—— Children—Education thrown on Wife.]—The expense thrown upon the wife of educating a child is a reason for increasing her alimony beyond the sum which she has, in an agreement for separation, accepted as permanent maintenance. Bishop v. Bishop, 66 L. J., P. 69; [1897] P. 138; 76 L. T. 409; 45 W. R. 567—C. A.

Support of Children by Wife.]—If the husband is relieved from the obligation of supporting his children by reason of their custody being given to the wife the court can increase the permanent alimony already given to the wife. Halligan v. Halligan, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 244—C. A.

c. Practice to Obtain.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 81—94; Rr. 1875, rr. 189—192.

Discretion of Court.]—A decree nisi for dissolution of marriage was made against a wife on the 3rd of August, 1880, and was made absolute in due course. The wife appealed, and her appeal was dismissed on the 19th of July, 1881. On the 30th of July she took out a summons to have permanent maintenance allowed her. Owing to her absence abroad the summons was not heard till December, 1882, when the president dismissed it. The wife appealed:—Held, on appeal, that as the application to the president was out of time, and he had exercised a discretion under the special circumstances of the case, the court would not interfere with his decision. Robertson v. Robertson, 8 P. D. 94; 48 L. T. 590; 31 W. R. 652—C. A.

Answer.]—A petition for an order for permanent maintenance under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, must be presented in accordance with r. 96, after the decree nisi and before the decree absolute; and r. 98, which requires the respondent to file an answer to it on oath, is a binding rule with which the court will not dispense except upon special grounds. The fact that it appears on the face of the petition that the petitioner has a separate income, is not a ground on which the court will dispense with that rule. Charles v. Charles, 36 L. J., Mat. 17; L. R. 1 P. 260; 15 L. T. 416.

When Petition should be Filed.]—The court will allow a petition for permanent alimony to be filed after it has made a final decree for a judicial separation. Covell v. Covell, 41 L. J., Mat. 81; L. R. 2 P. 411; 27 L. T. 324; 20 W. R. 894.

A wife obtained a decree of judicial separation by reason of the adultery of the husband. No application was made for alimony pending suit, but after the final decree had been pronounced, she filed a petition for permanent alimony. The husband appeared under protest:—Held, that the court had power to entertain the petition, and that the husband was bound to answer to the merits. Ib.

The petition for such provision cannot be filed until after the decree nisi has been pronounced; and the order must form part of the decree absolute. Charles v. Charles, supra.

d. Maintenance.

Petition for.]—A petition for permanent maintenance under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, may be presented at any time after the decree nisi, and the order for maintenance need not necessarily form part of the decree absolute. Bradley v.

Bradley, 47 L. J., P. 53; 3 P. D. 47; 39 L. T. 203; 26 W. R. 831. See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 95—103; 1877, rr. 204, 214, 215.

What Court Considers.]—On a question of permanent maintenance, the court will consider the ability of the husband as well as the conduct and income of the wife, not only as to the amount but as to whether it shall make any order at all for maintenance. Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe and Anderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 467; 29 L. J., Mat. 171; 7 W. R. 727.

Petition for, before Decree Nisi—Jurisdiction.]—The effect of s. 32 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and the rules and regulations made under the provisions of the Divorce Acts, is to enable the court, before a decree nisi for divorce has been made absolute, to confirm the report of the registrar approving of maintenance for the wife, to order the husband to secure the maintenance to the wife upon the decree becoming absolute, and in the meantime to restrain him from dealing with his property so as not to leave sufficient security. Waterhouse v. Waterhouse, 62 L. J., P. 115; [1893] P. 284; 69 L. T. 618—C. A.

Permanent Maintenance — Post-nuptial Settlement—No Express Covenant not to Sue for Divorce — Order in Excess of Amount Allotted by Settlement.]—The wife, who had obtained a decree dissolving her marriage, petitioned for permanent maintenance. By post-nuptial deeds, made apparently in consideration of the abandonment of former proceedings instituted by her, she was to receive an allowance of 100*l.* a year in the event of the adultery or cruelty of her husband. The husband's income was 600*l.* a year:—Held, that she was entitled, notwithstanding the deed, to permanent maintenance at the rate of 200*l.* a year. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 69 L. T. 459.

Discretionary Bar — Decree Nisi — Petitioner to secure Maintenance for Respondent, to be payable dum sola et casta vixerit.]—Upon a petition by a husband for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, in which the respondent counter-charged cruelty and adultery, the jury found that the respondent and co-respondent had committed adultery; that the petitioner had not committed adultery, but that he had been guilty of cruelty towards his wife. There was no finding as to whether the petitioner's cruelty had conduced to the respondent's adultery. The court, being of opinion that the adultery of the respondent with the co-respondent was not brought about by the petitioner's cruelty, exercised its discretion under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 31, by pronouncing a decree nisi, at the same time directing that the decree should not be made absolute unless the petitioner secured to his wife, by deed, an allowance of 36*l.* a year for her maintenance. The court further ordered that the deed should contain a clause, providing that the allowance to the wife should only be payable so long as she should remain chaste and unmarried. Badham v. Badham and Gorst (62 L. T. 663) followed; Lander v. Lander ([1891] P. 161) distinguished. Edwards v. Edwards, 63 L. J., P. 62; [1894] P. 33; 70 L. T. 39.

Reversionary Property—Dum casta et sola Clause.]—The court in allotting permanent maintenance will not interfere with reversionary interests, except under special circumstances, where for instance it would be otherwise impossible to secure a provision for the wife. On a petition for permanent maintenance and variation of settlements, after decree absolute at the wife's suit for adultery and cruelty, the registrar found that the respondent would come into possession, on the death of a person aged ninety years, of a sum which would about double his income. The wife, in addition to the income arising out of a fund in settlement in which she had the first interest, was entitled to a sum in reversion which would also about double her income. The husband had brought nothing into settlement, and the registrar proposed that he should secure to his wife a present annual payment bringing up her income to a third of the joint income, and that on his reversion falling in he should secure a further sum bringing up her future income to the same proportion, taking her reversion also into consideration. The court refused to confirm this recommendation, but allotted the wife an annual sum equal to one-third of the husband's present income, leaving the reversionary interests of both parties untouched. The court also declined to insert a dum sola et casta vixerit clause in the order. Harrison v. Harrison, 56 L. J., P. 76; 12 P. D. 130; 57 L. T. 119; 35 W. R. 703. See col. 857.

Order for Securing Amount upon Husband's Property.]—A wife who had obtained a decree dissolving her marriage, petitioned the court for permanent maintenance. The husband was a naval officer, who, in addition to his pay, was entitled to property in Ireland producing about 100*l.* per annum. The respondent was entitled to the property under a document executed by his father, beginning: "This indenture," with the signatures of two witnesses, but no attestation clause at the end, which document was admitted to probate as a will. There was a clause in the will restraining him from charging or parting with the property. Upon a motion to confirm the registrar's report, the court, holding that the respondent's interest in the property was an estate in fee simple, and that the restraining clause was therefore repugnant, ordered the respondent to secure to the petitioner upon the property in question the sum of 84*l.* per annum for her life. Corbett v. Corbett, 58 L. J., P. 17; 14 P. D. 7; 60 L. T. 74; 37 W. R. 114—C. A.

Notwithstanding Deed of Separation.] — A wife, by a deed of separation, agreed to accept certain sums as a provision for her support, and not to sue her husband for any further maintenance. Subsequently, having discovered that he had been guilty of incestuous adultery, she obtained a decree for dissolution of the marriage:—Held, that, notwithstanding the deed, she was entitled to the usual order for permanent maintenance. Morrall v. Morrall, 50 L. J., P. 62; 6 P. D. 98; 47 L. T. 50; 29 W. R. 897.

Wife Petitioner—Injunction to Restrain Husband from Dealing with Property till Order complied with.]—Where a husband was ordered to secure a lump sum of money for the permanent maintenance of his wife, who had obtained a decree absolute for the dissolution of her marriage, the court, following Sidney v. Sidney (17 L. T. 9), also granted an injunction restraining the husband from dealing with certain of his property until such order had been complied with. Newton v. Newton, 65 L. J., P. 15; [1896] P. 36.

Voluntary Allowance of Husband — Dissolution on Wife's Petition.]—A wife obtained a dissolution of her marriage, and subsequently petitioned for permanent maintenance. The registrar reported that the husband was in debt to the amount of nearly 20,000*l.*, and that he was without means, with the exception of an allowance of 60*l.* a month, paid to him by his brother as long as he resided out of England. The report concluded by recommending that the husband be ordered to pay his wife 15*l.* a month by way of permanent maintenance:—Held, that, though the allowance of 60*l.* a month was voluntary, it might nevertheless be treated as income for this purpose, and that the registrar's report must be confirmed with costs against the co-respondent. Haviland v. Haviland (32 L. J., P. 67; 3 Sw. & Tr. 114) commented on. Bonsor v. Bonsor, 66 L. J., P. 35; [1897] P. 77; 76 L. T. 168; 45 W. R. 304. But see Moss v. Moss and Bush, 15 W. R. 532.

Amount—Basis of Calculation of Amount to be Secured.]—A decree absolute having been made for dissolution of a marriage on the ground of the husband's cruelty and adultery, and the custody of the children having been given to the wife, the proper basis of calculation of the sum to be secured by the husband for his wife's maintenance is the amount the husband could draw out of his business without his partner's consent, and not the amount of the husband's share of profits. Hanbury v. Hanbury, 63 L. J., P. 105; [1894] P. 315; 6 R. 591; 70 L. T. 569; 42 W. R. 434—C. A.

—— Discretion of Court.]—A decree for dissolution of marriage was granted on the wife's petition, the husband having been guilty of adultery and aggravated cruelty. The court, in making an order for permanent maintenance, directed that the husband should secure to the petitioner a sum equal to one-third of his ascertained income, and refused to confine the operation of the order to such period as the petitioner remained unmarried. Lister v. Lister, 15 P. D. 4; 38 W. R. 81—C. A.

Where a wife, who had obtained a decree of dissolution of marriage, had no fortune, and her husband had some, and also trading profits, neither large nor certain, the court considered that the wife was entitled to a maintenance only, and ordered that the husband should secure to her an annuity of 100*l.* for the support of herself and her daughter, payable so long as she should remain chaste and unmarried, to be reduced to 80*l.* if the daughter should die or marry. Ib.

In exercising the power of ordering a husband to make a provision for his wife who has obtained a decree of dissolution of marriage, the court will generally be guided by the principles laid down in the above case, where a husband was ordered to secure to the wife, so long as she should remain chaste and unmarried, an annuity sufficient to maintain her. There may, however, be circumstances which would justify the court in ordering a more liberal provision to be made for the wife. A wife having obtained a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and desertion, the court, taking into consideration the conduct of the parties and other circumstances, ordered the husband to secure to her the payment of 2,000*l.* absolutely. Morris v. Morris, 31 L. J., Mat. 33.

Where a wife had obtained a decree of judicial separation, and the court had ordered that she should have the custody of three children all under seven, alimony pendente lite having been allotted on the presumption that the husband's income was 400*l.* per annum, the court allotted to the wife 160*l.* per annum as permanent alimony; 100*l.* for herself, and 20*l.* per annum for each of the children. Whildon v. Whildon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 388; 30 L. J., Mat. 174; 5 L. T. 138.

The wife during the coverture became entitled to a small estate of inheritance. On the dissolution of the marriage on her petition, by reason of the husband's adultery and cruelty, the court ordered that he should pay to the wife an annuity to the amount of two-thirds of the rents, and secure such an annuity on the property. George v. George, 38 L. J., Mat. 34; 20 L. T. 232.

When the court pronounces a decree of dissolution of marriage at the suit of a wife, it will, if the circumstances permit, order the husband to secure her a permanent maintenance, on the principle, as to amount, of permanent alimony on a decree of judicial separation. Sidney v. Sidney, 4 Sw. & Tr. 178; 34 L. J., Mat. 122; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 815; 12 L. T. 826.

—— Wife in Fault.]—On a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the adultery of a wife, who on her marriage had a fortune of 1,678*l.*, which was not settled, but was received by the husband, the court ordered that the husband should settle 1,000*l.*, upon trust, that the interest be applied for the benefit of the wife so long as she conducted herself properly and remained unmarried, and that upon her interest ceasing the fund should be held in trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares, and that 1,000*l.* damages awarded against the co-respondent, should be paid to the husband in lieu of the sum he would have to settle, and that the decree should be suspended until the settlement should be made. Bent v. Bent and Footman, 2 Sw. & Tr. 392; 30 L. J., Mat. 175; 5 L. T. 139.

On a decree of dissolution by reason of the wife's adultery, she having, under a marriage settlement, the interest after her husband's death of 10,000*l.*, and a right to dispose of one-fifth of that sum, the court directed the husband to secure her an annuity during his life of 150*l.*, quamdiu casta vixerit, on condition of her giving up the right to dispose of the 2,000*l.*; and directed the damages assessed against the co-respondent to go, first, in payment of the wife's costs; secondly, in payment of husband's; and thirdly, any surplus in satisfaction of the annuity to the wife. Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, 1 Sw. & Tr. 334; 28 L. J., Mat. 57; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 176; 7 W. R. 377.

Whether special circumstances are required to induce the court to give permanent alimony to a wife against whom a decree for dissolution is made, and who has no means of support, quære Robertson v. Robertson, 8 P. D. 94; 48 L. T. 590; 31 W. R. 652.

Power of Wife to Assign or Release.]—

Where a decree for dissolution of marriage has been made and the husband has been ordered, under s. 32 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, to secure an annual sum to the wife, she can release or alienate it. A decree for dissolution of marriage having been made on a wife's petition, an order was made directing her husband to secure to her on certain property the sum of 90*l.* per annum, payable monthly, as permanent maintenance, and directing him to execute an assignment of the property to secure that sum. By agreement between the parties the deed was not executed, and after several payments had been made under the order the wife by deed released her husband from further payments in consideration of a gross sum then paid to her:—Held, that, although monthly payments were directed, the order was made under s. 32 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and that the wife had power to release the husband. Held also, that, although the deed of assignment had not been executed as directed, the court had no jurisdiction to direct the order to be perfected now by the execution of the deed. Malcolmcan v. Malcolmcan, 77 L. T. 474—C. A.

An allowance ordered by the court under s. 1 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1866, to be paid by a husband for the maintenance of a divorced wife is personal to the wife, and cannot be assigned or released by her without the sanction of the court. Watkins v. Watkins, 65 L. J., P. 75; [1896] P. 222; 74 L. T. 636; 44 W. R. 677—C. A.

Per Lindley, L.J.: A divorced wife may release, and perhaps assign, her right to arrears of such an allowance, but she cannot prospectively deprive herself, or be deprived, of her right to enforce payment of it in the future. Ib.

Accumulated Arrears — Enforcing Payment of.]—Semble, the object of the allowance being to provide maintenance for the divorced wife, and not to enable her to make accumulations, the court will not, if she allows it to fall into arrear, allow her to enforce payment of arrears for several years. Ib.

Charging Order — Solicitor — Costs.]—A sum secured to the wife on a dissolution of marriage under s. 32 of the Divorce Act, 1857, is not alimony, and is property in respect of which the court has jurisdiction to grant the wife's solicitor a charging order for costs under s. 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860; but the court will not grant such an order unless the solicitor make out a primâ facie case of inability to obtain payment in any other way. Harrison v. Harrison, 58 L. J., P. 28; 13 P. D. 180; 60 L. T. 39; 36 W. R. 748—C. A.

e. Dum Sola et Casta Clause.

"Dum Sola" Clause—Discretion of Court.]—The court in making an order, upon a decree for dissolution of marriage, that the husband shall pay to his wife an annual sum of money for her permanent maintenance, has, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, an absolute discretion, according to the circumstances of each case, either to order the payment during the whole of her life or so long as she remains unmarried. Lister v. Lister, 15 P. D. 4; 62 L. T. 90—C. A.

An order for permanent maintenance may be made containing a "dum sola" clause without the addition of "et casta." Smith v. Smith, 67 L. J., P. 54; [1898] P. 29.

"Dum Casta" Clause.]—The petitioner obtained a decree nisi on the ground of his wife's adultery, but at the time of pronouncing the decree, the learned judge intimated that an allowance must be made by the petitioner to his wife. The solicitors for the petitioner and respondent settled an agreement, which was signed by both the parties. One of the terms in the agreement was that the allowance should continue so long as the respondent should remain chaste and unmarried. The court, while expressing disfavour with the dum casta clause, made the decree absolute. Weller v. Weller, 63 L. T. 263.

"Dum sola et casta" Clause.]—There is no rule that a "dum sola et casta" clause ought, in the absence of special circumstances, to be inserted in an order for maintenance under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 1. The court has a discretion to insert or omit the clause upon consideration of the facts of the case. Wood v. Wood, 60 L. J., P. 66; [1891] P. 272; 64 L. T. 586—C. A.

Where the parties had lived apart for many years, and the husband ultimately obtained a decree nisi for a dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery, the court refused to make the decree absolute until the husband had made provision for his wife's maintenance, and refused to order the insertion of a "dum sola et casta" clause into the order for such maintenance. Lander v. Lander, 60 L. J., P. 65; [1891] P. 161; 64 L. T. 120; 39 W. R. 416; 55 J. P. 152.

The clause is usually, in case of maintenance, inserted in the deed of security, not in the order. Medley v. Medley, col. 851.

Adultery of Wife—Cruelty of Husband not Conducing to.]—Upon a petition by a husband for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, where the jury found adultery by the wife and cruelty by the husband, but not conducing to the adultery, the court in granting a decree nisi ordered the husband to secure his wife an allowance of 36*l.* a year for her maintenance, but payable only so long as she should remain chaste and unmarried. Badham v. Badham and Gorst (62 L. T. 663), followed. Lander v. Lander, supra, distinguished. Edwards v. Edwards, 63 L. J., P. 62; [1894] P. 33; 70 L. T. 39. And see Morris v. Morris, 31 L. J., Mat. 33, and cols. 784—6.

f. Enforcing Order.

Attachment (see Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 110—112; Rr. 1877, r. 203).]—A decree having been made absolute for a divorce on the wife's petition, the husband, as part of the final order, was directed to pay a permanent maintenance to his wife at the rate of 200*l.* a year:—Held, that the court had no power to grant an attachment against the husband for non-payment of arrears of the annuity due under the order. De Lossy v. De Lossy, 15 P. D. 115; 62 L. T. 704; 38 W. R. 511.

An application for an attachment against a husband for non-payment of alimony and costs should be made in one motion. The costs for two motions will not be allowed against the husband. Watts v. Watts, 4 Sw. & Tr. 274; 31 L. J., P. 29.

By Attachment of Rents.]—A feme covert who has obtained a decree in the ecclesiastical court for a divorce à mensâ et thoro, and for permanent alimony, may attach the rents of her freehold, for which her husband could distrain. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 2 Hog. 64.

Appointment of Receiver.]—The probate and divorce division ordered a husband, against whom it granted a divorce, to pay alimony. The divorced wife brought an action in the chancery division against her late husband and the trustees of a post-nuptial settlement made by him during the continuance of a former marriage, to enforce payment of arrears, and recurring payments of alimony, by the appointment of a receiver of his life interest under such settlement:—Held, that she was entitled to the appointment of a receiver, and that the court would not take into consideration the injury done to the children of the former marriage, by depriving their father of his power to consent to their advancement out of the settlement funds. Oliver v. Lowther, 42 L. T. 47; 28 W. R. 381.

Husband dissipating Property.]—If a divorced husband is dissipating his property, or putting it out of his power, a court of equity will grant an injunction and receiver to protect it for the benefit of the former wife. Sidney v. Sidney, 17 L. T. 9. And see Newton v. Newton, 65 L. J., P. 15; [1896] P. 36.

Sequestration.]—The court made an order on the respondent for payment of permanent alimony at the rate of 110*l.* per annum, so long as he was in receipt of a rent-charge of 400*l.* per annum (his only source of income), the trustees of which had a discretionary power to refuse payment, in which event it enured to the benefit of the tenant for life. The respondent had prior to the date of the order become a bankrupt, but the trustees had nevertheless continued to pay him the rent-charge, and he had failed to comply with the order of the court. The court (the respondent and trustees opposing) directed a sequestration in general terms to issue against the property of the respondent. Clinton v. Clinton, L. R. 1 P. 215; 14 L. T. 257; 14 W. R. 545.

—— Indian Officer's Pension.]—The pension of an officer in the Indian army is not liable to sequestration for payment of costs and permanent maintenance. Birch v. Birch, 52 L. J., P. 88; 8 P. D. 163; 32 W. R. 96.

—— Civil Service Pension—By Sequestration.]—The court in enforcing payment of alimony and costs will authorise sequestrators to receive portions of a civil service pension. Sansom v. Sansom, 48 L. J., P. 25; 4 P. D. 69; 39 L. T. 642; 27 W. R. 692.

Ne exeat regno, as to.]—See col. 843.

Husband's Bankruptcy—Proof on Estate.]—An order for permanent alimony made until further order under the terms of the 29 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, is not an annuity which can be valued and proved in bankruptcy. Prescott v. Prescott, 20 L. T. 331.

—— "Future Debt or Liability."]—A liability to pay alimony in weekly sums by an order made in divorce under s. 1 of 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, is not "a future debt or liability" provable in bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 37, sub-s. 3; and, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of the person liable, payment may be enforced as of a debt due in pursuance of an order of a competent court under s. 5 of the Debtors Act. Linton v. Linton, 54 L. J., Q. B. 529; 15 Q. B. D. 239; 52 L. T. 782; 33 W. R. 714; 2 Morrell, 179; 49 J. P. 597—C. A.

—— Arrears accrued after Receiving Order.]—Arrears of alimony payable under an order of the divorce division of the high court, which have accrued due after the date of the receiving order and before proof, are not provable in bankruptcy. Hawkins, In re, Hawkins, Ex parte, [1894] 1 Q. B. 25; 10 R. 29; 69 L. T. 769; 42 W. R. 202; 1 Manson, 6.

Per Vaughan Williams, J.: Whether such instalments accrued due before or after receiving order. Ib.

Arrears before Receiving Order—Commitment—Proof in Bankruptcy.]—Arrears of alimony, under an order of the divorce court, which have accrued before a receiving order has been made against the husband, do not constitute a debt provable in bankruptcy by the wife; but as such arrears constitute a debt enforceable under s. 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, a committal order, on proof of means, is good. Kerr v. Kerr, 66 L. J., Q. B. 838; [1897] 2 Q. B. 439; 77 L. T. 29; 46 W. R. 46; 4 Manson, 207.

13. Proceedings.

See Rules and Regulations of 1865, 1875, made under the Divorce Acts, rr. 1—3, 34—38, 56—61.

a. Petition.

General Rules—Power of Judge.]—Since 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 1, the judge ordinary has power to make and to alter or revoke rules and orders concerning the practice and procedure of the court, without the concurrence of the other judges. Charles v. Charles, 36 L. J., Mat. 17; L. R. 1 P. 260; 15 L. T. 416. Wilson v. Wilson and Howell, 41 L. J., Mat. 1; L. R. 2 P. 341; 25 L. T. 600; 20 W. R. 125.

Entitling Petition.]—A petition for dissolution of marriage should be addressed to the court for divorce and matrimonial causes. Evans v. Evans, 1 Sw. & Tr. 78; 27 L. J., P. 31; 6 W. R. 356.

Pleadings should be Short.]—All pleadings should be as short as is consistent with alleging a legal ground for the prayer. The respondent may apply for further specification, if necessary. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 489; 28 L. J., Mat. 7; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 127, and see Rules (1865), 34—38.

Domicil.]—It is not absolutely necessary that the question of domicil should be raised by the pleadings. The court may allow the question to be raised at the hearing if the evidence then adduced points to a doubt as to the court's jurisdiction. Parkinson v. Parkinson, 69 L. T. 53. See col. 730.

Consolidation of several Petitions.]—If it is expedient to bring before the court acts of adultery alleged to have occurred after the date of the original petition, a supplemental petition should be filed for the purpose; and on the preliminary proceedings being completed the two petitions will be consolidated. Borham v. Bor- ham and Brown, 40 L. J., Mat. 6; L. R. 2 P. 193; 23 L. T. 600; 19 W. R. 215.

Second Petition for same Ground of Relief.]—A wife filed a petition for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, coupled with desertion and cruelty. The case was tried before the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, which renders the wife competent to give evidence of desertion and cruelty. The court refused to dissolve the marriage, on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence of desertion and cruelty, but pronounced a decree of judicial separation on the ground of adultery. After 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, she applied for leave to file a second petition for a dissolution of marriage containing the allegations that she had before failed to establish. The judge ordinary granted leave, but expressed a strong opinion that the full court would refuse to rehear the case. Bevan v. Bevan, 4 Sw. & Tr. 265; 29 L. J., P. 45.

Amended Petition—Advertisement.]—Where a respondent is cited by advertisement, and leave to amend the petition is afterwards granted, the amended petition need not be advertised. Smith v. Smith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 216; 32 L. J., Mat. 145; 9 L. T. 118. See Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 187.

—— Re-serving.] — If a respondent, misnamed in a petition, has been served, but has not appeared, the petition, when amended, must be re-served. Kisch v. Kisch, 33 L. J., Mat. 115. And see r. 39.

Delay in Presenting Petition.]—Where "unreasonable delay in presenting the petition" is the ground for seeking to rescind a decree nisi, the question for the jury is whether the petitioner knew, or had reason to believe, that the respondent had been guilty of adultery two years or more before presenting his petition. Brougham v. Brougham, 64 L. J., P. 125; [1895] P. 288; 11 R. 667.

Delay in objecting to Form of.]—After a petition had been served upon a respondent, his solicitor on two occasions applied to the judge in chambers for further time to file an answer, and both applications were granted:—Held, that it was too late afterwards to take objection to the form of the petition, and to ask that certain paragraphs of it should be struck out. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 L. J., Mat. 215; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 831.

Petitioner's Adultery admitted in Pleadings.]—Where a petitioner in his pleadings admitted that he had been guilty of adultery and pleaded condonation by the respondent, the court allowed the case to go to the jury. Boucher v. Boucher, 1 R. 494; 67 L. T. 720.

Estoppel — Cross Petitions — Decree Nisi on Wife's Petition — Collusion — Intervention of Queen's Proctor—Rescission of Decree—Second Suit by Husband.]—A verdict of cruelty and adultery against a husband upon a wife's petition in the divorce court for dissolution of marriage, followed by a decree nisi which is afterwards rescinded on grounds dehors the verdict and wholly unconnected therewith, is conclusive evidence of the husband's guilt in a subsequent suit between the same parties, where the husband seeks similar relief against the wife. Butler v. Butler, 63 L. J., P. 1; [1894] P. 25; 1 R. 535; 69 L. T. 545; 42 W. R. 49—C. A.

Signature of Petition—Leave to present Petition verified by Affidavit of Petitioner's Solicitor—Practice—Evidence by Affidavit.]—Where a husband, desirous of petitioning for a dissolution of marriage, was in permanent employ abroad, and the adultery was committed during his absence, the court allowed an unsigned petition verified by the affidavit of his solicitor to be presented, but ordered a copy signed by the petitioner and verified by his own affidavit to be filed as soon as practicable. The court subsequently gave leave to prove at the trial the domicil, marriage, cohabitation and separation by affidavit. Hobson, Ex parte, 6 R. 661; 70 L. T. 816.

Interim Receiver—Wife's Petition—Arrears of Alimony—Costs Unpaid—Ex parte Application.]—Where money was due to the wife for arrears of alimony and taxed costs, and her husband had a bill of sale on his furniture, the court, on an ex parte application, appointed a receiver of the amount said to be standing in the husband's name at his bank over the next motion day, and limited to the amount stated in the affidavits. Angliss v. Angliss, 1 R. 532; 69 L. T. 462.

Molestation — Husband Refusing to Leave Wife's House—Injunction.]—Where the molestation alleged by the petitioner in a divorce suit is that the husband refuses to leave the house of the wife, the court will grant an injunction. Northledge v. Northledge, 6 R. 660; 70 L. T. 815.

Change of Solicitor.]—When an order has been made for the change of the attorney in a suit the order must be drawn up and filed in the registry before any step can be taken by the new attorney. Grice v. Grice and Penfold, 32 L. J., Mat. 134.

Petition Alleging Adultery.]—A petition for a divorce on the ground of adultery must allege adultery in distinct terms. Ambler v. Ambler and Houghton, 32 L. J., Mat. 6; 7 L. T. 299; 11 W. R. 111.

Adultery will not be inferred from bigamy alone being alleged in the petition. Bonaparte v. Bonaparte, 65 L. T. 795.

It is not sufficient that the petition alleges information and belief of the petitioner that the respondent has committed adultery. Spilsbury v. Spilsbury, 3 S. & T. 210; 32 L. J., Mat. 126; 9 L. T. 23.

A petition alleged that the respondent and the co-respondent had been living and cohabiting together, but contained no specific charge of adultery. Neither the respondent nor the co-respondent appeared:—Held, that the allegation was insufficient, and leave to amend was refused at the hearing. Forman v. Forman and Davies, 32 L. J., Mat. 80; 11 W. R. 401.

Allegations of adultery, cruelty, or misconduct, without specifying particulars, are bad. Windham v. Windham and Giuglini, 32 L. J., Mat. 89; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 82.

A general allegation of adultery, not specifying person, place, or time, is bad, and will be struck out. Porter v. Porter and Jaggard, 3 Sw. & Tr. 796; 33 L. J., Mat. 207; 13 W. R. 108.

A petition by a wife for a judicial separation, on the ground of adultery, contained a paragraph alleging that the husband had had two illegitimate children, the issue of an adulterous connection, born on certain specified days:—Held, that the paragraph was objectionable, as pleading mere evidence, and should be struck out. Matison v. Matison, 29 L. J., Mat. 80.

On proof of petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of the adultery of the wife, some evidence should be given of the conduct of the husband towards the wife previously to the adultery, and what care he took of her. Boddington v. Boddington, 27 L. J., P. 53. And see col. 735.

—— With Persons Unknown—Striking out Allegations—Undefended Suit.]—Where a petition in an undefended suit contained allegations of adultery with two co-respondents, and also with two unknown persons, the court ordered the paragraphs of the petition referring to the two unknown persons to be struck out. Peacock v. Peacock, 6 R. 656. And see col. 923.

Alleging Cruelty.]—In a petition asking for relief on the ground of cruelty, acts sufficient to establish legal cruelty should be alleged. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 489; 28 L. J., Mat. 7.

A petition, alleging that on the 26th day of July, 1848, and other days between that day and the 24th of July, 1858, the respondent was guilty of cruelty to the petitioner, is not sufficient, but such acts should be specified as, if proved, would constitute cruelty. Ib.

But the precise date of the commission of such acts need not be alleged. Ib.

It is not necessary that every charging paragraph in a petition by reason of cruelty should allege a fact or facts on which, if proved, the court could found a sentence. Some allegations short of this are admissible, as showing the habits and animus of the party charged. Leete v. Leete, 2 Sw. & Tr. 568; 31 L. J., Mat. 121; 6 L. T. 507.

Allegations of actual violence, however general as to time and place, can only be met by a summons for particulars. Ib.

A petition for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty should specify all the acts of the respondent intended to be relied on as constituting cruelty. Goldney v. Goldney, 32 L. J., Mat. 13.

A general allegation, that during a specified time the respondent "committed divers acts of cruelty," is bad, and is ground for an order that the petition be amended by specifying such acts, but not for an order that particulars of the acts of cruelty be given. Ib.

A petition, which concluded with a prayer of judicial separation by reason of the husband's cruelty, and also for the custody of the children, containing a paragraph charging the husband with cruelty to the children:—Held, that the two questions of cruelty to the wife and cruelty to the children cannot be mixed up together; that cruelty to the wife must be established before the court can entertain the question of the final custody of the children; that, consequently, misconduct to the children, unless in the presence of the mother, should not be alleged in the petition, but should be proved afterwards, if necessary, by affidavit. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 489; 28 L. J., Mat. 46; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 127.

Cruelty may consist in the aggregate of the acts alleged in a petition, and each paragraph need not allege an independent act of cruelty sufficient in itself to warrant the relief sought. Green v. Green, 33 L. J., Mat. 64. And see col. 740.

Alleging Desertion.]—When a petition alleges desertion only as the ground for judicial separation, proof of cruelty previously to desertion will not be admitted, even to explain a subsequent refusal on the part of the petitioner to return to cohabitation. Brookes v. Brookes, 1 Sw. & Tr. 326; 28 L. J., Mat. 38.

A petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of the husband's adultery and desertion was directed to be amended by a distinct averment of the fact of desertion; some statements of circumstances in such a petition may be necessary, but evidence should not be pleaded. Pyne v. Pyne, 1 Sw. & Tr. 80; 6 W. R. 507. And see col. 747.

For Reversal of Decree of Judicial Separation.]—A petition for the reversal of a decree of judicial separation, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 23, on the ground that it was obtained in the petitioner's absence, is good on demurrer, although it alleges personal service on the petitioner of the citation in the judicial separation suit; for the word "absence" means non-appearance in the suit, and not absence without notice or knowledge of the suit. Phillips v. Phillips, 35 L. J., Mat. 70; L. R. 1 P. 169; 14 L. T. 604; 14 W. R. 902.

It is not sufficient in such a petition to allege merely the non-appearance of the petitioner, but the petition must further set out the cause of his non-appearance, and must also state circumstances tending to show that the decree was wrong on the merits. Ib.

Brought by Lunatic.]—The lunacy of a husband or wife is not a bar to a suit by the committee for the dissolution of the lunatic's marriage. Such a suit may be instituted by the committee of the estate of the lunatic. Baker v. Baker, 49 L. J., P. 49; 5 P. D. 142; 42 L. T. 332; 28 W. R. 630. Affirmed, 49 L. J., P. 83; 6 P. D. 12—C. A. See Divorce Rules, 1875, r. 196.

The committee of a lunatic may maintain a suit for judicial separation, on the ground of the adultery of the wife of the lunatic. Woodgate v. Taylor, 2 Sw. & Tr. 512; 30 L. J., Mat. 197; 5 L. T. 119.

Brought against Lunatic.]—A suit for dissolution of marriage cannot be maintained against a lunatic. Bawden v. Bawden, 2 Sw. & Tr. 417; 31 L. J., Mat. 94; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 157; 6 L. T. 27; 10 W. R. 292.

Where such a suit has been instituted, the court refused to appoint a curator ad litem to the respondent in order to enable the petitioner to proceed with the suit. Ib.

By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, a petitioner, upon proof of the adultery of his wife, is absolutely entitled to a decree dissolving the marriage, unless certain acts mentioned therein are proved against him. In a case in which the wife was found by a jury to have become lunatic before the institution of the suit, and had remained in this state:—Held, that such lunacy was no ground for staying the proceedings, not being within the exceptions of the above section. Mordaunt v. Moncrieffe, 43 L. J., Mat. 49; L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 374; 30 L. T. 649; 23 W. R. 12.

A jury having found that the respondent was in such a state of mind as to be unfit to answer the petition or to instruct an attorney for her defence, an order was made that no further proceedings should be taken in the suit until she recovered her mental capacity. After a period of two years, and on evidence that she was not likely to recover, the court, on the application of the petitioner, dismissed the petition, so as to afford him an opportunity to appeal against the order. Mordaunt v. Mordaunt, Cole and Johnstone, 41 L. J., Mat. 42 ; L. R. 2 P. 382 ; 26 L. T. 812 ; 20 W. R. 553.

Suing In Formâ pauperis.]—The rule laid down in Carson v. Pickersgill (14 Q. B. D. 859), that a successful plaintiff suing in formâ pauperis in an action tried before a judge and jury is entitled upon taxation, as against the defendant, to costs out of pocket only, applies to the case of a pauper petitioner in the divorce division as against a co-respondent. Richardson v. Richardson, 64 L. J., P. 119 ; [1895] P. 346 ; 11 R. 663 ; 73 L. T. 135 ; 44 W. R. 102—C. A.

—— Assignment of Counsel.]—A person suing in formâ pauperis, to whom counsel has been assigned, cannot appear by other counsel until there has been a renunciation, or a new assignment, or the party has been dispauperised. Hamer v. Boreham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 26 ; 27 L. J., P. 107. And see Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 25—27, 208—211, and Rules of 1880, rr. 208—211.

Custody of Children.]—If a petitioner claims the permanent custody of the children, a prayer to that effect should be inserted in the petition. Seymour v. Seymour, 1 Sw. & Tr. 332.

b. Citation.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 8, 9.

Address Unknown.]—When the address of a respondent is unknown, he may be described in the citation as late of the last known place of his residence. Forster v. Forster, 32 L. J., Mat. 134.

Name of Respondent Misspelt.]—If the name of a respondent is misspelt in a citation, and there is no appearance, the court will not order that service of such citation shall be deemed sufficient, but a fresh one must be extracted. Cotton v. Cotton and Kinnis, 4 Sw. & Tr. 275 ; 32 L. J., Mat. 133.

Second Petition where First not Served.]—A petition was filed and a citation issued on the part of a wife for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. Neither this petition nor the citation was served. The wife's solicitor, in consequence of fresh instructions, afterwards filed a second petition for a judicial separation, on the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty, and a citation issued thereon. The husband was served, and entered an appearance in the second suit. The court directed the second suit to proceed. Turner v. Turner, 2 Sw. & Tr. 426 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 134 ; 5 L. T. 849 ; 10 W. R. 292.

Amending.]—In an affidavit verifying a petition for dissolution of marriage, a co-respondent's christian name was stated to be John instead of William, and a similar mistake was made in the citation and petition : the court allowed the citation and petition to be amended, and did not require the affidavit to be resworn. Reuss v. Reuss and Applegarth, 32 L. J., Mat. 168.

When a citation has issued for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and desertion, and the petition is afterwards amended by adding a charge of cruelty, if the respondent has appeared to the citation, a fresh citation is not necessary. Rowley v. Rowley, 1 Sw. & Tr. 487 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 15 ; 7 W. R. 653.

In a suit by a wife against her husband, who was abroad, for dissolution of marriage on the ground of bigamy and adultery, and where substituted service was temporarily refused, the citation, requiring an appearance in eight days, was directed to be altered so as to extend the time to six weeks. Robotham v. Robotham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 73 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 33 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 148 ; 6 W. R. 328.

By Advertisement.]—Where a husband had had no tidings of his wife, who left him in 1850, except as living with the adulterer in 1851, and could gain no information of her by inquiring of her relations or at the places at which she was last supposed to have been, the court directed the citation to be left in the registry, and advertisements of that fact to be inserted in newspapers. Peckover v. Peckover, 1 Sw. & Tr. 219.

Where a respondent is cited by advertisement, and leave to amend the petition is afterwards granted, the amended petition need not be advertised. Smith v. Smith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 216 ; 32 L. J., Mat. 145 ; 9 L. T. 118.

The insertion in a newspaper, of advertisements, on the 7th and 14th of a month, is a sufficient compliance with an order to advertise twice within the interval of a week. Elsley v. Elsley, 32 L. J., Mat. 145.

Service of Citation and Petition.]—When every reasonable effort has been made to trace the respondent for the purpose of effecting a personal service of the citation and petition in a suit for dissolution of marriage, but without success, the court will dispense with such personal service. Appleyard v. Appleyard and Smith, L. R. 3 P. 257.

—— Registered Letter.]—In a petition for divorce it appeared that the respondent and co-respondent were residing together abroad, and that by the law of the place where they resided the co-respondent, a foreigner, had a right of action against any person serving him with English process :—Held, that the citation might be served on the co-respondent by inclosing it in a registered letter addressed to him, another copy being sent to the respondent so as to make it more probable that it would come to his knowledge. Trubner v. Trubner, 59 L. J., P. 56 ; 15 P. D. 24 ; 62 L. T. 186 ; 38 W. R. 464 ; 54 J. P. 167. See Cornish v. Cornish, 59 L. J., P. 84 ; 15 P. D. 131 ; 62 L. T. 667.

The court made an order for substituted service of a divorce petition and citation upon a husband by registered letter ; but directed that such service should not be treated as complete service until the court should be satisfied that the letter was actually received by the proposed respondent. Cox v. Cox, 61 L. T. 698.

Substituted Service — No Inquiries made — Affidavit of Petitioner.] — Except under very special circumstances, it has been the invariable practice of the court not to give leave for substituted service of a petition and citation unless the motion for such substituted service is supported by an affidavit of the petitioner. Williams v. Williams, 65 L. J., P. 98; [1896] P. 153.

The court will not substitute service of the citation, without evidence that personal service could not be effected, and, therefore, it refused to substitute service where there was no evidence of the respondent's place of residence at the time of making the affidavit, or of any inquiries made to ascertain it. Moore v. Moore, Ir. 5 R. Eq. 172.

To entitle a petitioner, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the husband's adultery, to proceed without personal service of the citation, it is not sufficient to show that the respondent is abroad, and that the petitioner does not know where he is; some attempts should be made to discover and serve him. Sadlow v. Sadlow, 28 L. J., Mat. 4.

A wife filed a petition for a dissolution of marriage, charging her husband with adultery and bigamy. He was in New York. Substituted service of the citation was refused until an affidavit made before some competent authority, whether a personal service could be effected, was produced. Robotham v. Robotham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 73; 27 L. J., Mat. 33; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 148; 6 W. R. 328.

An application was made on behalf of a wife, who had presented a petition for dissolution of marriage, to dispense with personal service of the citation, and allow substitutional service on the brother of the husband. Affidavits showed that the husband was living abroad under an assumed name, and that the wife could not ascertain where he was, but that her husband's brother was in communication with him, and had undertaken to forward the citation to him. The application was rejected on the ground that personal service might be effected through the husband's brother. Chandler v. Chandler, 27 L. J., Mat. 35.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of a wife's adultery, affidavits, in support of a motion to dispense with personal service of the citation, and copies of the petition stated that the wife had deserted her husband at Liverpool in August, 1857; that there was reason to believe that she afterwards lived in this country with Q., the co-respondent, as his wife; that in October, 1857, two persons passing under the names of Mr. and Mrs. Q., sailed from London for Australia, and afterwards landed in Melbourne; that there was reason to believe that the said Mrs. and Mr. Q. were the respondent and co-respondent; that inquiries had been made in Melbourne of the agent of the ship in which those persons went to Australia, and of other shipping agents there, also of the inspector of police at Sydney, but that no trace of them, or of their movements, could be discovered. The judge dispensed altogether with service on the respondent and co-respondent. Cook v. Cook and Quaile, 28 L. J., Mat. 5.

In a suit by a wife for judicial separation, application having been made for an order that service of the citation and copy of the petition upon the father of the husband should be deemed good service, upon affidavits that the wife did not know where the husband was, and that his father, though it was believed he knew his address, would not disclose it, and that the wife had last heard from her husband in 1854, when he wrote to her; the judge refused to make the order without an affidavit that inquiries had been made for the husband at the place from which the letter was addressed, but subsequently granted it on an affidavit that such inquiries had been made there, and that he had left, and gone to another place, which he had also left, and that the person in whose employ he had been at the latter place did not know whither he had gone. Lacey v. Lacey, 28 L. J., Mat. 24.

Service of a citation upon a co-respondent will be dispensed with if, after a sufficient search, he cannot be found. Parker v. Parker, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 103.

In a suit by a wife against her husband for a judicial separation by reason of his adultery, he had left his home, and it was found impossible to serve him with the petition or citation. An affidavit of that fact having been brought in, service was dispensed with. Deane v. Deane, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 148.

A wife filed a petition for dissolution of marriage, but was unable to effect personal service of the citation, in consequence of her husband having gone abroad, but whither she knew not. A., knowing where the husband was, though refusing to give his address, forwarded to him, by post, an office copy and a plain copy of the petition, and two copies of the citation. The husband returned by post to A. the plain copy of the petition and one of the copies of the citation, on which were indorsed memoranda signed by him, acknowledging the receipt of the office copy of the petition and also a copy of the citation. The husband not having entered an appearance, the wife was allowed to proceed without further service. Chandler v. Chandler, 28 L. J., Mat. 6.

—— Respondent in Prison.]—If a respondent is in prison, the court will not be satisfied with substituted service of the petition and citation to be made on an official of the gaol in which he is confined, unless there is a reasonable probability that the contents of those documents will thereby become known to him. Bland v. Bland, 44 L. J., Mat. 14; L. R. 3 P. 233; 32 L. T. 404; 23 W. R. 419.

—— In Lunatic Asylum.]—The respondent in a suit for nullity of marriage being resident in a lunatic asylum, and having a mother living, it was ordered that the citation should be served upon him personally in the presence of the superintendent of the asylum, and also on his mother. B., f. c. B. v. B., Ir. R. 9 Eq. 551.

Loss of Original Citation—Refusal of Certificate by Registrar—Motion for leave to proceed.]—In a case where, after repeated searches in the principal probate registry at Somerset House, the original citation could not be found, and a clerk to the solicitor, who was, at the time of the alleged service on the respondent, acting for the petitioner, made an affidavit setting out the facts and stating that, on the day following the alleged service, he lodged the original citation in the principal registry, the registrar, after personally cross-examining the said clerk as to his affidavit, refused to certify that the case was in order and ready for trial. On appeal to the judge, upon motion:—Held, that the registrar was right in refusing his certificate. Whether, if satisfied that the original citation had, in fact, been duly served, but that it had afterwards been lost or mislaid, the court would allow a petitioner to proceed to trial in the absence of the original citation without requiring a fresh citation to be extracted and served, quære. Cridland v. Cridland, 60 L. T. 398.

—— After Service.]—A citation was personally served upon the respondent, but was lost or destroyed by the clerk to whom it was given to be returned into the registry. The court allowed a duplicate to be filed with the usual affidavit of service. Chillcott v. Chillcott and Smith, 43 L. J., Mat. 8; 29 L. T. 548; 22 W. R. 166.

The court will not make an order dispensing with the necessity for the return of a citation into the registry, even when it is satisfied that the original citation has been lost by the carelessness or fraud of a defaulting solicitor. Perret v. Perret and Allt, 35 L. T. 910.

Respondent Abroad.]—A wife's remedy for matrimonial wrongs must be usually sought in the place of her husband's domicil. The English divorce court has not jurisdiction against a foreigner, after he has quitted this country, for not rendering conjugal rights to his wife while he was here. The provisions of s. 42 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (for service out of her Majesty's dominions), do not apply to suits for restitution of conjugal rights. Firebrace v. Firebrace, 47 L. J., P. 41; 4 P. D. 63; 39 L. T. 94; 26 W. R. 617. See col. 732.

Served Abroad.]—Two natural-born English subjects were married in England. The husband afterwards went to America, became domiciled there, and there committed bigamy and adultery. The wife petitioned for a dissolution of the marriage. The citation and a copy of the petition were personally served on the husband in America, but he did not appear:—Held, that the service of the citation on him in America was sufficient, and that, notwithstanding his change of domicil, the court had jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage. Deck v. Deck, 2 Sw. & Tr. 90; 29 L. J., Mat. 129; 2 L. T. 542; 8 W. R. 666.

Undertaking of Solicitor to Accept Service.]—An undertaking by a respondent's solicitor to appear is not sufficient. The citation must be served upon the respondent. De Niceville v. De Niceville, 37 L. J., Mat. 43.

The court will not allow a suit to proceed upon the mere undertaking of an attorney to accept service of the citation for the respondent. Personal service on the respondent is necessary, unless the court has dispensed with such service. Milne v. Milne, 4 Sw. & Tr. 183; 34 L. J., Mat. 143.

Filing with Certificate of Service.]—A petitioner, having extracted a citation, forwarded it to Australia, to be served on the respondent and co-respondent. No service was effected, and the agent omitted to return the instrument:—Held, that no further steps could be regularly taken on the petition before the citation, with a proper certificate annexed, was filed in the registry. Cook v. Cook and Quaile, 2 Sw. & Tr. 50; 28 L. J., Mat. 37; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 103.

An affidavit of service of a citation which refers to the certificate of service indorsed on the citation, and states that such indorsement is true, is insufficient. It should state in terms that the citation was served. Rich v. Rich, 32 L. J., Mat. 77.

An affidavit of service of a citation and petition should allege that the party served is a respondent in the suit. Temple v. Temple, 31 L. J., Mat. 34.

A citation, together with a copy, as also a certified copy of the petition, were forwarded to Australia, with directions for service. On the return of the citation it was found that the affidavit of service made no mention of the certified copy of the petition having been left with the respondent:—Held, that nevertheless the petitioner might proceed to prove her petition. Moon v. Moon, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1365.

Indorsement of Service.]—Where a respondent had been personally served with the citation at Shanghai, and the citation had been returned without the certificate of service required by r. 14 indorsed on it, the court allowed the suit to proceed without re-service. Coghill v. Coghill and Laureiro, 35 L. J., Mat. 32; L. R. 1 P. 26.

Returning into Registry.]—A petitioner for dissolution of marriage sent out citations for service on the respondent and co-respondent, who had gone to Australia. Efforts having been made to discover and serve them without success, personal service was dispensed with. The solicitor in Australia employed to effect service having omitted to return the citations to this country, the judge refused to allow the petition to be set down for hearing until they should be returned. Cook v. Cook and Quaile, 2 Sw. & Tr. 50; 28 L. J., Mat. 37; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 103.

c. Appearance.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 19—22, 56—61; Rules, 1875, r. 185.

Within what Time.]—An appearance may be entered at any time within twenty-one days of the service of the citation. Child v. Child, 3 Sw. & Tr. 537; 33 L. J., Mat. 156; 12 W. R. 992.

May be Extended.]—In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, after the time for appearing had elapsed, the court gave the respondent leave to appear and file an answer, on condition that she should, before the trial, allow herself to be confronted with the petitioner's witnesses for the purpose of identification. Hindmarsh v. Hindmarsh, 35 L. J., Mat. 31; L. R. 1 P. 24.

Where a wife had been deterred from putting in an appearance to a petition filed by her husband, charging her with adultery, in consequence of a threat made by her husband's agent, the court (the case having been adjourned) gave her leave to appear and file an answer. Alexander v. Alexander and Amos, 1 Sw. & Tr. 95; 29 L. J., Mat. 56; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 56; 8 W. R. 452.

The case, on coming on for rehearing (the wife having filed an answer), was treated as a new and not as an adjourned case. Ib.

When Too Late.]—An issue raised by a respondent in a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, by reason of his wife's adultery, in which damages were claimed against a co-respondent, having been set down for trial by a jury, the court refused to allow the co-respondent, on the day previously to that fixed for the trial, to enter an appearance, on the ground that the application was then too late. Pounsford v. Pounsford and Bulpin, 30 L. J., Mat. 188.

Non-Appearance.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of a wife's adultery, the respondent did not appear. The co-respondent denied the adultery, and that issue was found by a jury in favour of the husband. The evidence upon which the verdict was founded being unsatisfactory, the judge declined upon it to make a decree against the respondent. Dolby

v. Dolby and Hewitt, 2 Sw. & Tr. 228 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 110 ; 3 L. T. 679 ; 9 W. R. 476.

—— Verdict against Co-respondent—Examination of Respondent by Court—Petition dismissed against her.]—In a petition by the husband for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of adultery, the respondent filed no answer and did not appear. The jury found a verdict against the co-respondent, and assessed the damages against him at 50*l*. The court, not being satisfied with the evidence against the wife, directed her to be summoned, and having heard her evidence, on which she was cross-examined, to the effect that she had been forced, came to the conclusion that the charge of adultery had not been established against her, and dismissed the petition against her, but gave judgment against the co-respondent for the damages with costs. Long v. Long, 60 L. J., P. 27 ; 15 P. D. 218.

And see Seymour v. Seymour, 1 Sw. & Tr. 332.

Admitting Jurisdiction.]—A wife filed a petition for dissolution of marriage, which was served on the husband, who appeared absolutely, and obtained further time to answer. He filed an answer, excepting to the jurisdiction of the court, by reason of his want of an English domicil, and the incapacity of the wife to institute a suit in her own name by reason of her infancy ; on motion to take this answer off the file :—Held, that it was too late for the respondent to raise such objection. Zycklinski v. Zycklinski, 2 Sw. & Tr. 420 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 37 ; 5 L. T. 690.

A respondent in a suit by her husband for dissolution of marriage having entered an absolute appearance, cannot afterwards plead to the jurisdiction of the court, nor can she raise such objection by act on petition. Forster v. Forster and Berridge, 3 Sw. & Tr. 144 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 185 ; 9 L. T. 147.

If a respondent intends to plead to the jurisdiction of the court, she should appear under protest. Semble, however, that at the hearing she may, notwithstanding, object to the jurisdiction. Ib.

A respondent who appears absolutely, thereby admits the jurisdiction of the court, and cannot afterwards amend his appearance in order to plead to the jurisdiction. Garstin v. Garstin, 4 Sw. & Tr. 73 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 45 ; 13 W. R. 508.

A party who appears absolutely and not under protest, cannot plead to the jurisdiction, and delay filing an answer on the merits until the question of jurisdiction raised by the plea is determined ; but in his answer on the merits he may also plead the matters on which he relies as showing that there is no jurisdiction. Wilson v. Wilson and Howell, 41 L. J., Mat. 1 ; L. R. 2 P. 341.

A respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage, who has entered an absolute appearance, cannot file an answer raising the question of jurisdiction solely, but may in an answer pleading to the merits also allege facts raising the question of jurisdiction. Wilson v. Wilson and Howell, 40 L. J., Mat. 77 ; 24 L. T. 671 ; 19 W. R. 879.

A respondent who has entered an absolute appearance will not be permitted to withdraw it in order to enter an appearance under protest to enable him to plead to the jurisdiction. Moore v. Moore, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 371.

—— Under Protest.]—Where, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, the alleged adulterer, who had been made a co-respondent, appeared under protest and pleaded to the jurisdiction, the court, on an application of the petitioner, dismissed the co-respondent from the suit on payment of his costs. Gaynor v. Gaynor and Degliantoni, 31 L. J., Mat. 116.

Semble, if a foreigner appears to a citation otherwise than under protest, he submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Bond v. Bond, 2 Sw. & Tr. 93 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 143 ; 2 L. T. 543 ; 8 W. R. 630.

If a respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage intends to plead to a dilatory plea, he should appear in person, and under protest. Forster v. Forster and Berridge, 31 L. J., Mat. 185 ; 9 L. T. 147.

d. Answer.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 28—31, 32, 38, and Rules, 1875, r. 186.

Denial of Jurisdiction of Court only.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage the respondent filed an answer, merely denying the jurisdiction of the court, and such answer was ordered to be taken off the files, unless within a limited time the respondent amended it by adding thereto an answer on the merits. She thereupon entered an appeal from such order. Notwithstanding such appeal, the court directed in what manner the petition, as unopposed, should be heard. Wilson v. Wilson and Howell, 40 L. J., Mat. 58 ; L. R. 2 P. 292 ; 25 L. T. 206 ; 19 W. R. 1072.

When out of Time.]—If a respondent does not enter an appearance within the time (generally eight days) named in the citation, the petitioner can move for directions as to the mode of trial without waiting for the expiration of the time (twenty-one days) allowed for filing an answer. Wood v. Wood and Hutchins, 36 L. J., Mat. 48 ; L. R. 1 P. 266 ; 15 L. T. 418.

Where a respondent does not answer the petition within twenty-one days, the petitioner may proceed with the evidence : a petitioner cannot at once proceed to give evidence, but before doing so must serve the respondent with a summons to show cause. Ward v. Ward, 27 L. J., Mat. 34 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 366.

Not Answering—Effect of.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage where the co-respondent has appeared, but has put in no answer, he cannot, at the hearing of the petition, be allowed to take any part in the proceedings. He cannot dispute the allegations of the petition either by cross-examining the witnesses in support of it, or by addressing the court ; nor can he be heard even on the question of costs. Norris v. Norris and Gyles, 1 Sw. & Tr. 174 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 72 ; 6 W. R. 640.

Where a respondent is in default by failing to file an answer in due course, he cannot object to a paragraph of the petition on the ground of irrelevancy. Burrell v. Burrell, 32 L. J., Mat. 136. S. P., Hepworth v. Hepworth, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 831. As to co-respondent not answering, see Lyne v. Lyne and Blackney, col. 784.

—— Condonation—Noticed by Court, though not Pleaded.]—Condonation proved at the hearing will be noticed by the court, although it has not been pleaded. Curtis v. Curtis, 4 S. & T. 234.

Leave for further Time.]—An application for leave to file an answer, after a cause has been set down for trial, must be supported by an affidavit showing reasonable grounds for granting it. Jago v. Jago and Graham, 32 L. J., Mat. 49 ; 11 W. R. 551.

By obtaining further time to plead, a respondent waives any objection to the sufficiency of the charge of adultery in a petition; he is, however, entitled to particulars of the charge. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 L. J., Mat. 215; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 831; 3 L. T. 180.

A petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of adultery of the wife, having been partly heard as unopposed, stood over for further evidence. The wife then applied for leave to file an answer to the petition on an affidavit which stated that she denied the charges made against her, and had otherwise a good defence. An order to show cause having been served on the husband, on his non-appearance, permission was granted. Alexander v. Alexander and Amos, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 56; 8 W. R. 452.

An answer filed without the leave of the judge, after the time allowed by the rules for filing it has elapsed, may be treated by the petitioner as a nullity. Avila v. Avila, 30 L. J., Mat. 104.

New Averments must be verified by Affidavit.]—Where a petition, on the face of it, sets up a sufficient case, it should be met by a responsive plea, and cannot be dismissed by the court on an affidavit of facts, which might be a sufficient plea in law. Evans v. Evans, 1 Sw. & Tr. 78; 27 L. J., Mat. 31; 6 W. R. 356.

All matter in answer beyond a simple denial must be verified by affidavit, which, however, need not be in absolute terms. Tourle v. Tourle, 1 Sw. & Tr. 165; 27 L. J., Mat. 52; 6 W. R. 544.

A petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, charged various acts of adultery. The respondent in her answer pleaded, first, a denial of the adultery; secondly, desertion; thirdly, condonation; and, fourthly, connivance. Her affidavit, filed in pursuance of the above rule, did not verify the third and fourth pleas, it being supposed that by doing so the adultery would be admitted:—Held, that these pleas should be verified, as the respondent, by doing so, would not admit the adultery, each plea being to be construed by itself. Ib.

Form of.]—An answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage must not necessarily be in conformity with a common law plea, either by way of traverse or of confession and avoidance. It is intended to be a substantial statement of the respondent's case, but should be within a reasonable degree of brevity. Gaston v. Gaston, 13 L. T. 412.

Therefore, the court directed an answer to be reformed, which detailed with needless particularity the history of the married life, and pleaded matters which might be given in evidence under a simple traverse. Ib.

In answer to a petition for judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the respondent may set out facts showing that there was reasonable cause for the desertion, but such facts should be stated succinctly. Hill v. Hill, 33 L. J., Mat. 187; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 371.

What can be Pleaded.]—In a petition for divorce on the ground of adultery, it is not competent to plead the ante-nuptial incontinence of the respondent, even though it and the adultery are charged to have been committed with the same person. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 32 L. J., Mat. 12; 11 W. R. 85.

In answer to a petition for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the respondent pleaded a traverse and condonation, and further alleged that the petitioner had consented to a deed of separation, and that the suit was not instituted bonâ fide, but for the purpose of obtaining an increased allowance. The court refused to order these allegations to be struck out. Williams v. Williams, 35 L. J., Mat. 85; L. R. 1 P. 178; 14 L. T. 770; 14 W. R. 1022.

But an allegation that by reason of the deed of separation the petitioner was not entitled to institute the suit, was ordered to be struck out. Ib.

An impediment to marital intercourse supervening after marriage in consequence of the disease of the wife, cannot be pleaded in bar by the husband to a suit by her for judicial separation on the ground of his adultery. M. v. M., 31 L. J., Mat. 168.

Cruelty is no answer to a suit for judicial separation on the ground of adultery. Tuthill v. Tuthill, 31 L. J., Mat. 214.

The adultery of the wife, if it has been condoned by her husband, is no bar to a suit by her for judicial separation, on the ground of adultery subsequently committed by him. Seller v. Seller, 1 Sw. & Tr. 482; 28 L. J., Mat. 99; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 686; 8 W. R. 5.

Where, in answer to a wife's petition on the ground of cruelty, the husband alleges such conduct on the part of the wife as justified him in the use of force, the answer should state generally the nature of the wife's conduct, but need not go into dates or other particulars. Shaw v. Shaw, 2 Sw. & Tr. 515; 31 L. J., Mat. 35; 6 L. T. 477.

Cruelty may consist in the aggregate of the acts alleged in an answer, and each paragraph need not allege an independent act of cruelty sufficient in itself to warrant the relief sought. Green v. Green, 33 L. J., Mat. 64.

An allegation by a husband in answer to his wife's suit on the ground of cruelty and adultery that she had wilfully withdrawn herself from his bed, and refused him conjugal rights, is no answer. Rowe v. Rowe, 4 Sw. & Tr. 162; 34 L. J., Mat. 111; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 568; 12 L. T. 639; 13 W. R. 1048.

—— Prior Decrees.]—A wife, in answer to the husband's petition for dissolution on the ground of her adultery, pleaded that in a prior suit she had been judicially separated from him:—Held, that the prior decree was no bar to the suit. Yeatman v. Yeatman and Rummell, 21 L. T. 733. See S. C., 21 L. T. 401.

—— Undue Familiarities alleged against Petitioner—Motion to Strike Out—Refusal.]—A husband petitioned for a divorce upon the ground of his wife's adultery. The wife, in her answer, denied the adultery, pleaded condonation, and alleged as follows:—"That in and since the year 1887 the petitioner had paid marked attention to an unmarried lady with whom the petitioner and the respondent were acquainted, and when the respondent has remonstrated with him he has told her he would not and could not give up his intimacy with the said lady, and he has invited the said lady to his house, and corresponded with her notwithstanding the respondent's repeated objections and remonstrances, and has made her presents, and that he has absented himself from the respondent's society in order to enjoy the society of the said lady, and has frequently told the respondent that he has been fascinated by the said lady, and that he would have run away with her if she had consented: that in and since the year 1890 the petitioner had paid marked attention to another lady, and has refused to give up his intimacy with her, notwithstanding the respondent's objections and remonstrances, and that he has been guilty of acts of undue familiarity with the said lady"; and that the petitioner, by such wilful neglect and misconduct, had conduced to the adultery (if any) of the respondent. The following particulars were subsequently filed in respect of the statements: "The name of the unmarried lady was Miss A., and the flirtation extended from the year 1887 to the filing of the petition. The name of the unmarried lady was Miss B., and the flirtation extended from the 12th Nov., 1892, to the filing of the petition; and the act of familiarity spoken of, the petitioner putting his arm round her waist, and she sitting on his knee at . . . in the month of December, 1892, and his arm round her waist on the 2nd January":—Held, that, if the facts alleged were proved, it was not impossible that the judge might come to the conclusion that the husband had by his neglect conduced to the wife's adultery, and therefore the court would not order them to be struck out. Cox v. Cox, 70 L. T. 200—C. A.

Counter-charges.]—In a suit for dissolution, brought by a wife, the husband made counter-charges of adultery against her. On the allegation that the charges so made were identically the same as those made in a previous suit brought by the husband, in which the jury had decided that the wife had not been guilty of adultery, the court was asked to strike out the paragraphs containing such charges:—Held, that in order that all the facts should appear on the pleadings, the proper course was for the wife to file a replication, so that the husband might reply to it. Robinson v. Robinson, 46 L. J., P. 47; 2 P. D. 75; 36 L. T. 414; 25 W. R. 376.

In a wife's answer to a petition of the husband, charging her with adultery, it is not proper to set forth his ante-nuptial connection with her. Inasmuch as the court, in its discretion, may refuse to dissolve a marriage if the petitioner, during its continuance, has been guilty of certain misconduct therein mentioned, any circumstances which have occurred since the marriage, and which can influence such discretion, may be stated in the answer. Allen v. Allen and D'Arcy, 28 L. J., Mat. 81; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 128.

Where the husband alleged, in one paragraph, that the wife had been incontinent before marriage, and in another that she had been incontinent before and had committed adultery with the same person after marriage, the court ordered the whole of the former paragraph, and so much of the latter as related to incontinence before marriage, to be struck out as irrelevant. Mawford v. Mawford, 14 W. R. 516.

A petitioner charged her husband with adultery and cruelty and prayed for a dissolution of their marriage. The respondent denied both the adultery and cruelty, and further stated that the petitioner had habitually treated him with insolence and neglect, set his orders and wishes at defiance, and for two years wilfully absented herself from his residence. On an application that the answer be amended by striking out the latter part:—Held, that it was properly introduced, as explanatory of the violent conduct attributed to the respondent. Hughes v. Hughes, 35 L. J., Mat. 94; L. R. 1 P. 219.

To a petition by a wife for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, the respondent pleaded adultery. The court refused to order the plea to be struck out, but left the petitioner to demur. Hall v. Hall, 32 L. J., Mat. 117; 11 W. R. 810.

Counter-claim for Judicial Separation in Action on Separate Deed.]—Where a deed of separation had been executed between a husband and wife who had continued to live apart, and the wife more than five years afterwards, by counter-claim to an action by the husband to enforce the deed, claimed as against him a judicial separation on the ground of alleged cruelty:—Held, that her right to judicial separation was barred by lapse of time and by the execution of the deed of separation. Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445.

Amendment of.]—See col. 881.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 38, form 87.

When and how Obtained.]—A general allegation, that during a specified time the respondent "committed divers acts of cruelty," is bad, and is ground for an order that the petition be amended by specifying such acts, but not for an order that particulars of the acts of cruelty be given. Goldney v. Goldney, 32 L. J., Mat. 13.

It is the practice to ask for an order for particulars by summons in chambers, and not by motion in court. Higgs v. Higgs and Hopkins, 32 L. J., P. 64; 11 W. R. 154.

Where such an order is obtained upon motion in court, the extra costs incurred by proceeding by motion instead of by summons will not be allowed. Ib.

A petition for dissolution of marriage alleged a specific act of adultery on the 25th of August, and other acts of adultery between that day and the 31st of October. The court declined to order particulars of the dates of these latter acts of adultery. Boddy v. Boddy, 28 L. J., Mat. 16.

The court ordered particulars to be given of a charge of adultery on divers occasions between the 1st of January, 1862, and the 30th of October, 1862, at divers places in Bristol, and the neighbourhood unknown to the petitioner, on an affidavit that the petitioner was unable to give particulars. Higgs v. Higgs and Hopkins, 32 L. J., Mat. 64; 11 W. R. 154.

Allegations of actual violence, however general as to time and place, can only be met by a summons for particulars. Leete v. Leete, 2 Sw. & Tr. 568; 31 L. J., Mat. 121; 6 L. T. 507.

A petition alleged that the co-respondent lived in the same house with the petitioner and his wife for two years, and that the adultery was committed on divers occasions during that period. The court refused to order the petition to be amended by the insertion of further particulars of the acts of adultery, being of opinion that it gave sufficient information of the charge to enable the respondent to meet it. Smith v. Smith and Liddard, 29 L. J., Mat. 62; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1318.

Where a co-respondent charged a petitioner with having committed adultery with three females, named, without time or place, in one and the same paragraph, the court refused to let the answer be amended by alleging the adultery with each of the three females in three distinct paragraphs, with time and place, on the ground that the inconvenience arising from the mode of pleading might be corrected by applying for particulars. Hunt v. Hunt and Duke, 2 Sw. & Tr. 574 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 163 ; 6 L. T. 727.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the petitioner, in pursuance of an order made on the application of the respondent, delivered particulars in which he alleged generally "adultery with A. at Malta between 1859 and 1862, and during a journey in Switzerland, Savoy, Sardinia and Italy." Upon application for further and better particulars, it appeared that the information of the petitioner was solely derived from a diary and certain correspondence of the respondent. The court ordered that unless particulars, setting out the dates and occasions of the alleged adultery, should be given to the respondent ten days before the trial, the petitioner should be precluded at the trial from giving any save documentary evidence of the adultery charged. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 368 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 53 ; 10 L. T. 139.

A petition for dissolution of marriage alleged that the co-respondent had lived in the same house with the petitioner and his wife for two years and that the adultery was committed "on divers occasions during that period." The court refused further particulars. Smith v. Smith and Liddard, 29 L. J., P. 62.

Not Corresponding to Charges.]—When a respondent filed as particulars of cruelty alleged in her answer allegations of cruelty which did not correspond with the charge in the answer, but were fresh charges, the court ordered them to be struck out. Sanderson v. Sanderson, Stephens and Hiscock, 41 L. J., Mat. 24 ; 25 L. T. 857 ; 20 W. R. 261.

In a wife's petition for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, particulars were ordered to be given, but as they did not correspond with the original charges, the court ordered them to be struck out. Subsequently they were allowed to be added to the petition as new charges. Grafton v. Grafton, 28 L. T. 144.

Facts Omitted in Particulars.]—When particulars of a general charge of adultery contained in a petition have been ordered and delivered, the petitioner, if he intends at the hearing to prove acts of adultery not included in the particulars, should give notice of them to the other side a reasonable time before the hearing. If he omits to do so, the hearing will be adjourned. Bancroft v. Bancroft and Rumney, 34 L. J., Mat. 31 ; 13 W. R. 506.

Where Insufficient.]—On a summons for particulars of a charge of adultery an order was made to give at least ten days before the trial particulars specifying dates and occasions, or the petitioner to be precluded from giving other than documentary evidence in support of certain charges of adultery. A statement purporting to be particulars was given, but with scarcely any specification of dates and occasions. At the trial evidence other than documentary was objected to, on the ground that the order for particulars had in substance not been complied with, but the judge ordinary held that the evidence was admissible, and that if the particulars were not sufficient, the proper course would have been to apply for further and better particulars. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 4 Sw. & Tr. 63.

Of Plea that Marriage was Illegal.]—A husband, in answer to his wife's petition for divorce, pleaded that she was not his lawful wife, as he had contracted a previous marriage. On motion for particulars of the previous marriage the court ordered them to be set out in the pleas, and not by way of particulars, but dispensed with their averment on oath, on the ground that it might form the basis of a prosecution for bigamy. Silver v. Silver, 21 L. T. 734.

f. Amendment of Pleadings.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 34—38.

When Allowed.]—The question for the court is wholly different where a pleading is demurred to, and where it is moved to order the amendment or reformation of a pleading ; in the latter case, the court will consider what form is convenient in the circumstances, and whether the party applying is likely to be injured or obscured in his view of the case by the pleading as it stands, without prejudging the question of the sufficiency of the answer if established in evidence. Griffith v. Griffith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 355 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 81 ; 10 L. T. 308.

A petition alleged that the respondent and co-respondent had been living and cohabiting together, but contained no specific charge of adultery. Neither the respondent nor the co-respondent appeared :—Held, that the allegation was insufficient, and leave to amend was refused at the hearing. Forman v. Forman and Davis, 32 L. J., Mat. 80 ; 11 W. R. 401.

The court will not order a pleading to be amended unless it is so framed as to embarrass the opposite side. Green v. Green, 33 L. J., Mat. 83.

Petition—By adding Charge.]—A wife, who had instituted a suit for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, subsequently discovered that her husband had also been guilty of adultery. The court allowed her to amend her petition by adding a charge of adultery and praying for dissolution of marriage on the ground of cruelty and adultery, without extracting a fresh citation ; but directed that the petition, when amended, should, be re-served. Cartlidge v. Cartlidge, 31 L. J., Mat. 135 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 493.

A petition for dissolution of marriage contained an inferential, but not a distinct, charge of adultery at a specified time and place. Personal service on the respondent had been dispensed with. Neither the respondent nor co-respondent appeared at the hearing. Adultery at the alleged time and place having been proved, the court allowed the petition to be amended by adding a distinct charge of adultery without requiring the petition to be re-served. Ambler v. Ambler and Hoghton, 32 L. J., Mat. 6 ; 7 L. T. 339 ; 11 W. R. 111.

Where a petitioner, after an adjournment of the case part heard, in order to procure further evidence, asks leave to amend his petition by adding a new charge, it is an objection to granting the application that the charge had come to his knowledge before the petition in its original form was drawn. Bannister v. Bannister and Davis, 29 L. J., Mat. 53.

After hearing a petition by a wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, no decree having been pronounced the court allowed the petition to be amended by the addition of a charge of bigamy, which came to her knowledge in the interval between the cause being set down for hearing and the hearing. Walker v. Walker, 30 L. J., Mat. 214.

On the hearing of her petition for dissolution of marriage the wife proved the adultery of the husband, but failed to establish the charge of desertion. The court allowed her subsequently to amend her petition by adding a charge of cruelty, but intimated that strict proof would be required to support it. Parkinson v. Parkinson, 39 L. J., Mat. 21; L. R. 2 P. 27.

A petitioner for divorce is by precedent entitled to the leave of the court to amend his petition, by adding charges of fresh acts of adultery committed after the date of the petition by the respondent with the co-respondent. The court, however, expressed a doubt as to such a course standing investigation on appeal, and intimated that the better course would be for the petitioner to file a supplemental petition, and to consolidate the two petitions before the hearing. Borham v. Borham and Brown, 40 L. J., Mat. 6; L. R. 2 P. 193; 23 L. T. 600; 19 W. R. 215.

Cruelty is a matrimonial offence which must essentially be within the wife's knowledge when she files her petition; and the court, therefore, will not allow her to add new charges to her petition, except under very special circumstances. Austin v. Austin, 41 L. J., Mat. 8; 25 L. T. 856; 20 W. R. 128.

When in a suit for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty the petition had been filed for nearly a year, issue had been joined, and the cause set down for trial; the court refused to allow the petitioner to amend her petition by adding further charges of cruelty. Ib.

A wife brought a suit for dissolution on the ground of adultery and cruelty. She proved the adultery, but failed to prove the cruelty. The hearing was adjourned, and she subsequently discovered that the communication of syphilis amounted to legal cruelty. The court allowed her to add a charge of cruelty to that effect to the petition. Parkinson v. Parkinson, 21 L. T. 597.

A petition by a wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and desertion, may be amended by adding a charge of cruelty if the court is satisfied that the fresh charge is brought forward bonâ fide, and not for the purpose of vexation. Rowley v. Rowley, 1 Sw. & Tr. 487; 29 L. J., Mat. 15; 7 W. R. 653.

—— By Striking out Charge.]—The court allowed a petition for judicial separation to be amended by striking out a charge of adultery, in order that the petitioner's evidence might be admitted in support of the charge of cruelty, the respondent having appeared and pleaded, but directed that any costs incurred relating to the charge of adultery should not be taxed against the husband. Hudson v. Hudson, 33 L. J., Mat. 5; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1302; 12 W. R. 216.

—— Dates of Charges.]—A petition for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and cruelty, charged cruelty "in and during the months of April and May." The respondent filed an answer, denying the charges. At the trial the respondent did not appear, and the petitioner failed to prove cruelty at the time alleged, but established cruelty in June and July:—Held, that the petition might be amended by substituting the date of the cruelty proved. Bunyard v. Bunyard, 32 L. J., Mat. 176; 11 W. R. 990.

Where a petition alleged adultery in the months of September and October, and the answer denied the adultery but pleaded condonation up to the 29th September, the court refused an amendment but suggested that the petitioner might demur. Windham v. Windham and Giuglini. 32 L. J., Mat. 89; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 82.

—— No appearance by Respondent—Petition re-served.]—A petition contained a single allegation of adultery on a specific date. It was duly served on the respondent, who entered no appearance. At the hearing, application was made to amend the petition by inserting "September" instead of "November." The court granted the application, but refused to allow the case to proceed until the petition, as amended, had been re-served upon the respondent, and ordered the hearing to stand over for that to be done. Charter v. Charter, 58 L. J., P. 44; 60 L. T. 872.

—— Of Charge of Adultery—With whom.]—A petition charged adultery with G., and claimed damages. The respondent denied the charge. The co-respondent appeared, but did not file an answer. At the trial, before any witnesses were examined, the claim for damages was withdrawn. The evidence of two witnesses tended to prove that the respondent, on the 24th of September, 1861, committed adultery with some person unknown; and another witness proved that at the same place and time of day, but on the 17th of July, 1861, a man named G. had passed some hours in the respondent's company. Upon an application of the husband, the petition was amended by substituting for the charge of adultery with G. a charge of adultery with some person unknown, The jury found a verdict for the respondent. Subsequently a rule for a new trial was made absolute upon affidavits that the latter witness had made a mistake in her evidence, and that the circumstances sworn to by her took place on the 24th of September, 1861. Upon the application of the husband, the court ordered the petition and record to be amended by reinserting the charge of adultery with G. upon payment of costs, but refused to allow a reinsertion of the claim for damages. Jago v. Jago and Graham, 32 L. J., Mat. 48; 11 W. R. 192.

—— After Rule Nisi.]—A wife petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage, by reason of the husband's adultery and cruelty, and proved both charges. The decree nisi was suspended at her request, and subsequently she asked to be allowed to amend the petition, by substituting a prayer for judicial separation. The respondent opposed the alteration, and alleged that the petitioner herself had been guilty of adultery. The court granted liberty to the respondent to file affidavits in support of the charge; and no affidavits being filed, allowed the petition to be amended as prayed. Mycock v. Mycock, 39 L. J., Mat. 56; L. R. 2 P. 98; 23 L. T. 238; 18 W. R. 1144.

—— By adding Claim for Damages.]—When the object appeared to be bonâ fide to obtain damages, the court allowed a paragraph praying for damages to be added to a petition before an answer had been filed. Symonds v. Symonds and Hannan, 23 L. T. 568 ; 19 W. R. 166.

Leave was granted to amend a petition for dissolution of marriage by adding a claim for damages. Bartlett v. Bartlett and Balmanno, 34 L. J., Mat. 64.

At the date of filing his petition the only evidence which the petitioner had was the confession of the respondent. He subsequently obtained independent evidence of her alleged adultery with the co-respondent, and he then applied to amend his petition by adding a claim for damages. The court allowed the amendment. Henslow v. Henslow and Beardsley, 40 L. J., Mat. 31 ; 24 L. T. 846 ; 19 W. R. 786.

—— From Claim for Judicial Separation to Dissolution.]—Where both parties are before the court, a wife's suit for judicial separation may be turned into one for a dissolution of marriage without issuing a fresh citation, but there must be a re-service of the petition on the respondent. Cartlidge v. Cartlidge, 4 Sw. & Tr. 249.

The court granted an application by a wife that a petition for a judicial separation filed by her might be dismissed, and that she might substitute for it a petition for dissolution of marriage, upon the terms of her paying the costs. Lewis v. Lewis, 29 L. J., Mat. 123.

—— Allegation of Desertion.]—A petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of the husband's adultery and desertion was directed to be amended by a distinct averment of the fact of desertion ; some statements of circumstances in such a petition may be necessary, but evidence should not be pleaded. Pyne v. Pyne, 1 Sw. & Tr. 80 ; 6 W. R. 507.

—— From Claim for Dissolution to Judicial Separation.]—The adultery of the respondent having been proved, and also cruelty and misconduct on the part of the petitioner which conduced to such adultery, the court refused to allow a prayer for judicial separation to be substituted for that for dissolution of marriage, in order that the evidence of the misconduct of the petitioner should be expunged. Lempriere v. Lempriere and Roebel, 37 L. J., Mat. 78 ; L. R. 1 P. 569 ; 19 L. T. 50 ; 16 W. R. 1192.

It is competent for the court to decree a judicial separation, although the petition prays only for a decree for a dissolution of marriage, if the facts proved will entitle a petitioner to the former, but not to the latter decree. Smith v. Smith, 1 Sw. & Tr. 359 ; 28 L. J., Mat. 27 ; 7 W. R. 382.

A petition of a wife prayed simply a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and desertion. At the hearing, adultery having been proved, but not desertion, the court decreed a judicial separation. Ib.

Where, on a petition for dissolution of marriage, by a wife, the only facts which in the opinion of the court the petitioner is at liberty to prove would be ground for a decree of judicial separation only, and the petitioner refuses to amend the petition by praying for judicial separation, the petition must be dismissed. Rowley v. Rowley, 4 Sw. & Tr. 137 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 562 ; 12 L. T. 505.

The court will, at the prayer of a petitioner, at the hearing make a decree of judicial separation instead of a decree nisi for dissolution, although the petition prays for dissolution, and facts are proved on which the dissolution might have been granted. Dent v. Dent, 4 Sw. & Tr. 105 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 118 ; 13 L. T. 252.

Of Answer.]—The court inclines to order an amendment of a plea where that will enable a point of law to be raised by demurrer. Holland v. Holland, 16 W. R. 406.

The court will allow an allegation praying for relief to be added to the prayer of an answer containing charges of adultery and cruelty in a suit for dissolution of marriage, for the purpose of allowing the suit to be continued. Firminger v. Firminger and Ollard, 17 W. R. 335.

A co-respondent whose answer merely traversed the allegation of adultery, was not allowed to cross-examine the witnesses called to establish that allegation, for the purpose of eliciting that the petitioner had been guilty of adultery, or of such misconduct as would induce the court to exercise its discretion by withholding a decree ; but upon a statement being made that the co-respondent would probably be able to establish a case of such misconduct on the part of the petitioner if he had the opportunity, the court allowed him to amend his answer by the insertion of various counter-charges against the petitioner, and reserved the question of the costs of the day until the merits of the case had been ascertained. Plumer v. Plumer and Bygrave, 4 Sw. & Tr. 257.

When a husband brought a suit for dissolution on the ground of adultery with the co-respondent, and the wife answered charging the husband with adultery and cruelty, and prayed for a judicial separation, and the jury found for the wife on all the issues :—The court allowed the prayer of the answer to be amended, and pronounced a decree nisi for dissolution on the application of the wife. Corpataux v. Corpataux and Staub, 23 W. R. 456.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery with the co-respondent, the latter pleaded only a denial. The court refused to allow the co-respondent, after his answer was filed, to add a charge of cruelty against the petitioner. Jayne v. Jayne and Protheroe, 21 L. T. 401 ; 18 W. R. 53.

Application to rescind Amendment.]—A wife petitioned for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty and adultery ; the respondent traversed the charges, and afterwards obtained leave to amend his answer by adding a counter-charge of adultery. Before leave to amend was granted, and after an order for payment of the wife's taxed costs, the respondent became bankrupt on his own petition. An application to rescind the order for the amendment of the answer, on the ground that the respondent had become bankrupt solely for the purpose of avoiding payment of his wife's costs, and that the order was made by the court in ignorance of the bankruptcy, was rejected. Greatorex v. Greatorex, 34 L. J., Mat. 9.

Notice of Application for.]—Notice of an application for leave to amend a petition for dissolution of marriage should be given to the other party, or the petition may be withdrawn and served de novo. Wright v. Wright, 1 Sw. & Tr. 80 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 32 ; 6 W. R. 507.

An application was made to the court to amend an answer by adding to it a fresh charge of adultery. Notice of the intended application was served upon the opposite party the evening previously. The facts in issue were appointed to be decided by a common jury, at the sittings then in progress:—Held, that the rules as to notice were not applicable. Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 36 L. J., Mat. 40.

Although the opposite party has only four days allowed to amend his answer to such amended petition or answer, the court will, if it is advisable, direct that the cause shall not be heard until the expiration of ten days from the day on which the amended answer was filed. Ib.

Re-Service upon Amendment.]—When the respondent and co-respondent did not appear, the court refused to allow the petition to be amended at the hearing, by adding an averment of adultery with some person unknown, without re-service. Wallace v. Wallace, Guiter and Macnamara, 32 L. J., Mat. 47; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 134; 11 W. R. 112.

Where a petition for dissolution of marriage has been served in which a mistake is made in the christian name of the person with whom the respondent is alleged to have committed adultery, the court will allow it to be amended, but it must be re-served. Love v. Love, 32 L. J., Mat. 134.

When leave is given to amend a petition, on the ground that it does not allege adultery to have been committed in direct or distinct terms, but upon information and belief only, and the respondent has not appeared, it must be re-served as amended. Spilsbury v. Spilsbury, 3 Sw. & Tr. 210; 32 L. J., Mat. 126; 9 L. T. 23.

After the hearing of an undefended petition which had been adjourned for further evidence, an allegation was added to the petition by the leave of the court, and it was re-served upon the respondent. When it again came on for hearing, the court treated it as a new petition, and required evidence of all the facts necessary to found a decree, as well as of the additional allegation. Walker v. Walker, 31 L. J., Mat. 117.

Where both parties are before the court, a wife's suit for judicial separation may be turned into one for a dissolution of marriage without issuing a fresh citation, but there must be a re-service of the petition on the respondent. Cartlidge v. Cartlidge, 4 Sw. & Tr. 249.

—— When Excused.]—In a suit by a husband for dissolution of his marriage, he had obtained leave to proceed without a co-respondent and without personal service upon the respondent, who had been cited by advertisement. The husband was afterwards allowed to amend his petition by inserting fresh charges of adultery, without citing the respondent again. Smith v. Smith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 216; 32 L. J., Mat. 145; 9 L. T. 118; 11 W. R. 989.

Re-Entry for Trial.]—Where a petition has been set down for hearing, and is afterwards amended and re-served, it must be re-entered, and cannot be restored to the place which the original suit occupied in the list of causes. Milner v. Milner, 30 L. J., Mat. 103.

g. Demurrer.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 67.

If a petition for judicial separation sets forth facts which, if proved, would disentitle the petitioner to redress claimed, it is proper to bring the question before the court by way of demurrer. Seller v. Seller, 28 L. J., Mat. 99; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 686.

Questions whether a decree in a former suit is admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit, and if so, whether such evidence would be conclusive, cannot be decided on demurrer, but must be determined at the hearing when the evidence is tendered. Conradi v. Conradi, 36 L. J., Mat. 68; L. R. 1 P. 391; 16 L. T. 392; 15 W. R. 881.

h. Abatement of Suits.

By Death of Petitioner.]—By the death of a petitioner a suit for dissolution of marriage abates. If, therefore, he dies after a decree nisi has been pronounced, the court cannot make it absolute. Grant v. Grant, Bowles and Patteson, 2 Sw. & Tr. 522; 31 L. J., Mat. 174; 6 L. T. 660.

—— 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7.]—Under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7, the grandfather and grandmother may be called upon to maintain their pauper grandchild not able to work, and, if a father, who, in virtue of his possible liability under this statute to maintain his grandchildren, is entitled to maintain a suit for the purpose of obtaining a decree annulling his child's marriage, dies pending such a suit, neither the mother's nor the father's executors can revive the abated suit; the mother, because she had no interest in the suit when it was commenced; and the executor, because the statutory liability is merely personal. Bevan v. M'Mahon and Bevan, 2 Sw. & Tr. 58; 28 L. J., Mat. 127; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 686; 2 L. T. 255; 8 W. R. 453.

By Death of Respondent.]—A petition for dissolution of marriage abates on the death of the respondent, but the court will not, on the application of the petitioner, order that the petition and affidavit in support be removed from the files of the court. Brocas v. Brocas, 2 Sw. & Tr. 383; 30 L. J., Mat. 172; 5 L. T. 137.

On Lunacy of Respondent.]—A husband petitioned for a dissolution of his marriage, by reason of the adultery of his wife. At the time when he presented the petition she was in confinement as a pauper lunatic in a county lunatic asylum:—Held, that the court had no authority to appoint a curator ad litem to represent the interests of the wife in defence of the suit. Bawden v. Bawden, 2 Sw. & Tr. 417; 31 L. J., Mat. 94; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 157; 6 L. T. 27; 10 W. R. 292.

By Death of Co-Respondent.]—Semble, that when a co-respondent dies during the pendency of a suit for dissolution of marriage, a motion should be made for leave to strike his name out of the petition. Sutton v. Sutton and Peacock, 32 L. J., Mat. 156.

i. Cross Suits.

Where the same issues are raised in cross suits, the court will in general stay one, without reference to their position in the cause list. Osborne v. Osborne and Martelli, 3 Sw. & Tr. 327; 33 L. J., Mat. 38; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 9 L. T. 456.

Where there are cross suits, and the wife in her suit (which was for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty) was, by the verdict of the jury, acquitted of the charges of adultery alleged in the husband's answer, the court refused to allow this verdict to be pleaded in answer to the husband's petition for dissolution, in which the same acts of adultery were charged. Bancroft v. Bancroft and Rumney, 3 Sw. & Tr. 597; 34 L. J., Mat. 31.

Judicial separation was decreed on a verdict establishing the husband's cruelty, though an issue in a cross suit as to his wife's adultery was pending. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 4 Sw. & Tr. 84; 34 L. J., Mat. 70; 12 L. T. 236; 13 W. R. 548.

Both Parties claiming Relief.]—When a husband petitions for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery, and she in her answer prays for a judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the court will not at his instance (the wife opposing) terminate the suit by dismissing the petition. Schira v. Schira and Sampajo, L. R. 1 P. 466.

j. Withdrawal and Dismissal of Petition.

See Divorce Rules, 1875, r. 193.

Dismissal—Petitioner not Appearing.]—If at the hearing of a petition by a wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and desertion, no one appears on behalf of the petitioner, the respondent has a right to have the petition dismissed. Desmarest v. Desmarest, 31 L. J., Mat. 34.

Where a notice was given by a petitioner's solicitors to the solicitors of the respondent and co-respondent of the abandonment of the petition for dissolution of marriage, the court, on a motion on the part of the respondent and co-respondent, supported by an affidavit of service of notice of motion on the petitioner's solicitors, dismissed the petition and condemned the petitioner in the costs. Symons v. Symons and Pike, 2 Sw. & Tr. 435; 31 L. J., Mat. 84; 6 L. T. 163; 10 W. R. 449.

Where a wife, the petitioner, did not appear on the day of hearing, the court before dismissing the petition required that a rule to show cause should be first served upon her, and intimated that in all such cases that practice should be followed. Curtis v. Curtis, 38 L. J., Mat. 9; 19 L. T. 610.

When a petitioner fails to appear at the hearing, the court will either grant a rule to dismiss the petition, or, if information is laid before it tending to show that the petitioner does not intend to go on with his suit, will dismiss it at once. Round v. Round, 20 L. T. 87.

—— Misconduct of Petitioner.]—In a husband's suit for dissolution of marriage, the jury found that the wife had committed adultery with the co-respondent; that the husband had been guilty of adultery and cruelty, and had infected his wife with a venereal disease; and that his misconduct had been condoned, and had not conduced to her adultery; and the jury refused to award damages against the co-respondent. The court, in the exercise of its discretion under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, dismissed the petition, and directed that the wife should have the general costs of the suit. Wildey v. Wildey and Ryder, 26 W. R. 239.

Where in a suit for a dissolution of marriage by a husband the adultery was proved, but the petition was dismissed on the ground of his gross misconduct, the court refused to make any order as to the costs of the petitioner or co-respondent. Hick v. Hick and Kitchen, 34 L. J., Mat. 11.

Agreement for Compromise.]—A husband and wife are competent to make a binding agreement for compromise of a divorce suit. Hart v. Hart, 50 L. J., Ch. 697; 18 Ch. D. 670; 45 L. T. 13; 30 W. R. 8.

An agreement for good consideration, that the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage will withdraw from the suit, is binding, if it has not been obtained by fraud or duress. Sterbini v. Sterbini, 39 L. J., Mat. 82; 22 L. T. 552.

Where the parties, on the eve of the trial of a suit by the wife for judicial separation, by reason of cruelty, agreed that the cause should not be moved to settle terms of deed of separation and that arbitration should be resorted to, the court refused to allow her to proceed with the original suit, she having wilfully interposed obstacles to the progress of the arbitration. Hooper v. Hooper, 1 Sw. & Tr. 219; 29 L. J., Mat. 59; 8 W. R. 319.

Held, on appeal, that the petitioner was not at liberty to repudiate the agreement, except on the ground of fraud, or of such an error in the terms of the agreement that she ought not to be bound by it. Hooper v. Hooper, 3 Sw. & Tr. 251; 30 L. J., P. 49.

In 1860 a wife filed a petition for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and cruelty. When the cause came on for trial, it was withdrawn from the jury by agreement of the parties, the wife undertaking not to institute other proceedings in the divorce court. In 1862 the wife instituted a fresh suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, the acts of misconduct alleged in the petition being, with the exception of some acts of adultery and cruelty committed prior to the first petition and not included within it, and of some acts of adultery of later date, the same as those charged in the first petition. The respondent pleaded the agreement in bar. Upon an application by the petitioner for directions as to the mode of trial, the court refused to make any order, upon the ground that the institution of the second suit was a gross breach of good faith, and a violation of the agreement by which the petitioner had surrendered irrevocably any legal right to relief in respect of misconduct prior to the first petition:—Held, that the suit could not be sustained, inasmuch as it was founded in part upon acts which had occurred before the date of the first petition, and which were released by the agreement. Rowley v. Rowley, 35 L. J., Mat. 110; L. R. 1 H. L. 63, and see col. 926.

—— Agreement not made Order of Court.]—Where by agreement between the parties a petition for dissolution of marriage is dismissed, the court will not allow such agreement to be made an order of court for the purpose of enforcing its terms. Ryder v. Ryder, 30 L. J., Mat. 164.

—— Queen's Proctor Intervening.]—When the queen's proctor objected, the court refused to dismiss the petition on consent, and held that he was entitled to prove the adultery charged by him against the petitioner. Clapham v. Clapham and Guest, 17 L. T. 554.

Where a husband's petition was dismissed for want of prosecution, the court condemned him in the co-respondent's costs, and declined to suspend its decree until the result of an intervention by the queen's proctor against a decree nisi being made absolute, obtained by the wife in a cross suit, was known. Whitmore v. Whitmore and Brettell, 13 L. T. 610.

—— After Decree Nisi.]—When a decree nisi for the dissolution of a marriage has been pronounced, the court has power to dismiss the petition, as for want of prosecution, unless the petitioner moves to have the decree made absolute within a reasonable time. Pollack v. Pollack, Deane and Macnamara, 16 W. R. 1130.

After a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage at the suit of a wife had been pronounced, she renewed marital intercourse with her husband, and informed her attorney that she did not wish any further proceedings to be taken in the suit. Upon an application by the husband to dismiss the petition, the court declined to accede to it, but said that, if both parties consented, it would order all proceedings in the suit to be stayed. Lewis v. Lewis, 2 Sw. & Tr. 494 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 199 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 831 ; 4 L. T. 772.

—— After Verdict.]—A motion to dismiss a petition after a verdict for a respondent should be supported by an affidavit that no application for a new trial has been lodged in the registry. Hill v. Hill and Wood, 2 Sw. & Tr. 515 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 198 ; 5 L. T. 120.

When a verdict has been found for the respondent, the court will not dismiss the petition until the month allowed for moving for a new trial has elapsed. Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 2 Sw. & Tr. 513 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 198 ; 5 L. T. 120.

Where issues in a suit for dissolution of marriage have been tried by a jury, the court will not dismiss the petition on the application of the petitioner until the time allowed by the rules for moving for a new trial has elapsed. Aliter, if all the parties concur in the application. Seddon v. Seddon and Doyle, 31 L. J., Mat. 31.

At the trial of issues joined in a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery, no one appearing on behalf of the husband, the jury returned a verdict that the respondent had not committed adultery with the co-respondent. No application having been afterwards made for a new trial, the court, upon motion of the co-respondent, dismissed the petition and condemned the husband in costs. Potts v. Potts and Bateman, 32 L. J., Mat. 32 ; 11 W. R. 192.

—— Upon Payment of Costs.]—The court will not dismiss a petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage, except upon payment of the wife's taxed costs and the costs of the motion. Pearce v. Pearce, 30 L. J., Mat. 182.

A wife, pending a suit by her for a judicial separation, returned to cohabitation, no order for the taxation of her costs having been made. The husband, therefore, applied to have the petition dismissed :—Held, that it could be dismissed only upon payment of the wife's costs. Cooper v. Cooper, 3 Sw. & Tr. 392 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 71 ; 10 L. T. 275.

Withdrawing.]—When a respondent has appeared, the court will not allow a petitioner to withdraw the petition, unless the respondent consents, or has had notice of the motion. Lutwyche v. Lutwyche, 28 L. J., Mat. 56 ; 5 Jur. 76.

The court will allow a wife to withdraw her petition for judicial separation, and file one for dissolution of marriage, if her proctor has not received from the husband her costs in the former suit. Ashley v. Ashley, 2 Sw. & Tr. 388 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 175 ; 5 L. T. 139.

Withdrawal of former Petition—Effect of.]—In 1873 a husband presented a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent. The petition was afterwards dismissed on the application of the petitioner and on payment by him of the costs of the respondent and co-respondent. In 1879 the husband presented another petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with the same co-respondent, and charged various acts of adultery which had been alleged in the first petition as well as other acts of adultery subsequent to the dismissal of that petition :—Held, that the dismissal of the first petition did not estop the petitioner from relying upon the same acts of adultery in support of the second petition. Hall v. Hall, 48 L. J., P. 57 ; 40 L. T. 525 ; 27 W. R. 664.

k. Delay in Prosecuting Suit.

What is Unreasonable.]—The unreasonable delay in presenting or prosecuting a petition for dissolution of marriage, is delay from which it would appear that the petitioner is insensible to the injury of which he complains. Pellew v. Pellew and Berkeley, 1 Sw. & Tr. 553 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 44 ; 2 L. T. 89. And see Beauclerk v. Beauclerk, 60 L. J., P. 20 ; [1891] P. 189 ; 64 L. T. 35—C. A., cols. 760—1.

Effect of.]—Delay in instituting a suit for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, is not a bar to the suit ; but it is a material fact for the consideration of the court, as tending to show that there was no serious apprehension of further violence. Smallwood v. Smallwood, 2 Sw. & Tr. 397 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 3 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 63 ; 5 L. T. 324 ; 10 W. R. 65.

Or taken in connection with other circumstances may show that the suit is not instituted for the protection of the wife, but for some collateral purpose. If the court is satisfied that such is the case, the petition will be dismissed. Matthews v. Matthews, 1 Sw. & Tr. 499 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 118 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 659 ; 2 L. T. 472 ; 8 W. R. 591. Affirmed on appeal, 3 Sw. & Tr. 161.

Want of Means.]—A petitioner is not guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting his petition, notwithstanding a long period may have elapsed since the adultery, if he is prevented by poverty from taking earlier steps to obtain a divorce. Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe and Anderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 467 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 171 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 714 ; 7 W. R. 726.

A wife left her husband in 1844, on account of his cruelty and adultery. She had not the means of proceeding till shortly before the suit was instituted, in 1863. The husband had been leading a wandering life without employment :—Held, that the wife had not been guilty of unreasonable delay. Harrison v. Harrison, 3 Sw. & Tr. 362 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 44 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 371 ; 10 L. T. 138 ; 12 W. R. 808.

A husband in 1878 obtained a judicial separation, and 50*l.* damages against the co-respondent, but he took no steps to recover the damages. The wife continued to cohabit with the co-respondent, and in 1882 the husband petitioned for a dissolution of his marriage. The reason which he gave for the delay and for not enforcing the claim for damages was that he had no money, being only in receipt of weekly wages, and that he hoped his wife would come back and live with him:—Held, that the delay was not unreasonable, and that the petitioner was entitled to a decree. Mason v. Mason, 52 L. J., P. 27; 8 P. D. 21; 48 L. T. 290; 31 W. R. 361—C. A. S. P., Wilson v. Wilson, L. R. 2 P. 435.

A husband discovered his wife in adultery in September, 1859, and separated from her, but did not present a petition for the dissolution of his marriage until July, 1873. He was a coal hauler, and admitted that, at the time when the petition was presented, he had stock-in-trade of the value of about 600*l.* and nine horses, besides some cottages which he had purchased through a building society. The court refused to accept want of means as a sufficient explanation of the time which he had allowed to elapse before taking proceedings, and dismissed the petition on the ground of unreasonable delay. Short v. Short and Bolwell, L. R. 3 P. 193.

—— Co-Respondent Living Abroad.]—A petition for dissolution had been filed so far back as 1867, and the co-respondent had not answered. He had been living abroad, and was entirely without means. In order that he might be heard as to costs, the court in 1870 allowed him to come in and file an answer, on the condition that he should simply traverse the petition. Rowland v. Rowland and Miles, 21 L. T. 733.

By a Mistake.]—B., a domiciled Englishman, intermarried with C., a Scotchwoman, at Gretna Green, and at St. George's, Hanover Square, in August, 1837. B. and C. cohabited together in Wales, England, and Scotland, but principally in Scotland, till 1841, soon after which date C. eloped with P., whereupon B. obtained a sentence of divorce in the court of sessions, in Scotland, on the 3rd of July, 1841. On the 26th July, 1841, C. intermarried with P. at Glasgow, and lived with him till his death, in 1855. B. at first supposed the sentence of the Scotch court to be of universal operation, and that supposition was confirmed by opinion of counsel in 1846. In 1854 he obtained the opinion of two counsel, to the effect that the Scotch sentence would have no validity in England; in consequence of which he presented a petition for leave to bring into the House of Lords a bill, declaring his marriage with C. absolutely void since the 3rd of July, 1841, which petition was rejected. In 1858 B. petitioned the court for dissolution of marriage by reason of C.'s adultery in April, 1841, and at other times:—Held, that there was no such lapse of time as to constitute unreasonable delay. Tollemache v. Tollemache, 1 Sw. & Tr. 557; 30 L. J., Mat. 113; 2 L. T. 87.

When Relief will be Withheld.]—Cohabitation lasted from October, 1872, to March, 1873. The adultery and cruelty were not denied, and, though there had been various attempts to bring the parties together again, and the wife was willing to forgive her husband, the court was satisfied that the wife had done nothing in the interval to forfeit her right to a divorce, and granted a decree nisi. Pitt v. Pitt, 33 L. T. 136.

Adultery was committed in 1866, and a suit was instituted in 1871. The petitioner was a material witness on the issue of adultery. The inadmissibility of his evidence until after August, 1869, when the Evidence Further Amendment Act was passed, was accepted as sufficient explanation of the delay. Want of means is also sufficient excuse for delay. Wilson v. Wilson, L. R. 2 P. 435.

A wife separated from her husband in 1850, in consequence of his incestuous adultery with her sister; and in 1868 she presented a petition for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of that adultery. Her explanation of the delay which had occurred in presenting the petition was, that her mother was very anxious to avoid a public exposure of the scandal, and she yielded to her mother's urgent entreaties, and forebore to take proceedings until her mother's death:—Held, to have been guilty of unreasonable delay, but not of such a character as to deprive her of her right to a decree. Newman v. Newman, 39 L. J., Mat. 36; L. R. 2 P. 57; 22 L. T. 552; 18 W. R. 584.

Undue delay in bringing the suit is no plea, strictly speaking, to a petition for judicial separation, but taken in connection with other circumstances, such as pecuniary motives for instituting the suit, may be a sufficient reason for dismissing the petition. Cooke v. Cooke, 3 Sw. & Tr. 126; 32 L. J., Mat. 154; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 754; 8 L. T. 644; 11 W. R. 957.

But lapse of time between knowledge of the conduct complained of and the commencement of the suit requires explanation, and may, along with the circumstances of the case, induce the court to withhold the relief sought. In such cases the court will require to be satisfied of the sincerity of the complaint of the petitioner. Boulting v. Boulting, 3 Sw. & Tr. 329; 33 L. J., Mat. 33; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 182; 9 L. T. 779; 12 W. R. 389.

If a petitioner, with a full knowledge of the facts of the case, does not present his petition for two years, he must give some sufficient reason for the delay, otherwise his petition may be dismissed under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 75, s. 31. Nicholson v. Nicholson, L. R. 3 P. 53; 29 L. T. 108.

1. Attachment and Sequestration.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 110—112, 179, 187—203.

Attachment.]—The court will not grant an attachment against a husband for the removal of his wife's property after the dissolution of the marriage, when the property is taken for the purpose of identifying the wife, she having assumed a false name. Whitmore v. Whitmore, L. R. 1 P. 96; 14 W. R. 352.

The court refused to grant an attachment against a husband for non-payment of certain costs incurred on behalf of the wife in a suit instituted by her for judicial separation, on the ground of his alleged cruelty, where on his uncontradicted answer it appeared that the husband had been compelled to separate from her several months before the institution of the suit in consequence of her drunkenness and violence, and had not the present means of complying with the order for payment. Holland v. Holland, 4 Sw. & Tr. 78; 34 L. J., Mat. 65; 11 L. T. 750; 13 W. R. 505.

An attachment will not be granted for non-payment of money pursuant to order, unless a copy of the order is annexed to or recited in the affidavit of service. Lidmore v. Lidmore, 32 L. J., Mat. 134.

—— Indorsement on Order to be enforced.]—By virtue of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 52, all decrees and orders of the court of divorce are to be enforced in the same manner as orders, &c., in chancery. Therefore, in spite of Ord. LXVIII. r. 1, which exempts divorce proceedings from the operations of the rules and orders of the supreme court, before a motion can be successfully made for disobedience to an order made in a divorce proceeding, it must be shown that the order it is sought to enforce was indorsed as required by Ord. XLI. r. 5. Pace v. Pace, 61 L. J., P. 114 ; 67 L. T. 383.

—— Misnomer of Parties.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, after a decree nisi, with costs against the co-respondent, an attachment for non-payment of those costs was granted. The citation and subsequent proceedings in which the co-respondent was erroneously styled William Abbott, were served upon William Braine Abbot, who took no objection to the irregularity until the attachment was granted. He then applied to have it set aside :—Held, that as he had stood by during the progress of the suit and allowed judgment to go against him in a wrong name, the attachment must stand. Churchill v. Churchill and Abbott, 37 L. J., Mat. 41 ; L. R. 1 P. 485 ; 17 L. T. 619.

—— Sufficiency of Service.]—It is competent to a party to object, on a motion for attachment for non-compliance with an order of the court, to the sufficiency of the service of the order on him. Parr v. Parr and White, 4 Sw. & Tr. 229.

The proper mode of effecting service of an order, e.g. for payment of alimony, is to leave a copy and at the same time to produce the original office copy. Ib.

—— Personal Demand for Payment.]—When an order for payment of a sum of money within a specified time is made, and personally served, a personal demand for payment is unnecessary to found a motion for attachment for disobedience to the order. Nicholls v. Nicholls, 2 Sw. & Tr. 637 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 115 ; 7 L. T. 221.

—— Suit Dismissed—Power to Enforce.]—The court has power to enforce an attachment after a suit has been dismissed. Bremner v. Bremner and Brett, 3 Sw. & Tr. 378 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 202 ; 10 L. T. 99 ; 12 W. R. 444.

Sequestration.]—The court has power to issue a sequestration, although no attachment has previously been issued. Dent v. Dent, 36 L. J., Mat. 61 ; L. R. 1 P. 366 ; 15 L. T. 635 ; 15 W. R. 591.

The pension of a retired officer in the Indian navy, received solely in respect of past services, is liable to a sequestration for non-payment of costs. Ib.

Where the only known property of the husband, who had failed to pay the permanent alimony allotted to his wife on a decree of judicial separation, consisted of an annuity or a rent-charge paid to him by trustees, the court granted a general writ, leaving it to the sequestrator to enforce it as he best could against the trustees. Clinton v. Clinton, L. R. 1 P. 215 ; 14 L. T. 257 ; 14 W. R. 545.

—— Application to enforce — Persons not Parties to Suit.]—A co-respondent was ordered to pay 50*l.* damages into court. He disobeyed the order, and a writ of sequestration was issued against him. The sequestrators applied to the court on motion in the suit that the trustees of his marriage settlement should pay into court certain sums in their hands, to which it was alleged the debtor was entitled. The trustees denied that the debtor had any interest in the fund in question, and further maintained that if the court made the order as prayed it would be ultra vires :—Held, that the court had no power to enforce sequestration against third persons who disputed their liability to the debtor, on motion in a suit to which they were not parties, unless they appeared and made submission to the jurisdiction of the court. Craig v. Craig, 65 L. J., P. 99 ; [1896] P. 171 ; 75 L. T. 280 ; 45 W. R. 64.

Alimony, to enforce payment of.]—See cols. 858, 841.

m. Intervention of Queen's Proctor.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 68, 69, and Rules of 1877, r. 202.

23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7.]—This section confers on the queen's proctor the power to intervene in a case of collusion, but in that alone ; and except in such a case, if he institutes proceedings in a suit for divorce, he appears only as one of the public giving information to the court, and under such circumstances the court has no power to award him costs. Lautour v. Queen's Proctor, 10 H. L. Cas. 685 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 89 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 325 ; 10 L. T. 611 ; 12 W. R. 611.

The queen's proctor intervening in a suit under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, and alleging collusion, is at liberty in the same plea to allege the suppression of material facts or any other matters in opposition to the decree. Dering v. Dering and Blakeley, 37 L. J., Mat. 52 ; L. R. 1 P. 531 ; 19 L. T. 48.

The same issues being raised by the queen's proctor and by other interveners, the case was conducted by counsel for the queen's proctor, and the court refused to allow counsel for the other interveners to address the jury, although they were allowed to examine and cross-examine the witnesses. Ib.

Leave Necessary.]—The queen's proctor cannot, without the leave of the court, intervene in his official capacity to show cause against a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage being made absolute. Gray v. Gray, 30 L. J., Mat. 96.

It is only when he has evidence of collusion that it is necessary that he should apply to the court for leave to intervene under the latter part of s. 7 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. Hudson v. Hudson and Poole, 45 L. J., P. 39 ; 1 P. D. 65 ; 33 L. T. 788 ; 24 W. R. 282.

The queen's proctor may move the court by counsel, without affidavit, for leave to intervene in a divorce suit. Anon., 2 Sw. & Tr. 249 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 88 ; 4 L. T. 451.

—— Application by, for Postponement of Trial.]—But if he moves to have the hearing of the petition postponed, that he may have time to plead, that part of the motion must be founded on affidavit, and notice given to the other parties. Anon., 2 Sw. & Tr. 249 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 88 ; 3 L. T. 823.

—— Except as one of the Public.]—He may, however, as one of the public, show cause against a decree nisi being made absolute. Masters v. Masters, 34 L. J., Mat. 7.

If the queen's proctor intervenes, by leave of the court, pleads to the petition, and the petitioner replies, whereby issues are raised on the record, the court will not generally allow such issues to be decided by affidavits; but if the queen's proctor, under the first branch of s. 7, as one of the public, enters an appearance and shows cause against a decree nisi being made absolute, he may proceed to file affidavits, and on those and counter-affidavits, if filed, the question raised may be argued under the direction of the judge. Boulton v. Boulton and Page, 2 Sw. & Tr. 551; 31 L. J., Mat. 76; 6 L. T. 693; 10 W. R. 863.

If information is given to the queen's proctor of material facts necessary to the due decision of a case before the court during the progress of the cause, he cannot at that time take any steps except to watch the case and see whether such material facts are brought to the notice of the court. If not, he will be entitled, as one of the public, but acting under the direction of the attorney-general, to show cause against the decree being made absolute, in which case he will follow the ordinary practice prescribed by the rules. Hudson v. Hudson and Poole, 45 L. J., P. 39; 1 P. D. 65; 33 L. T. 788; 24 W. R. 282.

Material Facts not brought before the Court.]—Where specific charges of adultery have been investigated and decided in the affirmative, the queen's proctor is entitled to intervene for the purpose of showing that the finding ought to have been the other way, in consequence of material facts not having been brought before the court; and if he comes to the conclusion, from material facts brought to his notice, that a decree nisi has been obtained contrary to justice, it is his duty to bring such facts to the knowledge of the court. Crawford v. Crawford, 55 L. J., P. 42; 55 L. T. 304; 34 W. R. 677—C. A. And see Howarth v. Howarth, col. 901 and col. 772.

—— Restoration of Co-respondent to Suit.]—At the trial of a husband's petition for a dissolution of marriage the petitioner deposed to a confession made to him by his wife of the commission of adultery with the co-respondent. The judge granted a decree nisi, but held that there was no evidence against the co-respondent, who was dismissed from the suit, with costs. The co-respondent was not called to disprove the charges of adultery. The queen's proctor afterwards entered an appearance and filed a plea, alleging that the decree was pronounced contrary to the justice of the case by reason of material facts not being brought before the court; that certain witnesses who were known by both parties to be in court, and whose evidence was material, were not called; and that, apart from the alleged confession by the respondent, there was no evidence of adultery:—The court refused to strike out the queen's proctor's plea, and also refused leave to the respondent and the co-respondent to appear on the rehearing of the suit. Crawford v. Crawford, supra.

—— Pleading.]—It is sufficient for the queen's proctor to allege in his plea that the decree was pronounced contrary to the justice of the case by reason of material facts not being brought to the knowledge of the court. Crawford v. Crawford, 11 P. D. 150; 35 W. R. 31.

—— Particulars.]—When the suppression of material facts is averred by the queen's proctor without specifying such facts, the petitioner is entitled to particulars. Barnes v. Barnes and Grimwade, 37 L. J., Mat. 4; L. R. 1 P. 505; 17 L. T. 268; 16 W. R. 281.

Adultery of Petitioner—Costs.]—B. petitioned for dissolution by reason of his wife's adultery, and on proof of this allegation, neither respondent nor co-respondent appearing, obtained a decree nisi. On motion to make the decree absolute, an affidavit of the respondent, charging B. with bigamy, was before the court, who directed it to be laid before the queen's proctor. The queen's proctor intervened, and pleaded collusion, and the bigamy and subsequent adultery of B. B. replied, denying the collusion, but admitting the bigamy and adultery. The court, on motion on behalf of the queen's proctor, reversed the decree nisi, dismissed the petition, and condemned B. in the costs of the queen's proctor's intervention. Boulton v. Boulton and Page, 2 Sw. & Tr. 638; 7 L. T. 222.

After a decree nisi had been granted on the ground of a wife's adultery, the queen's proctor intervened, and produced evidence showing that the petitioner had, subsequently to his wife's elopement and adultery, himself been adulterously cohabiting with a woman:—Held, that the decree ought to be rescinded, and the petition dismissed; but that as no case of collusion had been established, the court had no power to condemn the petitioner in the costs of the queen's proctor's intervention. Lautour v. Queen's Proctor, 10 H. L. Cas. 685; 33 L. J., Mat. 89; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 325; 10 L. T. 198; 12 W. R. 611.

At the petition of a wife the court made a decree nisi to dissolve her marriage by reason of her husband's adultery and cruelty, and therein condemned the respondent in the costs incurred and to be incurred on behalf of the petitioner, and directed the same to be taxed. Subsequently the queen's proctor intervened, and proved that the petitioner had herself been guilty of adultery. The court ordered so much of the decree nisi to be reversed as dissolved the marriage of the parties, and dismissed the petition; but, varying an order previously made, reserved to the petitioner her right to enforce against the respondent the order as to costs contained in the decree nisi. Whitmore v. Whitmore, 35 L. J., Mat. 52.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage heard before the court and a common jury, a verdict was found against the respondent and co-respondent for adultery, and damages were assessed. A decree nisi was thereupon made, with costs against the co-respondent. The queen's proctor intervened; and ultimately it was proved that the petitioner had also been guilty of adultery. The court reversed the whole decree nisi, including the order for costs, and dismissed the petition. Ravenscroft v. Ravenscroft, 41 L. J., Mat. 28; L. R. 2 P. 376; 26 L. T. 265; 20 W. R. 448.

Right of Person Charged to Intervene.]—Where the queen's proctor has intervened and alleged adultery on the part of the petitioner in a divorce suit, the court has no power to allow the person with whom such adultery is alleged to have been committed to intervene in the pro-

Where the queen's proctor intervenes in a suit and alleges adultery with a person not a party to the proceedings after the decree nisi, the court has no power to allow the person charged to intervene in the suit. Grieve v. Grieve (1 R. 533) followed. Carew v. Carew, 63 L. J., P. 74; [1894] P. 31; 6 R. 662.

Rescission of Decree—Co-respondent's Costs.]—A husband obtained a decree nisi for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, and the court condemned the co-respondent in the costs of the suit. The queen's proctor afterwards intervened, and filed pleas alleging collusion and the petitioner's adultery between the commencement of the suit and the date of the decree nisi. The petitioner filed no answer to the queen's proctor's pleas, and the decree nisi was rescinded. The court rescinded that part of the decree which condemned the co-respondent in costs. Hechler v. Hechler, 58 L. J., P. 27. See cols. 968, 769.

Prevents Withdrawal or Alteration of Petition.]—A wife asked the court to dissolve her marriage, by reason of the adultery and cruelty of her husband. The husband did not appear, but the queen's proctor intervened, and alleged collusion between the wife and the husband, and that the former had been guilty of adultery subsequently to filing her petition. At the hearing evidence of cruelty only was given on behalf of the wife, and a judicial separation applied for; but, on cross-examination, adultery of the wife was clearly proved:—Held, that as the queen's proctor had duly intervened, he could not be stopped from proving his case by the substitution, at the hearing, of a prayer for judicial separation in the place of that for a dissolution of marriage, and that he might bring to the court's notice any facts material to the due decision of the case. Forth (Viscountess) v. Forth (Viscount), 7 Jur. (N.S.) 762. S. C., nom. Drummond v. Drummond, 2 Sw. & Tr. 269; 30 L. J., Mat. 177; 4 L. T. 416.

A wife having obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of her marriage by reason that her husband had, since its celebration, been guilty of bigamy with adultery, the queen's proctor intervened, and pleaded matters to show that the suit had been conducted in collusion between the parties:—Held, that the wife could not be permitted to withdraw her petition. Gray v. Gray, 2 Sw. & Tr. 263; 30 L. J., Mat. 119; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 472; 4 L. T. 218. Affirmed on appeal, 2 Sw. & Tr. 266; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 783; 4 L. T. 478.

Collusion in former Suit—Motion to Dismiss Petition.]—On motion by the queen's proctor to dismiss a husband's petition for divorce on the ground that in former proceedings he had been found guilty of adultery and collusion, the court held that, although the fact of the petitioner's adultery could not be again disputed, yet it would be open to the petitioner to show such circumstances as would get rid of its effect, and that "collusion" referred to in s. 30 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, means collusion in the suit pending. Butler v. Butler, 62 L. J., P. 105; [1893] P. 185; 1 R. 521; 69 L. T. 54.

—— What amounts to Collusion.]—Where a husband covenanted with his wife (who was then living in adultery) that in consideration of certain things to be done by her, he would at once sue for a divorce and prosecute his suit to completion, and that he would claim no damages against the co-respondent, and the wife and co-respondent agreed not to defend, the husband agreeing to the terms on condition that 100*l.* was secured to cover his costs; the court held that there was collusion, as the initiation of the suit was procured, and its result as to costs and damages was settled by agreement of which abstention from defence was a term. There may be collusion, although no facts have been falsely dealt with or withheld. Collusion bears the same meaning in s. 30 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and in both parts of s. 7 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1860. Churchward v. Churchward, 64 L. J., P. 18; [1895] P. 7; 11 R. 626; 71 L. T. 782; 43 W. R. 380.

Power to direct Papers to be sent to the Queen's Proctor.]—Under s. 19 of the Judicature Act, 1873, the court of appeal has power to direct the papers in a divorce matter to be sent to the queen's proctor, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 5, for the purpose of instructing counsel to argue the case on appeal. Le Sueur v. Le Sueur, 2 P. D. 80; 36 L. T. 276; 25 W. R. 102—C. A.

But when counsel in accordance with such direction appeared for the queen's proctor, and the appeal was withdrawn by the appellant:—Held, that the court of appeal had no power to allow the queen's proctor his costs. Ib.

The petitioner, who was a carpenter, went to New Zealand in 1875, with the object of improving his position. He asked his wife to accompany him, but she refused, and she and the two children of the marriage remained in England. On his arrival in New Zealand the petitioner wrote to his wife asking her to go out to him and to take the children with her, and he offered to nominate her for a free passage. She again refused to go. The petitioner remained some years in New Zealand, earning during that period from 1*l.* to 3*l.* per week. He never sent any money whatever to his wife, nor contributed in any way to her support or that of the two children. In 1884, hearing that his wife was misconducting herself, he returned to England and subsequently instituted these proceedings. The court, upon these facts, granted a decree nisi, but directed that the papers relating to the case should be sent to the queen's proctor, for the latter to make further inquiries and to take further proceedings if he should see fit. Stevens v. Stevens, 61 L. T. 844.

Sum Due to, for Costs, good Petitioning Creditor's Debt.]—A sum due to the queen's proctor for costs incurred by him in a divorce suit in which he intervened is due to the queen's proctor for the time being, and constitutes a good petitioning creditor's debt, although the queen's proctor who presents the petition is not the same individual who held that office at the time when the costs were incurred. Rayner, Ex parte, Rayner, In re, 37 L. T. 38; 25 W. R. 851.

Amendment of Charges—Costs.]—After a decree nisi for a dissolution of marriage, the queen's proctor intervened and charged collusion, suppression of material facts, and adultery. He subsequently applied for leave to amend certain erroneous dates in his charges. The court granted the application, but ordered him to pay the costs. Tomkins v. Tomkins, 20 W. R. 497.

Particulars of Pleas.]—When the queen's proctor has intervened after a decree nisi, and filed pleas alleging collusion, and that material facts were not brought to the knowledge of the court, he will be ordered to give particulars of the matters so pleaded. Gladstone v. Gladstone, 23 W. R. 519.

Such particulars must state whether the facts relied upon are new or not, though such facts need not be given in detail. Ib.

If any of the facts disclosed by the particulars have been already determined at the trial, the court will order them to be struck out. Ib.

When the queen's proctor has been ordered to give particulars of a plea of collusion, it will be sufficient to state that the collusion consists in the withholding of certain material facts from the court, and that such facts are set out in the particulars given at the same time as to other pleas. Gladstone v. Gladstone, 44 L. J., Mat. 46; L. R. 3 P. 260; 32 L. T. 404; 23 W. R. 637.

Where the queen's proctor delivered particulars as to pleas of adultery which disclosed fresh charges as well as others which had been already disposed of at the trial, the court allowed the pleas to remain. Ib.

The queen's proctor having intervened during the progress of a suit, and pleaded "that the petitioner and respondent had been acting in collusion for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, contrary to the justice of the case," the court ordered him to specify the nature of the collusion charged, but refused to order him to state the facts which he proposed to prove. Jessop v. Jessop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 301; 30 L. J., Mat. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 609; 4 L. T. 308; 9 W. R. 640.

Where the queen's proctor intervenes and charges the suppression of material facts, without specifying such facts, the petitioner is entitled to particulars. Barnes v. Barnes and Grimwade, 37 L. J., Mat. 4; L. R. 1 P. 505; 17 L. T. 268; 16 W. R. 28.

—— Additional—Striking Out.]—Upon intervention by the queen's proctor, alleging that the petitioner (husband) had committed adultery with A. and B. particulars were ordered and delivered, relating to the said adultery. Subsequently, the queen's proctor delivered additional particulars in which, for the first time, the petitioner was said to have committed adultery with C.:—Held, that the additional particulars were bad, and must be struck out. Pierce v. Pierce, 66 L. T. 861.

Issue to be Tried by Jury.]—When the queen's proctor intervenes after a decree nisi, and the affidavits filed by him and by the petitioner are contradictory, the court will order the questions of fact in dispute to be tried by a jury. Harding v. Harding, 34 L. J., Mat. 9.

A wife petitioned for dissolution; the husband made no answer; the hearing of the petition had been adjourned for further proof, pending which the queen's proctor intervened, and alleged the wife's adultery, who took issue thereon, and the court allowed the proof of the original petition to be completed, and the issue as between the petitioner and queen's proctor to be set down for trial by a jury, retaining the same position in the cause list as the original petition. Gethin v. Gethin, 2 Sw. & Tr. 406; 5 L. T. 363; 10 W. R. 122.

—— Rights of, at Trial.]—A petitioner having obtained a decree nisi to dissolve his marriage, the queen's proctor and other parties intervened. The questions for the jury, raised by the latter, were collusion and connivance; by the former, collusion, connivance and misconduct which conduced to the adultery of the respondent:—Held, that although the counsel for the queen's proctor and the other interveners might respectively produce and examine witnesses, and cross-examine the witnesses produced by the petitioner, only one counsel could be heard in reply. Dering v. Dering and Blakeley, 37 L. J., Mat. 52; L. R. 1 P. 531; 19 L. T. 48.

In a suit for dissolution no issue was raised as to the respondent's adultery, but the queen's proctor intervening, pleaded various pleas, and after the petitioner's case was closed called evidence to prove them. Evidence having been called on behalf of the petitioner:—Held, that although the petitioner had begun, the attorney-general on behalf of the queen's proctor had the right of reply. Conradi v. Conradi, Worrall and Way, 37 L. J., Mat. 55; L. R. 1 P. 514; 18 L. T. 659; 16 W. R. 1023.

The queen's proctor intervening and alleging collusion and the adultery of the petitioner, is entitled to cross-examine all the witnesses called by the petitioner and the respondent. Boardman v. Boardman, L. R. 1 P. 233; 14 W. R. 1024.

When the respondent has been examined under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 6, the queen's proctor may, therefore, cross-examine him for the purpose of proving the petitioner's adultery. Ib.

Where a respondent denied the allegations of the petition, and these issues came on for trial at the same time as an issue raised on a plea of the queen's proctor, "that the petition had been filed by arrangement with the respondent and others acting on his behalf":—Held, that the queen's proctor had nothing to do with the issues raised between the parties, and that his counsel had no right to comment on the evidence relating to them. Jessop v. Jessop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 301; 30 L. J., Mat. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 609; 4 L. T. 308; 9 W. R. 640. See also Studholme v. Studholme, and Cullum, 25 W. R. 165.

Evidence in Trial of Issue.]—Upon the trial of an issue of adultery raised by the queen's proctor intervening to show cause against a decree nisi being made absolute, the court does not require such strict proof of the identity of the person charged with adultery as upon the trial of such an issue in a suit between husband and wife. Hulse v. Hulse and Tarenor, 41 L. J., Mat. 19; L. R. 2 P. 357; 25 L. T. 764; 20 W. R. 447.

In support of a charge of adultery made by the queen's proctor against a petitioner, the only evidence was that a man, calling himself by the name, and using the card, of the petitioner, had committed fornication. Full particulars of the charge having been given, and the petitioner at the hearing not coming forward to deny it:—Held, that there was sufficient proof of identity Ib.

A petitioner is not a competent witness in a proceeding by an intervener showing cause against a decree nisi, nor will the court examine him under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 43, in support of his own petition. Harding v. Harding and Lance, 4 Sw. & Tr. 145; 34 L. J., Mat. 108; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 814; 13 L. T. 195; 13 W. R. 999.

—— Alleging Adultery pleaded by Respondent.]—A respondent in her answer to a suit for dissolution of marriage charged the petitioner with adultery, and at the hearing called witnesses in support of the charge, but the issue was found against her. The queen's proctor subsequently intervened, and charged the petitioner with collusion, and also with the adultery pleaded by the respondent:—Held, that he was not barred from setting up such adultery by the respondent having pleaded it, and adduced evidence at the hearing to prove it. Ib.

Admissions by or Non-appearance of the Petitioner.]—When the queen's proctor intervenes, and alleges matter which would be ground for reversing a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, and such allegations are admitted by the petitioner by his replication, the court will act on those admissions without requiring the proof of the facts admitted. Boulton v. Boulton, 31 L. J., Mat. 115.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage the queen's proctor intervened after a decree nisi, and filed a plea on which issue was joined. An order was subsequently made, that the petitioner should attend in court on the hearing of the issue, and upon his non-appearance when the case came on for hearing, the court reversed the decree, and dismissed the petition without requiring evidence in support of the plea. Pollack v. Pollack, Deane and M'Namara, 4 Sw. & Tr. 266; 34 L. J., Mat. 49.

The queen's proctor intervened in a suit for dissolution in which the respondent did not appear, and alleged collusion and the petitioner's adultery. No evidence being tendered in support of the petition when the case came on for hearing, the court dismissed the petition without requiring evidence to be produced in support of the queen's proctor's plea. Sheldon v. Sheldon, 4 Sw. & Tr. 75; 34 L. J., Mat. 80; 13 W. R. 507.

Attendance of Petitioner.]—Where the queen's proctor intervened after a decree nisi, and pleaded collusion and condonation, on which pleas the petitioner took issue, and the cause was ready to be heard, a motion on behalf of the queen's proctor to order the attendance of the petitioner at the hearing, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 43, was refused, but the proceedings were ordered to be stayed till the petitioner should attend. Pollack v. Pollack, 2 Sw. & Tr. 648; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1230; 7 L. T. 395; 11 W. R. 85.

Cross Petitions—Decree Nisi on Wife's Petition—Payment out.]—In cross petitions by the husband and wife for dissolution of the marriage a decree nisi was pronounced on the wife's petition, and the husband was condemned in costs. Subsequently the queen's proctor intervened, and charged the wife with adultery, collusion, and suppression of material facts. The husband, in compliance with an order of the registrar, had paid money into court to meet the wife's costs in both suits:—Held, that the wife was not entitled to have the money in court paid out until the decree nisi had been made absolute. Butler v. Butler, 58 L. J., P. 71; 14 P. D. 160.

Reconciliation—Motion to Rescind Decree—No Plea Filed.]—Where, after decree nisi the parties had become reconciled and resumed cohabitation, the court, on the motion of the queen's proctor, without requiring him to file a plea, rescinded the decree nisi and dismissed the petition, on being satisfied of the facts. Flower v. Flower, 63 L. J., P. 28; [1893] P. 290; 1 R. 534; 42 W. R. 204.

Where Court will Order Intervention.]—When, on application to make absolute a rule for dissolution at the suit of a husband, it appeared that affidavits had been filed by the respondent which alleged the husband's bigamy and conviction, the court refused to make the decree absolute, and directed the registrar to inform the queen's proctor that such affidavits had been filed, and permitted the petitioner to file affidavits in answer. Boulton v. Boulton and Page, 2 Sw. & Tr. 405; 31 L. J., Mat. 27; 5 L. T. 362; 10 W. R. 123.

Where Queen's Proctor fails to prove Allegations—Costs.]—When the queen's proctor intervened, and having alleged collusion, suppression of material facts, and the adultery of the husband, at the hearing, the first two allegations being proved to be abandoned, the court refused to condemn the petitioner in costs where he had been put to great expense in preparing to defend the charge of adultery. Barnes v. Barnes and Grimwade, 37 L. J., Mat. 4; L. R. 1 P. 505; 17 L. T. 268; 16 W. R. 281.

On motion to make a decree nisi absolute, the attorney-general obtained leave to show cause, on the ground that it had come to the queen's proctor's knowledge that the business of the petitioner's suit had been chiefly conducted by the managing clerk of the attorney who had entered an appearance on behalf of the respondent. Subsequently, on affidavits filed in explanation of the circumstances, the court made the decree absolute, and made no order as to the queen's proctor's costs. Cox v. Cox, 2 Sw. & Tr. 306; 30 L. J., Mat. 255; 4 L. T. 450; 9 W. R. 924.

n. Other Interveners.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 23, 24.

Anyone may Intervene.]—Any person, and the queen's proctor as one of the public, may enter an appearance and file affidavits in opposition to a decree nisi being made absolute at any time before it is made absolute. Bowen v. Bowen and Evans, 3 Sw. & Tr. 530; 33 L. J., Mat. 129; 13 W. R. 109.

At any time before a decree nisi, for dissolution of marriage, is made absolute, it is competent for one of the public to intervene, although three months may have elapsed since the decree was pronounced. Clements v. Clements and Thomas, 3 Sw. & Tr. 394; 33 L. J., Mat. 74; 10 L. T. 352; 13 W. R. 110.

The court will not act upon affidavits filed in opposition to a decree nisi, unless it is satisfied that an intervener is properly before the court. Ib.

An appearance was entered for A., and affidavits were filed in opposition to a decree nisi. Affidavits were then filed by the petitioner, showing that A. had never authorised the intervention. An appearance was then entered for B., and further affidavits were filed. The court refused to take notice of the intervention of B., and being satisfied that A. had never authorised the intervention in his name, made the decree absolute. Ib.

Application by Alleged Adulterer.]—A petition by a husband claiming a divorce from his wife and damages against the co-respondent was dismissed, by consent, before trial. Thereupon the wife filed a petition claiming a judicial separation, and the husband, in his answer, countercharged the adultery which he had alleged in the former suit, but he asked for no relief. The alleged adulterer applied for leave to intervene and defend:—Held, that the practice of the ecclesiastical courts governed the case, and that, as that practice afforded no precedent for allowing an intervention in such circumstances, the application must be refused. Farrell v. Farrell, 76 L. T. 167.

"Material Facts not Brought before the Court."]—A wife sued for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty. The husband alleged that the wife had been guilty of adultery. At the trial a decree nisi for dissolution was made. The husband applied for a new trial on the ground that fresh evidence had been discovered to show the wife's adultery before the decree nisi, and filed affidavits alleging facts not known at the trial which went to prove adultery. He obtained a rule nisi, but the rule was discharged on argument. The husband appealed. Immediately afterwards an uncle of the husband entered an appearance as intervener, and filed affidavits which were substantially the same as those used on the application for a new trial. There was nothing to show that he was acting on behalf of or in collusion with the respondent. The wife moved to make the decree for dissolution absolute. This was refused, but leave was given her to move the court to reject the intervention. The husband abandoned his appeal from the refusal of a new trial. After this the motion of the wife to reject the intervention of the uncle was heard by the president and refused. The wife appealed:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, authorises intervention by any person where material facts have not been brought before the court, whether by intention or through accident. Whether, where the petitioner, after the decree nisi, is guilty of conduct disentitling him or her to have the decree made absolute, the right to intervene is confined to the queen's proctor, quære. Howarth v. Howarth, 9 P. D. 219; 51 L. T. 872—C. A.

The words "not brought before the court" mean, not brought before the court at a time when the court can act upon them for the purpose of seeing whether a decree nisi ought to be made, and that the bringing them before the court on an application for a new trial is not bringing them before the court within the meaning of this clause, so as to prevent an intervention. Ib.

Where a respondent is not entitled to a new trial, intervention on the ground of fresh evidence as to acts prior to the decree nisi will not be allowed if the intervener is merely acting on behalf of and in collusion with the respondent; but the fact that he is a near relative of the respondent is no ground for rejecting the intervention:—Held, therefore, that in the present case, the facts alleged being undoubtedly material, and the affidavits making a case which showed that there was ground for investigating them, the intervention had rightly been allowed. Ib.

Facts Pleaded but not Proved at Trial.]—A respondent, by pleading in answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage material facts, of which no evidence is given at the hearing, does not bring them before the court, within the meaning of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7; but such facts may, after a decree nisi has been pronounced, be set up by one of the public as ground for not making the decree absolute. Masters v. Masters, 34 L. J., Mat. 7.

Condemned in Costs.]—Where an appearance had been entered by a friend of a co-respondent, against whom 5,000*l.* damages had been awarded, for the purpose of showing cause against a decree nisi being made absolute, on the ground that there were material facts which were not brought to the notice of the court, and most of the material facts had been put on record by the parties, and were not established at the trial, and the intervener had not established by affidavit a single fact of importance: the court declined to suspend its decree, and condemned the intervener in the costs occasioned by the intervention. Forster v. Forster and Berridge, 3 Sw. & Tr. 151; 32 L. J., Mat. 206; 9 L. T. 148.

Intervention of Queen's Proctor—Charge of Adultery against Petitioner—Right of Person charged to Intervene.]—Where the queen's proctor has intervened and alleged adultery on the part of a petitioner in a divorce suit, the court has no power to allow the person with whom such adultery is alleged to have been committed to intervene in the proceedings. Griere v. Griere, 63 L. J., P. 29; [1893] P. 288; 1 R. 533; 69 L. T. 462.

Damages—Assignee.]—Where a petitioner has assigned his damages the assignee has no right to intervene in the suit. Hunt v. Hunt, 63 L. J., P. 136; [1894] P. 247; 6 R. 659.

Decree Absolute—Variation of Settlements—Title of Suit.]—In a petition by the wife for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, one of the persons with whom the husband was alleged to have committed adultery obtained leave to intervene, and her name was added to the title of the suit. Subsequently she obtained an order for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and for the postponement of the trial of the issues affecting her until the return of the commission. The petitioner obtained a decree absolute, on evidence which satisfied the court that the respondent had committed adultery with women other than the intervener; and the issue affecting her was never tried:—Held, on a subsequent petition for variation of settlements, that the name of the intervener must be struck out of all pending and future proceedings. Connemara v. Connemara, 61 L. J., P. 96; [1892] P. 102; 66 L. T. 592.

o. Evidence.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 129.

i. Evidence of Petitioner.

Statute.]—By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 43, the court may, if it shall think fit, order the attendance of the petitioner, and may examine him or her, or permit him or her to be examined or cross- examined, on oath, on the hearing of any petition, but no such petitioner shall be bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery.

Proof of Marriage—Admission.]—In suits for divorce, the admission of the marriage by the respondent party is not sufficient. In this case there was no distinct admission, but the wife had applied for and obtained alimony pending the suit, and the certificate of the marriage had been put in as an exhibit, and further evidence of the marriage was required in the privy council. Mellin v. Mellin, 2 Moore, P. C. 493. And see Revel v. Fox, 2 Ves. 269.

Conduct of Petitioner.]—On proof of a petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of the adultery of the wife, some evidence should be given of the conduct of the husband towards the wife previously to the adultery and what care he took of her. Boddington v. Boddington, 27 L. J., P. 53.

Oral Evidence.]—Generally the mode in which the petitioner for a dissolution of marriage will be directed to prove her petition when no answer has been filed and 21 days have elapsed, as required by R. 14, is by oral evidence before the court without a jury. There may be cases in which it would not be desirable that the evidence should be taken orally in court. Norris v. Norris and Gyles, 27 L. J., P. 51. And see Armitage v. Armitage and Macdonald, 27 L. J., P. 50.

As a general rule, the court will always accede to an application to examine witnesses viva voce. Campbell v. Campbell, 5 W. R. 519.

Examination of Petitioner.]—Where it appears doubtful whether or not the conduct of a petitioner for dissolution of marriage has been such as to give the court discretionary power under s. 31 of the above act, the court will, for the purpose of satisfying their minds, examine the petitioner adversely under s. 43, but will not, in a suit instituted on the ground of adultery, examine him or permit him to be examined for the purpose of proving his own case. Haswell v. Haswell and Sanderson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 502; 29 L. J., Mat. 21; 1 L. T. 69; 8 W. R. 76. S. P., Astrope v. Astrope, 29 L. J., Mat. 27.

After the court has examined the petitioner adversely, his counsel will be permitted to suggest questions to the petitioner, for the purpose of clearing up what the court may have elicited adversely to the case. Ib.

Under the above provision, the court has only power to order that the petitioner attend on the hearing of the petition. It cannot, therefore, order his attendance at the hearing of the case of the queen's proctor, if the intervention was after a decree nisi had been pronounced. Pollack v. Pollack, 32 L. J., Mat. 28.

Under certain circumstances, the court will exercise the power given it, by calling the petitioner and examining him on oath as to some of the facts necessary to establish his petition. Tatham v. Tatham and Nutt, 3 Sw. & Tr. 411; 33 L. J., Mat. 140; 10 L. T. 725.

The court will, under some circumstances, allow a petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage to be called to give evidence, notwithstanding the statute, which provides, that neither of the parties in such a suit is allowed or compellable to give evidence. Sanderson v. Sanderson and Gibson, 14 W. R. 972.

But the court will not allow the petitioner to be examined for the purpose of explaining his conduct, where the matter requiring explanation is one as to which the respondent, if a competent witness, would have been able to give evidence. Baylis v. Baylis, Tevan and Cooper, 36 L. J., Mat. 130; L. R. 1 P. 395.

The court has power under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 43, to order a petitioner in a suit for judicial separation, by reason of adultery, to attend at the hearing of the petition. Ross v. Ross, 38 L. J., Mat. 33; L. R. 1 P. 629; 20 L. T. 232; 17 W. R. 577.

In a suit for dissolution, when the respondent did not appear, the court allowed the petitioner to be examined, and to give evidence upon the issue of his own adultery raised by the queen's proctor. Conradi v. Conradi, Worrall and Way, 37 L. J., Mat. 55; L. R. 1 P. 514; 18 L. T. 659; 16 W. R. 1023.

—— When Collusion is Established.]—When collusion has been established, a petitioner cannot be examined for the purpose of contradicting or explaining the evidence of such collusion. Lloyd v. Lloyd and Chichester, 1 S. & T. 567; 30 L. J., Mat. 97.

Cross-Examination.]—A respondent cannot, in the first instance, and without the permission of the court, cross-examine a petitioner who is in attendance at the hearing, in pursuance of an order made on the application of the respondent, but must treat the petitioner as his witness, unless the court thinks fit to allow him to cross-examine. Studdy v. Studdy, 28 L. J., Mat. 105.

A wife, the petitioner, was called as a witness in support of the allegation of cruelty. On cross-examination by the respondent, she denied certain acts of adultery with which he charged her, but declined to answer as to others. The court, notwithstanding, made the usual decree, she having proved her case, and no evidence having been produced in support of the counter-charges by the husband. Mawford v. Mawford, 15 L. T. 217.

Where, at the hearing of a suit for dissolution of marriage, the petitioner, in pursuance of an order under s. 43, is present; if the court allows counsel of the respondent to call him, he must be treated as the witness of the respondent; he cannot be cross-examined by the respondent; and before he is sworn, the respondent's case must be opened. Giles v. Giles and Quartley, 32 L. J., Mat. 209; 12 W. R. 20.

—— As to Adultery.]—A party to a cause, who is produced as a witness on his own behalf, and in his examination in chief denies the truth of some of the charges of adultery contained in the pleadings, and is asked no questions as to others, is liable to be asked, and is bound to answer, questions in cross-examination respecting all the charges contained in the pleadings. Brown v. Brown and Paget, 43 L. J., Mat. 33; L. R. 3 P. 198; 30 L. T. 767; 22 W. R. 759.

A witness cannot be cross-examined as to any act of adultery respecting which he or she has not been examined in chief, although such adultery may not be a question in issue in the cause. Babbage v. Babbage and Manning, L. R. 2 P. 222.

—— Husband's Petition—Counter-charge of Adultery—Rebutting Evidence.]—At the hearing of a petition by the husband for dissolution of marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery, in which the wife made a counter charge of adultery against him :—Held, that the petitioner might, as part of the case opened by him, give his own evidence and call his witnesses in answer to the respondent's charge, or that he might in the alternative reserve his answer to the charge until the respondent's witnesses in support of it had been examined, but that he was not entitled to divide his case by giving his own evidence in the opening, and afterwards calling his witnesses in reply to the respondent's charge. Jackman v. Jackman, 58 L. J., P. 72 ; 14 P. D. 62 ; 60 L. T. 936 ; 37 W. R. 624.

Irish Divorce Bill — Evidence.]—It is not necessary for the first reading of an Irish divorce bill that a definitive sentence of divorce a mensâ et thoro should have been pronounced in the Irish courts. Where in the proceedings upon an Irish divorce bill it appears that no action for criminal conversation has been brought against a co-respondent who was not domiciled and could not be served in Ireland, the House of Lords may allow the bill for divorce to be received. Where there is no means of enforcing the warrant of the House of Lords to take evidence in parts of India, the evidence as taken and used in a previous suit in the English court of divorce may be allowed to be used quantum valeat. Sinclair's Divorce Bill, [1897] A. C. 469 —H. L. (Ir.)

ii. Documentary.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 118—120.

Judge's Notes.]—Semble, upon a second trial of the same issues, the judge's notes of evidence of deceased witnesses who were examined on the first trial are not admissible except by consent. Conradi v. Conradi, Worrall and Way, 37 L. J., Mat. 55 ; L. R. 1 P. 514 ; 18 L. T. 659 ; 16 W. R. 1023.

Discovery—Infant Respondent.]—A husband petitioned for a divorce from his wife who was an infant, and applied for an order upon her for an affidavit of documents. The sole issue in the suit was adultery :—Held, that discovery ought not to be required from parties in a divorce suit for the purpose of proving adultery. Whether in a divorce suit any special protection is granted to infants in matters of discovery, quære. Redfern v. Redfern (No. 1), 60 L. J., P. 9 ; [1891] P. 139 ; 64 L. T. 68 ; 39 W. R. 212.

—— Limited Order.]—In a complex suit, the wife was ordered to file an affidavit and to give discovery of documents, limited to her counter-charges other than that of adultery. Schooleraft v. Schooleraft, 65 L. T. 794.

Notice to Produce.]—Where a husband had been served with a citation in England, and had not appeared, the court refused to decide whether the wife's evidence of the contents of letters written by her to him after he had left her was admissible, no notice to produce having been served, but made a decree on the other evidence given in the case, independently of the supposed contents of the letters. Case v. Case, 2 Sw. & Tr. 65 ; 29 L. J., Mat. 127 ; 2 L. T. 391 ; 8 W. R. 532.

Inspection and Production of.]—A wife petitioning for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, moved for an order on the husband to deliver to her or to her attorney certain documents and papers alleged to have been taken from her by the husband, and to be material to the conduct of her petition, especially to enable her to comply with an order of the court for particulars of dates. The husband objected to give up the papers, but was willing to allow copies to be taken. The court ordered the papers to be produced by his attorney to her attorney, the latter to be at liberty to take copies, and reserved the question of costs of the motion ; no application having been made to the husband before notice of motion given. Shaw v. Shaw, 2 Sw. & Tr. 642 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 95 ; 7 L. T. 254.

A husband petitioned for dissolution of marriage and for assessment of damages. The judge, on summons, at the instance of the co-respondent, ordered the petitioner to bring into the registry letters written by the respondent to him, or to file an affidavit that he had no such letters, or that they contained no such matters as suggested by the affidavits in support of the summons. Pollard v. Pollard and Hemming, 3 Sw. & Tr. 613 ; 11 L. T. 749.

Admission of Wife — Diary.] — Entries in a private diary kept by the wife, detailing acts of adultery committed by her with the co-respondent, are evidence against her as an admission or a confession, though not as against the co-respondent. Robinson v. Robinson and Lane, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 91 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 392.

iii. Proof of Adultery.

Admission by Wife.]—Admissions of a wife charged with adultery, unsupported by any confirmatory proof, may be acted upon as conclusive evidence upon which to pronounce a divorce, provided the court is satisfied that the evidence is trustworthy, and that it amounts to a clear, distinct, and an unequivocal admission of adultery ; but where, on a consideration of a diary, the wife appeared to indulge unfounded imaginations and exaggerated statements as regarded her intercourse with the other sex, the court refused to add anything by way of inference, as it would have done if similar facts had been established by independent evidence, to the actual statements of the diary ; and as these fell short of a direct confession of the act of adultery, dismissed the petition, but without condemning the husband in costs, on the understanding that the wife had a separate income. Robinson v. Robinson and Lane, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 91 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 392.

The admissions or confessions of the respondent are not admissible evidence against the co-respondent. Ib.

The only evidence of the respondent's adultery was admissions made by her. The court being satisfied that the admissions were genuine, and that there was no ground to suspect collusion, dissolved the marriage. Williams v. Williams and Padfield, 35 L. J., Mat. 8 ; L. R. 1 P. 29 ; 13 L. T. 610.

Where it appeared that the wife had become pregnant while living away from her husband in the service of the co-respondent, and after her confinement had sent to the co-respondent for money, claiming it from him on the ground that he was the father of the child, and he sent the money, though denying that he was the father:—Held, that this admission of the wife, coupled with the circumstances under which it was made, was, in the absence of explanation or of denial, sufficient evidence of her having committed adultery with the co-respondent. Tippet v. Tippet and Meredith, 35 L. J., P. 41; L. R. 1 P. 54; 14 W. R. 410.

On the hearing of a petition by a husband for dissolution on the ground of his wife's adultery, as evidenced by her having become pregnant after the husband had ceased to have access to her, semble, that the court would exclude proof of an admission by the wife at a former trial to the effect that she had ceased to cohabit with her husband at such a time as to render it impossible that he could be the father, on the authority of Goodwright v. Moss (Cowper, 594), and on the principle that such admissions are contrary to public decency, and tending to bastardise children. Inglis v. Inglis and Allen, 16 L. T. 775; 15 W. R. 1093.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage promoted by the husband, the evidence adduced at the hearing of the case in proof of the adultery charged against the wife and co-respondent consisted exclusively of confessions by the wife, but on a subsequent day counsel for the co-respondent stated that he was instructed to admit the adultery charged against him. The court being satisfied that both the confession of the wife and the admission of the co-respondent, which was against interest, were bonâ fide, acted upon them, and pronounced a decree for dissolution of the marriage. Le Marchant v. Le Marchant and Radcliffe, 45 L. J., P. 43; 34 L. T. 367; 24 W. R. 374.

Declarations of Wife.]—Evidence tendered by a co-respondent of declarations by the wife to a third person, when the husband was not present, with regard to the conduct of the husband during cohabitation, is not admissible. Plumer v. Plumer and Bygrave, 4 Sw. & Tr. 257.

Unsatisfactory Evidence of.]—In support of a petition by a wife for a judicial separation, direct evidence was given of several acts of adultery committed by the husband; but, in consequence of the improbability of that evidence, of the discrepancies in the statements of the witnesses, and of the improper manner in which it had been got up by the private detective employed by the petitioner, the court refused to act upon it, and dismissed the petition. Sopwith v. Sopwith, 4 Sw. & Tr. 243.

Incestuous Adultery — Going behind Certificate of Conviction.]—Upon a wife's petition, charging the respondent with incestuous adultery with his own child, a girl of thirteen years of age, it appeared that a jury in a criminal court had acquitted the respondent of the more serious charge, but convicted him of an attempt to carnally know the child. The court, notwithstanding the certificate of conviction, allowed evidence to be given to prove that incestuous adultery had, in fact, taken place, and, finding this as a fact, pronounced a decree nisi dissolving the respondent's marriage with the petitioner. Virgo v. Virgo, 69 L. T. 460.

By Affidavit — Undefended Action — Witnesses Abroad—Poverty.]—The court, in an undefended action for dissolution of the marriage at the wife's suit, gave her leave to prove the bigamy, adultery and identity of her husband at the hearing by affidavit where the witnesses were resident in America, and the expense of a commission was beyond the wife's means. Burslem v. Burslem, 1 R. 497; 67 L. T. 719.

—— Hearing—Absence of Petitioner.]—The court, in the absence of the petitioner, the husband, after hearing evidence, made a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery. Nicolson v. Nicolson and Fairley, 1 R. 498; 68 L. T. 28.

Written Statements of Patient to Medical Man.]—Statements in writing by a patient to a medical man, describing the symptoms of the illness upon which the medical man has advised the patient, are not admissible. Witt v. Witt and Klindworth, 3 Sw. & Tr. 143; 32 L. J., Mat. 179; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 207; 8 L. T. 175; 11 W. R. 154.

Verdict against Co-respondent — Examination of Respondent by Court—Costs.]—In a petition by the husband for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of adultery, the respondent filed no answer and did not appear. The jury found a verdict against the co-respondent, and assessed the damages against him at 50*l*. The court, not being satisfied with the evidence against the wife, directed her to be summoned, and having heard her evidence, on which she was cross-examined, to the effect that she had been forced, came to the conclusion that the charge of adultery had not been established against her, and dismissed the petition against her, but gave judgment against the co-respondent for the damages with costs. Long v. Long, 60 L. J., P. 27; 15 P. D. 218.

Evidence of Prostitute.]—The only evidence in support of a charge of adultery against a husband in a suit for judicial separation was the testimony of the alleged paramour, a woman of loose character. The court declined to decide, upon this evidence, whether or not adultery had been committed, but held that the charge had not been established with sufficient certainty to enable it to pronounce a decree, and dismissed the petition. Ginger v. Ginger, 35 L. J., Mat. 9.

Bigamy — No Evidence of Subsequent Cohabitation — Affidavit.] — At the hearing of a wife's petition for divorce on the ground of her husband's desertion and adultery, the desertion was proved, and also the fact that the respondent had gone through the ceremony of marriage with another woman in America, but there was no evidence of any subsequent cohabitation between the parties to the bigamous marriage:—Held, that the mere proof that the ceremony of marriage had been gone through was insufficient to satisfy the words "bigamy with adultery" used in s. 27 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), and that there must be substantive evidence of the adultery. Proof of the adultery was allowed to be completed by affidavit, under the special circumstance of the case. Ellam v. Ellam, 58 L. J., P. 56; 61 L. T. 338.

Sufficient to Obtain a Dissolution.]—Where a wife had obtained a decree of judicial separation on the ground of the husband's cruelty, and continued to live separately from him, and he subsequently committed adultery, upon proof of such adultery, and of the decree for judicial separation, the court made a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage. Bland v. Bland, 35 L. J., Mat. 104; L. R. 1 P. 237; 15 W. R. 9.

—— Direct Evidence.]—A husband, who petitioned for the dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, produced evidence at the hearing to show that he and a sergeant of police traced the respondent and co-respondent to the house of the latter's sister, and that in the presence of all five persons questions were put to the respondent, and admissions made by her, that incriminating allegations were made against her and the co-respondent by the landlady, and that the co-respondent said nothing in reply:—Held, that this was not sufficient legal proof that adultery had, in fact, been committed at that house, and that the case must stand over for direct evidence to be given by the landlady. White v. White, 62 L. T. 663.

—— Witness negativing Adultery not Called.]—Upon a wife's petition for divorce on the ground of desertion and adultery, the adultery was not established, and judicial separation only was decreed on the ground of desertion. Upon a rehearing the court refused to take notice of evidence given at the former hearing, and refused to grant a decree of divorce unless a witness, who negatived adultery, was subpœnaed. Chambers v. Chambers, 60 L. T. 514.

Admissibility of Acts not Charged.]—A wife was charged in a petition with adultery, to which she pleaded condonation. Counsel for the husband, in order to repel this plea by showing that at the time of the condonation the husband was not cognisant of the whole of the wife's adultery, tendered evidence of acts of adultery not laid in the petition, and which were committed prior to, but were unknown to him at the time of, the alleged condonation. The judge ruled hæsitanter, that, as the petition contained no averment of the acts of adultery, the evidence was inadmissible. Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, 1 Sw. & Tr. 334; 28 L. J., Mat. 57; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 176; 7 W. R. 377.

Evidence of acts of adultery not charged in the petition are inadmissible. Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, 29 L. J., Mat. 169, n.

But evidence of acts of adultery subsequent to the date of the latest act charged in a petition is admissible, for the purpose of showing the character and quality of previous acts of improper familiarity. Boddy v. Boddy and Grover, 30 L. J., Mat. 23.

A co-respondent cannot prove anything which he has not pleaded. Plumer v. Plumer and Bygrave, 1 Sw. & Tr. 149; 29 L. J., Mat. 63.

—— Respondent found Guilty of Adultery as Co-Respondent in previous Suit and condemned in Costs—Decree as Evidence of Adultery in subsequent Suit.]—A respondent in a suit for dissolution had previously been a co-respondent in another suit. The decree in the previous suit stated that the jury had found that the respondent had committed adultery with him (the co-respondent), and that he had been condemned in costs. As, however, the decree did not state that the jury had found that he (the co-respondent) had committed adultery with the respondent:—Held, that such decree was not evidence in the subsequent suit of the fact that he had previously committed adultery. Ruck v. Ruck, 65 L. J., P. 87; [1896] P. 152.

—— Divorce Bill—Deceased Witness—Judge's Note of Evidence—Admissibility.]—A certified copy of the judge's notes of the evidence of a witness called by the petitioner at the hearing of a petition for divorce a mensâ et thoro cannot, in case of the death of the witness, be received as proof of the matters deposed to by him upon the second reading of a bill for divorce presented by the petitioner. Griffin's Divorce Bill, [1896] A. C. 133—H. L. (Ir.)

iv. Identity.

Sufficiency of Proof.]—In support of a charge of adultery made by the queen's proctor against a petitioner, the only evidence was, that a man, calling himself by the name, and using the card, of the petitioner, had committed fornication. Full particulars of the charge having been given, and the petitioner at the hearing not coming forward to deny it:—Held, that there was sufficient proof of identity. Hulse v. Hulse and Tavenor, 4 Sw. & Tr. 232; 41 L. J., Mat. 19; L. R. 2 P. 357; 25 L. T. 764; 20 W. R. 447.

Photograph.]—It may be laid down as a fixed rule of practice that the court in a matrimonial suit, will not accept a photograph as evidence of identification except where no better evidence can be obtained, and even then the court will be guided, as to whether it will act on the evidence of a photograph or not, by the special circumstances of each case. Frith v. Frith, 65 L. J., P. 53; [1896] P. 74.

Confrontation of Parties.]—The court has no power to decree confrontation in a suit for dissolution of marriage for the purpose of identification. Hooke v. Hooke, 4 Sw. & Tr. 236; 28 L. J., Mat. 29.

The court will follow the practice of the ecclesiastical court in making a decree of confrontation in fit cases in suits for nullity. Enticknap v. Rice, f. c. Enticknap, 4 Sw. & Tr. 136; 34 L. J., Mat. 110; 13 L. T. 211.

Where it was necessary for the witnesses of a husband to be confronted with the wife (the petitioner) to enable him to establish his defence, and the husband was unable to ascertain her address, the court ordered the wife to supply to him her address within three days or to attend at the hearing. Lloyd v. Lloyd, L. R. 1 P. 222; 15 W. R. 287.

A respondent was allowed to appear and answer, after the expiration of the time for entering an appearance, on condition that she would allow herself to be confronted with the witnesses for the petitioner, for the purpose of being identified. Hindmarsh v. Hindmarsh and Hussey, 35 L. J., Mat. 31; L. R. 1 P. 24.

When a co-respondent charges the petitioner with adultery in a suit for dissolution of marriage, the court has power to order the petitioner and the co-respondent to attend the trial for the purpose of being identified. Sykes v. Sykes and Smith, 38 L. J., Mat. 12 ; 19 L. T. 611 ; 17 W. R. 265.

Of Respondent—Evidence of Petitioner Uncorroborated.]—The court will not act upon the evidence of the petitioner as to the identity of the respondent without some corroboration. Harris v. Harris and Milton, 39 L. J., Mat. 86 ; L. R. 2 P. 77.

Of Co-respondent.]—In undefended divorce suits the co-respondent must at the trial be proved to be the person served with the citation. Duff v. Duff, 58 L. T. 389 ; 52 J. P. 232.

Evidence of Wife.]—Before 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 6, a wife who prayed for judicial separation, and in her petition alleged adultery and cruelty, was not a competent witness to prove the charge of cruelty. Hudson v. Hudson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 314 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 5 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1302 ; 9 L. T. 579 ; 12 W. R. 216.

—— After Trial—Further Acts of.]—After the case had been heard, and the court taken time to consider its decision, the petitioner (the wife) applied to be allowed to give evidence of further acts of cruelty, which she alleged took place at a date later than that to which she deposed at the trial. The court refused the application, the petitioner having repeatedly stated, in the course of her examination, that the last act of cruelty took place at Easter, 1863, and that also being the latest date given in the petition. Topper v. Topper, 38 L. J., Mat. 36 ; 20 L. T. 279.

—— When Estopped from Proving.]—A petitioner, whose petition for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, has been dismissed for defect of proof, is estopped from setting up the same charges of cruelty in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty. Finney v. Finney, 37 L. J., Mat. 43 ; L. R. 1 P. 483 ; 18 L. T. 489.

General Conduct.]—A petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage, claimed damages. The co-respondent traversed the adultery, and charged the petitioner with cruelty. At the trial the petitioner called witnesses as to his general conduct towards his wife, and on the part of the co-respondent evidence was given of specific acts of cruelty :—Held, that, in reply, the petitioner might call witnesses to contradict the evidence of specific acts of cruelty, but not to prove his general conduct. Narracott v. Narracott and Hesketh, 3 Sw. & Tr. 408 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 61 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 640 ; 10 L. T. 389 ; 12 W. R. 1064.

A respondent who in his answer simply denies the cruelty charged in a petition, may cross-examine the petitioner, if called, as to her general conduct, for the purpose of impeaching her credit, but her answer as to any matters not bearing upon the issue cannot be contradicted. Baker v. Baker, 3 Sw. & Tr. 213 ; 32 L. J., Mat. 145 ; 9 L. T. 117 ; 11 W. R. 502.

Cruelty Pleaded only Admissible.]—Evidence to prove a species of cruelty not pleaded in the petition, is not admissible ; though evidence of violent demeanour and language not pleaded, but leading up to and making probable acts of violence pleaded, may be admissible. Jewell v. Jewell, 2 Sw. & Tr. 573 ; 6 L. T. 369 ; 10 W. R. 672. S. P., Squires v. Squires, 3 Sw. & Tr. 541 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 172 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 756 ; 12 W. R. 1028.

General Charge — Particulars.] — Evidence of an act of actual violence is not admissible where only a general allegation of cruelty has been made in a petition. Where evidence was offered that the husband had struck his wife a blow, and no such specific charge had been made in the petition, the court allowed the hearing to be adjourned in order that particulars might be furnished. Brook v. Brook, 56 L. J., P. 108 ; 12 P. D. 19 ; 57 L. T. 425 ; 35 W. R. 351.

vi. Competency of Witnesses.

16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, s. 1.]—On the trial of an issue of collusion, arising on the queen's proctor's intervention, in a petition to which the husband has not appeared, statements by him, not in the presence of the wife, are inadmissible as evidence on the issue before the jury. Gray v. Gray, 2 Sw. & Tr. 554 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 83 ; 6 L. T. 336 ; 10 W. R. 863.

Held, that the wife cannot be called as a witness, either under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, or under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83. Ib.

A wife brought a suit for restitution of conjugal rights ; the husband pleaded her adultery, and prayed a judicial separation. At the hearing he gave evidence in support of his own plea :—Held, that he thereby waived his right to press for a judicial separation. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 2 Sw. & Tr. 544 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 124 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 624 ; 5 L. T. 771.

A petitioner is not a competent witness in support of his own case in an issue joined with an intervener after a decree nisi. Harding v. Harding and Lance, 4 Sw. & Tr. 145 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 108 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 814 ; 13 L. T. 195 ; 13 W. R. 999.

In a suit instituted by a wife for dissolution of her marriage by reason of her husband's adultery, coupled with wilful desertion, the wife was not a competent witness to prove the desertion. Pyne v. Pyne, 1 Sw. & Tr. 178 ; 27 L. J., P. 54.

In answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, the wife pleaded counter-charges of cruelty and desertion, and prayed for a judicial separation :—Held, that her evidence was inadmissible to prove cruelty and desertion. Whittal v. Whittal and Hunt, 30 L. J., Mat. 43.

—— 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 6.]—If a wife, in a suit by her for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, gives evidence in support of the charge of cruelty, she cannot in cross-examination be asked questions tending to show that she has been guilty of adultery. Fisher v. Fisher, 30 L. J., Mat. 24.

A petitioner and a respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage, who are examined under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 6, upon an issue of cruelty or desertion, may be cross-examined upon issues of their own adultery, and of each other's adultery. Boardman v. Boardman, L. R. 1 P. 233 ; 14 W. R. 1024.

An answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery contained a charge of cruelty and a prayer for a judicial separation :—Held, that the evidence of the respondent was inadmissible to prove the cruelty. Bland v. Bland and Stormont, 37 L. J., Mat. 74 ; L. R. 1 P. 513 ; 18 L. T. 535 ; 16 W. R. 893.

To a petition by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife answered, alleging adultery, and prayed for a judicial separation. At the trial the petitioner desired to abandon the suit, and offered no evidence. The respondent adduced evidence, and pressed for a decree of judicial separation :—Held, that it was still a suit instituted for restitution of conjugal rights, and not a suit or proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery ; and that the parties were competent witnesses on the question of adultery. Blackborne v. Blackborne, 37 L. J., Mat. 73 ; 18 L. T. 450.

32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3.]—A witness who is called to prove adultery with one of the parties to a suit may claim the protection of the proviso in the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3, and the judge will not allow such witness to be interrogated on the subject of his or her adultery : but unless the protection of the proviso is claimed by the witness, the evidence is admissible, and it is not competent to counsel for either party to exclude it. Hebblethwaite v. Hebblethwaite, 39 L. J., Mat. 15 ; L. R. 2 P. 29 ; 21 L. T. 732.

A petition which sought to establish a claim on the ground that a certain person was illegitimate by reason of the adultery of his mother, who had since been divorced :—Held, not to be "a proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery," within the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3, so as to make the husband competent to give evidence tending to prove the fact of non-access. B.'s Trusts, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 192 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 41.

Held, also, that independent evidence showing that on the only occasion when the husband visited the place where his wife was residing, he was engaged in collecting evidence with a view to a divorce, would be sufficient to raise a presumption of non-access. Ib.

Calling Co-Respondent as a Witness—21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 11.]—Before this enactment, the co-respondent, so long as he remained a party to the record, was not a competent witness. Robinson v. Robinson and Lane, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 91 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 392.

Where a petitioner's case depended on alleged confessions contained in the wife's diary, uncorroborated by independent evidence, the court exercised its discretion, under the above provision, and dismissed the co-respondent who was thereupon examined for the respondent. Ib.

Right of Co-Respondent to cross-examine Respondent on her Evidence against him—Misdirection—New Trial.]—Evidence given by one party affecting another party in the same litigation cannot be made admissible against that other party unless there is a right to cross-examine. Where the evidence of a respondent is adverse to the co-respondent, and the counsel for the co-respondent is not allowed to cross-examine the respondent, it is the duty of the judge to direct the jury to disregard the respondent's evidence when considering the case of the co-respondent, and the omission to do so is good ground for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. But, semble, such cross-examination should be allowed. Glennie v. Glennie (3 Sw. & Tr. 109) disapproved. Allen v. Allen and Bell, 63 L. J., P. 120 ; [1894] P. 248 ; 6 R. 597 ; 70 L. T. 783 ; 42 W. R. 549—C. A.

vii. Commission and Requisition to Take.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 132—137, 198.

When Granted.]—As a general rule, a commission to examine witnesses will not be granted before issue joined. Shaw v. Shaw, 2 Sw. & Tr. 642 ; 31 L. J., Mat. 95 ; 7 L. T. 254.

When the parties in a suit for dissolution of marriage are at issue, a motion for direction as to the mode of trial may be made at the same time as a commission to examine witnesses is applied for. Graham v. Graham and Griffith, 31 L. J., Mat. 96, n.

Witnesses Living in Brothel.]—Where the only witnesses to the acts of adultery relied upon are resident in a brothel, and there is consequently a risk of their evidence being lost, the court will allow a commission to issue for their immediate examination. Cooke v. Cooke and Quaile, 2 Sw. & Tr. 50 ; 28 L. J., Mat. 37.

Illness of Witness.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, the court, before the time for entering an appearance by the co-respondent had expired, allowed the petitioner to examine a proposed witness who was dangerously ill. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, 31 L. J., Mat. 136.

Witness going Abroad.]—When a petition had been filed, the court will allow witnesses who are about to go abroad to be examined before service of the citation. Brown v. Brown, 33 L. J., Mat. 203.

In Cross Suits.]—The court will not order that the evidence taken under a commission in a cross-suit may be used at the hearing of a suit between the same parties. Hill v. Hill, 30 L. J., Mat. 197.

Where the same issues are raised in cross-suits, and an order is made for a commission to examine witnesses, it will be drawn up in such a form that the evidence will be admissible in both suits. Osborne v. Osborne and Martelli, 3 Sw. & Tr. 327 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 38 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 80 ; 9 L. T. 456.

Witness Abroad—Contents of Affidavit.]—The court will grant a commission for the examination of a witness abroad, on an affidavit of the solicitor of the party applying that the witness is material and necessary, unless it is proved that the witness's evidence cannot possibly be material or necessary, or that there has been unreasonable delay in applying for the commission. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, 13 W. R. 414.

Joint Commission—Advance of Expenses by Husband—Commission to examine Witnesses.]—The court having, with the consent of husband and wife, made an order for a joint commission to issue for the examination of witnesses at Rome, directed the husband to advance to the wife a sum (the amount to be settled by the registrar) to enable her to defray the expenses of the commission. Baily v. Baily and Della Rocca, 2 Sw. & Tr. 112 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 47.

Nomination of Commissioner.]—When a commission to examine witnesses is granted in a suit in which no appearance has been entered the commissioner is nominated in the registry and not by the petitioner. Lodge v. Lodge and Smythe, 32 L. J., Mat. 93.

In the absence of the respondents, the court, and not the petitioner, should select the commissioner before whom the evidence is to be taken. Cook v. Cook and Quaile, 2 Sw. & Tr. 50; 28 L. J., Mat. 37.

Direction and Return of Commission.]—Commissions for the examination of witnesses in France should be sent to and returned through the Foreign Office. Mills v. Mills, 31 L. J., Mat. 95, n.

Re-opening Commission.]—It is in the discretion of the court to re-open a commission, so as to enable a witness, who has been already examined, to be examined again: but it is a discretion to be sparingly exercised. Bevan v. M'Mahon and Bevan, 2 Sw. & Tr. 55; 28 L. J., Mat. 40.

Where a witness had been examined, re-examined, and cross-examined before a commissioner, the court refused to re-open the commission in order to enable him to supply important facts omitted in his evidence, although he deposed that it was in consequence of the respondent's personal observations and interruptions during the examination that he forgot to mention them at that time. Ib.

If the commissioner had reported that the respondent had so conducted himself during the examination as to disturb the mind of the witness, the court would have acceded to the application. Ib.

Admissibility of Depositions taken under.]—Proof to satisfy the court that a witness whose evidence has been taken abroad under a commission is out of the jurisdiction when the evidence is tendered may be less stringent when he is resident abroad than when the evidence has been taken of a witness going out of the jurisdiction for a temporary purpose. Mills v. Mills, 2 Sw. & Tr. 310; 30 L. J., Mat. 183; 4 L. T. 479.

Where in an affidavit to found an order for a commission it was stated that the object was to examine A., resident abroad, and the summons was served on the co-respondents:—Held, that the presumption was that the witness continued abroad, unless the contrary was shown, and the court allowed the evidence to be used. Ib.

A requisition was issued to the judges of a foreign court to take the evidence of certain witnesses residing within their jurisdiction. Interrogatories and cross-interrogatories were attached to the requisition, and were before the judge who examined the witnesses, but he only put such questions and in such form as he thought proper. The agents on both sides were present at the examination, and did not object or ask that further questions should be put to either of the witnesses:—Held, that the deposition might be read. Hitchins v. Hitchins, 35 L. J., Mat. 62; L. R. 1 P. 153; 14 L. T. 258.

Deposition of a Deceased Witness.]—The deposition of a deceased witness is admissible on condition, not only of its having been taken under the sanction of an oath, but also of sufficient notice having been given to the party against whom it is tendered to have enabled him to attend and cross-examine the witness. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 33 L. J., Mat. 39; 9 L. T. 580; 12 W. R. 696. Affirmed on appeal, 3 S. & T. 400; 10 L. T. 510.

Where, therefore, notice was given about 2 p.m. on a Saturday, to a respondent's solicitor in London, that a witness was to be examined at Bath on Monday, under an order of the court, obtained by the petitioner:—Held, that the notice was insufficient to enable the respondent's solicitor to attend and cross-examine, and that the evidence so taken without cross-examination was inadmissible. Ib.

Depositions in extinct Ecclesiastical Court.]—Where there had been a decree of one of the extinct ecclesiastical courts, and depositions taken in the cause in which such decree was made:—Held, that those depositions could not be used in evidence in a cause before the court, except so far as they were embodied in a decree, and therefore part of the proceedings of a court, and documents of a public nature, of which the court would receive in evidence a certified copy. Linzee v. Linzee, 29 L. J., Mat. 128.

Costs of.]—See col. 954.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 138—146, and Rules, 1875, r. 188.

Verifying Petition sworn by Solicitor.]—A petitioner in a divorce suit being on military service, and unable to make the usual affidavit verifying the petition, the court allowed the petition to be filed if verified by the affidavit of his solicitor, but ordered that the petitioner's affidavit should also be filed as soon as possible. Bruce, Ex parte, or Bruce v. Bruce and Laing, 50 L. J., P. 64; 6 P. D. 16; 29 W. R. 474.

—— Entitling.]—An affidavit to verify a petition, and filed with it, should not be headed in the cause, but in the matter of the petition. Steed v. Steed, 36 L. J., Mat. 50; L. R. 1 P. 364; 16 L. T. 125.

An affidavit verifying the petition should be headed, "In the matter of the petition of A. B." Gapp v. Gapp and Leverson, 4 Sw. & Tr. 273.

Affidavits in a cause must be entitled strictly as the cause itself is entitled. Sutherland, f. c. Croomie v. Croomie, 3 Sw. & Tr. 210; 32 L. J., Mat. 125; 9 L. T. 23.

In a suit of nullity by a wife, an affidavit entitled S. v. C., instead of S., falsely called C. v. C., was rejected. Ib.

An affidavit, in which the addition or place of abode of a deponent is not inserted, will not be received. Bernard, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 89.

When a joint affidavit was made by A. and B., and B.'s addition was not inserted therein, the court treated the affidavit as that of A. only. Woodburne, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 89, n.

An affidavit which does not comply with the rule must be resworn. Bernard, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 89.

Form and Admissibility of.]—The court will take no notice of an affidavit which contains an interlineation in the jurat. Manton v. Manton, 28 L. J., Mat. 32.

The court will take no notice of an affidavit, if it is not duly stamped. Hyatt v. Hyatt, 28 L. J., Mat. 32.

In a suit for a dissolution of marriage, the judge rejected an affidavit of service of the citation sworn before a notary at Massachusetts for want of affidavits, that there was not at Massachusetts one of the British officers empowered by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, s. 1, to take affidavits, and that a notary public had by the law of the place authority to take an affidavit. Comyn v. Comyn and Humphreys, 31 L. J., Mat. 89, n.

—— Petitioner absent.]—The court will not allow the affidavit verifying a petition for divorce to be sworn by another person when the petitioner is absent from the country of his own free will. Bruce, Ex parte (6 P. D. 16) distinguished. Tartt, Ex parte, 34 W. R. 368.

—— "Knowledge and Belief."]—The affidavit of a petitioner may speak "to the best of his knowledge and belief," as well as to matters absolutely within his personal cognisance. Tourle v. Tourle, 1 Sw. & Tr. 165; 27 L. J., Mat. 52; 6 W. R. 544.

—— Description of Deponent.]—The affidavit of a married woman must state the description of her husband, and that of an unmarried woman should give the description of her parents in order to comply with the rules. Ellam v. Ellam, 62 L. T. 331.

Not Usable as Evidence.]—Affidavits filed with a petition and an answer cannot, at the hearing, be referred to as evidence by either party. Studdy v. Studdy, 28 L. J., Mat. 105.

An affidavit filed in verification of a petition should not go into a detailed statement of the history of the parties. The court may have no power to order an affidavit to be removed from the file of the court; but on a question of taxation of costs, the costs of such an affidavit would not be allowed against the other party. Forster v. Forster, 1 Sw. & Tr. 167.

The affidavit of the petitioner required by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 41, will not be taken as evidence at the hearing, but the parties must produce sufficient evidence to prove the petition independently of such affidavit. The court is bound by the rules of evidence as observed at common law. Deane v. Deane, 1 Sw. & Tr. 90; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 268.

—— Petitioner a British Consul—Solicitor.]—Where the petitioner was resident abroad as British consul, and as such was himself the only authority in the place where he resided before whom the affidavit in support of his petition for dissolution could be sworn, and by r. 142 he was not competent to swear his own affidavit, the petitioner's solicitor was allowed to verify the petition to the best of his knowledge and belief. Russell v. Russell, or Russell, Ex parte, 59 L. J., P. 13; 62 L. T. 186; 54 J. P. 167.

Filing.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, triable upon affidavits, in which there was no appearance, a motion for further time to file affidavits was granted, notwithstanding the rule of court, which directs that, "in cases to be tried upon affidavit, the petitioner and respondent shall file their affidavits within eight days from the filing of the last proceeding." Davis v. Davis, 33 L. J., Mat. 139.

An affidavit of non-payment of taxed costs and alimony to the person to whom they are ordered to be paid, cannot be read on a motion for an attachment if filed subsequently to the notice of motion. Symons v. Symons and Pike, 30 L. J., Mat. 215.

Proof by—Where Evidence Disgusting.]—In an undefended petition, the wife's evidence, being to establish cruelty of a most disgusting character against her husband, was allowed to be taken on affidavit, the rest of the case being proved orally before the court. Laxton v. Laxton, Inderwick, 47.

—— Witnesses at Long Distance.]—A husband was convicted of bigamy in 1852. The wife petitioned for a dissolution of their marriage on the ground of his bigamy and adultery. The witnesses to the facts to be proved were resident at Oldham and Huddersfield:—The judge directed that the petition might be proved by affidavit. March v. March, 2 Sw. & Tr. 49; 28 L. J., Mat. 30.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, no appearance having been entered by the respondent or co-respondent, the court made an order that the petitioner at the hearing should be at liberty to prove, by affidavits, the marriage, which had taken place in Scotland, where all the persons who could prove it resided. M'Kechnie v. M'Kechnie, 1 Sw. & Tr. 550; 28 L. J., Mat. 31.

The court will allow bigamy to be proved by affidavit where there has been a conviction, if the witnesses who would prove it reside at a distance from London, and oral proof would be expensive. Macartney v. Macartney, 36 L. J., Mat. 38; L. R. 1 P. 259; 15 L. T. 193; 15 W. R. 229.

In a husband's suit for dissolution, when the petitioner was resident in Australia, the court allowed the preliminary facts of the cohabitation and separation to be proved by affidavit. Adams v. Adams and Guest, 29 L. T. 699; 22 W. R. 192.

The marriage law of Virginia, and a marriage there, allowed to be proved by affidavit. Rooker v. Rooker and Newton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 526; 33 L. J., Mat. 42; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1329; 12 W. R. 807.

In Suit for Nullity.]—In a suit for nullity of marriage by a woman, the court, with the consent of the respondent, allowed the petitioner's evidence to be given on affidavit. B., f. c. C. v. C., 32 L. J., Mat. 135.

Order allowing Use of, must be Filed.]—When leave is granted to prove a petition by affidavit, the order granting such leave must be drawn up before hearing, and should be filed with the other papers. Webb v. Webb, 32 L. J., Mat. 63; 11 W. R. 112.

Action of Crim. Con.]—A. had obtained a divorce a mensâ et thoro, and had recovered in an action of crim. con. a verdict for nominal damages. The court refused to allow the case to be heard on affidavit, and directed it to be heard on oral evidence. Potts v. Potts, 1 Sw. & Tr. 181; 27 L. J., Mat. 59; 6 W. R. 860.

But in a similar case, the judge, on the consent of the other parties, directed A.'s petition for dissolution to be heard on affidavit. Ling v. Ling and Croker, 1 Sw. & Tr. 180; 27 L. J., Mat. 58; 6 W. R. 674; 6 W. R. 736.

Other Evidence—Proof of Marriage in Colony.]

—Proof of the solemnisation of a marriage in a British colony by a clergyman of the Church of England, according to the rites of that church, is sufficient evidence of a marriage for the purpose of a divorce. Limerick (Countess) v. Limerick (Earl), 4 Sw. & Tr. 252; 32 L. J., P. 92; 4 W. R. 503. See col. 652.

Offer to Return to Cohabitation.]—At the hearing of a petition by a wife for a judicial separation on the ground of desertion, it was attempted to show that offers to return had been made by the husband. No charge of adultery appeared on the pleadings. The respondent was asked in cross-examination whether, at the time of the alleged offers, he was not living in adultery:—Held, that such question was material to the issue, as it went to show the bona fides of such offers. Mallinson v. Mallinson, L. R. 1 P. 93; 14 W. R. 353.

Privileged Communications between Solicitor and Client.]—In a suit by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, the wife was asked, on cross-examination, whether she had not originally instructed her attorney to institute a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The question was objected to, and the objection was overruled. Maccann v. Maccann, 3 Sw. & Tr. 142; 32 L. J., Mat. 29; 8 L. T. 175; 11 W. R. 112.

By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 13, all decrees and orders, or copies of decrees or orders, of the court, sealed with the seal of the court, shall be received in evidence. See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 118—120.

When Admissible as Evidence.]—In an action for necessaries supplied by a tradesman to a wife whilst living apart from her husband, in order to establish his wife's adultery, the husband produced in evidence the record in the divorce court, in a suit by him against his wife for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, in which it was found that his wife had been guilty of adultery; but as the husband was found to have been also guilty of adultery, the judge ordinary had dismissed the suit:—Held, that such evidence was admissible under the plea of never indebted; but that, as the judgment in the divorce court had not altered the status of the wife, it was not conclusive evidence of the adultery in the action. Needham v. Bremner, 1 H. & R. 731; 35 L. J., C. P. 313; L. R. 1 C. P. 583; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 434; 14 L. T. 437; 14 W. R. 694.

When Inadmissible.]—The principle on which the common-law doctrine of estoppel rests is applicable to matrimonial suits, and, therefore, a judgment of the court upon a matter directly in issue is conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties in another suit. Sopwith v. Sopwith, 2 Sw. & Tr. 160; 30 L. J., Mat. 131; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 554; 4 L. T. 256.

B. petitioned for restitution of conjugal rights; C., in answer, alleged B.'s adultery between certain dates. B. replied, by way of estoppel, that the same charges of adultery had been put in issue in a suit for judicial separation brought by C. against him, in which she had failed to prove the adultery:—Held, that C. was not entitled, in answer to the petition for restitution, to allege the same facts of adultery which she had failed to establish in the previous suit. Ib.

A wife petitioned for judicial separation by reason of cruelty and desertion, and a decree was made in her favour on a verdict finding cruelty and desertion against the husband. He subsequently petitioned for dissolution of marriage by reason of her adultery, and she answered charging cruelty and desertion, as in her original petition. Issue was joined, and at the trial a certified copy was tendered, as evidence under seal, of the decree of judicial separation in proof of the cruelty and desertion; the judge refused to let it go to the jury, on the ground that it would be indirectly making use of evidence which was directly inadmissible. Stoate v. Stoate, 2 Sw. & Tr. 223; 30 L. J., Mat. 102; 3 L. T. 756.

A decree founded on the evidence of the parties does not estop them from controverting, in another suit in which such evidence is inadmissible, a fact found by the decree. Bancroft v. Bancroft and Rumney, 34 L. J., Mat. 14.

Queen's Proctor Intervening.]—The queen's proctor, intervening in a suit for dissolution of marriage, alleged in his answer, collusion; that in a previous suit by the petitioner against the respondent, the court found that the petitioner had committed adultery, and dismissed his petition, and adultery of the petitioner. Quære, whether the finding in the previous suit is admissible as evidence of the petitioner's adultery, and if admissible, whether it is conclusive:—Held, that, whether admissible for that purpose or not, it is a material fact for the consideration of the court. Conradi v. Conradi, 36 L. J., Mat. 68; L. R. 1 P. 391; 16 L. T. 392; 15 W. R. 881.

p. Co-Respondent.

Joinder of.]—By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 28, upon a petition presented by a husband [praying that his marriage may be dissolved on the ground that his wife has since the celebration thereof been guilty of adultery, s. 29], the petitioner shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent to the said petition, unless on special grounds, to be allowed by the court, he shall be excused from so doing;

And on every petition presented by a wife for dissolution of marriage, the court, if it see fit, may direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery be made a respondent;

And the parties or either of them may insist on having the contested matter of fact tried by a jury. See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 4—7.

Unless a petitioner can satisfy the court on affidavit that he cannot or ought not to make a co-respondent, the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 28, is imperative that he should do so. Quicke v. Quicke, 2 Sw. & Tr. 419; 31 L. J., Mat. 28; 5 L. T. 690; 10 W. R. 448.

The court will not, upon an affidavit of the petitioner only, allow him to proceed without making a co-respondent. Leader v. Leader, 32 L. J., Mat. 136.

If a petition alleges adultery with persons unknown the order of the court must be obtained dispensing with making them co-respondents, notwithstanding that there are already other co-respondents who have been served with process. Penhy v. Penhy, 51 L. J., P. 24; 7 P. D. 19; 47 L. T. 131; 30 W. R. 384.

A petitioner must make every person whom he charges in the petition with having committed adultery with his wife a co-respondent, unless he is excused from so doing by the court on special grounds. Carryer v. Carryer and Watson, 4 Sw. & Tr. 94 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 47 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 352 ; 13 L. T. 250 ; 13 W. R. 507.

A petition, by a husband, charged adultery with A. and also with divers other persons, and afterwards, in pursuance of an order of the court, particulars of the general charge were given, alleging adultery with B. After an order had been obtained by the respondent for a commission to examine B., who was abroad, the petitioner applied for leave to make B. a co-respondent. The court refused the application, on the ground that it was not bonâ fide, but solely for the purpose of excluding B.'s evidence. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 368 ; 33 L. J., Mat. 62 ; 10 L. T. 139.

Adultery of Husband — Joining alleged Adulteress.]—In a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage, the court, upon application on behalf of the person with whom it was alleged that the husband had committed adultery, directed that she be made a respondent. Bell v. Bell, 8 P. D. 217.

When Application to excuse Joining should be made.]—An application to dispense with making a co-respondent should be made at an early stage of the suit ; but, except under special circumstances, it will be allowed even after the respondent has filed her answer to the petition. Jeffers v. Jeffers, 46 L. J., P. 80 ; 2 P. D. 90 ; 25 W. R. 513.

Power of Court to Dismiss before Hearing.]—The court has power to dismiss a co-respondent from a suit before the hearing without his consent. Wilson v. Wilson and Howell, 41 L. J., Mat. 33 ; L. R. 2 P. 353 ; 26 L. T. 139 ; 20 W. R. 372.

On a petition for dissolution of marriage by a husband, the respondent appeared absolutely and the co-respondent under protest. The co-repondent filed an act on petition, in which he set out facts to show that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The petitioner filed an answer thereto, and there was a replication, and the act on petition was set down for hearing. The petitioner then applied to the court to be allowed to withdraw his answer to the act on petition, and that the co-respondent should be dismissed from the suit on the payment of his costs. The court granted the application, notwithstanding the opposition of the co-respondent. Ib.

But when the alleged adultery was of old date, the petitioner poor, and the proceedings had advanced to the motion for instructions as to the mode of trial, the court dispensed with the application required by r. 5, and made an order for trial. Pitt v. Pitt, 37 L. J., Mat. 24 ; L. R. 1 P. 464 ; 17 L. T. 671.

Adultery of Petitioner after Decree Nisi—How Co-Respondent affected by.]—The adultery of a petitioner after the date of the decree nisi, although ground for reversing the decree so far as it dissolves the marriage, is not ground for reversing that part of it which condemns the co-respondent in costs. Hulse v. Hulse and Tavernor, 41 L. J., Mat. 19 ; L. R. 2 P. 357 ; 25 L. T. 764 ; 20 W. R. 447.

A husband obtained a decree nisi, with costs. Damages were also assessed against the co-respondent, but no order was made on him for their payment. On intervention by the queen's proctor, it was proved that the husband after his marriage had led a profligate life. The court reversed the decree nisi, including that part of it which condemned the co-respondent in costs, and dismissed the petition. Ravenscroft v. Ravenscroft, 41 L. J., Mat. 28 ; L. R. 2 P. 376 ; 26 L. T. 265 ; 20 W. R. 448.

With respect to the damages the court declined to make an order on the co-respondent for payment ; at the same time expressing the opinion that it was never intended that a petitioner should be entitled to damages where the petition is dismissed, and that even where a decree is made dissolving the marriage, the petitioner has no definite or legal right to the damages, unless an order for payment to him be made by the court. Ib.

See also Youell v. Youell, 33 L. T. 578 ; 24 W. R. 59.

Leave to Dispense with Co-Respondent—Evidence.]—It is an invariable rule of practice that the court will not give leave to dispense with making a co-respondent on the uncorroborated affidavit of the petitioner only. Barber v. Barber, 65 L. J., P. 58 ; [1896] P. 73.

A wife who had been delivered of a child of which her husband was not the father confessed to having committed adultery with two men, either of whom she stated might have been the father of her child. It appeared that the husband had no evidence against either of the men, beyond the wife's confession and the birth of the child :—The court refused the husband, petitioner, leave to proceed without making a co-respondent. Jones v. Jones, 65 L. J., P. 101 ; [1896] P. 165 ; 75 L. T. 190.

"Alleged Adulterer" — Discretion.] — The words "alleged adulterer" in s. 28 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and r. 4 of the rules of 1865, mean only the person alleged by the petitioner in the petition to be the adulterer. Saunders v. Saunders, 66 L. J., P. 57 ; [1897] P. 89 ; 76 L. T. 330 ; 45 W. R. 583—C. A.

Where a petitioning husband is informed of the name of some person said to have committed adultery with his wife, but does not desire to proceed against him, and applies to the court for leave to dispense with a co-respondent, the court must exercise its discretion and decide each case on its special circumstances. There is not, and there cannot be, any settled rule applicable to all cases. Jones v. Jones (65 L. J., P. 101 ; [1896] P. 165) overruled. Ib.

The mere belief of a petitioner, founded on the evidence then before him, that a person accused of being the adulterer is not guilty, is not in itself sufficient to excuse him from making that person a co-respondent. If, however, the court is satisfied that no evidence can be obtained against the accused person, it may exercise its discretion under s. 28 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and allow the petitioner to proceed without joining him as co-respondent. Jones v. Jones (65 L. J., P. 101 ; [1896] P. 165) and Saunders v. Saunders (66 L. J., P. 57 ; [1897] P. 89) considered and explained. Edwards v. Edwards, 67 L. J., P. 1 ; [1897] P. 316 ; 77 L. T. 406.

—— Out of Jurisdiction dismissed from Suit—Costs.] — A co-respondent, after entering an appearance, unconditionally, filed an answer alleging that his domicil was German; that the adultery charged, if committed at all, was committed in Germany, and that the citation had been served on him in the United States, and claiming to be dismissed from the suit:—Held, that the co-respondent might be dismissed from the suit; but that as he had not taken the earliest opportunity of disputing the jurisdiction, he was entitled only to his costs of appearance. Grange v. Grange, 61 L. J., P. 125; [1892] P. 245; 67 L. T. 360.

—— Dead or Unknown.]—Where the alleged adulterer is dead or unknown, the petitioner should apply at once for an order to be excused from making him a co-respondent. Tollemache v. Tollemache, 28 L. J., Mat. 2.

—— One of two Alleged Adulterers Dying before Proceedings taken.]—Where an alleged adulterer has died before proceedings for a divorce have been commenced, it is necessary, if it is desired to charge such adultery against the wife, to obtain leave to dispense with making such deceased person a co-respondent, notwithstanding the fact that adultery is also charged with another person who is alive and has been made a co-respondent in the suit. Slaytor v. Slaytor, 66 L. J., P. 97; [1897] P. 85; 77 L. T. 141.

—— Wife's Confession only Evidence.]—In a petition by a husband for divorce, it appeared that the address and occupation of the alleged adulterer were known to the petitioner, but there was no evidence against him except the respondent's confession:—Held, that the petitioner could not be excused from making the adulterer a co-respondent, and that the citation must be personally served upon him as such co-respondent. Cornish v. Cornish, 59 L. J., P. 84; 15 P. D. 131; 62 L. T. 667.

Where no evidence was obtainable against the man whom the respondent had indicated as the father of one of her illegitimate children, and who was believed to be in America, the court gave the petitioner leave to proceed without citing the alleged adulterer as a co-respondent. Bagot v. Bagot, 62 L. T. 612.

The court will allow a petitioner to proceed without making the alleged adulterer a co-respondent where no evidence can be obtained against him, the only evidence that he is the adulterer being the wife's confession. Jinkings v. Jinkings, 36 L. J., Mat. 48; L. R. 1 P. 330; 15 L. T. 512.

A husband presented a petition to the court praying for a dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with two men, R. and E., both of whom were mentioned by name in the petition. The charge against E. was made on the strength of certain rumours which reached the petitioner, and which were confirmed by a statement made to the petitioner's solicitor by the respondent, to the effect that E. was the father of her illegitimate child. The man E. positively denied the truth of the respondent's statement, and, upon the petitioner and his solicitor making inquiries into the matter, no satisfactory evidence was forthcoming to support the respondent's confession. The petitioner was thereupon advised to apply to the court for leave to proceed without citing any co-respondent in respect of the adultery which resulted in the birth of the respondent's illegitimate child:—Held, that the respondent having given the name of E. as the father of her child, and his name having been inserted in the petition, he must be made a co-respondent and be served with the usual citation. Payne v. Payne, 60 L. T. 238.

A husband moved for leave to dispense with citing a certain man as co-respondent. The name of the alleged adulterer had been inserted in the husband's petition for divorce, on the strength of admissions made by the wife as to the paternity of her illegitimate child. No other evidence as to her adultery was forthcoming. The court, while expressing dissatisfaction with the practice adopted in the case of Jinkings v. Jinkings (L. R. 1 P. 330), gave the petitioner leave to proceed without citing the co-respondent. Gill v. Gill, 60 L. T. 712; 37 W. R. 623.

—— Name of Adulterer Unknown.] — Where a petition alleged that "in July, 1857, the respondent, at Birkenhead, committed adultery with a man whose name is to the petitioner unknown," the judge refused to excuse the petitioner from making a co-respondent, on an affidavit simply that the petitioner was unable to learn the name of the adulterer, but subsequently granted the application, on an affidavit that the petitioner had been informed by A. that the respondent and a man had taken furnished apartments and slept together in her house, and that she had not since seen the man, and did not know his name, though she had made efforts to discover it. Evans v. Evans, 28 L. J., Mat. 20.

A petition alleged that the wife had committed adultery with A., who was made a co-respondent, and in a fifth paragraph charged her with having committed adultery with a person unknown. On motion that the petitioner might be excused from making such unknown person a co-respondent, or be allowed to strike the fifth paragraph out of the petition:—Held, that either might be done. Hunter v. Hunter, 28 L. J., Mat. 3.

A husband petitioning for a divorce must obtain leave to proceed without making a co-respondent, although the petition charges adultery with a person unknown. Pitt v. Pitt, 37 L. J., Mat. 24; L. R. 1 P. 464; 17 L. T. 671. And see Grose v. Grose, 78 L. T. 89.

—— Countercharge by Husband against Wife.] — In a wife's petition for divorce, her husband, in his answer, made a countercharge of adultery against his wife, and prayed for a divorce. On an application made on behalf of the husband, by direction of the registrar, to be allowed to proceed without making a co-respondent, the court granted the application, but reserved the question whether it has power to make a man a co-respondent in such a suit. Curling v. Curling, 58 L. J., P. 20; 14 P. D. 13; 59 L. T. 899.

Wife a Prostitute.]—An application to proceed without making a co-respondent, granted, on the ground that the wife was living in a brothel. Hooke v. Hooke, 1 Sw. & Tr. 183; 27 L. J., M. C. 61; 6 W. R. 868.

But in a subsequent case the fact that the wife was a common prostitute was held insufficient to induce the court to dispense with a co-respondent. Quicke v. Quicke, 2 Sw. & Tr. 419; 31 L. J., P. 28; 5 L. T. 690.

Where the wife was alleged to be leading the life of a common prostitute and to have committed adultery with several persons, who were necessary witnesses to enable the petitioner to establish the charges of adultery, he was allowed to proceed without making a co-respondent. Peters v. Peters and Willett, 3 Sw. & Tr. 264.

Other Special Grounds for excusing Joinder of.]—The fact of a husband having brought an action of crim. con., and recovered damages against the adulterer, does not form special grounds on which the court will excuse the husband from making the adulterer a co-respondent. Armitage, In re, 1 Sw. & Tr. 71 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 4 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 56 ; 6 W. R. 222.

A husband had obtained a sentence of divorce a mensâ et thoro, in the ecclesiastical court, by reason of his wife's adultery, and had recovered damages in an undefended action of crim. con. from B., who was at the Cape of Good Hope, he was allowed to proceed without making B. a co-respondent. Tomkin v. Tomkin, 1 Sw. & Tr. 182 ; 27 L. J., P. 54.

—— Affidavits in support.]—Upon a motion to dispense with citation of any person as a co-respondent, an affidavit by the petitioner is indispensable. Drinkwater v. Drinkwater, 60 L. T. 398.

—— Names of Co-Respondents omitted from Daily List and from Term List—Duty of Solicitor.]—It is the duty of the petitioner's solicitor to see that the cause is correctly described in the official term list and in the daily cause list, and the court refused to allow the case to proceed where the names of the co-respondents were omitted ; but the case being undefended, allowed it to proceed on the following day, the correct description of the case being given in the list for that day. Onslow v. Onslow, 60 L. T. 680.

—— Former Petition still on File.]—The court refused to pronounce a decree where it appeared that a former petition of the same petitioner, which had been struck out some time previously, still remained on the files of the court. Ib.

Dying during Pendency of Suit.] — Semble, that when a co-respondent dies pending a suit for dissolution of marriage, a motion should be made for leave to strike his name out of the proceedings. Sutton v. Sutton, 32 L. J., Mat. 156.

Answer of Co-Respondent.]—A co-respondent may set up, in answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of the adultery of a wife, conduct of the petitioner, which, under the proviso to s. 31 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, would give the court a discretionary power to dismiss the petition, but he cannot give evidence of it unless it is pleaded. Seddon v. Seddon and Doyle, 30 L. J., Mat. 12 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 147.

He is not precluded by that section from pleading it by the insertion in the petition of a claim for damages, though such a defence could not have been pleaded to an action for criminal conversation, the meaning of that section being that in such a case the question of damages is to be dealt with, not that the record is to be framed in the same manner as in an action for criminal conversation. Ib.

Omitting to put in Answer — Position at Trial.]—A co-respondent who puts in no answer and yet appears is not entitled to address the jury in mitigation of damages, or to cross-examine with that view. Lyne v. Lyne and Blackney, 37 L. J., Mat. 9 ; 17 L. R. 1 P. 508 ; L. T. 29 ; 16 W. R. 159.

A co-respondent, if he has put in no answer to the petition, is no party to the issue to be tried by the jury. Tourle v. Tourle, 1 Sw. & Tr. 176.

Calling Co-Respondent as a Witness—12 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 11.]—Before this enactment, the co-respondent so long as he remained a party to the record was not a competent witness. Robinson v. Robinson and Lane, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362 ; 27 L. J., Mat. 91 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 392. See col. 913.

Right of Co-Respondent to Cross-examine.]—As to right of co-respondent to cross-examine respondents who have given evidence against him. See Allen v. Allen and Bell, 63 L. J., P. 120 ; [1894] P. 248 ; 70 L. T. 783; 42 W. R. 549—C. A. And cols. 934, 908–9.

Husband's Answer Countercharging Adultery—Permission to alleged Adulterer to intervene.]—Where in a wife's suit for dissolution of marriage the husband in his answer charged his wife with having committed adultery with a specified person, but did not pray for a dissolution of the marriage, the court allowed the alleged adulterer to intervene and file an answer. Wheeler v. Wheeler, 58 L. J., P. 65 ; 14 P. D. 154 ; 61 L. T. 306.

Proof of Identity of Co-respondent — Undefended Action.]—In undefended divorce actions the co-respondent must at the trial be proved to be the person served with the citation, unless an order has been obtained for leave to proceed without making a co-respondent. Duff v. Duff, 58 L. T. 389 ; 52 J. P. 232. See col. 911.

q. Compromise of Suit.

Capacity of Wife.]—A wife as party to a matrimonial suit may bind herself by a compromise. Hooper v. Hooper, 30 L. J., P. 49.

Court will Enforce.]—Where a wife has instituted a suit for a divorce, an agreement between husband and wife alone for compromise of suit will be supported, provided it contains no stipulations which the court cannot enforce. In this case, provisions as to custody of children :—Held, incapable of being enforced, and demurrer to bill for specific performance allowed. Vansittart v. Vansittart, 4 Kay & J. 63 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 222; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 276; 6 W. R. 238. Affirmed, 2 De G. & J. 249 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 289; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 519; 6 W. R. 389.

Not against Public Policy.]—An agreement to put an end to a suit for nullity of marriage, on the ground of impotency, is not void as against public policy. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405. Affirmed, 1 H. L. Cas. 538. And see Hart v. Hart, 50 L. J., Ch. 697 ; 18 Ch. D. 670 ; 45 L. T. 13 ; 30 W. R. 8.

—— Agreement for Separation.]—The court will enforce the due performance of a deed for separation and arrangement between husband and wife; and the discontinuance of a suit for a divorce by her, held a sufficient consideration; nor would a stipulation for his performance of the deed, and acting "according to the spirit and intention of the deed," and partaking of certain benefits in the establishments proposed, render it void for uncertainty. Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45; 15 L. J., Ch. 17; 9 Jur. 1022.

—— Incomplete Agreement—Release of Jointure.]—A married woman was entitled by an ante-nuptial settlement to a jointure rent-charge after her husband's death secured upon his real estates in Ireland. The wife having left him, the husband commenced a suit for restitution of conjugal rights; with a view to a compromise by an agreement for separation a document was drawn up and signed by the husband, which stipulated that the wife should release part of her jointure. The wife signed this document, with a qualification that no further steps were to be taken in the matrimonial suit, but it was not stayed or dismissed. A deed was prepared to carry out the terms of the compromise and was executed by the husband, but the wife refused to execute it or to return to her husband, and the husband afterwards died:—Held, that the wife was not, when she signed the document, in all respects in the same position as a feme sole, and that even if any final agreement had been come to she would not have been bound by it, there having been no acknowledgment as required by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, ss. 68, 71; and that specific performance of the agreement to release her jointure could not be decreed against her. Hunt v. Hunt (4 De G. F. & J. 221) and Besant v. Wood (12 Ch. D. 605) commented on. Cahill v. Cahill, 8 App. Cas. 420; 49 L. T. 605; 31 W. R. 861.—H. L. (Ir.)

Filing Terms.]—In an undefended suit for judicial separation, terms were signed before the case came into the list, the parties agreeing "to an order of the court staying proceedings . . . upon the terms hereinbefore contained, except for the purpose of carrying out and enforcing such terms." Upon the case coming into the day's cause list and being called on, counsel for the petitioner asked that the proceedings be stayed, and that the terms be filed with the object of making them a rule of court thereafter, if it should become necessary to do so:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction. Howard v. Howard, 77 L. T. 140.

Payment to Petitioner to Withdraw.]—An agreement by a petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage to withdraw from the suit, in consideration of a sum of money paid and to be secured by the co-respondent, is a fraud on 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, and void as against public policy. Gipps v. Hume, 2 John. & H. 517; 31 L. J., Ch. 37; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1301: 5 L. T. 307; 10 W. R. 38.

Institution of Fresh Proceedings—Breach of Faith.]—In 1860 a wife filed a petition for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and cruelty. When the cause came on for trial, it was withdrawn from the jury by agreement of the parties, the wife undertaking not to institute other proceedings in the divorce court. In 1862 the wife instituted a fresh suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty, the acts of misconduct alleged in the petition being, with the exception of some acts of adultery and cruelty, committed prior to the first petition and not included within it, and of some acts of adultery of later date, the same as those charged in the first petition. The respondent pleaded the agreement in bar. Upon an application by the petitioner for directions as to the mode of trial, the court refused to make any order, upon the ground that the institution of the second suit was a gross breach of good faith, and a violation of the agreement by which the petitioner had surrendered irrevocably any legal right to relief in respect of misconduct prior to the first petition:—Held, that the suit could not be sustained, inasmuch as it was founded in part upon acts which had occurred before the date of the first petition, and which were released by the agreement. Rowley v. Rowley, L. R. 1 H. L. 63.

Compromise in France.]—Where an Englishman married a Frenchwoman and they resided in France, where their children were born, and suits were instituted between them in both countries, and were compromised by an agreement, of which part was that the wife would facilitate proceedings for a divorce, and another part was that one of the children should remain with his mother, and a third part related to the payment of an allowance to the wife:—Held, that even supposing the parties to be domiciled in France, and the agreement to be governed by French law, and to be valid according to that law and to have been performed as to the parts which were invalid according to English law, it could not be enforced here as to any part of it. Hope v. Hope, 8 De G. M. & G. 731; 26 L. J., Ch. 417; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 5 W. R. 387.

Powers of Registrar—Agreement to Separate—Marriage Contract under French Law—Deed drawn by Registrar—Variation of Conditions of Contract.]—In a suit by the wife for dissolution of marriage, the parties at the hearing agreed on certain terms of separation which were made an order of court, and it was referred to the registrar to draft a deed of separation embodying these terms, with the usual clauses, and with full power to determine all questions as to the form of the deed, and all questions arising out of the terms of the settlement. The parties, being English subjects, had been married in Paris, and the marriage contract declared that they adopted the French law as ruling the civil conditions of their marriage. The contract stipulated that the parents of the petitioner, as her dowry, should pay various sums to the husband, the wife, and the children, under certain circumstances; and also contained various conditions as to the investment and devolution of property acquired by the wife at and after her marriage, the power of disposing of property movable and immovable by the husband and wife, mutually in each other's favour, the mutual liability for debts contracted by either:—Held, that, under the terms of the agreement, the registrar had power to determine the questions arising under the French law as to whether a separation of bodies effected a separation of goods, or whether a separation of goods was brought about by the agreement, even though a contrary effect might be inferred from its terms, and, also, whether an intention that separation of goods should not take place could be gathered from the agreement:—But, held, further that the parties, on signing the agreement, could only be taken to have intended that the deed should embody and carry out the modifications of the marriage contract relating to the respective proportions of the income to be paid to the husband and wife, and to the giving up by the husband of all articles belonging to the wife—and that the registrar had exceeded his powers in dealing with the pecuniary relations of the parties under the other terms of the marriage contract. De Ricci v. De Ricci, [1891] P. 378.

Costs—Agreement to Pay—Power to make Agreement an Order of Queen's Bench Division.]—An action for judicial separation in the divorce division was compromised by the parties, and an agreement of compromise signed by them which provided that a separation deed should be executed; that the agreement might be made a rule of the high court, and that the respondent should pay the petitioner's taxed costs. A separation deed was afterwards executed, but the respondent refused to pay the taxed costs, and the agreement was made an order of the queen's bench division for the purpose of enforcing payment:—Held, that there was power to make the agreement an order of court in the queen's bench division, and that as the agreement of compromise had been reduced to an agreement to pay costs, the discretion of the court to make the order had been rightly exercised. Smythe v. Smythe, 56 L. J., Q. B. 217; 18 Q. B. D. 544; 56 L. T. 197; 35 W. R. 346.

"Costs of Suit"—Judicial Separation—Agreement for Compromise—Separation Deed—Costs of Preparation of Deed.]—An agreement for the compromise of a suit for judicial separation provided (inter alia) for the execution of a separation deed, and that the respondent should pay the costs of the petitioner's suit:—Held, that the costs of the preparation, &c., of the separation deed were not included. Lancaster v. Lancaster, 65 L. J., P. 34; [1896] P. 118; 74 L. T. 64; 44 W. R. 450—C. A.

Suit remaining on Court Book.]—So long as the suit remains on the court book the court cannot consider as binding any agreement to compromise made by counsel of parties in a matrimonial suit, but is bound to hear such suit if either party desires it after such agreement made. Hayward v. Hayward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 333. And see col. 886.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 40, 44—47.

Setting down Cause for.]—Where five months had elapsed since the court had directed that a cause should be tried without a jury, and the petitioner had not set down the cause for trial, the court, on the application of the respondent, gave him leave to set it down for trial if the petitioner should not do so within a fortnight. Hare v. Hare, 3 Sw. & Tr. 218; 32 L. J., Mat. 7; 8 L. T. 703.

If a petitioner delays filing the record and setting down the cause as ready for trial for the space of one month from the final settling of the record, the respondent may file the record and set the cause down as ready for trial; or the respondent may take a rule to show cause why the petition should not be dismissed. Stuart v. Stuart, 3 Sw. & Tr. 219; 32 L. J., Mat. 110; 8 L. T. 703; 11 W. R. 463.

Notice—Sufficiency of Letter.]—A letter to the respondent's solicitor that a cause has been set down for trial is a sufficient notice of trial within Divorce Rule 44, although no formal notice may have been given. Fluister v. Fluister and Hutton, 66 L. J. P. 33; [1897] P. 22—C.A.

—— Filing Minutes.] — If the minutes, required by the practice of the court to be filed before the hearing, are not so filed, the cause will be struck out of the list. Murphy v. Murphy, 31 L. J., Mat. 162.

Mode of—Generally.]—Where issue has been joined, the court will not refuse to give directions as to the mode of trial, as such refusal is tantamount to a dismissal of the petition, and cannot be appealed from to the house of lords. Rowley v. Rowley, 34 L. J., Mat. 97; 12 L. T. 315.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the respondent and co-respondent traversed the adultery, and the respondent further countercharged adultery and cruelty. The petitioner having allowed the time for filing a replication to the respondent's answer to expire without replying or obtaining further time, the respondent moved the court to order the trial of this cause:—Held, that the pleadings being incomplete, the court could not order the mode of trial. Broadwood v. Broadwood and St. Alban's, 34 L. J., Mat. 10.

Where a respondent has failed to enter an appearance within the time named in the citation, the court may be moved, after the lapse of such period, for directions as to the mode of trial. Wood v. Wood and Hutchins, 36 L. J., Mat. 48; L. R. 1 P. 266; 15 L. T. 418.

When the pleadings are complete, the court will, upon the application of a petitioner, direct the mode of trial, although he may not have complied with an order to furnish particulars of a charge in the petition. Gough v. Gough and Baynton, 32 L. J., Mat. 128.

A citation must be returned into and filed in the registry, even where personal service has been dispensed with, before the court will give directions as to the mode of trial. Cook v. Cook and Quaile, 2 Sw. & Tr. 50; 28 L. J., Mat. 37; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 103.

Before a petitioner applies to the court to direct the mode of hearing, an affidavit should be filed that search has been made for an appearance by the respondent, although service of a citation and copy of a petition upon him may have been dispensed with. Cooke v. Cooke and Lucy, 28 L. J., Mat. 56.

When the parties in a suit for dissolution of marriage are at issue, and a commission to examine witnesses has been obtained, the court will direct the mode of trial without waiting for the return of the commission. Graham v. Graham and Griffith, 31 L. J., Mat. 96, n.

By Jury — Discretion of Court.] — Though neither of the parties desires a jury, the court may still direct the issues to be tried before one. Ratcliffe v. Ratcliffe, 1 Sw. & Tr. 217; 27 L. J., Mat. 60; 6 W. R. 866.

Where facts are in dispute before a full court, it is the most convenient mode of trial; but where the principal issues were addressed to the discretion of that court, it directed the petition to be heard without a jury. Ib.

The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, ss. 28, 36, leave it in the discretion of the court to direct the issues in a suit for judicial separation to be tried by a jury; but the court will generally make such order at the prayer of either party, and in a particular case did so on the undertaking of the respondent not to interfere with or annoy the petitioner pending the suit. Marchmont v. Marchmont, 1 Sw. & Tr. 228; 27 L. J., Mat. 59; 6 W. R. 870.

The power given to the court to direct questions of fact arising in proceedings under the act, to be tried before a jury, does not extend to issues raised between the parties, on matters which, under the proviso to s. 31, give the court a discretion as to dissolving a marriage, though the petitioner's case may have been proved. Kretzschmar v. Kretzschmar and Reinecker, 28 L. J., Mat. 128.

Although in a suit for judicial separation the court may in its discretion refuse to direct that questions of fact be tried by a jury, it will generally, at the request of either of the parties, allow a jury. The circumstance that cruelty is in issue is no ground for refusing a jury. Taylor v. Taylor, 32 L. J., Mat. 126; 9 L. T. 24.

In suits other than those for dissolution of marriage, the court may, in its discretion, refuse to order the cause to be tried by a jury. Ricketts v. Ricketts, 35 L. J., Mat. 92; 13 L. T. 761.

The answer to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights alleged the impotence of the petitioner, and prayed for a decree of nullity of marriage. The court refused to allow the issue joined on the answer to be tried by a jury, although the respondent asked for one. Ib.

The determination of issues of fact raised by pleas to the discretion of the court under the proviso to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, rests solely with the court. Where a cause is tried by a jury, a jury may be asked for a verdict upon such issues as an assistance to the court in forming its opinion, but their verdict may be dispensed with. There is no identity in legal effect between the written statement of questions of fact to be tried, prepared under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 38, and the nisi prius record in an action. Narracott v. Narracott and Hesketh, 3 Sw. & Tr. 408; 33 L. J., Mat. 132; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 640; 10 L. T. 389; 12 W. R. 1064.

—— No one Appearing.]—Where a jury has been sworn to try issues, and neither of the parties appears, the court will discharge the jury. Haydon v. Haydon and Cooke, 30 L. J., Mat. 112.

Of Issue in another Court—Wishes of Husband.]—The court will not direct the issues of fact in a matrimonial suit to be tried in another court against the wishes of the husband, at whose cost the litigation is carried on. Snowball v. Snowball, 40 L. J., Mat. 56; L. R. 2 P. 263; 24 L. T. 673; 19 W. R. 787.

Two Co-Respondents — Issues Tried Separately.]—A petition alleged adultery between a respondent and co-respondent A. A. appeared to the citation served upon him, but did not file any answer. The petition was subsequently amended by alleging adultery with co-respondent B. B. appeared and denied the charge. The questions at issue were directed to be tried before the court and a special jury. On the application of B., and on the condition that he should pay any extra costs to which the petitioner might be put by the order, the court ordered that the questions at issues against B. should be tried separately from and before those against A. Cox v. Cox, Reade and Tobin, 40 L. J., Mat. 23; L. R. 2 P. 201; 24 L. T. 237; 19 W. R. 512.

By Full Court.]—The judge will not, except for some sufficient reason, order a suit which he is empowered by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, to hear alone, to be heard before the full court. The desire of one of the parties that it may be so heard, and the probability that difficult questions of law may arise at the hearing, do not constitute a sufficient reason. Bevan f. c. McMahon v. McMahon, 30 L. J., Mat. 23.

Where the papers required by the practice of the court to be delivered to the judges of the full court three days before the hearing of a cause have not been delivered, the court will order the cause to be struck out of the list. Evans v. Evans, 29 L. J., Mat. 53.

At Assizes.]—When an issue is ordered to be tried at the assizes, it should be framed as an issue sent by the court of chancery. Hogg v. Hogg, 32 L. J., Mat. 209.

Upon a petition for dissolution of marriage, it appearing that by far the greater part of the witnesses to the facts in the suit resided at a great distance from London, the court directed issues upon the charges and counter-charges of adultery and cruelty to be tried at the assizes. Richardes v. Richardes and Jones, 30 L. J., Mat. 48.

Hearing Suits in Camerâ.]—In every matrimonial suit, which before the Divorce Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85) might have been determined in an ecclesiastical court, the judge may, if he considers the circumstances of the case to require it, direct that the hearing shall take place in private. A. v. A., or Anstey v. Anstey, 44 L. J., Mat. 15; L. R. 3 P. 230; 31 L. T. 801; 23 W. R. 386.

The court has power to hear suits for restitution of conjugal rights in camerâ. Ib.

In a wife's suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the husband filed an answer involving charges of unnatural offences. The court ordered the cause to be heard in camerâ, but intimated that if in the course of the inquiry it should turn out that the matters involved were not of such a nature as to make it necessary that the case should be heard in private, it would order the public to be admitted. Ib.

As to contempt for publishing proceedings heard in camerâ, see col. 951.

Staying Proceedings—Costs of former Trial Unpaid.]—A petitioner, having failed in a suit for dissolution on the ground of his wife's adultery with A., instituted another suit of a similar nature, on the ground of her adultery with B. The court held the causes of action to be different, and refused an application to stay proceedings in the second suit until the costs of the former should have been paid. Yeatman v. Yeatman and Rummell, 39 L. J., P. 37; 21 L. T. 647; 18 W. R. 232.

—— In Cross Suits.]—Where cross-suits had been instituted by a husband for dissolution and by the wife for judicial separation, in which the same issues were raised, the court stayed the proceedings in the wife's suit, which had been commenced after that of the husband, until after the hearing of his suit. Osborne v. Osborne and Martelli, 3 Sw. & Tr. 327; 33 L. J., Mat. 38; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 9 L. T. 456.

There being cross-issues of adultery in a husband's petition for dissolution standing for trial before a jury, the judge suspended his judgment until these issues were disposed of. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 2 Sw. & Tr. 544; 5 L. T. 771.

—— To obtain Evidence.]—In a suit promoted by the husband, by reason of the adultery of the wife, the proof of the guilt of the wife was conclusive, and she had also in terms admitted it. An application on her behalf to stay the proceedings, to enable her to examine witnesses resident in India and Australia, to prove condonation on the part of the husband, was rejected, and sentence of separation pronounced. Campbell v. Campbell, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 845; 5 W. R. 519.

Where on evidence in support of an undefended petition for dissolution of marriage by reason of the husband's adultery, cruelty, and desertion, a doubt arose as to whether the parties had not voluntarily separated, the court ordered the case to be adjourned to have further evidence produced. Ward v. Ward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 185; 27 L. J., P. 63; 6 W. R. 867.

When a petitioner at the trial opened evidence which was admissible on the record but took the other parties by surprise, the court adjourned the trial and, as the adjournment was made necessary by the conduct of both parties, refused to make any order as to the costs of such adjournment. The jury was dismissed by consent of all parties. Bancroft v. Bancroft and Rumney, 3 Sw. & Tr. 610; 11 L. T. 515; 13 W. R. 506.

Where an adjournment was granted on the ground of surprise, at the instance of the respondent, in respect of a charge of adultery with a person other than the co-respondent, it was granted on the understanding that the co-respondent should not be prejudiced as to costs by such adjournment. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 4 Sw. & Tr. 63.

The court will not postpone the trial of a cause on the application of one of the parties, if no notice of the motion has been given to the other party. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 2 Sw. & Tr. 514; 30 L. J., Mat. 198; 5 L. T. 120.

Omitting to put in Answer—Position at Trial.]—A co-respondent who puts in no answer and yet appears is not entitled to address the jury in mitigation of damages, or to cross-examine with that view. Lyne v. Lyne and Blackney, 37 L. J., Mat. 9; L. R. 1 P. 508; 17 L. T. 29; 16 W. R. 159.

Allegations Untraversed.] — A respondent's counsel may not, in a suit by a husband against his wife by reason of her adultery, controvert allegations of a petition not denied by the answer; but, on the assumption that such allegations are true, he may cross-examine the witnesses and address the court for the purpose of showing that a decree ought not to be pronounced for a dissolution. Tollemache v. Tollemache, 1 Sw. & Tr. 557; 30 L. J., Mat. 113.

Settling Questions of Fact for Jury.]—By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 38, when any question of fact shall be ordered to be tried by a special or common jury (s. 36), such question shall be reduced into writing in such form as the court shall direct.

What Issues will be Tried.]—On a petition for dissolution of marriage, when a record is drawn up in order that the case may be tried before a jury, only the issues stated on the record are to be proved at the trial before the jury, by either party. Tourle v. Tourle, 1 Sw. & Tr. 176.

A co-respondent, if he has put in no answer to the petition, is no party to the issue to be tried by the jury. Ib.

Where the questions of fact raised by the pleadings have been stated in the form of a record, the issues to be tried by the jury must be taken to be those stated in the record, although they may not be identical with those raised in the pleadings. Cherry v. Cherry, 1 Sw. & Tr. 319; 28 L. J., Mat. 36.

Rehearing.]—By r. 62 of the Rules in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, an application for the rehearing of a cause should be made to a divisional court. Heyes v. Heyes, 36 W. R. 527.

—— Ordered as to One Charge.]—A wife having charged her husband with cruelty by the communication of disease, and also by personal violence, the court found that the charge of communication of disease was not proved, and that the charge of personal violence was proved. On the application of the husband, a rule for the rehearing of the issue which had been found against him was made absolute, on the ground of surprise: but the rehearing was ordered to be confined to the charge of personal violence, and not to extend to the charge of infection. Lee v. Lee, 41 L. J., Mat. 85; L. R. 2 P. 409; 27 L. T. 324.

Conduct of Cause—Right of Beginning.]—Where a respondent in her answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage has not traversed the adultery alleged in the petition, but sets up counter-charges of adultery, cruelty, and misconduct, upon which counter-charges issue has been joined, upon a trial of these issues before a jury, it is for the respondent to begin. Bacon v. Bacon and Bacon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 53; 29 L. J., Mat. 61.

When these issues have been disposed of by the jury, it is not competent to the respondent to cross-examine the witnesses called to establish the allegations in the petition, either as to these allegations or as to the counter-charges contained in the answer. Ib.

A husband petitioned for dissolution of marriage, by reason of his wife's adultery. She denied the adultery, alleged nullity of marriage by reason of incurable impotency of the husband, and prayed for a decree of nullity. At the hearing, the wife's counsel claimed to go into the question of nullity first:—Held, that as the wife had traversed, though argumentatively, the marriage alleged, the petitioner had a right to begin. Serrell v. Serrell and Bamford, 2 Sw. & Tr. 422; 31 L. J., Mat. 55; 5 L. T. 691.

Order of addressing Jury.]—The counsel for the respondent is entitled to address the court before the counsel for the co-respondent, but this may be varied by arrangement between the counsel. Robinson v. Robinson and Lane, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362; 27 L. J., Mat. 91; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 392.

Where, by such arrangement, the co-respondent's counsel first addressed the court, and examined the witnesses, the counsel for the respondent was not allowed to cross-examine such witnesses. Ib.

Examining and Cross-examining Witnesses, and Addressing Court.]—The co-respondent's counsel cannot cross-examine a witness upon such part of his evidence as is not evidence as against the co-respondent. Pearman v. Pearman and Burgess, 29 L. J., Mat. 54.

The co-respondent's counsel, by examining the witnesses of the respondent, adopts them as his own. Glennie v. Glennie and Bowles, 3 Sw. & Tr. 109; 32 L. J., Mat. 17; 7 L. T. 696; 11 W. R. 28.

But if he calls no witnesses, he should address the court after the opening speech of the respondent's counsel. Ib.

A co-respondent from whom damages are claimed, who has appeared, but has not filed an answer, cannot at the hearing cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, nor address the jury upon the question of damages. He is, however, entitled to be heard upon the question of costs, recall and cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, and address the court. Lyne v. Lyne and Blackney, 37 L. J., Mat. 9; L. R. 1 P. 508; 15 L. T. 512.

After a cause has been heard, and before judgment given, the court will not allow either party to introduce additional evidence, except by the consent of the other party. Gipps v. Gipps and Hume, 3 Sw. & Tr. 116.

Where, in a suit for a judicial separation by a wife against her husband on the ground of cruelty, the husband conducts his own case, the most convenient course is that he should at once call his witnesses without making an opening speech, then give his evidence, and reserve any comments on the case for his summing up. Curtis v. Curtis, 27 L. J., Mat. 73.

Dismissing from Suit.]—The court has no power to dismiss a co-respondent from a suit on the ground of delay in prosecuting the suit. The application in such a case should be for a rule nisi for the dismissal of the petition. Hancock v. Hancock and Smith, 36 L. J., Mat. 86; L. R. 1 P. 334. See col. 888.

Judge's Notes.]—Semble, upon a second trial of the same issues, the judge's notes of evidence of deceased witnesses who were examined on the first trial are not admissible except by consent. Conradi v. Conradi, Worrall and Way, 37 L. J., Mat. 55; L. R. 1 P. 514; 18 L. T. 659; 16 W. R. 1023.

Withdrawing Record.]—When issues raised in a suit for dissolution of marriage come on for trial by a jury, a petitioner will not be allowed to withdraw the record, but on his application, if there is no opposition by the other parties, the petition will be dismissed. Ryder v. Ryder, 30 L. J., Mat. 164.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 62, 62A.

Motion for.]—An application to the judge ordinary for a new trial of issues of fact tried by a jury, or for a rehearing of a cause, may be made by motion within fourteen days from the day on which the issues were tried or the cause was heard, if the judge ordinary be then sitting to hear motions; if not, on the first day appointed for hearing motions in this court after the expiration of the fourteen days. Divorce Rules, 1865, r 62.

By the word "application" in this rule, notice of application is probably meant. Walker v. Walker, Nicoll and Craig, 4 Sw. & Tr. 264; 31 L. J., Mat. 26.

When a petitioner in a suit for dissolution has obtained the verdict of a jury, it is no ground for refusing to make a decree nisi that notice of an intended application for a new trial has been given. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 212; 32 L. J., Mat. 117; 9 L. T. 24; 11 W. R. 809.

—— To What Court.]—A motion for rehearing of a divorce cause which has been tried by a judge without a jury must (notwithstanding s. 1 of the Judicature Act, 1890) be made to a divisional court of the probate, divorce and admiralty division, and not to the court of appeal. Smith v. Smith, 66 L. J., P. 151; [1897] P. 293; 77 L. T. 206; 46 W. R. 24—C. A.

—— When Granted.]—Whether the rules as to granting a new trial on the ground of fresh evidence discovered showing misconduct in the petitioner are the same as in a case between ordinary litigants, quære. Howarth v. Howarth, 9 P. D. 219; 51 L. T. 872—C. A.

—— Enlargement of Time—Court of Appeal—Jurisdiction.]—Section 1 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, which requires every motion for a new trial in any cause or matter in the high court to be heard by the court of appeal, applies to divorce suits; consequently, motions for a new trial in divorce suits are now governed by the rules of the supreme court. Wilkins v. Wilkins, 65 L. J., P. 55; [1896] P. 108; 74 L. T. 62; 44 W. R. 305—C. A.

A married woman, believing her husband to be dead, went through the ceremony of marriage with another man and had several children by him. She afterwards obtained a decree for judicial separation against her second husband, the jury having found—first, that he had committed adultery; and secondly, that the first husband was dead at the time of the second marriage. The second husband, having subsequently ascertained that the first husband was alive, instituted a suit for nullity of marriage, and applied to the court of appeal for a new trial of the wife's suit, notwithstanding the expiration of the time limited for that purpose by the rules of the supreme court:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to extend the time, but that such extension ought not to be granted except upon the terms of the applicant making a suitable provision for his supposed wife. Ib.

Application—Misdirection—Grounds in Notice of Motion.]—Ord. XXXIX. r. 3—which requires that when a new trial is applied for on the ground of misdirection the particulars of the alleged misdirection should be specifically stated in the notice—is applicable to proceedings in a divorce suit. Murfett v. Smith (12 P. D. 116), followed. Taplin v. Taplin, 57 L. J., P. 79; 13 P. D. 100; 58 L. T. 925; 37 W. R. 256; 52 J. P. 406.

—— Verdict against Weight of Evidence.]—The court will not grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, unless it is dissatisfied with the verdict. That it might, on the same evidence, have come to a different conclusion itself, is not sufficient. Miller v. Miller and Hicks, 2 Sw. & Tr. 427; 31 L. J., Mat. 73; 5 L. T. 850.

That other evidence could be produced to the jury on a new trial is not sufficient, if such evidence could with reasonable diligence have been obtained before. Ib.

A rule for a new trial upon the ground that a verdict is against the weight of evidence will not be granted, unless the court is satisfied with reasonable certainty that there has been error or miscarriage. Scott v. Scott, 3 Sw. & Tr. 320; 33 L. J., Mat. 1; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1251; 9 L. T. 454; 12 W. R. 126.

The full court granted a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, although the judge ordinary, who tried the cause, was not dissatisfied with the verdict. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 608; 34 L. J., Mat. 33; 13 W. R. 414.

Where there is a conflict of evidence upon an issue of adultery (the queen's proctor intervening), the court will not grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence unless it is dissatisfied with the verdict. Gethin v. Gethin, 2 Sw. & Tr. 560; 31 L. J., Mat. 57; 5 L. T. 721; 10 W. R. 266.

The court will not grant a new trial on the ground that witnesses called upon the first trial have wilfully suppressed material facts. Ib.

—— Mistake made in Evidence.]—On trial of an issue of adultery, the jury found a verdict against the petitioner. On an affidavit by a witness called on his behalf, that she had made a mistake in an important date in giving her evidence, the court directed a new trial, the error, if there were one, being likely, in the opinion of the court, to have disturbed the judgment and misled the minds of the jury. Jago v. Jago and Graham, 3 Sw. & Tr. 103; 32 L. J., Mat. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1081; 7 L. T. 645; 11 W. R. 86.

—— Evidence Withheld by Mistake.] — A wife petitioned against her husband for a judicial separation by reason of his cruelty, and he took issue thereon. He signed a letter consenting to a decree on the suggestion of his solicitor, that if he did so, no evidence in support of the petition need be taken in court. The issue came on for trial before a special jury, who found a verdict for the petitioner. The respondent's letter was put in. The court affirmed the refusal of the judge ordinary to grant a rule for a new trial on the representation that the respondent was led by the mistaken suggestion of his solicitor to withhold evidence contradictory of the petitioner's evidence, by which his character as a gentleman and a man of honour was affected. Hill v. Hill, 2 Sw. & Tr. 407; 31 L. J., Mat. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1206; 5 L. T. 363; 10 W. R. 194.

—— Surprise.] — A wife petitioned for a dissolution of marriage by reason of her husband's adultery and cruelty. The cruelty consisted of divers acts of personal violence, and also the communication of venereal disease, and the charge of adultery rested on the same evidence as the charge of cruelty by infection. The court found that the charge of infection was not proved, and that the charge of personal violence was proved. On the application of the husband, a rule for the rehearing of the issue which had been found against him was made absolute, on the ground of surprise; but the rehearing was ordered to be confined to the charge of personal violence, and not to extend to the other charge of cruelty. Lee v. Lee, 41 L. J., Mat. 85; L. R. 2 P. 409; 27 L. T. 324.

A rule for a new trial will not be granted upon affidavits which do not show surprise, but merely state that during the trial, and after the close of the applicant's case, material evidence had come to his knowledge. Scott v. Scott, supra.

Jury Disagreeing on One Issue only.] — In a suit for dissolution of marriage by a wife by reason of the cruelty and adultery of her husband, the jury gave a verdict for her on the question of cruelty, but was unable to agree to a verdict on that of adultery, and was discharged. The court refused to allow the question of adultery only to be referred to a new jury, but gave the wife the alternative, either to have a rule, calling upon the husband to show cause why a decree of judicial separation should not be made on the ground of his cruelty, or to set down all the questions at issue, both adultery and cruelty, for a second trial. Godrich v. Godrich, 41 L. J., Mat. 45; L. R. 2 P. 392; 26 L. T. 855; 20 W. R. 616.

Petition depending on Two Points—Judge dissatisfied with Verdict on One.]—Where it is necessary for a petitioner to establish two points in order to obtain the prayer of the petition, the court would not, even if dissatisfied with the verdict of a jury on one point, send that down for a new trial, because, if a different verdict was found on that point it would not be sufficient to ground the relief prayed. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 3 Sw. & Tr. 400; 10 L. T. 510.

Issues Tried Separately.]—When there was reason to suppose that, on the trial of the husband's petition, evidence applicable to the respondent alone affected the minds of the jury against the co-respondent, the court, in making absolute the rule for a new trial, ordered that the issues should be severed, so that the charges against the co-respondent might be charged separately from those against the respondent. Barnes v. Barnes and Beaumont, 38 L. J., Mat. 9; 19 L. T. 526; 17 W. R. 75.

Inconsistent Verdict.]—An inconsistent verdict is not necessarily a ground for a new trial. It would be so if it prevented the court from ascertaining the substantial opinion of the jury. Ellaytt v. Ellaytt, Taylor and Halse, 3 Sw. & Tr. 503; 33 L. J., Mat. 137; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1035; 11 L. T. 44.

Conduct of Judge in Summing Up.]—It is no ground for a new trial that the judge in his summing up did not give as much weight to some parts of the evidence as they might have deserved. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 34 L. J., Mat. 60; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 13 W. R. 527.

As to Co-Respondents—Jury Mistaking Evidence.]—On a motion for a new trial, it was urged that the jury had been unfairly affected as against the co-respondent, by the production of a draft or a duplicate of a letter in the handwriting of the respondent, and found in her custody, there being no proof that the original or duplicate had been sent to or reached the co-respondent. The judge held, that the ground for a new trial should have been founded on an affidavit from the co-respondent that he had not in fact received such original or duplicate. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 4 Sw. & Tr. 63.

—— Verdict against Two—New Trial as to Both.]—If a verdict has been found against two co-respondents in a suit for dissolution of marriage, and the court afterwards, on an application of one of them, grants a new trial on the ground that the verdict against him was contrary to the weight of evidence, there must be a new trial as to both, and, pending that application, the petitioner is not entitled to a decree absolute as to the other. Walker v. Walker, Nicoll and Craig, 4 Sw. & Tr. 264; 31 L. J., Mat. 26.

—— Sets Aside Assessment of Damages.]—Where damages were assessed against a co-respondent, who had not entered an appearance, and a new trial was granted on the application of the respondent, who had appeared and answered, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, the rule for the new trial sets aside the assessment of damages against the co-respondent, as well as the finding that the respondent was guilty of adultery. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, 34 L. J., Mat. 33; 13 W. R. 414.

—— Co-respondent Abroad — Non-Appearance.]—A rule for a new trial having been made absolute at the instance of a respondent, the co-respondent, who had not appeared and answered, was allowed to enter an appearance, and file an answer upon satisfying the court that he had received no notice of the suit until after the verdict had been delivered: he was resident abroad, and he was ordered to give security for costs. He continued abroad when the cause came on for hearing a second time, and did not find security for costs. The court thereupon ordered his appearance and answer to be taken off the file. Ib.

Verdict on Two Issues—New Trial as to One.]—Semble, that where in a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and cruelty, she obtains a verdict upon both issues, and a new trial as to one of them is afterwards applied for, she may abandon that issue and ask for a judicial separation upon the ground of the other charge. Curtlidge v. Curtlidge, 3 Sw. & Tr. 406; 32 L. J., Mat. 126; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 552; 8 L. T. 334; 11 W. R. 750.

Filing Affidavits in Reply.]—Where a rule nisi for a new trial has been granted on affidavits, and affidavits have been filed in answer, the party obtaining the rule will not be allowed to file affidavits in reply until the rule is argued. Nicholson v. Nicholson and Ratcliffe, 32 L. J., Mat. 135; 11 W. R. 686.

Terms and Conditions.]—Where a new trial is granted on the application of a wife, the court cannot impose upon her the terms of payment of costs, if she has no means, but the husband must pay the costs of both parties. Nicholson v. Nicholson and Radcliffe, 3 Sw. & Tr. 214; 32 L. J., Mat. 127; 9 L. T. 118.

Appeal on Granting or Refusing Rule.]—The court has no power to extend the time (fourteen days) limited by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 2, for appealing against a decision of the judge ordinary granting or refusing a rule for a new trial. Boulting v. Boulting, 33 L. J., Mat. 81.

Upon an appeal from an order discharging a rule nisi for a new trial, the appellant must begin. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 3 Sw. & Tr. 361; 33 L. J., Mat. 54; 10 L. T. 138; 12 W. R. 696.

Upon such an appeal, where notice has been given to the other side, the question for the court is, not whether a rule nisi should be granted, but whether such rule should be made absolute or discharged. Ib.

—— Time for Appealing.]—An appeal from a decision of a judge of the probate division granting or refusing a new trial in the divorce court must be made within fourteen days in accordance with the Divorce Court Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 144), s. 2. Ahier v. Ahier, 54 L. J., P. 70; 10 P. D. 110; 52 L. T. 744; 33 W. R. 770—C. A.

The court has no power to extend the time for appealing limited by statute. Ib.

t. The Decree Nisi.

i. Generally.

Suspending.]—It is no ground for suspending a decree nisi after a verdict for a petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage that the respondent has given notice of an application for a new trial. Stone v. Stone and Appleton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 212; 32 L. J., Mat. 117; 9 L. T. 24; 11 W. R. 809.

Ends the Lis.]—A decree nisi for dissolution of marriage, if not appealed from, puts an end to the lis between the parties. Latham v. Latham, 2 Sw. & Tr. 299; 30 L. J., P. 163; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 219; 4 L. T. 308; 9 W. R. 680.

Affidavits Opposing.]—Where affidavits have been filed in opposition to a decree nisi, the petitioner cannot in answer file an affidavit made by himself. Stoate v. Stoate, 32 L. J., Mat. 120.

Amending or Varying.]—A decree nisi misstated, by mistake, the place where the marriage was solemnised, and the court ordered it to be amended. Skeats v. Skeats and White, 35 L. J., Mat. 47.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage by a husband, the respondent and co-respondent denied the adultery, and the co-respondent pleaded connivance. The cause was heard by the court, who pronounced a decree, the minute of which in the court book was "the judge ordinary having deliberated, by his final decree dismissed the petition," the ground of dismissal not being stated. Upon an application of the husband, the court afterwards varied the decree, by stating therein that the court was of opinion that the adultery was proved, but that the petitioner had connived at it, and thereupon dismissed the petition. Gipps v. Gipps and Hume, 32 L. J., Mat. 179; 11 W. R. 1063.

Application to shorten Interval before Decree

Absolute.]—In the absence of special circumstances the court will not shorten the interval between the decree nisi and the decree absolute even by a few days, although such refusal should have the effect of delaying the decree absolute for three months, and the application may have only been rendered necessary from the fact that during a whole term the court had been unable to sit to take cases in the list in which the suit had been entered. Rippingall v. Rippingall and Lockhart, 48 L. T. 126.

The court refused, in the absence of special circumstances, to exercise the discretionary power vested in it, and to fix a shorter period than that within which, according to the statute and the rules of the court, the decree nisi in a suit for dissolution of marriage is to be made absolute. Shelton v. Shelton and Campbell, 38 L. J., Mat. 34; 20 L. T. 232; 17 W. R. 401.

The court having directed a decree nisi to issue for dissolution of marriage, to be made absolute at the end of six months, under special circumstances allowed such decree to be varied by the introduction of the word "three" instead of the word "six," and in its discretion reduced to three months the time fixed for making such decree absolute. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 43 L. J., Mat. 13; L. R. 3 P. 136; 31 L. T. 270; 22 W. R. 267.

Appeal direct to the House of Lords on Stay of Proceedings.]—A respondent appealed from a decree nisi direct to the house of lords, on the ground that it was against the weight of evidence. When the appeal was still undisposed of, the decree nisi was, after the requisite lapse of time, pronounced absolute, notwithstanding the appeal. The latter being an improper course, is not to be allowed to operate as a stay of the proceedings in the court below. Robertson v. Robertson and Facagrossa, 44 L. T. 253.

Marrying before Time for Appealing against.]—After a decree nisi in a suit for dissolution of marriage, but before such decree had been made absolute, the petitioner went through a form of marriage, and cohabited, with a female; the court, being satisfied that he did so in ignorance of the law, and in the bonâ fide belief that his first marriage was finally dissolved, determined that it was a case in which it could exercise the discretion given to it by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, and made the decree absolute, notwithstanding such adultery of the petitioner. Noble v. Noble and Goodman, 38 L. J., Mat. 52; L. R. 1 P. 691; 20 L. T. 1016.

After a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of the adultery of the wife had been pronounced, but before the time allowed for appealing against the decree had elapsed, the wife married again:—Held, that such marriage was void. Chichester v. Mure, f. c. Chichester, 3 Sw. & Tr. 223; 32 L. J., Mat. 146; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 779; 8 L. T. 676; 11 W. R. 990.

Not made Absolute—Re-Marriage of Petitioner.]—The petitioner (the wife) obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of her marriage with the respondent. The decree was pronounced on the 17th of June, 1868, but was not made absolute, owing to inadvertence or neglect on the part of the petitioner's solicitor, who had undertaken to do all that was necessary in the matter. In the belief that the decree had been made absolute, the petitioner went through a ceremony of marriage with D. S., on the 17th of September, 1871. She afterwards lived with him as his wife and had children by him, and did not discover until May, 1880, that the decree for the dissolution of her marriage with the respondent had not been made absolute. She now applied to have the decree made absolute. No opposition was offered by the queen's proctor, and the court granted the application. Wickham v. Wickham, 49 L. J., P. 70; 6 P. D. 11; 43 L. T. 445.

Delay in Moving to make the Decree Absolute—Power to Dismiss Petition.]—In a suit by the wife for dissolution of the marriage, the petitioner obtained a decree nisi, but allowed more than a year to elapse without taking any further step to make such decree absolute:—Held, on an application by the respondent to make the decree absolute or to dismiss the petition for want of prosecution, that the petition must be dismissed unless within a week the petitioner applied to make the decree absolute. Lewis v. Lewis, 61 L. J., P. 95; [1892] P. 212; 67 L. T. 358.

Motion to Dismiss for Want of Prosecution—No Application to make Decree Absolute—Proceedings pending for Maintenance—Excuse or Delay.]—The wife obtained in February, 1889, a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage. She afterwards petitioned for permanent maintenance, and that petition was still pending, the registrar not having as yet reported thereon. In April, 1889, the husband applied to have the divorce suit dismissed for want of prosecution, in that the petitioner had not applied to have the decree nisi made absolute. The court held that the pendency of the proceedings for maintenance was a valid excuse for the delay, and dismissed the motion. Southern v. Southern, 62 L. T. 668.

Effect of.]—The status of the married woman is not affected by the pronouncing of a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage. She continues to be subject to all the disabilities of coverture until the decree is made absolute. Norman v. Villars, 46 L. J., Ex. 579; 2 Ex. D. 359; 36 L. T. 788; 25 W. R. 780—C. A.

Action for taking goods of the plaintiff. Plea: coverture of the plaintiff at the time of the alleged taking and of plea pleaded. Prior to the alleged taking a decree nisi had been pronounced for the dissolution of the plaintiff's marriage, which was made absolute after plea and before the trial:—Held, that the plaintiff was still a married woman notwithstanding the decree nisi, and that the plea was proved. Ib.

The court of chancery may dispense with the presence of the husband of a woman who has obtained a decree nisi for divorce against him, although the decree may not yet have been made absolute. Stephenson v. Strutt, 26 L. T. 690; 20 W. R. 745.

Maintenance of Children—Jurisdiction.]—The court has jurisdiction after a decree for divorce to order maintenance for children up to the age of twenty-one. Blandford v. Blandford ([1892] P. 148) overruled. Thomasset v. Thomasset, 63 L. J., P. 140; [1894] P. 295; 6 R. 637; 71 L. T. 148; 42 W. R. 658—C. A.

Injunction to restrain Dealing with the Property.]—A petitioner had obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of his marriage. Before an order could be obtained to vary the post-nuptial settlement, the respondent was about to sell or otherwise dispose of some of the property. The court granted an injunction to restrain her from dealing with it. Noakes v. Noakes, 47 L. J., P. 20; 4 P. D. 60; 37 L. T. 47; 26 W. R. 284.

Reversing.]—A decree nisi having been pronounced with costs against the co-respondent, the decree was rescinded on the ground of the petitioner's adultery committed subsequently to the date of the decree; but the order condemning the co-respondent in costs was not rescinded. Hulse v. Hulse and Tavenor, 41 L. J., Mat. 19; L. R. 2 P. 357; 25 L. T. 764; 20 W. R. 447. S. P., Holt v. Holt, 21 L. T. 401.

When the queen's proctor appeared to show cause against a decree nisi, pronounced upon the wife's cross petition, being made absolute, and filed affidavits charging adultery at other dates and places than the acts charged in the husband's petition, and affidavits were filed in answer which denied such charges, the court refused to reverse the decree upon the affidavits, but directed an issue to be settled for trial by a jury. Studholme v. Studholme and Cullum, 25 W. R. 165.

A husband in a dissolution suit had obtained a decree nisi, with costs. On the intervention of the queen's proctor he was proved to have been guilty of profligate adultery, and the court reversed the decree nisi, including that portion which condemned the co-respondent in costs. Youell v. Youell, Terrass and Burleigh, 33 L. T. 578; 24 W. R. 59.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage heard before the court and a common jury, a verdict was found against the respondent and co-respondent on the ground of adultery, and damages were assessed. A decree nisi was thereupon made, with costs against the co-respondent. The queen's proctor intervened; and ultimately it was proved that the petitioner had also been guilty of adultery. The court reversed the whole of the decree nisi, including the order for costs, and dismissed the petition. Ravenscroft v. Ravenscroft, 41 L. J., Mat. 28; L. R. 2 P. 376; 26 L. T. 265; 20 W. R. 448.

Enforcing.]—The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 52, does not empower the court to enforce its decrees, or orders for payment of money, by charging orders under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 18. Clarke v. Clarke and Clarke, 42 L. J., Mat. 72; L. R. 3 P. 57; 28 L. T. 911; 21 W. R. 776.

Rescission — Reconciliation.]—In a suit for dissolution at the instance of the wife, a decree nisi had been pronounced, but subsequently the parties came together again, and on the wife's application the decree nisi was rescinded on proof that notice had been given to the husband. Troward v. Troward, 32 W. R. 864.

—— Reconciliation—Motion to Rescind Decree—No Plea filed.]—Where, after decree nisi, the parties had become reconciled and resumed cohabitation, the court, on the motion of the queen's proctor, without requiring him to file a plea, rescinded the decree nisi and dismissed the petition, on being satisfied of the facts. Flower v. Flower, 63 L. J., P. 28; [1893] P. 290; 1 R. 534.

Condonation and Agreement to Conceal—Collusion — Subsequent Adultery — Decree Rescinded.]—A petitioner having obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage was subsequently visited by the respondent. There was a mutual agreement to keep these visits from the knowledge of the court. The respondent was at the time cohabiting with another woman:—Held, that the subsequent adultery of the respondent would revive the condoned offences, but that the agreement to conceal the condonation amounted to collusion, and therefore the decree nisi must be rescinded. Rogers v. Rogers, 63 L. J., P. 97; [1894] P. 161; 6 R. 650; 70 L. T. 699.

—— Death of Petitioner after—Revivor.]—A husband who had obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of his marriage died before the time for making it absolute had arrived:—Held, that the legal personal representative of the husband could not revive the suit for the purpose of applying to make the decree absolute. Stanhope v. Stanhope, 55 L. J., P. 36; 11 P. D. 103; 54 L. T. 906; 34 W. R. 446; 50 J. P. 276—C. A.

ii. Making Absolute.

29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 3.]—By 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 3, no decree nisi for a divorce shall be made absolute until after the expiration of six calendar months from the pronouncing thereof, unless the court shall, under the power now vested in it, fix a shorter time. And see Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 80, 194, 207.

A petitioner obtained a decree for the dissolution of his marriage by reason of the misconduct of his wife, unless sufficient cause was shown to the contrary within three months. After this decree had been made, the above enactment came into operation:—Held, that the enactment applied to all suits in existence at the time it came into operation; but that, as the court had in all decrees nisi granted before that time fixed a shorter period than six months (namely, three months), at the termination of which they should be made absolute, such decrees would come under the exception contained in the above section. Watton v. Watton and Oastler, 35 L. J., Mat. 95; L. R. 1 P. 227; 14 L. T. 742; 15 W. R. 288.

An application to make absolute a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage should be supported by affidavits of search for appearance by any person, and of non-appearance; and, if an appearance has been entered, that no affidavits in opposition to the decree have been filed. Boddy v. Boddy and Grover, 30 L. J., Mat. 95.

An affidavit to found a motion to make absolute a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage should show that search was made in the registry at a recent date. Stone v. Stone and Brownrigg, 2 Sw. & Tr. 113; 32 L. J., Mat. 7; 7 L. T. 757.

Upon a motion to make a decree of dissolution of marriage absolute, a copy of the decree nisi should be filed. Fowler v. Fowler, 31 L. J., Mat. 31.

The power given by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, to show cause why a decree should not be made absolute "by reason of material facts not brought before the court," is not limited to cases in which the facts occurred before the decree nisi; and a material fact, such as the adultery of the petitioner, although it occurred after the decree nisi, is a ground for refusing to make the decree absolute. Hulse v. Hulse and Tavenor, 40 L. J., Mat. 51 ; L. R. 2 P. 259 ; 24 L. T. 847 ; 19 W. R. 880.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, does not empower the court to withhold a decree of dissolution of marriage on the ground of the suppression of material facts by a petitioner, when it appears upon all the facts being disclosed to the court that the petitioner is entitled to a decree. Alexandre v. Alexandre, 39 L. J., Mat. 84 ; L. R. 2 P. 164 ; 23 L. T. 268 ; 18 W. R. 1087.

A petition contained two charges of adultery, and alleged that neither of them had been condoned. The queen's proctor intervened, and proved condonation of one adultery, but not of the other, and the court made a decree absolute on the ground of the uncondoned adultery, notwithstanding the suppression of the material fact of the condonation of the other adultery. Ib.

Application, by whom made.] — The court will not upon the application of the respondent make a decree nisi absolute for nullity of marriage by reason of the impotence of the respondent. Halfen or Halpin (otherwise Boddington) v. Boddington, 50 L. J., P. 61 ; 6 P. D. 13 ; 44 L. T. 252 ; 29 W. R. 444.

Where a decree nisi had been pronounced on the husband's petition, and the queen's proctor had intervened on information furnished by the wife, but had subsequently withdrawn his intervention, the court declined to suspend the decree absolute on the wife's application :—Held, that if the wife was dissatisfied with the verdict, she should have procured its review, not by setting the queen's proctor in motion, but by moving for a new trial. Pattenden v. Pattenden and Herzfield, 19 L. T. 612.

A petition having been presented for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of the adultery of the wife, and a decree nisi made, the husband failed to apply to the court within reasonable time to have such decree made absolute. On an application to that effect on behalf of the respondent :—Held, that the power of the court in dissolving a marriage can only be exercised on the application of an innocent party. Ousey v. Ousey and Atkinson, 45 L. J., P. 33 ; 1 P. D. 56 ; 33 L. T. 789 ; 24 W. R. 436.

As the application for a decree absolute is a material step in the cause, if the petitioner fails to take it within reasonable time, it would seem that the respondent may call upon him to do so, or show cause why the decree nisi should not be revoked and the petition be dismissed for want of prosecution. Ib. And see Lewis v. Lewis, col. 942.

Showing Cause — Affidavits.] — When affidavits filed by a person showing cause against a decree being made absolute, and the affidavits in answer raise issues not proper to be decided on affidavits, the court will order the issues to be tried by a jury. They cannot be tried by the court itself on oral evidence. Masters v. Masters, 34 L. J., Mat. 7. And see Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 70.

—— Who may show Cause.]—A respondent, against whom a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage has been pronounced, cannot show cause against the decree being made absolute under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7. Stoate v. Stoate, 2 Sw. & Tr. 384 ; 30 L. J., Mat. 173 ; 5 L. T. 138.

Time shortened for making Decree absolute.] —A decree nisi having been dissolved on the intervention of the queen's proctor, on the ground of collusion, a fresh decree nisi was obtained on the ground that the original misconduct had been revived by subsequent adultery, and the court held that there were "special circumstances" in the case, and allowed the time to be reduced for making the decree absolute. Rogers v. Rogers, 6 R. 589.

Where Court will Suspend.] — The court cannot, after the time limited by the statute, suspend a decree absolute on the ground that the petitioner has not paid his proctor's taxed costs. Patterson v. Patterson and Graham, 40 L. J., Mat. 4 ; L. R. 2 P. 192 ; 23 L. T. 631 ; 19 W. R. 233.

The court refused to make a decree nisi absolute, after the expiration of three months from the time when it was pronounced, in order to enable the queen's proctor to make inquiries and to lay a case before the attorney-general for his directions, upon an affidavit being filed by the queen's proctor, to the effect that he had received information of material facts and that he intended to take the directions of the attorney-general. Palmer v. Palmer, 4 Sw. & Tr. 143 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 110.

Dart v. Dart, 32 L. J., P. 125 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 474 ; 11 W. R. 551.

Where the queen's proctor has intervened after the decree nisi, and the attendance of the petitioner at the hearing is necessary for the purpose of proving his identity, the court will order the proceedings to be stayed until his appearance. Pollack v. Pollack, Dean and Macnamara, 4 Sw. & Tr. 266 ; 34 L. J., P. 49.

The court refused to make a decree nisi absolute, although the six months had expired, when the queen's proctor applied for postponement on affidavits that he had a case for intervention but that he had not been able to take the directions of the attorney-general. Hamilton v. Hamilton and Riding, 33 L. T. 462.

After the trial by a jury of issues arising from an intervention, the court will not make a decree absolute immediately after a verdict in favour of the petitioner, but will postpone it until the time has expired for an application for a new trial. Dering v. Dering and Blakeley, L. R. 1 P. 531 ; 19 L. T. 48 ; 16 W. R. 1176.

The court made a decree absolute, notwithstanding a suggestion supported by affidavits, that the respondent and co-respondent were dead ; the evidence before it not being sufficient to enable it to arrive at a conclusion whether they were dead or alive. Ib.

In a suit for dissolution, the court, having reason to suspect the husband of connivance or conduct conducing to adultery, suspended the decree, and directed the queen's proctor to make inquiries into the bonâ fides of the petitioner's case. Richards v. Richards and Cook, 21 L. T. 598 ; 18 W. R. 152.

Previous Decrees—22 & 23 Vict. c. 61—Res judicata.]—A wife petitioned for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery, cruelty, and desertion ; at the hearing, which took place before 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, by which in such a suit she is made competent to give evidence as to cruelty or desertion, the court, for want of proof of cruelty or desertion, refused to dissolve the marriage, but granted a judicial separation. After the passing of that act, she having applied for leave to file a fresh petition for dissolution of marriage on the same grounds, the judge granted the application on the ground that he had not power to refuse it; but expressed his opinion that such a suit could not be sustained, the matter being res judicata. Bevan v. Bevan, 4 Sw. & Tr. 265; 29 L. J., Mat. 45.

A spouse, who has obtained a decree for a divorce a mensâ et thoro in an ecclesiastical court, cannot maintain a suit for judicial separation on the same grounds. Ciocci v. Ciocci, 29 L. J., Mat. 30, 60.

A husband brought a suit against his wife by reason of adultery, in the arches court: at the hearing, that court pronounced that the husband had failed to prove the charge made, and dismissed the wife:—Held, that the previous sentence was no bar to a petition for dissolution of marriage brought by the husband against the wife on the same alleged facts of adultery. Evans v. Evans and Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 173; 27 L. J., Mat. 57.

On a petition for a dissolution of marriage by reason of the adultery and cruelty of the respondent, the second charge was established by the production of a previous decree for a judicial separation on account of cruelty and by proof of the identity of the parties. Bland v. Bland, 35 L. J., Mat. 104; L. R. 1 P. 237; 15 W. R. 9.

First Petition Dismissed—Second Petition—Decree in First.]—A petitioner in a previous suit asked for a dissolution of his marriage by reason of the adultery of his wife, and the co-respondent in that suit alleged incestuous adultery against the petitioner. The adultery of the petitioner and the respondent having been proved in that suit, the petition was dismissed. The petitioner filed a second petition with the same prayer, but the acts of adultery charged against the wife were with other men than the co-respondent of the first suit. The queen's proctor intervened and pleaded the incestuous adultery of the petitioner, and that by reason of such incestuous adultery having been proved, the previous petition had been dismissed. The petitioner demurred to the last part of the answer of the queen's proctor, on the ground that he would not be debarred from proceeding in this suit, or from contending for his innocence of the incestuous adultery charged by reason of the judgment given in the first suit. The court overruled the demurrer. Conradi v. Conradi, 36 L. J., Mat. 68, L. R. 1 P. 391; 15 W. R. 881.

The questions whether the decree in the former suit was admissible in evidence in this, and, if so, whether such evidence would be conclusive, cannot be decided on demurrer, but must be determined at the hearing when the evidence is tendered. Ib.

A petitioner established his wife's adultery in a suit for dissolution of marriage, but the co-respondent established the petitioner's adultery, and on that ground his petition was dismissed. He afterwards presented a fresh petition, alleging subsequent adultery with other co-respondents. The queen's proctor intervened, and alleged the judgment against the petitioner in the previous suit, and further alleged the fact of the petitioner's adultery. The jury found that the petitioner was not guilty of the adultery charged:—Held, that the judgment in the former suit was conclusive evidence of the fact of such adultery having been committed. Conradi v. Conradi, Worrall and Way, 37 L. J., Mat. 55; L. R. 1 P. 514; 18 L. T. 659; 16 W. R. 1023.

A wife petitioned for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, and the charges of cruelty being traversed by the husband, the court found that they were not proved and dismissed the petition:—Held, that she was estopped from setting up the same charges of cruelty coupled with adultery in a subsequent petition for dissolution. Finney v. Finney, 37 L. J., Mat. 43; L. R. 1 P. 483; 18 L. T. 489.

New Trial — Second Decree.] — A husband obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of his marriage, but the court afterwards directed a new trial. More than six months after the original decree nisi the case was tried a second time, and the court again pronounced a decree nisi. After the expiration of the period for moving for a new trial, the queen's proctor having stated that he did not think it necessary to intervene, and notice of the application having been given to the respondent's solicitor, the court made the original decree absolute, without waiting till the expiration of six months from the date of the second trial, but directed that both decrees nisi should be recited in the order. Sheffield v. Sheffield and Paice, 29 W. R. 523.

u. Appeal.

To Court of Appeal.]—See 44 & 45 Vict. c. 68, ss. 9, 10, and Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 77—79.

Court of Appeal to House of Lords—Time.]—Since the Judicature Act of 1881, an appeal to the house of lords in a matrimonial cause (where an appeal lies) can only be from a decision of the court of appeal, and such an appeal must be brought within one month after the decision appealed against is pronounced by the court of appeal, if the house of lords is then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days after the house of lords next sits. Cleaver v. Cleaver, 9 App. Cas. 631—H. L. (E.)

From Judge Ordinary—Before 44 & 45 Vict. c. 68, s. 9.]—An application for the dismissal of an appeal by the appellant should be made to the full court, and not to the judge ordinary. March v. March and Palumbo, L. R. 1 P. 437.

The court of appeal has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from an order of the judge ordinary of the divorce court refusing or granting a rule to show cause for a new trial; but the appeal must be brought to the full court of divorce. Westhead v. Westhead and Gordon, L. R. 2 P. 1; 25 W. R. 35—C. A. S. P. Robinson v. Robinson, L. R. 2 P. 77; 36 L. T. 122; 25 W. R. 388—C. A.

An appeal from an order as to the custody of children made under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4, after a final decree for dissolution of the marriage of the parents, must be brought to the full court of divorce, and not to the court of appeal. Gladstone v. Gladstone, 2 P. D. 143; 25 W. R. 387—C. A.

The court of appeal has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from an order of the judge ordinary of the divorce court granting alimony, though the appeal was presented before the passing of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876; but the appeal must be brought to the full court of divorce. Wallis v. Wallis, 2 P. D. 141; 36 L. T. 161; 25 W. R. 387—C. A.

——Evidence to be given to Full Court.]—On an application to the full court for a decree of dissolution of marriage on the verdict of a jury, the marriage must be proved if it was not put in evidence at the trial before the jury. Evans v. Evans, 1 Sw. & Tr. 328.

On appeal from an interlocutory matter not touching the main issue in a cause, and resting in the judicial discretion of the court below, the appellant must satisfy the court of appeal that the discretion of the court below was altogether wrongly exercised. Thompson v. Thompson and Sturmfells, 2 Sw. & Tr. 402; 31 L. J., P. 213; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1207; 5 L. T. 325; 10 W. R. 96.

On an appeal, the court will only look at the same evidence and circumstances as were before the judge appealed from. Hill v. Hill, 2 Sw. & Tr. 407; 31 L. J., Mat. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1206; 5 L. T. 363; 10 W. R. 194.

It is not competent to a court of appeal to consider whether or not the jury has arrived at a proper conclusion upon a question of fact submitted to them. Ryves v. Att.-Gen., 37 L. J., Mat. 75; 19 L. T. 217—H. L.

Any objection to the verdict, on the ground of the rejection or improper reception of evidence, must be raised by a bill of exceptions or by a motion for new trial. Ib.

Where a decree contains nothing more by way of recital than the findings of the jury, the only duty of the court of appeal, when this decree is brought before it, is to ascertain whether the verdict has been properly applied. Ib.

On appeal from the decree of the judge ordinary, in a suit for judicial separation, the cause will not be reheard, but the facts will be assumed to be those appearing in the judge's notes. Curtis v. Curtis, 28 L. J., Mat. 8.

Where a case has been in part heard before the judge ordinary, and stands over for further proof and argument before the full court, the facts proved before the judge ordinary must be proved again before the full court. Brodie v. Brodie, 2 Sw. & Tr. 259; 4 L. T. 307; 9 W. R. 815.

—— Within what Time.] — An appellant lodged an instrument of appeal in the registry within three months from the time the decree was pronounced, but allowed one term to elapse without bringing the matter before the full court:—Held, that he was still entitled to be heard. Ginger v. Ginger, 35 L. J., Mat. 93.

Demurrer to Answer—Interlocutory Matter.]—A demurrer to part of an answer to a petition for dissolution of marriage, which put in issue the validity of the marriage, the other parts of the answer remaining to be determined, is not a final but an interlocutory matter, and one which falls within the cognizance of the judge ordinary, and his judgment on such demurrer is the subject of appeal to the full court and not to the house of lords. Pagani v. Pagani and Vining, 35 L. J., Mat. 87; L. R. 1 P. 223; 14 L. T. 706; 15 W. R. 23.

For what an Appeal lies.]—By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 56, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 3, an appeal lies from the judge ordinary, discharging the functions of the full court, by deciding on any petition for dissolution to the house of lords; and where the judge ordinary had in substance disposed of an important question in a suit for dissolution, by refusing to give directions for the mode of trial of certain issues from which refusal no appeal would lie to the house of lords, the full court on appeal varied the order, so as to enable the party aggrieved to appeal to the house of lords. Rowley v. Rowley, 4 Sw. & Tr. 137; 12 L. T. 315.

An appeal lies to the house of lords only from a decree for dissolution properly so called, not from a part of such decree not relating to the dissolution. Sidney v. Sidney, 36 L. J., Mat. 73; 15 W. R. 1094.

—— Discovery of New Evidence.]—After the sentence of the arches court, in a suit for separation by reason of a wife's adultery, and pending the hearing of an appeal to the judicial committee, new facts were alleged to have been discovered. An allegation by the wife, pleading the commission of acts of adultery by the husband, which, if proved, would entitle her to a sentence, admitted, upon motion, by the appellate court, and the cause retained. Anon., 9 Moore, P. C. 434.

Practice on.]—When a petition of appeal for the reversal of a decree nisi has been presented to the house of lords, and the court is afterwards moved to make the decree absolute, the appeal having been withdrawn, that fact should appear by affidavit. Baily v. Baily and Della Rocca, 31 L. J., Mat. 163.

Where such an affidavit had not been filed, but the defendant's counsel admitted that the fact was so, the court made the decree absolute. Ib.

A decree made by the house of lords, on appeal, will be recorded on the files of the court upon a copy of such decree, verified by affidavit, being deposited in the registry. Ib. S. P. Lewis, f. c. Hayward v. Hayward, 36 L. J., Mat. 76; L. R. 1 P. 293; 15 L. T. 299; 15 W. R. 319.

When the judgment on a demurrer from the state of the pleadings decides the whole suit, an appeal lies direct to the house of lords. Pagani v. Pagani and Vining, 35 L. J., Mat. 87; L. R. 1 P. 223; 14 L. T. 706; 15 W. R. 23.

A wife's petition for nullity was dismissed by the court, and no order was made as to costs. On appeal, the house of lords pronounced a decree of nullity, but made no order as to costs:—Held, that the court had no power to make an order as to costs. Lewis, f. c. Hayward v. Hayward, supra.

v. Registrar.

Jurisdiction—Husband's Suit—Order to deliver up Property to Wife.]—In a husband's suit for dissolution the registrar made an order directing the husband to deliver up to the wife certain articles, which she claimed as her property:—Held, that the registrar had no jurisdiction to make such an order, and that it must be discharged, and the registrar directed to inquire and report as to the property in the articles in question. Wood v. Wood, 58 L. J., P. 68; 14 P. D. 157; 61 L. T. 338; 38 W. R. 208.

w. Contempt of Court.

Publication of Advertisements.]—A co-respondent in a suit for divorce, immediately after the service of the citation, caused advertisements to be published denying the charges made in the petition, and offering a reward for information which would lead to the discovery and conviction of the authors of them:—Held, that these advertisements constituted a contempt of court. Brodribb v. Brodribb, 55 L. J., P. 47; 11 P. D. 66; 56 L. T. 672; 34 W. R. 580; 50 J. P. 407.

In a suit for divorce on the wife's petition on the grounds of adultery and cruelty, the husband caused to be printed and published about the district in which the wife and her family resided a notice purporting to be signed by him, offering a reward of 25*l.* for evidence of the confinement of a young married woman of a female child, "probably not registered":—Held, that this was a contempt of court as tending to prejudice the petitioner, and discrediting her in the assertion of her rights, and a writ of attachment ordered to issue. Pool v. Sacheverel (1 P. Wm. 675) questioned. Butler v. Butler, 57 L. J., P. 42; 13 P. D. 73; 58 L. T. 563.

But semble, a bonâ fide attempt to procure evidence in a suit even by an advertisement offering a reward is not a contempt of court. And see Plating Co. v. Farquharson, 50 L. J., Ch. 406; 17 Ch. D. 55; 44 L. T. 389; 29 W. R. 510—C. A. and Coats v. Chadwick, 63 L. J., Ch. 328; [1894] 1 Ch. 347; 70 L. T. 228; 42 W. R. 328.

Proceedings Heard in Camerâ.]—It is a contempt of court to publish any account, however meagre, whether accurate or inaccurate, of proceedings heard in camerâ, whether for the protection of a ward of court or for any other reason. It is also contempt for a party to the proceedings to furnish information for the purposes of such publication. Martindale, In re, 64 L. J., Ch. 9; [1894] 3 Ch. 193; 8 R. 729; 71 L. T. 468; 43 W. R. 53.

Where the publication took place in one newspaper, and was copied by others in the belief that the proceedings were in open court, an application to commit the publishers of the newspapers so copying it was held to be vexatious, and dismissed with costs. An application to commit the writer of the paragraph complained of was also dismissed with costs on the same grounds. Ib.

x. Parliamentary Bills of Divorce.

Raising Funds for.]—A. provided a fund for defraying the expenses of obtaining an act of parliament to dissolve the marriage of B. and C., who was A.'s illegitmate daughter:—Held, that the transaction was not illegal. Moore v. Usher, 7 Sim. 384.

Proceedings for Obtaining.]—Divorce bills, though in form legislative, are substantially of a judicial character. Wyndham's Divorce Bill, 3 Macq. H. L. 43.

Proxies are not used on divorce bills. Ib.

In general a legislative bill drops with the session of parliament in which it is introduced, and the measure, if persisted in, must be renewed by a fresh bill in the ensuing session; but an Indian divorce bill, proceeding on 1 Geo. 4, c. 101, continues effective from session to session, so as to give a reasonable opportunity to make use of the materials returned under the commission awarded by the house of lords. Ib.

—— Production of Record of Judgment—Action for Crim. Con.]—In suing out a divorce bill, the standing order requiring the petitioner to produce a record of a judgment in an action for criminal conversation against the adulterer will be dispensed with where it is shown that such action was impracticable. Coode's Divorce, 6 Cl. & F. 567.

The production of the record of a judgment at law for criminal conversation, was also dispensed with where, during a voluntary separation of the petitioner and his wife, she committed adultery, of which he was not informed until after the death of the adulterer. Lardner's Divorce, 6 Cl. & F. 569.

—— Husband not bringing Action against Adulterer.]—A petitioner for a divorce bill was excused for not having brought an action for damages against the adulterer, upon the statement of his witnesses that they did not find him until three years after the discovery of the adultery, and that the petitioner was not able to pay the expenses of an action. Martin's Divorce, 1 H. L. Cas. 79.

The wife's general bad conduct admitted as an excuse for the husband omitting to bring an action against the adulterer. Brooks' Divorce Bill, 1 H. L. Cas. 159.

—— Petitioner presenting himself at Bar.]—The enforcement of the standing order of the house, requiring the petitioner in a divorce bill to present himself for examination at the bar, may be dispensed with on account of the state of his health. Heneage's Divorce Bill, 1 H. L., Cas. 496.

What is a Bar to the Bill.]—The acceptance, by the petitioner in a divorce bill, of an offer of a sum upon a writ of inquiry to assess the damages, after judgment by default in an action of crim. con. against the wife's paramour, is not a bar to the bill. Ib.

—— Delay.]—A husband, immediately after his wife's elopement, brought an action and obtained a verdict for damages against the adulterer, and also proceeded against the wife in the ecclesiastical court, and obtained a divorce there, but did not, for five years from the elopement, apply for a divorce in parliament. The delay was held to be sufficiently accounted for by the absence of the wife in America, and by the inability of the husband, in consequence of his affliction, to attend to any business. Heaviside's Divorce Bill, 12 C. & F. 333.

A lapse of nine years from the admitted discovery, and of nineteen years from the fact of the wife's adultery, was not a bar to the petitioner's right to divorce à vinculo, he having shown that he was not able, for want of funds, to apply to parliament sooner. Ib. S. P., Martin's Divorce, 1 H. L. Cas. 79.

A petitioner for a divorce bill was excused for not having brought an action for damages against the adulterer, upon the statement of his witnesses that they did not find him until three years after the discovery of the adultery, and the petitioner was not able to pay the expenses of an action. Martin's Divorce, 1 H. L. Cas. 79.

Personal Service out of the Jurisdiction—Affidavit of Service.]—The respondent in a divorce bill being out of the jurisdiction and the petitioner in poor circumstances, the house dispensed with the attendance at the bar of a witness to prove personal service of the bill and the several orders of the house on the respondent; and ordered that an affidavit proving such personal service, and sworn under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, before the British minister or consul at the place where the respondent resided, should be deemed sufficient proof of such service. Joynt's Divorce Bill, 13 App. Cas. 741—H. L. (D.)

Bastardising Clause.]—A paragraph in a divorce bill contained allegations tending to bastardise a child to which the wife had given birth during the marriage. There was access at the natural period of the conception of the child:—Held, that such paragraph was inadmissible and must be struck out of the bill. Hewat's Divorce Bill, 12 App. Cas. 312—H. L. (D.)

Service of Notice of Second Reading—Substituted Service.]—In proceedings upon a divorce bill application was made in May, 1886, to dispense with personal service on the respondent on the ground that his address was unknown to the petitioner, that a solicitor who had previously acted for the respondent had admitted that he knew of his address but had refused to divulge it, and that the respondent had been last heard of in February, 1886, being then at Montreal, in Canada:—Held, that the application was premature, and must be refused. Gifford's Divorce Bill, 12 App. Cas. 361—H. L. (D.)

Where on a bill for divorce it appeared that the respondent's address was concealed, and the house ordered substituted service, service was ordered to be made on the respondent's solicitor, on the respondent's parent, and also on the person with whom the respondent appeared to be residing. A.'s Divorce Bill, 12 App. Cas. 364—H. L. (D.)

Adultery—Impotence—Provision for Wife.]—Where, on a bill of divorce by the husband on the ground of the wife's adultery, the adultery was proved, but it appeared that the husband had not fulfilled his duty by providing a home for the wife when she was separated from him by order of his medical attendant, the house in passing the bill directed that a clause should be added making provision for the wife. A.'s Divorce Bill, 12 App. Cas. 364—H. L. (D.)

Allowance to Wife.]—Where upon a bill for divorce by the husband it appears that the wife has no means to defend herself, the house will order the husband to pay her a small sum in order that she may make her defence. A.'s Divorce Bill, 12 App. Cas. 364—H. L. (D.)

Ireland—Wife's Bill—Adultery coupled with Cruelty.]—The same evidence which since the Divorce Act, 1857, enables the divorce court to pronounce a decree for dissolution of marriage will be considered by the house of lords sufficient ground for passing a divorce bill relating to Ireland, where that act does not apply. Westropp's Divorce Bill, 11 App. Cas. 294—H. L. (D.)

—— Cruelty.]—Acts which would if done in England be held by the high court of justice to constitute legal cruelty will also be held to constitute legal cruelty in divorce bills. Gifford's Divorce Bill, 12 App. Cas. 361—H. L. (D.)

Petition in Formâ Pauperis.]—Practice on petitions for divorce in formâ pauperis. Chippendall's Divorce Bill, 1 H. L. Cas. 497, n.

y. Costs.

i. Jurisdiction to Award.

See Divorce Rules, 1865, rr. 151—158, 177—179, 199, 201.

Not Prayed for.]—The court may order the costs of the proceedings in a suit for dissolution of marriage to be paid by the co-respondent, although the petitioner may not have prayed for them in his petition. Finlay v. Finlay and Rudall, 30 L. J., Mat. 104.

Absolute Authority.]—The court which hears the suit has absolute authority over costs, and no appeal as to costs only lies. Glennie v. Glennie and Bowles, 3 Sw. & Tr. 109; 7 L. T. 696.

Suit for Nullity.]—The father of a de facto husband, sued for a decree of nullity by reason of undue publication of banns. The de facto wife defended the suit, the issue in which was tried by a jury, who found a verdict against her, and the court made a decree of nullity. On motion to condemn the husband in the wife's costs, the court held that s. 51 of the Divorce Act gave it power so to do, if the circumstances of the case warranted it; but that, as the wife, by not going into the witness-box, had shown that she had no reasonable ground of defence to lay before the jury, her costs were not made necessary by the conduct of her husband; and rejected the motion. Wells v. Cottam and Wells, 3 Sw. & Tr. 593; 34 L. J., Mat. 12; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1208; 13 W. R. 279.

No Power after Decree Absolute.]—After a decree has been made absolute in a suit for dissolution of marriage the court cannot condemn a party in the costs of the proceedings. Wait v. Wait and Flower, 40 L. J., Mat. 30; L. R. 2 P. 228; 24 L. T. 846; 19 W. R. 760.

Verdict against Wife—Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 159.]—When on the hearing or trial of a cause the decision of the judge ordinary, or the verdict of the jury, is against the wife, no costs of the wife of and incidental to such hearing or trial shall be allowed as against the husband, except such as shall be applied for, and ordered to be allowed by the judge ordinary, at the time of such hearing or trial.

This rule is not imperative, but the court may dispense with it, and entertain an application for the wife's costs, subsequently to the hearing of a meritorious case. Conradi v. Conradi and Flashman, 35 L. J., Mat. 49; L. R. 1 P. 163; 14 L. T. 170; 14 W. R. 589.

ii. Wife's Petition.

See Divorce Rules, rr. 158, 159, 199—201.

Possession of Separate Property.]—The law presumes that by the contract of marriage all the property passes to the husband. The wife is in consequence a privileged suitor in the court with regard to costs; but where she has separate property she is liable, as any other unsuccessful suitor, to be condemned in costs. Milne v. Milne and Fowler, 40 L. J., Mat. 13 : L. R. 2 P. 202 ; 23 L. T. 877 ; 19 W. R. 423. And see Miller v. Miller, L. R. 2 P. 13, and Morris v. Freeman, 3 P. D. 65.

Wife out of Jurisdiction—Security.]—Semble, the court will order a wife (petitioner), who is out of the jurisdiction and has separate property, to give security for costs. M. f. c. De B. v. De B., 44 L. J., Mat. 41 ; 33 L. T. 263.

A wife who is unsuccessful in a suit by her for a judicial separation is not entitled to her costs of the hearing, although security for such costs has been given, if she is possessed of sufficient property to defray her own costs. Heal v. Heal, 36 L. J., Mat. 62 ; L. R. 1 P. 300.

Insufficient Allowance.]—When the sum allowed in the registry for a wife's costs of trial is inadequate for the purpose, the proper course is to apply on summons to the judge ordinary at chambers, that the registrar be directed to make a further estimate, and not to move the court for the allotment of a specific sum. Madan v. Madan and De Thoren, 18 L. T. 337 ; 16 W. R. 712. And see Hurley v. Hurley, 61 L. J., P. 14 ; [1891] P. 367 ; 65 L. T. 353.

Non-Payment by Husband.]—If a wife is unable to go to trial in consequence of the non-payment of her costs by the husband, she should either apply at chambers to have the case stand over, or appear in court on the day of hearing and state her inability to proceed. Curtis v. Curtis, 38 L. J., Mat. 9 ; 19 L. T. 610.

Where a wife's costs for the hearing had not been paid into court, owing to her own delay in filing a bill for taxation, the court refused to postpone the trial, or to make any special order to secure her costs after the verdict had gone against her. Bridgman v. Bridgman and Puckrin, 20 L. T. 87.

De die in diem.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, the wife is entitled to her costs de die in diem. Weber v. Weber, 1 Sw. & Tr. 219 ; 28 L. J., Mat. 11 ; 6 W. R. 867. S. P., Holt v. Holt, 28 L. J., Mat. 12.

Though a wife may, during the progress of a suit for dissolution of marriage, obtain an order for taxation of her costs de die in diem against her husband, and also that security be given by the husband for the costs of the hearing, if no such order is made before the hearing, and she is unsuccessful in the suit, the husband has not to pay her costs. Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, 1 Sw. &. Tr. 324 ; 28 L. J., Mat. 57 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 176 ; 7 W. R. 377.

The committee of a lunatic having instituted a suit for judicial separation by the direction of the court of chancery on the ground of the adultery of his wife, she applied that her costs de die in diem might be taxed, and also that the petitioner might deposit in the registry or give security for the costs of the hearing. Both applications were refused, on the ground that the wife had by the order of the court of chancery an ample allowance out of the estate of the lunatic. Woodgate v. Taylor, 30 L. J., Mat. 197, n.

Limit—Amount Paid into Registry.]—Where a husband's petition is dismissed, and the wife's costs of the hearing exceed the sum secured or paid into the registry to meet them, the husband is liable to pay the balance. Application for the balance should be made on summons, and not on motion. Cooke v. Cooke and Allen, 3 Sw. & Tr. 603 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 15.

A wife who has obtained a decree nisi is entitled to an order for the payment of her surplus costs of the hearing, beyond the amount deposited in the registry, although a motion for a new trial and a bill of exceptions are pending. Chetwynd v. Chetwynd, 4 Sw. & Tr. 108 ; 34 L. J., Mat. 65 ; 13 W. R. 528.

Where in a suit for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery, the adultery is proved, but the petition is dismissed on account of the husband's marital misconduct, the wife is entitled to all her costs, though they may exceed the sum paid into the registry, and the co-respondent will not be condemned in costs. Starkey v. Starkey and Irwin, 30 L. J., Mat. 118. S. P., Goode v. Goode, 30 L. J., Mat. 105 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 317.

In a divorce suit, the costs of the wife payable by the husband are not limited to the amount paid into court or secured by the husband for that purpose. Robertson v. Robertson and Fawgrossa, 51 L. J., P. 5 ; 6 P. D. 119 ; 45 L. T. 237 ; 29 W. R. 880—C. A.

In a divorce suit the usual order had been obtained for securing the wife's costs of the hearing, and there had been no appeal from that order, and no further costs were asked for at the hearing. Subsequently the case of Robertson v. Robertson (supra) was decided in the court of appeal, and the divorce court was thereupon asked to order payment of the wife's full costs. Application refused. Smith v. Smith, Major and Child, 51 L. J., P. 31 ; 7 P. D. 84 ; 46 L. T. 696 ; 30 W. R. 688.

—— Registrar's Report—Comparison of Respective Incomes of Husband and Wife—Discretion.]—Where an order has been made for the payment to the wife of alimony pendente lite :—Held, under such circumstances, that in making an order under Rule 158 of the Rules in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, which requires the husband in a divorce suit to put the wife in funds to meet costs, the registrar or judge does not act upon a wrong principle in taking into consideration a comparison of the respective incomes of the husband and wife. Allen v. Allen and Bell 63 L. J., P. 78 ; [1894] P. 134 ; 6 R. 585 ; 70 L. T. 326 ; 42 W. R. 230—C. A.

Liability of Husband—Extent of.]—In the ecclesiastical court the proctor of a wife defending a suit for divorce was always entitled to receive from her husband the reasonable costs of conducting her defence. Wells v. Wells, 1 Sw. & T. 308 : 27 L. J., Mat. 95.

A wife is entitled to pledge her husband's credit for the reasonable costs incurred by her in instituting and prosecuting divorce proceedings against him. Ottaway v. Hamilton, 47 L. J., C. P. 424. Affirmed, 47 L. J., C. P. 725 ; 3 C. P. D. 393 ; 38 L. T. 925 ; 26 W. R. 783—C.A.

The costs of a solicitor employed by a married woman to institute proceedings on her behalf against her husband, to obtain a judicial separation, can only be recovered against the husband when the necessity for such proceedings has been made out in point of fact. Taylor v. Hailstone, 52 L. J., Q. B. 101 ; 47 L. T. 440.

The mere fact that the solicitor had reasonable grounds for believing, upon information obtained, that proceedings ought to be taken is not sufficient to render the husband liable for costs incurred in obtaining such information, unless it appears to the court that there was any necessity for such proceedings. Ib.

The costs of preparing a case for the opinion of counsel, and of negotiations entered into with a view to an arrangement for a separation before the institution of proceedings, are not recoverable against the husband if the court should be of opinion that there was no necessity for instituting these proceedings. Ib.

A suit for a decree of nullity promoted by the wife on the ground of impotency was dismissed. Subsequently she filed a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, coupled with cruelty and desertion, and obtained a decree nisi. The court held, that the respondent ought not to be condemned in the costs of both suits; and in allowing the petitioner the full costs of the suit in which she was successful, ordered that the respondent should have credit for the sum paid by him on account of her costs in the suit for nullity. Ditchfield v. Ditchfield, 38 L. J., Mat. 51; L. R. 1 P. 729; 20 L. T. 1015.

Laches of Solicitor.]—Where the wife had, prior to the hearing, obtained an order under r. 126 for a reference to the taxing-master to fix a sum to be lodged in court, or secured by the husband, to cover her costs of the trial; but her solicitor took no steps to have the order carried out, and proceeded to trial without any sum being lodged or secured:—Held, that if the wife failed to establish her case, she was not entitled to costs against her husband. Carnegie v. Carnegie, 15 L. R., Ir. 513.

At the hearing of a suit for divorce preferred by the wife, the charges of cruelty were withdrawn, and those of adultery were not proved, and the petition was accordingly dismissed. No order had been made upon the husband to secure any sum for his wife's costs. The court refused to order the respondent to pay the costs of the petitioner. Thompson v. Thompson, 57 L. T. 374. And see, as to the duty of a respondent wife's solicitor, Walker v. Walker and Lawson, col. 967, and Townson v. Townson, 78 L. T. 54.

Security for Costs—Disobedience to Order to Pay Money into Court.]—In a suit by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of her husband's alleged cruelty an order was made, previously to the hearing, directing the respondent to "lodge in court the sum of 40*l.* estimated by one of the registrars as sufficient to cover the costs and expenses of the petitioner of and incidental to the hearing of the cause, or give a bond, under the hand and seal of the said respondent, and of two sufficient sureties, in the penal sum of 80*l.*, conditioned for the payment of such expenses of the said petitioner as shall be certified to be due and payable by the said respondent, not exceeding the said sum of 40*l.*, with forty-eight hours' notice of such sureties to the solicitor of the petitioner." The respondent having failed to pay the money into court or give the required security, the petitioner moved for an attachment against him for disobeying the order:—Held, that the failure to comply with the order was not a default in payment of money within s. 4 of the Debtors Act, 1869, and therefore that an attachment could be issued. Bates v. Bates, 58 L. J., P. 85; 14 P. D. 17; 60 L. T. 125; 37 W. R. 230—C. A. See Divorce Rules, 1875, rr. 199—201.

—— Attachment for Non-payment—Undischarged Bankrupt.]—The respondent—the husband—in a suit for divorce was an undischarged bankrupt, but was shown to be in receipt of a weekly salary of 30*l.*, which was not under the control of the trustee in bankruptcy. An order had been made by the court, and duly served on him, to pay into court or give security for the sum of 40*l.*, to cover the wife's costs of the hearing of her petition; but although nearly two years had elapsed from the date of such order, he had failed to comply with it:—Held, that the fact that the respondent had been adjudged bankrupt did not preclude the court from issuing an attachment, and the court made an order accordingly. Shine v. Shine, [1893] P. 289; 69 L. T. 500. And see Clarke v. Clarke, and cols. 963, 976.

—— Debtors' Act—Attachment.]—The provisions of the Debtors Act, 1869, do not apply to a case where a party has been ordered to find security for costs, and disobedience of the order is a contempt of court to be enforced by attachment. Lynch v. Lynch, 54 L. J., P. 93; 10 P. D. 183; 34 W. R. 47.

—— Writ of Elegit—Motion to Set Aside.]—The husband, respondent, obtained a mandamus to his wife to deliver up certain deeds; he failed to comply with an order as to his wife's costs and she issued a writ of elegit; the court though the wife had not complied with the mandamus, refused to set aside the writ but put the wife upon terms as to the receipts arising from the property. Kippax v. Kippax, 67 L. T. 382.

—— Intervention of Queen's Proctor.]—It is not the practice of the court to order a husband to give security for his wife's costs incidental to an intervention of the queen's proctor. Butler v. Butler, 59 L. J., P. 30; 15 P. D. 32; 62 L. T. 477. See S. C. in C. A., col. 965.

Injunction to restrain Parting with Property—Reconciliation—Continuing Injunction.]—A judicial separation having been pronounced at the suit of the wife, an interim injunction was obtained against the husband restraining him from dealing with certain property belonging to him. Subsequently a reconciliation took place. The wife's solicitor applied to have the injunction continued until a receiver of the property should be appointed or until the balance of his costs was paid; the court refused to continue the injunction or to appoint a receiver. Hawes v. Hawes, 57 L. T. 374.

Charging Order—Solicitor—Permanent Maintenance.]—A sum secured to the wife on a dissolution of marriage under s. 32 of the Divorce Act, 1857, is not alimony, and is property in respect of which the court has jurisdiction to grant the wife's solicitor a charging order for costs under s. 28 of the Solicitor's Act, 1860; but the court will not grant such an order unless the solicitor make out a primâ facie case of inability to obtain payment in any other way. Harrison v. Harrison, 58 L. J., P. 28; 13 P. D. 180; 60 L. T. 39; 36 W. R. 748—C. A. See col. 964.

Appeal to House of Lords.]—Except in a very exceptional case, a wife is not entitled to payment from her husband of her costs of an appeal to the house of lords in which she is the appellant, in cases where the judgments of the courts below have found her guilty of a matrimonial offence, and have declared her to have ceased being the wife of the respondent. Begg v. Begg, 15 App. Cas. 170—H. L. (Sc.)

When Decree in Favour of Wife.]—When a wife proceeds for a judicial separation and it is granted, she is entitled to her costs as a matter of right. In the absence of any order of the court to the contrary, costs follow the decree of separation as a matter of course. Peacock v. Peacock, 27 L. J., Mat. 71.

Where the court decrees a dissolution of marriage at the suit of a wife, costs follow the decree as a matter of course, if the court, in pronouncing its decree, gives no direction as to costs. Dixon v. Dixon, 28 L. J., Mat. 96.

Where dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery, is decreed, if no order to the contrary is made, the husband pays the wife's costs. Ling v. Ling and Croker, 1 Sw. & Tr. 180; 27 L. J., Mat. 58.

A wife, in whose favour a decree for a dissolution of marriage is made, is entitled to costs against her husband, where no order has been made. Kaye v. Kaye, 4 Sw. & Tr. 239; 27 L. J., P. 54.

—— Suing in Formâ Pauperis.]—A wife suing in formâ pauperis for a dissolution of marriage, if she obtains a decree, is entitled to costs. Afford v. Afford, 2 Sw. & Tr. 387; 30 L. J., Mat. 174; 5 L. T. 138.

On Failure of Wife's Suit.]—Where the registrar has directed a sum of money to be paid into court to meet the expenses of the wife's petition at the hearing, and her suit fails, the husband will not be liable to a greater amount than the sum so paid in, though her costs, as ascertained on taxation, exceed that sum. Sopwith v. Sopwith, 2 Sw. & Tr. 105; 29 L. J., Mat. 132; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 404; 2 L. T. 472; 8 W. R. 552.

The practice of the court is that a wife, if she fails, will not be entitled to taxed costs beyond the sum of money paid into court by the husband at the order of the registrar. Glennie v. Glennie and Bowles, 3 Sw. & Tr. 109; 7 L. T. 696.

The court rejected a motion for an order on a husband to pay the balance of the wife's taxed costs above such sum of money paid into court, and condemned her solicitor in the costs of the motion. Ib.

Where, upon the trial of a case, the decision of the court is against the wife, the costs of the wife, incidental to the trial, are not allowed against the husband, unless ordered. Todd v. Todd, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 237; 13 L. T. 759; 14 W. R. 350.

The court has power to disallow the wife's costs of the hearing of a suit in which she has been unsuccessful, although security for such costs has been deposited in the registry by the husband, but it will only exercise that power in cases where the wife's attorney has been guilty of some misconduct, or has instituted the suit knowing that it was without reasonable ground. Flower v. Flower, 42 L. J., Mat. 45; L. R. 3 P. 132; 29 L. T. 253; 21 W. R. 776. And see Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 159, and Conradi v. Conradi and Flashman, col. 954.

—— Adultery Proved against Husband.]—When on a husband's petition for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, she proved that he also had been guilty of adultery, the court granted an order for her full costs; but allowed the petition to remain on the file for a month, in order to enable the petitioner, if he thought fit, to move in the meantime for a new trial. Bridges v. Bridges and Barnett, 16 L. T. 34.

Cases where Allowed and Disallowed.]—A wife having obtained a decree nisi, confessed adultery on the intervention of the queen's proctor. The decree was thereupon reversed, and the petition dismissed:—Held, notwithstanding, that the petitioner was entitled to all costs for which she had obtained orders, either for payment or taxation, prior to the time that her adultery was proved. Whitmore v. Whitmore, 35 L. J., Mat. 52; L. R. 1 P. 96; 14 L. T. 171; 14 W. R. 352.

An order for taxation of the wife's costs pending suit does not necessarily imply also payment.

But an order for taxation of her costs on the decree nisi is for the purpose of payment when the amount is ascertained. Ib.

In a suit in which material circumstances were proved on the part of the wife, respondent, although the verdict established her adultery, the court, after the lapse of three months from the date of the decree nisi, and notwithstanding r. 159, allowed her costs to be taxed against the husband. Somerville v. Somerville and Webb, 36 L. J., Mat. 87; 16 L. T. 466.

"Usual Order"—Petition Dismissed—Separate Property.]—The court will not refuse the "usual order" for a wife's costs, unless her solicitor has been guilty of improper conduct in the institution or prosecution of the suit. Thus, where a wife petitioned for a judicial separation upon the ground of cruelty, and the court, in dismissing her petition, expressed a very strong opinion that the charges she had made against her husband were trumpery, and where it was shown that she had separate estate producing an annual income of 29*l.* (the husband's income being 135*l.*) and was supporting her two young children without any assistance from her husband, the court declined to condemn her in the costs of the suit, and being of opinion that no suggestion of improper conduct in bringing the case before the court could be made against her solicitor, the court, upon the wife's application, made the "usual order" for her costs. Aires v. Aires, 65 L. T. 859.

—— Suit for Judicial Separation—Wife's Costs refused.] — In a suit by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, where no summons for recovery of documents had been applied for by the wife's solicitor, it transpired, and was conclusively proved at the hearing, that numbers of affectionate letters had passed between the parties during a period of more than a year after the husband had gone to China to resume his official duties, and, after the acts specified in the petition as cruelty and deposed to by the petitioner, were alleged to have been committed. At the close of the petitioner's case the petition was dismissed, and the court refused to make the "usual order" for the wife's costs. Hough v. Hough, 71 L. T. 703.

Unnecessary Charges of Cruelty—Rule 159.]—A wife's petition for divorce alleged acts of adultery, the proof of which was that the respondent was alleged to have communicated a venereal disease to the petitioner; this was also alleged as an act of cruelty. The petition also contained a charge of cruelty of a general character, but of which the court thought that the petitioner's solicitors had the clearest evidence of condonation when they commenced proceedings. The jury found all the issues in favour of the respondent. A comparatively small sum had been secured to the petitioner for her costs by the respondent. After verdict the petitioner applied for an order to be allowed her full costs of suit:—Held, that the petitioner was entitled to her full costs of the main charge, as the court, after consideration, was unable to say that the solicitors had acted improperly in taking proceedings, but that she was not entitled to the costs of the charges of cruelty which had been condoned. Ash v. Ash, 62 L. J., P. 97; [1893] P. 222; 1 R. 524; 68 L. T. 500.

Solicitor of Wife — Husband's Bond to — Enforcing Bond.]—In a petition by the wife for judicial separation, her solicitor has no greater right than his client to recover costs from the opposite party. Where, therefore, a petition by the wife for judicial separation had been dismissed with costs:—Held, that the solicitor of the petitioner could not enforce against the respondent the bond executed by the respondent, under rule 158 of the divorce court rules, as security for the petitioner's costs of the trial. Russell v. Russell, 61 L. J., P. 45; [1892] P. 152; 66 L. T. 436—C. A.

Discretion of Court as to Costs — Appeal.] —Under s. 51 of the Divorce Act, 1857, the costs of any suit or proceeding under the act are in the discretion of the court. Where, therefore, the court has, in the exercise of its discretion, refused an application under rule 199 of the divorce court rules to allow the bond given by the husband to the wife's solicitor under rule 158 to be enforced, the court of appeal is precluded by s. 49 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and s. 20 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, from reviewing such decision. Ib.

Attachment Refused.] — The court refused to grant an attachment against a husband for non-payment of costs incurred on behalf of the wife, in a suit instituted by her for judicial separation, on the ground of his alleged cruelty, when it appeared that the husband had been compelled to separate from her several months before the institution of the suit in consequence of her drunkenness and violence, and had not the means of complying with the order for payment. Holland v. Holland, 4 Sw. & Tr. 78; 34 L. J., Mat. 65; 11 L. T. 750; 13 W. R. 505.

Intervention of Queen's Proctor.] — The intervention of the queen's proctor after a wife has obtained a decree nisi does not affect her right to the costs of the suit. Gladstone v. Gladstone, 44 L. J., Mat. 46; L. R. 3 P. 260; 32 L. T. 404.

No next Friend.] — A married woman, pending a petition by her in the divorce court for a declaration of nullity of marriage, filed a bill and obtained an injunction against her husband, but did not sue by a next friend. The petition in the divorce court having been dismissed:—Held, upon a motion by the husband to dissolve the injunction, that no order to pay the costs of the motion could be made against the wife or her solicitor. Sealey v. Gaston, 13 W. R. 577.

Adultery Proved — Appeal.] — A husband and wife who were married before 1882, presented cross petitions for dissolution of marriage, the wife's petition being presented before that of her husband. They were both found guilty of adultery, and the husband was also found guilty of cruelty of an aggravated character. The judge refused to decree dissolution of marriage, but granted the wife a decree for judicial separation, and gave her her costs. The husband having appealed, the court of appeal discharged the order for judicial separation:—Held, that the wife was entitled, notwithstanding her adultery, to her costs both in the court below and on the appeal. Semble, if the wife had been herself the appellant, and had been unsuccessful, she would not have had her costs of the appeal. Otway v. Otway, 57 L. J., P. 81; 13 P. D. 141; 59 L. T. 153—C. A.

Sum Allowed to be Paid out of Corpus of Settled Property—Variation of Settlement.]— A wife had obtained a dissolution of marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery and cruelty. Subsequently she petitioned for a variation of settlements. At the time of the hearing of such petition she was indebted to her solicitors in the sum of 49*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*, balance of account for costs of the suit and of the petition for variation of settlements. The court being satisfied that there was no prospect of recovering the costs from the husband, allowed such sum of 49*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* to be paid out of the corpus of the settled property, although there were living issue of the marriage. Hipwell v. Hipwell, 61 L. J., P. 84; [1892] P. 147; 67 L. T. 396.

Wife bringing Countercharges.]—Where a wife's answer contains charges against the husband which at the time appear to have been made without any foundation, the whole of her costs will not be allowed to be taxed as against her husband. Clark v. Clark, Perrin and Cumins, 4 Sw. & Tr. 111; 34 L. J., Mat. 71; 12 L. T. 148; 13 W. R. 549.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of a wife's adultery, the respondent and co-respondent denied the charge, and the respondent further charged the petitioner with adultery. At the hearing this latter charge was substantially the joint defence of the respondent and co-respondent. A jury found that the respondent and co-respondent had not been guilty of adultery, and also that the petitioner had not been guilty of adultery:—Held, that the respondent was entitled to the whole of her costs incurred in supporting the first issue, although they should exceed the sum deposited in the registry, but that, as to the second issue, she was entitled only to a moiety of the costs incurred. Burroughs v. Burroughs, 31 L. J., Mat. 124.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage by reason of the wife's adultery, she recriminated adultery, which she charged as having taken place with A. and B. At the trial no evidence was offered in support of the charge with B. The court ordered that the costs incurred by the petitioner in respect of the charge of adultery with B. should be deducted from the sum paid into court to meet the wife's costs of trial.

Morgan v. Morgan and Porter, 38 L. J., Mat. 41; 20 L. T. 588.

A wife's costs of counter-charges of adultery against her husband were disallowed, although they had been paid into court, the evidence by which those counter-charges were supported being false, and there being no reasonable ground for making them. Wilson v. Wilson, 41 L. J., Mat. 74; L. R. 2 P. 435; 27 L. T. 351; 20 W. R. 891.

A husband having filed a petition for dissolution on the ground of adultery, the wife brought counter-charges against the husband, and though not successful in the suit she succeeded in establishing these counter-charges:—Held, that she was entitled to her costs. Caldecott v. Caldecott and Cartwright, 29 L. T. 699; 22 W. R. 239.

—— Attachment.]—Where a husband petitioned for a dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery, and the wife, in her answer, made counter-charges against him, the court refused to issue an attachment against such husband for non-compliance with an order to secure his wife's costs, he having filed an affidavit alleging want of means. Bates v. Bates (14 P. D. 17) distinguished. Semble, the proper course under such circumstances would be for the wife to move to dismiss the petition. Clarke v. Clarke, 60 L. J., P. 97; [1891] P. 278. See col. 957.

Decision Postponed till after Taxation.]—In future if in a divorce suit in which a wife is found guilty the court is asked to order payment of her full costs, the court will postpone its decision until after her bill of costs has been taxed. The case of Robertson v. Robertson, col. 956, referred to. Ib.

Application to Dismiss Petition.]—Where a wife has petitioned against the husband and the proceedings are ended, before hearing, by her return to cohabitation, the petition will be dismissed, on the husband's application, only on payment of taxed costs. Cooper v. Cooper, 3 Sw. & Tr. 392; 33 L. J., Mat. 71; 10 L. T. 275.

A suit having been instituted on the part of a wife for a dissolution of her marriage, in which the husband had appeared and answered, an application was made on his behalf that the petition should be dismissed on an affidavit of the wife that the suit had been improperly instituted, and that she had returned to cohabitation, The court ordered such application to stand over until the wife's attorney had had an opportunity to tax his costs and enforce them against the husband. Dixon v. Dixon, 40 L. J., Mat. 38; L. R. 2 P. 253; 25 L. T. 135; 19 W. R. 787.

Taxation of—General Principles.]—The general principles of taxing costs against a husband in matrimonial suits are the same as in other causes. The rule of the ecclesiastical courts not to allow more than two counsel on taxation, is not applicable where the evidence is oral in open court. Suggate v. Suggate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 497; 1 L. T. 306; 8 W. R. 178.

Where a London attorney conducts the suit, no expenses of a local attorney will be allowed against the husband. Ib.

Case requiring to be well Proved.]—In a suit for dissolution the respondent's counsel withdrew their opposition after a few witnesses had been called. The registrar disallowed the costs of several witnesses who were in attendance, but not called, and also disallowed maintenance-money for the witness on whom the proof of the wife's case chiefly depended. The court confirmed the registrar's report on the latter point, but on the ground that the case was one which, from the circumstances, required to be well proved, allowed the expenses of the witnesses who were not called. Finney v. Finney, 21 L. T. 597.

Lien of Solicitor.]—Before trial of the issue in a cause a sum of money was paid into the registry by the husband to meet his wife's costs. Subsequently the marriage was dissolved, and the co-respondent was condemned in all the costs of the proceedings, but the husband was unable to recover them:—Held, that the wife's proctor had a lien upon the money so paid into the registry; and the amount of his taxed costs was ordered to be paid out to him. Evans v. Evans and Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 328; 28 L. J., Mat. 136; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 606; 7 W. R. 181.

An attorney retained by a married woman in a matrimonial suit has a lien for costs incurred on her account, including costs disallowed on taxation as between her and her husband, but allowed as between attorney and client, upon all moneys received by him on her account in the course of the suit. This lien extends to alimony in the hands of the attorney. Bremner v. Bremner and Brett, 36 L. J., Mat. 11; L. R. 1 P. 954; 15 L. T. 297; 15 W. R. 75. And see Harrison v. Harrison, col. 958, and Hall v. Hall (No. 2), col. 966, and Russell v. Russell, col. 961.

Intervention by Queen's Proctor—Payment out before Decree Absolute.]—In cross-petitions by the husband and wife for dissolution of the marriage, a decree nisi was pronounced on the wife's petition, and the husband was condemned in costs. Subsequently the queen's proctor intervened, and charged the wife with adultery, collusion, and suppression of material facts. The husband, in compliance with an order of the registrar, had paid money into court to meet the wife's costs in both suits:—Held, that the wife was not entitled to have the money in court paid out until the decree nisi had been made absolute. Butler v. Butler, 58 L. J., P. 71; 14 P. D. 160; 38 W. R. 272.

Payment out pending Appeal.]—In cross-suits for dissolution on a first trial, a jury having found all the issues in favour of the wife, the court pronounced a decree nisi in her favour; subsequently the queen's proctor intervened, and on a second trial a jury found that she had been guilty of collusion and suppression of material facts, but were unable to agree as to whether she had been guilty of adultery or not, and the court thereupon rescinded the decree nisi; the wife appealed against such rescission of the decree:—Held, that an application for payment out to the wife's solicitors of a sum of 90*l.* which had been paid into the registry to secure the estimated costs of the wife up to the trial of the cross-petitions, must be refused, pending appeal, on the ground that the wife's solicitor had been present when a collusive agreement was signed by the husband and wife. Butler v. Butler, 59 L. J., P. 11.

A wife having obtained a decree nisi in a petition for divorce, the queen's proctor intervened, and she was proved to have obtained the decree by collusion, to which her solicitors were parties. The petition was accordingly dismissed. The husband in the course of the proceedings had paid into the registry two sums of money to cover the wife's costs of the two proceedings:—Held, that under the circumstances the wife was not entitled to an order that such moneys should be paid out to her or her solicitors. Butler v. Butler, 59 L. J., P. 30; 15 P. D. 32; 62 L. T. 477. See S. C., in C. A., infra, next case.

Appeal as to Costs.] — Although in proceedings for divorce a wife as a general rule is allowed her costs, the allowance of such costs is under the Divorce Act, 1857, s. 51, in the discretion of the court, and there is no appeal from the refusal of the court to order the wife's costs to be paid. The costs occasioned to a wife by the intervention of the queen's proctor, are also within the discretion of the court, and if the judge in his discretion disallows them, an appeal from an order refusing them will not lie. Butler v. Butler, 62 L. T. 477; 15 P. D. 126—C. A. And see Russell v. Russell, col. 961.

—— Decree rescinded — Money paid into Court ordered to be paid out to Queen's Proctor.]—At the trial of two cross-petitions for dissolution by the husband and wife, the wife, by arrangement between the parties, obtained a decree nisi, and the husband was condemned in costs. The queen's proctor intervened, charging both parties with collusion, and the wife with adultery. At the trial of these issues the jury found that the parties had been guilty of collusion, but disagreed as to the adultery, and the decree nisi was rescinded. The husband had paid into court sums amounting to 140*l.* to meet the wife's costs. The court had refused—and the court of appeal had confirmed this decision—to allow any part of the sum to be paid out to the wife or her solicitors. The court now, on application by the queen's proctor, ordered the whole sum of 140*l.* to be paid out to him in part payment of his costs for procuring the reversal of the decree nisi. Butler v. Butler, 59 L. J., P. 86; 15 P. D. 161; 63 L. T. 260.

Security for—Co-respondent's Application for.] —The court, being satisfied that the petitioner had, as a fact, assets in this country upon which, if defeated in his suit, execution for any costs ordered to be paid by him could be levied, refused the application of one of the co-respondents that the petitioner be ordered to give security for his costs. Redfern v. Redfern, 63 L. T. 780.

iii. Husband's Petition.

Wife's Costs.]—The rule is that, whether the wife is successful or not, the husband is bound to furnish her with the means of carrying on the litigation, and the practice is for the registrar to estimate a reasonable amount for her costs, which sum is either paid in or security is given for it. Hurley v. Hurley (No. 1), 61 L. J., P. 14; [1891] P. 367; 65 L. T. 353.

Abortive Trial—Full Costs allowed to Wife.] —At the trial of a petition by a husband for divorce the jury disagreed, and were discharged without giving a verdict. The court, upon the application of the wife, made an order that her costs of the hearing should be taxed and paid in full, and refused to limit such costs to the amount deposited in court. Ib.

Money in Court — Set-off — Solicitor's Lien.]—A husband having obtained a decree nisi against his wife, the wife moved for a new trial, and her motion was dismissed with costs. The husband claimed to apply a sum which he paid into court to provide for the costs of the wife's defence to the action, and which still remained in court, in payment of his costs on the motion for the new trial:—Held, that the court ought not to deprive the wife's solicitor of his costs out of the fund provided for that purpose, in the absence of misconduct on his part, and the application was refused. Hall v. Hall, 60 L. J., P. 73; [1891] P. 302; 65 L. T. 206—C. A.

Order against Guilty Wife.] — On a husband's petition a decree was pronounced on account of the wife's adultery with costs against the co-respondent. It was proved that the wife was possessed of separate property, and an order was made against the wife for the costs of the suit. Millward v. Millward, 57 L. T. 569; 51 J. P. 616.

The court has absolute discretion to make such order as to costs as to it may seem just, and will not inquire whether at the time the wife committed the wrongful act, she had or had not any separate estate, but will only consider what is just at the time when it has to arrive at a decision; if the court finds that at that time there is property of the guilty wife upon which an order for costs, if made, can operate, the guilty wife, like any other unsuccessful litigant, will be condemned in costs. Hyde v. Hyde, 59 L. T. 523.

—— Notice of Application.] — Where on a husband's petition for divorce, application was made to condemn the wife, who had not appeared to defend the suit, in costs, the court declined to entertain the application until she had received notice of it. Field v. Field, 13 P. D. 23; 58 L. T. 90; 36 W. R. 720; 52 J. P. 56.

Husband's getting Leave to Sue in formâ pauperis—Wife's Costs.]—Upon a husband's petition for divorce, the solicitor for the wife incurred costs which were taxed, and ordered to be paid; but after the pleadings were closed, and before the cause was set down, the petitioner, without paying them, applied for and obtained leave to proceed in formâ pauperis. The wife's solicitor thereupon took out a summons before the judge in chambers, calling upon the petitioner to show cause why further proceedings should not be stayed by reason of the petitioner not having complied with the order dated February 8, 1897, for payment of 20*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* for the respondent's taxed costs. The registrar who taxed the bill had refused to order a stay of proceedings in the event of the amount not being paid by the petitioner. The judge ordered proceedings to be stayed until payment of the wife's taxed costs. Joseph v. Joseph and Burnhill, 76 L. T. 236. And see where queen's proctor intervenes, White v. White, [1898] P. 124.

Duty of Wife's Solicitor.] — In a suit by a husband for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery, the wife in her answer denied the adultery, and made counter-charges that the petitioner had been guilty of great unkindness towards her, and had kept her without food, and had deserted her; and further, that he had committed adultery with a woman unknown. Particulars of this last plea were asked for and given. The petitioner, in his reply, denied the counter-charges. At the hearing, the wife did not go into the witness-box, and the court found for the petitioner upon all the issues and pronounced a decree nisi. Upon application by counsel for the respondent that she should be allowed the usual order for her costs, the learned judge expressed the opinion that, as the case was undefended, no such costs ought to be allowed without an explanation from the solicitor as to how he came to put an answer upon the record, and to contest the case at all. Counsel for the respondent thereupon called the country solicitor who had acted as solicitor for the respondent, and he stated, in effect, that the respondent brought him the petition and citation with which she had been served, and asked him to act for her; that she instructed him that the charge made against her in the petition was untrue, but that she had been requested to leave the house where she had been staying. The solicitor saw the respondent's sister, in reference to the counter-charges of unkindness and desertion, and both she and the respondent asserted that no misconduct had taken place prior to the alleged desertion. He did not make inquiries of the people at the house where the respondent had resided apart from her husband, as he gathered that the latter had received his information from those people, and that as they were hostile to the respondent, and one or more of them would probably be called at the hearing in support of the petitioner's case, anything that they might be able to say in regard to the respondent had better be left to be dealt with in cross-examination. The solicitor further stated that this was the first divorce case in which he had been retained, and that he had acted throughout with bona fides:—Held, that to warrant a petitioner (husband) in opposing, and the court in refusing, the usual order for a wife's costs, it is not necessary to show "misconduct" on the part of the wife's solicitor. Held, further, that a solicitor acting for the wife in a matrimonial case is not entitled to rely upon his client's instructions, but, in order to entitle him to look to the husband for payment of the wife's costs, he must fairly investigate for himself the various points put forward by the wife as a defence, and must satisfy himself in regard to their reasonableness. Held, that the usual order for wife's costs be refused, and that the amount in court be paid out to the petitioner. Walker v. Walker and Lawson, 76 L. T. 234. And see col. 957.

Husband Dead—Order against Executors.]—Where a husband, respondent in divorce proceedings, died on the eve of the trial, an order for the wife's costs, limited to the amount lodged in court, was afterwards made against the husband's executors, to whom leave was given to attend the taxation. Cunningham v. Cunningham, 77 L. T. 405.

See Divorce Rules, 1875, rr. 199—201.

Dismissal of Petition.]—In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the co-respondent appeared, but filed no answer. Upon a motion by the petitioner for the dismissal of the petition, as against the co-respondent, on the ground that there was no evidence against him:—Held, that the application could only be granted upon payment of the co-respondent's costs. Smith v. Smith and Millet, 34 L. J., Mat. 11.

Where the jury was discharged without giving a verdict, and the petitioner did not proceed to a second trial, but allowed his petition to be dismissed, the court, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, declined to order him to pay the co-respondent's costs. Bancroft v. Bancroft and Rumney, 34 L. J., Mat. 144.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution, the jury was discharged without giving a verdict; the petitioner did not go to a second trial, and the petition was dismissed. There was no evidence connecting the co-respondent with the respondent, except that of two witnesses, who swore to acts of adultery, but whose evidence did not satisfy the jury that adultery had been committed. The court condemned the petitioner in the co-respondent's costs. Whitmore v. Whitmore and Brettell; 35 L. J., Mat. 32; L. R. 1 P. 25.

Verdict — Second Trial.] — On the trial of the issues in a husband's suit for dissolution of marriage, no witnesses were called by the respondent or the co-respondent; and the jury being unable to agree, was discharged without giving a verdict. When the issues came on for trial a second time, witnesses were called by the co-respondent, and the jury found a verdict of not guilty. The court refused to condemn the petitioner in the co-respondent's costs of the first trial. Wight v. Wight and Field, 36 L. J., Mat. 129; L. R. 1 P. 368; 16 L. T. 300.

The insertion in a petition of a claim for damages does not deprive the court of the power to make such order as to costs as may seem just, given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 51. West v. West and Parker, 40 L. J., Mat. 11; L. R. 2 P. 196; 23 L. T. 786; 49 W. R. 392.

On a trial of an issue of adultery the alleged adulterer was called as a witness, and simply denied the charge without entering into any details or offering any explanation of his conduct. The jury was unable to agree upon their verdict, and the issue was tried a second time. On the second trial the alleged adulterer was again examined, and, besides denying the adultery, entered into full details and explained his conduct. The jury found that he was not guilty of the charge. The court refused to condemn the husband in his costs, on the ground that by his suspicious conduct and by his reticence on the first trial he had contributed to put the husband to the expense of a second trial. Ib.

Guilty of Imprudent Conduct.] — When the co-respondent has acted with imprudence with a person whom he knew to be a married woman, the court will leave him to pay his own costs. Carstairs v. Carstairs and Dickenson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 538.

The jury found that the respondent had been guilty of adultery, but that there was not sufficient evidence against the co-respondent. The co-respondent's conduct having been such as to lead to a reasonable suspicion in the mind of the petitioner that he had been guilty of adultery, the court refused to allow him his costs. Robinson v. Robinson and Gamble, 32 L. J., Mat. 210.

When an improper intimacy had been carried on between a co-respondent and the respondent, the co-respondent was ordered to pay his own costs, although there was no evidence of adultery, and the petition was dismissed. Winscom v. Winscom and Plowden, 3 Sw. & Tr. 380; 33 L. J., Mat. 45; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 321; 10 L. T. 100; 12 W. R. 535.

Proof of Charges against Respondent.]—A husband petitioned for a dissolution of his marriage on the ground of the adultery of his wife with the co-respondent, which on the hearing was proved; but, in addition, the co-respondent also proved that the petitioner had himself been guilty of incestuous adultery; the petition was dismissed:—Held, that although the co-respondent was liable for the costs of proving the wife's adultery, he was entitled to be paid the costs of the issue against the husband on which he had succeeded. Conradi v. Conradi and Flashman, 35 L. J., Mat. 49; L. R. 1 P. 63; 14 L. T. 170; 14 W. R. 589.

Connivance by Petitioner.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, tried before the judge ordinary and a common jury, the latter found that the respondent and co-respondent had committed adultery together, that the petitioner had condoned such adultery, and, further, that the petitioner had connived at his wife's adultery with another person, and they assessed the damages at one farthing. The court dismissed the petition, and ordered the petitioner to pay the costs of the respondent and of the co-respondent. Adams v. Adams and Colter, 36 L. J., Mat. 62; L. R. 1 P. 333; 16 L. T. 69.

Decree Nisi reversed on Queen's Proctor Intervening.]—It was proved that after marriage the husband had led a profligate life:—Held, decree to be reversed, including that part of it which condemned the co-respondent in costs. Ravenscroft v. Ravenscroft, 41 L. J., Mat. 28; L. R. 2 P. 376; 26 L. T. 265; 20 W. R. 448. And see Hechler v. Hechler, col. 895.

Taxation after Ten Years] — A decree nisi was pronounced in a suit for dissolution with costs against the co-respondent, in July, 1886, but the costs were not taxed till February, 1897. The divorce court rules are silent as to the course to be adopted in such a case. By Ord. XLII. of the rules of the supreme court, r. 23 (which is not applicable to a divorce proceeding), if no step has been taken to enforce a judgment for six years leave must be obtained from the court or a judge to do so. In the present case the petitioner applied to the court (following the practice under Ord. XLII., r. 23) for an order for the co-respondent to pay the taxed costs and for leave to issue execution. The court granted the application, intimating that the proper course had been taken, but, under the special circumstances of the case, ordered that execution should not be levied for three months. Goodwin v. Goodwin and Arnold, 66 L. J., P. 107; [1897] P. 87; 45 W. R. 656.

Queen's Proctor — Unsuccessful Intervention.] — The court refused to condemn a co-respondent, who had not been dismissed from the suit, in the costs of an unsuccessful intervention by the queen's proctor under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7. Blackhall v. Blackhall, 57 L. J., P. 60; 13 P. D. 94; 59 L. T. 151; 36 W. R. 926.

Security for Costs.]—In a petition for dissolution of marriage, the husband, who was an uncertificated bankrupt, claimed damages. Upon application by the co-respondent:—Held, that unless the claim for damages was withdrawn the petitioner must give security for the costs of the action. Smith v. Smith and Palk, 7 P. D. 227; 47 L. T. 355; 31 W. R. 124.

v. Against Co-Respondent.

When Allowed.]—The court may order the costs of the proceedings to be paid by a co-respondent where the adultery is established, although the petitioner may not have prayed for such costs. Finlay v. Finlay and Rudall, 30 L. J., Mat. 104. S. P., Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, Dalrymple and Woolay, 31 L. J., Mat. 163.

Wife's costs may be taxed by petitioning husband against co-respondent, though they could not against husband, as where wife's solicitors ought to have known her guilty. Townson v. Townson, 78 L. T. 54.

A co-respondent having put in no answer is not entitled to be heard on the question of costs. Tourle v. Tourle, 1 Sw. & Tr. 176.

—— Adultery of Petitioner after Decree Nisi.]—No ground for reversing a decree condemning the co-respondent in costs. Hulse v. Hulse and Tavernor, 41 L. J., Mat. 19; L. R. 2 P. 357; 25 L. T. 764; 20 W. R. 447.

—— Knowledge that Respondent was Married.]—The court will not condemn a co-respondent in costs where it is not proved that at the time his connection with the wife commenced he knew she was a married woman. Priske v. Priske and Golby, 29 L. J., Mat. 195. And see Teagle v. Teagle and Nottingham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 188; 27 L. J., P. 55; 6 W. R. 736. Ling v. Ling, 1 Sw. & Tr. 187; 27 L. J., P. 58; 6 W. R. 736. Boddington v. Boddington, 27 L. J., P. 53.

But costs were given against the co-respondent, who knew that the respondent was a married woman, though the husband's conduct towards his wife was remiss. Badcock v. Badcock, 1 Sw. & Tr. 188; 6 W. R. 737.

A co-respondent appeared and denied the charge of adultery, and alleged condonation and adultery on the part of the petitioner. There was evidence that the respondent and co-respondent had on several occasions cohabited, and that she became pregnant in consequence; but there was no evidence that the co-respondent had been aware that she was married. The evidence in support of the co-respondent's plea of condonation and the counter-charge of adultery was very insufficient. The court granted a decree nisi, refusing to condemn the co-respondent in the costs of the issue of his adultery with the co-respondent, but condemned him in the costs of the issues raised by his other pleas. Howe v. Howe, 15 W. R. 498.

At the time when the co-respondent first became improperly intimate with the respondent he was not aware that she was a married woman. Within about a month after the first act of adultery he had reason to believe that she was a married woman. He still continued the adulterous intercourse:—Held, that costs could not

When a petitioner had lived separately from the respondent for several years in consequence of her intemperance, and during the separation and prior to the adultery proved she had been leading an abandoned life, the court, notwithstanding that the co-respondent must have known that the respondent, when he committed the adultery, was a married woman, refused to condemn him in costs. Nelson v. Nelson and Howson, L. R. 1 P. 510.

The exercise of the discretion as to costs vested in the court depends upon the opinion of the court as to the conduct of all the parties in each case; and even if it is proved that the co-respondent knew the respondent to be a married woman when the adultery was committed, it does not necessarily follow that he will be condemned in the whole of the costs. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 4 Sw. & Tr. 63; 34 L. J., Mat. 60; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 13 W. R. 527.

When a respondent in her answer charged the petitioner with wilful neglect and misconduct, and that charge was negatived by the verdict of the jury, and a decree was granted on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent and with another person who was not a party to the suit, the court, being of opinion that the conduct of the petitioner had been such as to invite reasonable challenge, refused to condemn the co-respondent in the whole of the costs of the suit, and condemned him in those costs only which had been incurred in proving the respondent's adultery with him. Ib.

Where a wife, who had been a prostitute before marriage, left her husband in Australia without his consent and against his wishes, and on arriving in England commenced an adulterous intercourse with the co-respondent, with whom she had had an immoral intimacy previous to her marriage: and the co-respondent did not know that the respondent was a married woman until a week after their second intimacy had commenced, but after he was made aware of her marriage continued to cohabit with her, his alleged reason for doing so being that she received no support from her husband, and unless he (the co-respondent) had supported her, she would have been driven back to a life of prostitution:—The court, under the circumstances, refused to condemn the co-respondent in costs, although the petitioner had done his best to prevent his wife from coming home from Australia, and was not in a position to make her an allowance whilst living apart from him. Learmouth v. Learmouth, 59 L. J., P. 14; 62 L. T. 608.

Misconduct on Part of Husband.]—Where a wife's conduct has been profligate, and that to the husband's knowledge, before the adultery committed with the co-respondent, the latter will not be liable to costs. Boyd v. Boyd and Collins, 1 Sw. & Tr. 562; 29 L. J., P. 79; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 56; 1 L. T. 243; 8 W. R. 160.

Where the adultery of the wife is proved, but the petition is dismissed on account of the husband's marital misconduct, the co-respondent will not be condemned in costs, nor will he be allowed his costs. Seddon v. Seddon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 640; 31 L. J., Mat. 101; 7 L. T. 253.

Where damages were claimed from a co-respondent, and it appeared that the respondent was leading an abandoned life when the co-respondent made her acquaintance, and there was evidence raising a strong suspicion that the petitioner must have been aware of that fact:—Held, that the co-respondent ought not to be condemned in costs, on the ground that the claim for damages was under the circumstances improper. Manton v. Manton and Stevens, 4 Sw. & Tr. 159; 34 L. J., Mat. 121; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 863.

A co-respondent found to have been guilty of adultery is not, as a matter of course, relieved from payment of the costs of that issue, merely by reason of the husband having been guilty of such adultery as to induce the court to dismiss the petition. Bremner v. Bremner and Brett, 3 Sw. & Tr. 378; 33 L. J., Mat. 202; 10 L. T. 99; 12 W. R. 444.

Co-respondent liable for Costs of Apportionment of Damages paid into Court.]—Where a co-respondent has been condemned in the costs of a suit for dissolution, he is liable for the costs of and incident to proceedings before the registrar for the apportionment and settlement of such damages. Irwin v. Irwin, 59 L. J., P. 53; 62 L. T. 612.

Petition Dismissed—Co-Respondent Guilty.]—If a petition against a wife is dismissed on any grounds, she will be entitled to her full costs; and even although the adultery with the co-respondent is proved, he, the co-respondent, will not be liable to costs under these circumstances. Goode v. Goode and Hanson, 30 L. J., Mat. 105; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 317. S. P., Starkey v. Starkey, 30 L. J. Mat. 118.

No Appearance on part of Wife—Verdict against Co-Respondent—Wife held not guilty of Adultery charged.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage instituted by a husband on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, the respondent did not appear, and the jury found a verdict against the co-respondent with 50*l.* damages; the issue of the wife's adultery being for the court, the court found that she had not committed adultery, the connection having been against her will, and dismissed the petition, but gave judgment against the co-respondent for the damages and costs. Long v. Long, 60 L. J., P. 27; 15 P. D. 218.

Petitioner and Co-Respondent charged with Collusion—Queen's Proctor.]—Where a decree of dissolution of marriage had been pronounced on a husband's petition, and the queen's proctor afterwards intervened and charged both the petitioner and co-respondent with collusion and conspiracy, the court, having found all the issues in favour of the queen's proctor, condemned the co-respondent in the costs of the queen's proctor's intervention, although the co-respondent did not appear upon such intervention. Blackhall v. Blackhall (13 P. D. 94) distinguished. Taplin v. Taplin, 60 L. J., P. 88; [1891] P. 283; 64 L. T. 870.

Order for Payment—"Final Judgment"—Decree for Dissolution of Marriage.]—After a decree for a dissolution of marriage an order made by the court upon the co-respondent to pay the petitioner's costs is not a "final judgment" within sub-s. 1 (g) of s. 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; a bankruptcy notice cannot therefore be issued against the co-respondent in respect of such an order. Dale, Ex parte, Binstead, In re, 62 L. J., Q. B. 207; [1893] 1 Q. B. 199; 4 R. 146; 68 L. T. 31; 41 W. R. 452; 9 Morrell, 319—C. A.

Death of Co-Respondent before Payment—Petitioner appointed Receiver.]—In a petition by a husband for divorce, a decree absolute had been pronounced and the co-respondent condemned in the costs of the petition. An arrangement was subsequently made by which the co-respondent undertook to pay the amount of the costs by instalments; but he died intestate before the whole of such instalments had been paid. Immediately after his death an order was made restraining his widow from dealing with his estate. The court, under Ord. XVII., r. 4, and Ord. XLII., r. 28, appointed the petitioner receiver of the co-respondent's estate, but directed that the order should not be drawn up for a week, in order that the widow of the co-respondent might decide whether she would take out administration and give security for the debt. Waddell v. Waddell, 61 L. J., P. 110; [1892] P. 226; 67 L. T. 389.

What Costs.]—On a petition for dissolution of marriage the court, if the adultery is proved, has power to order all the costs of the proceedings to be paid by the co-respondent, although the court does not decree dissolution of the marriage. Forster v. Forster and Berridge, In re, 3 Sw. & Tr. 144; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 254.

The question of costs is in the discretion of the court in the circumstances of each case; and where the petitioner obtained a verdict, establishing—first, the adultery of the respondent and co-respondent; secondly, the adultery of the respondent with a person other than the co-respondent; and, thirdly, the petitioner's innocence of the charge brought against him by the respondent—the judge, in the circumstances of the case, refused to condemn the co-respondent in costs other than those occasioned by the issue of adultery raised by his answer, and found against him. Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson, 4 Sw. & Tr. 63; 34 L. J. Mat. 60; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 13 W. R. 527.

Intervention of Queen's Proctor.]—As a general rule, when a dissolution of marriage is decreed on the ground of a wife's adultery, the co-respondent will be condemned in all the costs, as well those of the respondent as those of the petitioner. Evans v. Evans and Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 328; 28 L. J., Mat. 136; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 606; 7 W. R. 181.

At the hearing the adultery of the respondent with the co-respondent was proved, but as the adultery of the petitioner was also proved, the petition was dismissed, and an order made condemning the co-respondent in the costs incurred by the petitioner in proving his adultery with the respondent:—Held, that this order comprised all the expenses incidental to the filing and prosecution of the petition so far as they related to the adultery of the co-respondent. Baker v. Baker, 36 L. J., Mat. 119; and see Hechler v. Hechler, 58 L. J., P. 27.

—— Of First Trial.]—A jury being unable to agree, was discharged without giving a verdict, and a decree was pronounced, condemning the co-respondent in costs, but the court refused to include in these costs the costs of the first trial. Wood v. Wood and Stanger, 37 L. J., Mat. 25; L. R. 1 P. 467.

—— Of Application to Deal with Settlements.]—A co-respondent is liable to costs of a successful application to deal with property under settlement, but if part of such an application fails, and the costs of that part can be separated from the other costs, they ought not to be thrown on the co-respondent. Stone v. Stone and Brownrigg, 10 L. T. 140.

When a co-respondent is condemned in costs, he is liable for the costs of the petitioner and respondent incurred in obtaining an alteration of a marriage settlement. Gill v. Gill and Hogg, 10 L. T. 137. And other references, cols. 107, 265.

vi. Of Queen's Proctor and other Interveners.

Entitled to, on proving Collusion.]—The right of the queen's proctor to costs, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, is confined to cases of collusion. Lautour v. Queen's Proctor, 10 H. L. Cas. 685; 33 L. J., Mat. 89; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 325; 10 L. T. 611; 12 W. R. 611.

Though the queen's proctor may fail to establish a charge of collusion, the court will not order the costs to be paid by the crown if the petitioner's conduct has been such as to justify the intervention. Jessop v. Jessop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 301; 30 L. J., Mat. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 609.

The queen's proctor intervened in a suit for dissolution of marriage and pleaded, charging the petitioner with adultery and collusion. The petitioner traversed both charges, but before the issues were tried moved the court to dismiss the petition. The queen's proctor not consenting, the court rejected the motion on the ground that the queen's proctor would be entitled to his costs if he established collusion. Joyce v. Joyce, 33 L. J., Mat. 200.

Where the queen's proctor intervened and charged collusion, that material facts had not been brought before the court, and that the petitioner had been guilty of adultery, and at the hearing established the first two charges and abandoned the last, the court refused to condemn the petitioner in costs, on the ground that he had been put to great expense in preparing to defend the charge of adultery. Barnes v. Barnes, and Grimwade, 37 L. J., Mat. 4; L. R. 1 P. 505; 17 L. T. 286; 16 W. R. 281.

Pauper Petitioner.]—Costs will be given the queen's proctor against an unsuccessful pauper petitioner. White v. White, [1898] 1 P. 124.

Unsuccessful Intervention.]—On motion to make decree nisi absolute, the queen's proctor intervened, but the court made the decree absolute, and made no order as to the queen's proctor's costs. Cox v. Cox, 2 Sw. & Tr. 306; 30 L. J., Mat. 255; 4 L. T. 450; 9 W. R. 924.

The court has no power to condemn the queen's proctor in the costs of an unsuccessful intervention under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 114, s. 7. Wilson v. Wilson, L. R. 1 P. 180; 14 L. T. 674; 15 W. R. 22. S. P., Rogers v. Rogers, 31 L. J., P. 101; Gray v. Gray, 2 Sw. & Tr. 554; 31 L. J., P. 83; 6 L. T. 336; 10 W. R. 863.

Not Appearing in his Official Capacity.]—When the queen's proctor does not intervene in his official capacity, but appears as one of the public, the court has no authority to award to him his costs. Bowen v. Bowen and Evans, 3 Sw. & Tr. 530; 33 L. J., Mat. 129; 13 W. R. 109.

How provided for when Suit Abandoned.]—When a decree nisi is pronounced, and upon the intervention of the queen's proctor, the decree absolute is abandoned, and also the suit, and there is no answer by the petitioner to the queen's proctor's plea, or payment of the costs of the suit, the court will order it to be placed in the reserved list until payment of the queen's proctor's costs. Collins v. Collins and Smith, 44 L. T. 31. And see col. 892.

Of other Interveners.]—After a decree nisi for a dissolution of marriage, affidavits were filed by a private individual, setting out facts to induce the court not to make the decree absolute. At the last moment the intervener withdrew his opposition, and the decree was made absolute:—Held, that the court has no power to condemn an intervener in the costs of his intervention. Vivian v. Vivian and Waterford (Marquis), 39 L. J., Mat. 54; L. R. 2 P. 100; 23 L. T. 267; 18 W. R. 936.

As to Payment out of Wife's Costs Pending Intervention.]—See col. 965.

vii. Other Matters relating thereto.

Of Motions.]—The costs of a party's appearance on a motion will not be allowed if such appearance is unnecessary, although he may have received notice to appear from the opposite side. Frebout v. Frebout and Penny, 30 L. J., Mat. 214.

When two separate motions were made on the same day for an attachment against a husband, the one for non-payment of costs, and the other for non-payment of alimony, the court in granting an attachment, allowed the costs of only one motion. Watts v. Watts, 4 Sw. & Tr. 274: 31 L. J., Mat. 29.

When an order for particulars of charges of adultery is obtained upon motion in court instead of by summons in chambers, the extra costs thus occasioned will not be allowed. Higgs v. Higgs and Hopkins, 32 L. J., P. 64; 11 W. R. 154.

Review of Taxation.]—The proper mode of reviewing a taxation of costs is by moving for a rule to show cause why the taxation should not be reviewed, and not by act on petition. Dickens v. Dickens, 28 L. J., Mat. 94.

The court will not interfere with the discretion of the registrar in respect of particular items allowed or disallowed on taxation, unless it can be shown that the taxation proceeded on an erroneous principle. Cooke v. Cooke, 3 Sw. & Tr. 374; 33 L. J., Mat. 79; 10 L. T. 141.

Remedy for Costs.]—The provisions, relating to costs, maintained in the Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1857 and 1858, and the Rules of Court, 1866, made under those acts, provide a remedy for the recovery of costs concurrently with, and not in substitution for, the provisions of the common law. Ottaway v. Hamilton, 47 L. J., C. P. 725; 3 C. P. D. 393; 38 L. T. 925; 26 W. R. 783—C. A.

Enforcing Payment—Death of Petitioner.]—After a decree absolute had been made for a dissolution of his marriage with his wife, together with an order for costs against the co-respondent, but before such costs had been taxed, the husband died:—Held, that his representative was entitled, under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 28, s. 19, to enforce such order for costs against the co-respondent. Hawks v. Hawks or Hawkes v. Hawkes and Fenwick, 45 L. J., P. 41; 1 P. D. 137; 34 L. T. 659; 24 W. R. 489.

By Attachment.]—An omission to indorse on a writ of attachment for non-payment of costs the amount of the costs, is a mere irregularity, which will be waived by delay in applying to the court to set aside the writ. Pearson v. Pearson, 2 Sw. & Tr. 546; 31 L. J., Mat. 102; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 158; 5 L. T. 772; 10 W. R. 410.

The court will not grant an attachment for non-payment of costs unless the original order for payment has been served upon the party liable by showing the same to him. Davies v. Davies and Dalby, 3 Sw. & Tr. 437; 31 L. J., Mat. 104; 6 L. T. 163; 10 W. R. 447. S. P., Parr v. Parr and White, 32 L. J., Mat. 90; 11 W. R. 550.

Where an original order has been filed in the registry, the court, upon an affidavit of facts, will direct it to be delivered out for the purpose of service. Ib.

The court granted an attachment for non-payment of costs, after substituted service of the order for payment. Miller v. Miller and Hicks, 31 L. J., Mat. 165.

An attachment will not be granted for non-payment of costs pursuant to an order, unless a copy of the order is annexed to the affidavit of service. Busby v. Busby, 2 S. & T. 383; 30 L. J., Mat. 172; 5 L. T. 137.

After a decree for dissolution of marriage with costs against the co-respondent, and an order for the payment of such costs, an attachment was issued against the co-respondent for non-payment. The person who had been cited and served with the process and notices as the co-respondent throughout the suit, moved to set aside the attachment on the ground that his surname was misspelt, and one of his christian names omitted in the citation, and process, and notices:—Held, that the co-respondent having taken no step to set the mistake right in the course of the suit, could not at the last moment take advantage of it to invalidate the proceedings, and that the order for an attachment must stand. Churchill v. Churchill and Abbott, 37 L. J., Mat. 41; L. R. 1 P. 485; 17 L. T. 619.

—— Cross-examination as to Means.]— In a husband's suit for divorce, where the wife in her answer also prayed for a dissolution of the marriage, the husband had been ordered to deposit in the registry, or to give security for, 80*l.*, to cover the wife's costs of the hearing. On his neglecting to comply with the order, the court declined to issue a writ of attachment against him, but ordered him to attend to be cross-examined as to his means. Sullivan v. Sullivan, Lehay, Madden and Slaney, 33 L. T. 706.

—— Party already in Custody.]—Where a party is in custody under an attachment for non-payment of costs, and it is desired to charge a second attachment, the court, in accordance with the practice of the court of chancery, will, upon motion, direct a writ of habeas to issue to the person having custody of the party; and, on the appearance of such party, he will be charged with the second attachment. Dickens v. Dickens, 2 Sw. & Tr. 521; 31 L. J., Mat. 59; 6 L. T. 659; 10 W. R. 810.

—— Enforcing Decree against Married Women.]—Where the court had condemned defendants in costs and had made an order upon them for the payment, it refused to direct an attachment to issue against them for non-compliance with that order, on their stating that they were married women and had no separate property. Harris v. Bradbury, 2 Sw. & Tr. 459; 31 L. J., Mat. 86; 6 L. T. 163; 10 W. R. 447.

By Ca. Sa.]—The court has no power to direct a ca. sa. to issue for costs, a ca. sa. not being a process used in the court of chancery. Hearne v. Hearne, 29 L. J., Mat. 158, n.

By Sequestration.]—A sequestration having been issued against the estate of M., who was a plaintiff in an action in which he had recovered 65*l.* 5*s.* and costs, the court ordered the solicitor for the defendant in that action to pay that sum into the registry, not to be paid out until further order; the solicitor to have notice of any application respecting it, so that he might enforce his lien for any extra costs to which he might be entitled, and to be indemnified against costs which he might incur in enforcing his lien beyond the amount of the fund. Munt v. Munt, 2 Sw. & Tr. 661; 31 L. J., Mat. 134; 7 L. T. 438.

By other Means.]—Where a party to a suit had failed to obey an order for the payment of costs, the court will not upon his application give judgment until the costs are paid, or a valid reason for their non-payment given. Chichester v. Mure, 32 L. J., Mat. 120; 11 W. R. 686.

In taxing costs incurred by a wife in a proceeding against her husband, the registrar will satisfy himself whether the attorney for the wife had or had not reasonable grounds for bringing the several matters pleaded before the court. If he had, he will be allowed all proper costs of proving such matters, even although the decision of the court on some of them may be against the wife. Allen v. Allen and D'Arcy, 2 Sw. & Tr. 107; 30 L. J., Mat. 9; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 103; 3 L. T. 480; 9 W. R. 389.

The principle of taxation of costs in matrimonial suits is as between party and party, but not as between party and party in the common law courts. The costs of issues found against the wife will not be allowed her unless they have been vexatiously and improperly put upon the record. Ib.

The number of witnesses whose expenses are to be allowed, is a question for the discretion of the registrar, who should allow the expenses of such as there was reasonable ground for calling or subpœnaing. Ib.

The reasonable expenses of journeys and inquiries taken and instituted for the purpose of procuring information should also be allowed. Ib.

For further Time to Answer.]—Costs of an application for further time to answer on behalf of a wife will, as a general rule, not be taxed against the husband. Nor costs of a motion for the husband to attend and be examined on the wife's petition for alimony, and his answer on oath thereto, where the result of his examination is to establish the truth of his answer on oath. Harding v. Harding and Lance, 2 Sw. & Tr. 549; 31 L. J., Mat. 76; 6 L. T. 692; 10 W. R. 811.

Special Jury.]—Semble, that when, upon the application of a wife, a cause is tried by a special jury, the court may, in its discretion, refuse to allow the wife the costs of the special jury. Scott v. Scott, 32 L. J., Mat. 40.

For further Particulars.]—Costs of an unsuccessful opposition by a wife to a motion for further particulars of the charges in her petition for dissolution of marriage against her husband will not be allowed her. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 L. J., Mat. 253.

Previous to Commencement of Suit—Professional Attendances.]—An order having been made, during the progress of a suit for judicial separation by a wife, that her costs should be taxed, as against the husband, the registrar disallowed, first, all charges incurred previously to the commencement of the suit; and secondly, charges for attendances by the solicitor on her father, alleged to have been necessary in consequence of her illness:—Held, that this taxation was right, inasmuch as by the practice of the ecclesiastical courts charges incurred before the commencement of the proceedings and attendances of a proctor, unless on his client personally, were never allowed as between party and party. Dickens v. Dickens, 2 Sw. & Tr. 103; 28 L. J., Mat. 94.

Counsel's Fees.]—Term refresher fees will be allowed. Stoate v. Stoate, 30 L. J., Mat. 214.

The fee of counsel for advising on the sufficiency of an answer, which is special, and not a mere traverse of the allegations in a wife's petition, will be allowed. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 30 L. J., Mat. 253.

When an application is made in court which might have been made in chambers, the applicant, if successful, is only entitled to such costs as would have been incurred in chambers. Higgs v. Higgs and Hopkins, 32 L. J., Mat. 64; 11 W. R. 154.

Husband not Appearing.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, the husband, having no defence, did not enter an appearance, and a decree nisi was made against him. The court gave him permission to attend before the registrar on the taxation of his wife's costs. Letts v. Letts, L. R. 2 P. 16.

Poverty of Husband.]—The court will make an order for the taxation and payment of a wife's costs against the husband, notwithstanding his apparent inability to pay them. Ward v. Ward, 1 Sw. & Tr. 484; 29 L. J., Mat. 17.

The inability of a husband to deposit in the registry, or give security for a sum of money to defray the wife's costs of the hearing pursuant to order, is no ground for refusing an attachment against him for non-compliance with the order. Hepworth v. Hepworth, 2 Sw. & Tr. 414; 31 L. J., Mat. 18; 5 L. T. 365; 10 W. R. 195.

Subsequent Bankruptcy of Husband.]—Where an order was made that the suit be stayed until the wife's costs were paid, the court held that the subsequent bankruptcy of the petitioner did not cancel or vacate it, and refused to allow the petition to be heard until the respondent was put in a position to defend herself. Morris v. Morris and Morris, 15 L. T. 545.

To Wife's Proctor.] — The court made an order for payment of a wife's costs to her proctor, in a suit for judicial separation. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 Sw. & Tr. 64; 2 L. T. 390; 8 W. R. 476.

A demand for payment of costs having been personally made on the respondent by a person on behalf of the petitioner's proctor, a receipt for the costs, signed by the proctor, being at the same time shewn to the respondent, is sufficient to found an order for an attachment. Ib.

Staying Proceedings for Non-Payment.]—A wife having obtained an order upon her husband to pay to her or her attorney a certain amount of taxed costs, endeavoured to enforce such order by a fi. fa., but failed in recovering them. The court ordered the proceedings in the divorce suit to be stayed until the taxed costs had been paid by the husband, but would not extend the order to the expenses incurred in the suing out and execution of the fi. fa. Keane v. Keane, 42 L. J., Mat. 12; L. R. 3 P. 52; 27 L. T. 768; 21 W. R. 248.

When the husband is petitioner, and does not comply with an order to give security, the court will stay the suit. Hepworth v. Hepworth, supra.

Where a husband had paid a sum into the registry to meet the wife's costs of the hearing of the petition, and had died shortly before the time appointed for the hearing, the court made an order for the taxation of the costs incurred for the hearing by the wife's solicitors, and the payment to them of such taxed costs out of the fund in the registry, with leave to the solicitors of the husband's executor to attend the taxation. Hall v. Hall, 3 Sw. & Tr. 390.

A wife having established a good defence in law to her husband's petition, will be entitled to have her costs taxed against him, though she may have omitted to take the precaution of having a sum of money paid into court, or security given to meet her costs of the hearing. Ellyatt v. Ellyatt, Taylor and Halse, 3 Sw. & Tr. 504; 33 L. J., Mat. 137; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1035; 11 L. T. 44.

Money paid into court by a husband petitioning for a dissolution of marriage to meet his wife's costs of the hearing, is primarily liable to the payment of those costs when taxed, although the co-respondent may have been condemned in all the costs, including those of the wife. And the husband may be unable to obtain them from him. Evans v. Evans and Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 328; 28 L. J., Mat. 136; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 606; 7 W. R. 181.

In a suit by a wife for judicial separation, an application was made for an order for the payment by the respondent of the petitioner's taxed costs, incurred previously to the hearing, to her attorney. Affidavits were filed showing that the petitioner had been living in open adultery for several years before the petition was filed, and up to the date of the petition. The court, having reason to believe that the suit was not instituted bonâ fide, but for the purpose of obtaining costs from the husband, refused to make the usual order for the payment of costs to the petitioner's attorney, but directed that they should be paid into the registry to abide the event of the hearing. Rogers v. Rogers, 4 Sw. & Tr. 82; 34 L. J., Mat. 87; 12 L. T. 236; 13 W. R. 546.

Where there were cross-suits and the marriage was dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, the court held that the husband was not liable for the costs of the wife in her suit, inasmuch as she had not taken the ordinary steps to get them taxed previously to the final determination that she had been guilty of adultery. Rolt v. Rolt, 3 Sw. & Tr. 604; 34 L. J., Mat. 51.

The decree pronouncing her guilty of adultery should be pleaded to entitle the court to take notice of it. Ib.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, a jury found that the wife had committed adultery. On a new trial, granted on the ground of surprise, the wife succeeded. The court being of opinion that the case was trumped up by the husband, condemned him in the wife's costs of both trials, and also in the costs of the rule for a new trial. Nicholson v. Nicholson and Ratcliffe, 33 L. J., Mat. 114.

In a suit by a wife for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty and incestuous adultery, the court being of opinion that there was no pretence for the charge, upon dismissing the petition refused to allow the wife her costs of the hearing, although security for them had been given. Jones v. Jones, 41 L. J., Mat. 21; L. R. 2 P. 333; 25 L. T. 856; 20 W. R. 303. Affirmed on appeal, 41 L. J., Mat. 53; 26 L. T. 106; 20 W. R. 449.

—— Fresh Adultery.] — Non-payment of the costs of a suit for dissolution of marriage, in which the husband, the petitioner, has failed, is not a ground for staying proceedings in a suit by him for dissolution on the ground of fresh adultery. Yeatman v. Yeatman and Rummell, 39 L. J., Mat. 37; 21 L. T. 647; 18 W. R. 232.

Where Part Allowed.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage the wife, before the hearing, obtained the usual order for the taxation of the costs. The registrar made an appointment and found that her taxed costs, up to the date of the order, amounted to 9*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, and that 90*l.* would be a reasonable sum to be paid into the registry to cover her costs of the hearing, but he declined to make his report to that effect, as the petitioner's solicitor was not present, and he made a second appointment. In the interim the cause was heard, and the wife failed in the suit:—Held, that she was not entitled to the costs incurred before the date of the order, nor to the costs of the hearing. Gough v. Gough and Baynton, 33 L. J., Mat. 136.

At the hearing of a wife's petition for a dissolution of marriage, it was proved that the husband had committed adultery, that such adultery had been condoned, but that the right of the wife to complain was revived by subsequent cruelty. After the verdict was given, the wife elected to take a decree for judicial separation only, which was made, with costs generally against the husband. The wife was the only witness produced to prove the charge of cruelty. The court refused to order the registrar to review his taxation of costs, by disallowing all the charges therein as to the proof of adultery, but ordered that any costs consequent upon the wife's evidence, which would not have been admitted if she had prayed in the first instance for a judicial separation, should be struck out. Dent v. Dent, 35 L. J., Mat. 61; L. R. 1 P. 125; 14 L. T. 137; 14 W. R. 544.

Suit for Nullity.]—The wife's costs of the hearing of a suit of nullity, instituted by her on the ground of the husband's impotence, were ordered to be paid by the husband to the extent of the sum for which he had deposited security in the registry, although the petition was dismissed. Tavenor, f. c. Ditchfield v. Ditchfield, 35 L. J., P. 51; L. R. 1 P. 127; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 344; 14 L. T. 227.

—— Instituted by Father.]—In a suit of nullity of marriage, instituted by the father against the husband and wife, the wife is not entitled to have her costs de die in diem taxed against the petitioner. Wells v. Wells and Cottam, f. c. Wells, 3 Sw. & Tr. 364; 33 L. J., Mat. 72; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 10 L. T. 138; 12 W. R. 672.

Suit Instituted by Guardian.] — A guardian who institutes a suit on behalf of an infant husband for dissolution of marriage by reason of his wife's adultery will be ordered to pay into the registry, or give security for a sum to meet the wife's costs of the hearing. Beavan v. Beavan, 2 Sw. & Tr. 652; 31 L. J., Mat. 166; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 769; 7 L. T. 435.

"Costs of Suits."—On a compromise, "costs of suit" held not to include costs of execution of a separation deed part of the compromise. Lancaster v. Lancaster, col. 929.

III. SEPARATION DEEDS.

1. Validity of Stipulations Generally.

Agreement to Live Separately.]—An agreement by husband and wife to live separately is not contrary to public policy and may be specifically enforced whether executory or executed. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. L. Cas. 538; 12 Jur. 467. But see 5 H. L. Cas. 40; 23 L. J., Ch. 697. Besant v. Wood, 48 L. J., Ch. 497; 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445. Hunt v. Hunt, 31 L. J., Ch. 161; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 85; 5 L. T. 778; 10 W. R. 215.

The husband cannot set up adultery to avoid such agreement. Scholey v. Goodman, 8 Moore, 350; 1 Car. & P. 36.

An agreement between a husband and the father of his wife, on her behalf, executed also by the wife, that the husband and wife should live apart, and that the husband should execute, when required, a deed of separation, to contain all usual and proper clauses, and also to secure 40*l.* a year for the maintenance of his wife and child, decreed to be specifically performed. Gibbs v. Harding, 38 L. J., Ch. 604; L. R. 8 Eq. 490; 21 L. T. 322; 17 W. R. 1093.

By an indenture between husband and wife of the first and second parts, and a trustee for the wife, of the third, reciting that unhappy differences had arisen between the husband and wife, and that they had mutually agreed to live separate, and the husband covenanted to pay an annuity during so much of the wife's life as he should live, in full satisfaction of her support and maintenance, and of all alimony whatsoever, and that he would not, at any time thereafter, sue her for the restitution of conjugal rights; and the trustee covenanted that the wife should release her husband's real and personal estate from all claims for jointure, dower, or thirds, and that he would indemnify the husband from debts incurred by the wife after separation: —Held, that such indenture was valid, and that a plea by the husband, "that the wife had instituted a suit in the ecclesiastical court for restitution of conjugal rights, in which cause he had put in an allegation and certain exhibits, charging her with adultery, and that a decree of divorce à mensâ et thoro was thereupon pronounced by that court," was no answer to an action by the trustee for arrears of the annuity. Jee v. Thurlow, 4 D. & R. 11; 2 B. & C. 547; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 81; 26 R. R. 453.

—— No Covenant not to Sue or to Condone—Judicial Separation.]—In a suit by the husband for dissolution on the ground of his wife's adultery, the wife in her answer made a counter-charge of desertion, and prayed for a judicial separation. It appeared that the husband left his wife in November, 1884, and in January, 1887, a deed was executed by which the wife agreed to live apart from her husband, but there was no covenant not to sue and no agreement to condone past offences. The jury found all the issues in favour of the wife:—Held, that the deed was not a bar to the wife's remedy, and that she was entitled to a decree of judicial separation. Moore v. Moore, 56 L. J., P. 104; 12 P. D. 193; 57 L. T. 568; 36 W. R. 110; 51 J. P. 632.

Covenant in Case of Future Separation.]—A covenant by a husband, to pay to trustees a certain annual sum by way of separate maintenance for his wife in case of their future separation, with the consent of such trustees, or their executors, is valid. Rodney (Lord) v. Chambers, 2 East, 283.

A settlement containing a provision for future separation is only void so far as relates to that provision. Merryweather v. Jones, 4 Giff. 499; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 290; 10 L. T. 62; 12 W. R. 524.

By articles before marriage a husband covenanted to settle an annuity on the wife after marriage, to be paid in the event of his death, or any separation taking place:—Held, that such a covenant was contrary to public policy and morality, and could not be enforced by a court of equity. Cocksedge v. Cocksedge, 14 Sim. 244; 13 L. J., Ch. 384; 8 Jur. 659, 935. See Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 5 Mylne & C. 229.

By an ante-nuptial settlement, the father of the husband conveyed freehold hereditaments to the use of trustees, during the life of the wife, for her separate use, subject to a proviso, whereby it was declared that if a separation should take place by reason of any disagreement between the husband and wife, or otherwise, the rents should, from the time of such separation, during the joint lives of the husband and wife, be paid to the husband:—Held, that the proviso was in the nature of a condition, and not of a limitation; and that it was void, as being contrary to public policy. Cartwright v. Cartwright, 3 De G. M. & G. 982; 22 L. J., Ch. 841; 17 Jur. 584; 1 W. R. 245.

Any agreement made, before or after marriage, which contemplates a voluntary separation of husband and wife, is void, as contrary to the policy of the law. Anon., 3 Kay & J. 382.

By an ante-nuptial settlement, property of the husband was limited, during the joint lives of himself and the wife, "if she should so long continue to live with him, and should not live separate and apart from him through any fault of her own," in trust for the separate use of the wife, without power of anticipation; and after the decease of either, "or in the event of the wife living separate and apart from her husband through any such fault," for the survivor, or for the husband, as the case might be; and after the death of the survivor, "or in the event of the wife living separate and apart from her husband through any such fault as aforesaid," for the children of the marriage :—Held, that the limitations over upon the separation of the wife and husband were void, as contrary to the policy of the law, for such a limitation in favour of the husband, if valid, would be a direct inducement to permit a state of separation, capriciously commenced by the wife, to continue. Ib.

A deed by which a husband makes a provision for his wife in case of a future separation is radically defective. Procter v. Robinson, 35 Beav. 329. S. C., on appeal, 15 W. R. 138.

A proviso annexed to the grant of an annuity for its cesser on the annuitant, a married man, living apart from his wife, is void. Nicholl v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ch. 554.

A promise to pay money if the promisee will execute a deed of separation between himself and his wife, if not void for illegality of consideration. Jones v. Waite, 4 Man. & G. 1104 ; 5 Scott (N.R.) 951 ; 9 Cl. & F. 88 ; 6 Jur. 653.

No subsequent Separation.]—Where a deed was made between husband, wife, and a trustee, providing a separate maintenance for the wife, and purporting to be made in contemplation of an immediate separation ; but, in fact, no separation then took place nor was intended to take place at that time :—Held, that the deed was void. Hindley v. Westmeath (Marquis), 6 B. & C. 200 ; 9 D. & R. 351 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 115 ; 30 R. R. 290.

By a deed, which recited that B. and his wife had agreed to live apart from each other during the remainder of their lives "upon the terms and conditions thereinafter contained," he covenanted with trustees to allow his wife to live separately, and settled a sum of money upon trust for his wife for her life, and for their children after her death, with a proviso that if he and his wife should afterwards agree by writing under their hands, attested by two witnesses, to cohabit together, the income of the trust fund should be paid to him during such cohabitation, and the trustees covenanted to indemnify him against his wife's acts and engagements. No separation took place between them :—Held, that the deed was a separation deed, and not a voluntary settlement, and that as no separation took place, it was wholly void. Bindley v. Mulloney, L. R. 7 Eq. 343 ; 20 L. T. 263 ; 17 W. R. 510.

Illegal and Legal Covenants can be Separated.]—A court of equity will enforce a legal and proper covenant in a separation deed although other covenants in the deed may be illegal. Hamilton v. Hector, L. R. 13 Eq. 511.

By a separation deed, made after the wife had instituted proceedings in the divorce court for divorce and the custody of her children, the husband covenanted to deliver up forthwith to his wife all her journals, diaries, and private correspondence and memoranda ; that the two elder children of the marriage should remain at such schools in England as the husband, or such schools elsewhere as he with the consent of the wife, should direct ; that he and his wife should each have access to them at all reasonable and convenient times, subject to the regulations of the schools ; and that their holidays should be passed by them at such places and in such manner as the trustees of the deed should direct ; and that the two younger children (who were respectively under the age of seven) should remain in the custody of the wife :—Held, that the husband was not entitled to make or retain copies of the journals, diaries, and memoranda covenanted to be delivered up. Ib.

Held, also, that having regard to the evidence with respect to the husband's misconduct, the covenants with respect to the holidays of the two elder children were reasonable and proper, and would be enforced by the court, even if the covenant as to the custody of the younger children was not legal, as to which, however, the court expressed no opinion. Ib.

Between Husband and Deceased Wife's Sister.]—By a deed purporting to be a deed of separation between a man and his deceased wife's sister, the man covenanted with the trustees to pay to the woman, during the joint lives of himself and her, an annuity of 40*l.* per annum, and the trustees covenanted with the man to indemnify him against all the future debts and liabilities of the woman. The deed also contained a proviso that if the parties should live together again, the deed should become void. The man became bankrupt :—Held, that, inasmuch as the man and woman could never legally be married, the deed was in effect a common annuity deed, and the trustees were entitled to prove for the value of it under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 31. Naden, Ex parte, Wood, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 121 ; L. R. 9 Ch. 670 ; 30 L. T. 743 ; 22 W. R. 936.

Return to Cohabitation — Bankruptcy.]—A wife was entitled at the time of her marriage to a sum of money secured by the promissory note of her brother. A deed of separation between her and her husband was executed, in which her brother covenanted that he would hold the money upon trust for the wife and husband successively for life and then for the child of the marriage. The husband and wife, after separation, returned to cohabitation, and the husband became bankrupt :—Held, that as the deed contained provisions beyond the purview of a mere separation deed, it could be supported as a valid settlement, and that the brother, having by the deed made himself a trustee of the legal debt, it became subject to the wife's equity to a settlement. Ruffles v. Alston, 44 L. J., Ch. 308 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 539 ; 32 L. T. 236 ; 23 W. R. 465. See col. 1003.

Covenant not to Commence or Prosecute Proceedings—Prior Adultery of Wife—Subsequent Adultery by Husband.]—A separation deed contained a clause, "No proceedings shall be commenced or prosecuted by or on behalf of either party against the other in respect of any cause of complaint which now exists or which has arisen before the date of these presents." Prior to the execution of the deed it was known that the wife had committed adultery. Subsequently the husband committed adultery, and the wife filed her petition for a judicial separation :—Held, that the wife's prior adultery was a bar to the court granting her the relief prayed for, and that the husband was not precluded by the covenant from pleading it, as he he was not thereby "commencing or prosecuting" proceedings. Rose v. Rose (8 P. D. 98) considered. Gooch v. Gooch, 62 L. J., P. 73 ; [1893] P. 99 ; 1 R. 516 ; 68 L. T. 462 ; 41 W. R. 655.

Covenant Sufficient to support Deed.]—A covenant to indemnify a husband against his wife's debts is not the only consideration that will support articles of separation: a covenant to put an end to a suit against the husband in the ecclesiastical court, or to pay him an annuity, or to pay his existing debts, is sufficient. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405; 14 L. J., Ch. 204; 9 Jur. 148. Affirmed in the house of lords, 1 H. L. Cas. 538; 12 Jur. 467. Disapproved in, S. C., 5 H. L. Cas. 40; 23 L. J., Ch. 697. And see cols. 987, 988.

Covenant not to Visit Wife.]—A separation deed in which the husband covenants with a surety that he will not visit the wife without the surety's consent, does not contemplate reconciliation and subsequent separation, so as to be void as being contrary to public policy. Webster v. Webster, 4 De G. M. & G. 437; 22 L. J., Ch. 837; 1 W. R. 509.

Husband to have Benefit of Wife's Establishment.]—A wife having instituted a suit against her husband for a divorce, an arrangement was come to, and the husband executed a deed, by which he assigned a house to trustees to permit the wife to enjoy it and accommodate herself and children; and an income of 4,000*l.* a year was also provided for her separate use, to keep up the establishment for herself and children, "upon such a scale and regulated in such a manner as she should think fit," and the surplus was to be repaid to the husband. The deed provided, that so long as the husband should be desirous to reside in the house, "and to conform to the spirit and intention of the deed, and to partake of the benefit of the establishment to be kept up therein by the wife, he should be at liberty so to do." The suit was discontinued, and the husband partook of the establishment:—Held, first, that the deed was not void on any ground of public policy; secondly, that being a family arrangement and a compromise of disputed rights, there was a sufficient consideration; thirdly, that it was not void for uncertainty; and, fourthly, that the court could enforce its due performance, both by the wife and the husband. Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45; 15 L. J., Ch. 17.

Obtained by Misrepresentation or Undue Influence.]—By a deed of three parts between husband, wife, and trustee, reciting that differences existed, and that the husband and wife had agreed to live separately, the husband covenanted to pay to the trustee an annuity for the separate maintenance of the wife. The trustee having sued the husband for arrears of the annuity, the latter pleaded that he was induced to make the deed by means of false and fraudulent misrepresentations made by the plaintiff to him, that is to say, by the plaintiff, before the making of the deed, falsely and fraudulently representing to him that the wife was a virtuous woman, whereas in truth she was not a virtuous person, and that the plaintiff had carnally known her, and subsequently to the intermarriage of her and the defendant, and before the making of the deed, which last-mentioned facts the plaintiff concealed from the defendant, and induced him to make the deed in order that the plaintiff might continue an adulterous intercourse with the wife. At the trial, the plea was found, and the verdict thereon entered for the defendant:—Held, on motion to enter judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto, that although the plea did not show that the representations set out were necessarily fraudulent, it not being alleged that the plaintiff knew them to be false, or that he knew that the wife was the defendant's wife at the time he had intercourse with her, yet it might be sustained as a general plea of fraud, which, after verdict, was a good answer to the action. Evans v. Edmonds, 13 C. B. 777; 1 C. L. R. 653; 22 L. J., C. P. 211; 17 Jur. 883; 1 W. R. 412.

Held, also, that it was not necessary to allege that the wife, as cestui que trust, was a party to the fraud upon the defendant, as a court of law can only look to the legal rights of the parties to the deed. Ib.

To an action by a trustee, on a deed of separation between husband and wife for non-payment by the husband of the wife's annuity, it is no defence on equitable grounds, that the husband and wife were induced to live apart by the undue influence, persuasion, and threats of the trustee, who unlawfully harboured the wife: and that, at the time the deed of separation was executed, the wife was pregnant, of which fact she and the trustee kept the husband in ignorance, and thereby induced him to execute the deed; and that he has always been willing to receive back and cohabit with his wife. Kendall v. Webster, 1 H. & C. 440; 31 L. J., Ex. 492.

Release of Reversionary Life Interest—Annuity—Death of Husband—Election—Confirmation.]—A woman, married in 1873, covenanted in a separation deed that she would on the death of her husband release a reversionary life interest expectant upon the death of her husband, to which she was entitled under her marriage settlement, and the husband provided for the payment to his wife of an annuity, some instalments of which she received during his life. On the death of the husband:—Held, that the wife was not bound by the covenant, and that consequently, notwithstanding the receipt of the annuity, she had never been in a position to make an election. Harle v. Jarman, 64 L. J., Ch. 779; [1895] 2 Ch. 419; 13 R. 610; 73 L. T. 20; 43 W. R. 618.

2. Prospective Separation.

Agreement for, Void.]—Any agreement made before or after marriage, which contemplates a voluntary separation of husband and wife, is void, as contrary to the policy of the law. Anon., 3 Kay & J. 382; Westmeath v. Salisbury, 5 Bli. (N.S.) 339; Westmeath v. Westmeath, 1 Dow, (N.S.) 519, and Brindley v. Mulloney, L. R. 7 Eq. 343; 20 L. T. 263; 17 W. R. 510; Cocksedge v. Cocksedge, 5 Hare, 397, 432 n.; Green v. Green, 5 Hare, 400 n.; Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 5 Myl. & C. 229; 3 Jur. 1116; Smith v. Smith, 18 Jur. 1021.

A deed providing for prospective separation is invalid, and a separation deed being put an end to by a reconciliation, a clause to revive the provision for the wife is invalid, but a provision for her separate use, notwithstanding future reconciliations or separations, is good. Byrne v. Carew (Lord), 13 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

Condition or Limitation.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement, the father of the husband conveyed freehold hereditaments to the use of trustees, during the life of the wife, in trust for her separate use subject to a proviso, whereby it was declared that if a separation should take place by reason of any disagreement between the husband and wife, or otherwise, the rents and profits should from the time of such separation, during the joint lives of the husband and wife, be paid to the husband:—Held, that the proviso was in the nature of a condition, and not of a limitation; and that it was void as being contrary to public policy. Cartwright v. Cartwright, 3 De G. M. & G. 982; 22 L. J., Ch. 841; 17 Jur. 584; 1 W. R. 245.

—— Extent of Invalidity.]—A settlement containing a provision for future separation is only void so far as relates to that provision. Merryweather v. Jones, 4 Giff. 499; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 290; 10 L. T. 62; 12 W. R. 524. And see 4 Giff. 509.

A deed by which a husband makes a provision for his wife in case of a future separation is radically defective. Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Beav. 329; 15 W. R. 138.

Proviso for Cesser of Annuity on Separation.]—A proviso annexed to the grant of an annuity for its cesser on the annuitant, a married man, living apart from his wife, is void. Nicholl v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ch. 554.

Apportionment of Annuity of Separation.]—By deed executed before marriage, it was agreed that if any separation should take place by the desire or at the instance of the wife, then the husband should receive the moiety of an annuity, which the wife was possessed of, and she should receive the other moiety, without the control of her husband, but if such separation should take place at the instance or by the means of the husband, then the wife shall receive the whole annuity. This is such an agreement as equity will support, and if the separation appears to be caused by the means of the husband, the wife shall have the whole annuity during such separation. Hoare v. Hoare, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 268.

3. Consideration, General Legality.

Compromise of Indictment for Assault.]—Specific performance of agreement for separation of husband and wife, decreed, though agreement provided for compromises of indictment for assault. Elworthy v. Bird, 2 Sim. & S. 372; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 190. See Westmeath (Earl) v. Westmeath (Countess), Jac. 126.

An agreement by a husband in consideration of his wife waiving the further prosecution of an indictment against him for an assault, to allow her an annuity by way of separate maintenance, is an illegal consideration though entered into with the sanction of the court in which the indictment was tried. Garth v. Earnshaw, 3 Y. & Coll. 584.

Discontinuance of Nullity Suit.]—Articles of separation decreed to be specifically performed. A covenant to indemnify the husband against his wife's debts is not the only consideration that will support such articles. A covenant to put an end to a suit against the husband in the ecclesiastical court, or to pay him an annuity, is sufficient. Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405; 14 L. J., Ch. 204; 9 Jur. 148. Affirmed 1 H. L. Cas. 538; 12 Jur. 467.

An agreement to put an end to a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of impotency is not contrary to public policy. Ib.

Support and Education of Children.]—Semble, though a deed of separation contains no more than a covenant on the part of the wife's trustees that the wife shall provide support for and educate the children of the marriage, and that she shall not sue the husband for alimony or otherwise, still it is a deed for valuable consideration, and not voluntary. Nixon v. Hamilton, 2 Dr. & Wal. 364; Ir. Eq. R. 56.

Execution by Husband—Payment by Third Party.]—The execution of a deed of separation (already agreed upon and drawn up) by the husband is a legal consideration for an agreement by a third person to pay a sum of money to the husband towards the discharge of certain debts and expenses for which the husband was solely liable. Jones v. Waite, 9 Cl. & F. 101. Affirming 8 L. J., Ex. 305; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 655; 1 Scott, 730; 4 L. J., C. P. 184.

4. Covenant of Indemnity.

Covenant to Indemnify by Trustees, a consideration—Not necessary to Validity.]—On a deed of separation the trustees indemnifying the husband against the wife's future debts is a valuable consideration, and takes the conveyance out of the statute. Stephens v. Olive, 2 Bro. C. C. 90. And see Worrall v. Jacobs, 3 Mer. 256.

A deed of separation between husband and wife, containing no covenant on the part of a trustee to indemnify the husband, or other valuable consideration, is not on that account void. Frampton v. Frampton, 4 Beav. 287; 5 Jur. 980. And see Haworth v. Bostock, 4 Y. & C. 1; and Westmeath v. Westmeath, Jac. 126.

Deed good against Husband, though not against Creditors.]—In a deed of separation purporting to be made on account of unhappy differences of temper, the husband covenanted with trustees of the wife to pay an annuity to her, but there was no covenant of indemnity to him against the wife's debts:—Held, nevertheless, that the covenant, though not good as against the creditors of the husband, was good against his estate. Clough v. Lambert, 10 Sim. 174; 3 Jur. 672.

Conditional Covenant to Indemnify.]—By articles of separation the husband covenanted with his wife's trustee to secure to her an annuity of 1,000*l.* on or before a certain day, and the trustee covenanted with the husband that on the annuity being secured he would enter into a covenant to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts:—Held, that the latter covenant, though conditional, was sufficient to support the articles. Wellesley v. Wellesley, 10 Sim. 256. And see 4 Myl. & C. 561: 9 L. J. (N.S.) Ch. 21; 4 Jur. 2.

Covenant by Third Person.]—Covenant by a third person to indemnify the husband against wife's debts, a good consideration. Compton v. Collison, 2 Bro. C. C. 377.

Covenant by Wife restrained from anticipation no consideration.]—A husband, upon a treaty for separation from his wife, agreed with a trustee to pay his wife an annuity for her separate use, and also, during their separation, to permit their daughter, an infant, but now of age, to reside with, and be under the control of, and educated and supported by, her mother; in consideration whereof the wife (who was entitled under her marriage settlement to property, settled to her separate use without power of anticipation) agreed with the trustee to indemnify her husband in respect of any debt on her own account or on account of their daughter. The trustee declining to enforce payment of arrears of the annuity, or to act any longer as trustee:—Held, first, that this was a voluntary agreement on the part of the husband, no consideration moving from the trustee by way of indemnity or otherwise, and the wife having no power to contract so as to bind property as to which, though settled to her separate use, she was restrained from anticipation. Walrond v. Walrond, 1 Johns. 18; 28 L. J., Ch. 97; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1099; 7 W. R. 33.

Abdication of Parental Duty by Husband.]—Besides the stipulation relative to the daughter being contrary to the policy of the law, semble, no action on the agreement would lie: and the circumstance of the daughter's having since attained her majority would not affect the question. Ib.

Jurisdiction of Court of Equity.]—The spiritual court has exclusive cognisance of the rights and duties arising from the state of marriage: a court of equity, therefore, has no jurisdiction upon a contract for separation between husband and wife simply; much less where it will affect a purchaser or creditor; but the jurisdiction holds in special cases, as where a third party covenants to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts, or a fortune accrues to the wife after separation, or the property is the subject of a trust. Legard v. Johnson, 3 Ves. 352.

Husband an Alien.]—The plaintiff married the defendant, an alien, and afterwards, by a deed of separation not acknowledged, conveyed real and personal estate to a trustee to pay an annuity to the defendant. The trustee covenanted to pay the annuity, and the plaintiff to indemnify the trustee. An action being brought against the trustee by the defendant, the plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction, and to set aside the deed, under which she insisted the defendant, as an alien, could take nothing, and that the marriage was not legal according to the law of Guernsey, where it was celebrated; that she had executed the deed supposing the defendant to have legal rights over her property, and that the deed was not acknowledged. The court refused to continue the injunction to the hearing on any of the grounds except the last. Dumoncel v. Dumoncel, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 92.

Semble, the plaintiff having denied the marriage, and covenanted to indemnify the trustee, could not rely on the deed not being properly acknowledged. Ib.

Deed Voluntary.]—A separation deed containing a covenant by the trustees that the husband should be at liberty to reimburse himself, with respect to his wife's debts, out of the annuity thereby made payable to her, but no other covenant on their part, is a voluntary instrument, Cowx v. Foster, 1 John. & H. 30; 29 L. J., Ch. 886; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1051; 2 L. T. 797.

5. COVENANT NOT TO SUE FOR RESTITUTION OR MOLEST.

Molestation — Proceedings for Divorce in Foreign Country.]—A covenant in a separation deed between husband and wife not to molest is not broken unless there is both an annoyance and an intention to annoy. Where therefore a husband covenants in a separation deed not to molest his wife, the fact that he subsequently goes to a foreign country for the purpose of instituting, and does there institute, proceedings for divorce does not of itself amount to molestation in the absence of an intention to annoy the wife. Hunt v. Hunt, 67 L. J., Q. B. 18; [1897] 2 Q. B. 547; 77 L. T. 421—C. A.

Breach—No Trustee—Wife Covenanting not to Molest, Annoy or Interfere—Absence of dum casta clause—Adultery of Wife no Answer to Action.]—The intervention of a trustee is unnecessary to enable a married woman to sue her husband under a separation deed entered into between her and her husband. In the absence of express provision, adultery of the wife is no answer to an action by her for breach of covenant in a separation deed, even if there be a covenant not to molest, annoy or interfere. Sweet v. Sweet, 64 L. J., Q. B. 108; [1895] 1 Q. B. 12; 15 R. 146; 71 L. T. 672; 43 W. R. 303; 59 J. P. 373.

Restitution Suit—Injunction.]—A husband having in a deed of separation covenanted with trustees on behalf of his wife, that he would not endeavour to compel her to cohabit or live with him by any legal proceedings, afterwards commenced a suit against her in the divorce court for restitution of conjugal rights:—Held, that the trustees of the deed and the wife were entitled to an injunction to restrain him from proceeding with the suit. Hunt v. Hunt, 31 L. J., Ch. 161; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 85; 5 L. T. 778; 10 W. R. 215. Quære Spering v. Spering, 3 Sw. & Tr. 211; 32 L. J., Mat. 116; 9 L. T. 24; 11 W. R. 810.

The policy of the law and the jurisdiction of courts of equity in reference to deeds of separation, considered. Ib.

Covenant Specifically Enforceable.]—A covenant entered into by a husband in a separation deed not to molest his wife, may, where the consideration for the deed is sufficient, be specifically enforced by a decree of the court of chancery. A covenant by a husband, in a separation deed, not to sue his wife for the restitution of conjugal rights, is a covenant which is not, in itself, illegal; but is one which, if he enters into an agreement to insert it in a separation deed, the court will compel him to insert accordingly. Ib. And see Sanders v. Rodway, 16 Beav. 207; 16 Jur. 1005; Moore v. Moore, 56 L. J., P. 104; 12 P. D. 193; 57 L. T. 568; 36 W. R. 110; 51 J. P. 632; and Besant v. Wood, 48 L. J., Ch. 497; 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445; post, col. 1014.

A deed of separation between husband and wife contained a covenant by the trustees of the wife, that she should not molest or disturb her husband; a suit in the divorce court, for a judicial separation, is no breach of the covenant. Thomas v. Everard, 6 H. & N. 448; 30 L. J., Ex. 214.

By a deed a husband covenanted with the trustee of the deed to make an allowance to his wife, and the trustee covenanted, on behalf of the wife, neither to sue for restitution of conjugal rights or alimony, nor to molest, trouble, or disturb the husband. Shortly after the execution of the deed, the wife, who had duly received her allowance, commenced proceedings in the divorce court for a judicial separation, and for alimony. Thereupon the husband filed a bill in equity against his wife, praying that she might be restrained from continuing the proceedings, and from doing any act to molest, trouble or disturb him:—Held, that he was entitled to a perpetual injunction to the extent (only) of restraining the proceedings in the divorce court. Flower v. Flower, 25 L. T. 902; 20 W. R. 231.

—— Suit for Dissolution—Evidence.]—Husband and wife executed a deed which provided that "in case either party shall hereafter commence or prosecute any proceeding against the other in respect of any cause of complaint which may hereafter arise, no offence or misconduct which has been committed or permitted before the execution of these presents, and no act, deed, neglect, or default of either in relation to any such offence or misconduct, shall be pleaded nor alleged by either party, or be admissible in evidence." The wife was subsequently guilty of adultery with a co-respondent, and the husband instituted a suit for dissolution of marriage by reason of such adultery:—Held, that evidence of familiarities between the wife and co-respondent prior to the separation was admissible within the terms of the deed. Harris v. Harris and Woodden, 41 L. J., Mat. 61; 27 L. T. 428; 21 W. R. 80.

Independent Covenants — Molestation, what is.]—Covenants in a separation deed, by which respectively the husband has covenanted to pay an annuity to a trustee for the wife, and the trustee has covenanted that the wife shall not molest the husband, must be construed as independent covenants in the absence of any express terms making them dependent, and, therefore, a breach of the covenant that a wife shall not molest the husband is not an answer to an action for the annuity. Neither adultery alone by the wife, nor adultery by her followed by the birth of an illegitimate child, is a breach of a covenant in a separation deed against molestation by the wife. But, semble, adultery by the wife followed by the birth of an illegitimate child whom she puts forward as the child of her husband, especially if this is done with intent to claim a title or property to which the legitimate offspring of her husband would be entitled, is evidence of a breach of a covenant against molestation by her. By Brett, M.R., in order to constitute a breach of the covenant in a separation deed against molestation by a wife, some act must be done by her, or by her authority, with intent to annoy her husband, and which is in fact an annoyance to him, or at least some act must be done by her or by her authority with a knowledge that it must of itself without more annoy her husband, or annoy a husband with reasonable and proper feeling. Fearon v. Aylesford (Earl), 54 L. J., Q. B. 33; 14 Q. B. D. 792; 52 L. T. 954; 33 W. R. 331; 49 J. P. 596—C. A. And see Crouch v. Waller, 4 De G. & J. 302.

Alimony.]—In a separation deed the husband covenanted with the trustee to allow to his wife 50*l.* a year for her support, he being indemnified against all debts and liabilities on her account, and it being agreed on her behalf that she would not in any way endeavour to compel the husband again to live with her, or to allow her "any further or greater or other support, maintenance or alimony" than the annuity of 50*l.*:—Held, that in the absence of any act showing an unqualified acceptance by the wife of the provisions of the separation deed, or of any attempt to enforce it against her husband, a court of equity would not, upon an interlocutory motion, restrain her from proceeding in the divorce court to obtain an allowance for alimony, as incident to her petition for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, but the court put her under an undertaking to deal with the alimony as the court should direct. Williams v. Baily, L. R. 2 Eq. 731.

When made in ignorance of Facts.]—Upon motion by a wife for an injunction to restrain her husband from proceeding in the divorce court to obtain a dissolution of marriage, on the ground of a contract by the husband to condone all former causes of complaint, and not to take legal proceedings in respect thereof:—Held, that as the contract might be set up by way of defence in the divorce court, and as it was executed by the husband in ignorance of the fact that his wife had committed adultery, and on her positive assertion of innocence, a court of equity would not interfere to stay proceedings in the divorce court. Brown v. Brown, 38 L. J., Ch. 153; L. R. 7 Eq. 185; 19 L. T. 594; 17 W. R. 98.

When not Acted on—Desertion.]—A deed of separation never acted upon does not deprive a husband's subsequent separation from his wife against her will of the character of desertion. Cock v. Cock, 3 Sw. & Tr. 514; 33 L. J., Mat. 157; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 806; 10 L. T. 726; 13 W. R. 189.

Action against Husband for Board and Lodging of Wife.]—Where an action is brought against a husband for board and lodging of his wife who is living apart from him without her fault and without means of maintenance, it is no defence to such action that a deed of separation had been entered into by which the husband had covenanted to pay her an annual sum, and that the deed had become void by reason of the wife's breach of covenant not to molest her husband. Tucker v. Tarrant, 35 L. T. 6.

Suit for Judicial Separation.]—A suit for judicial separation is not a breach of a covenant not to molest. Thomas v. Everard, 6 H. & N. 448; 30 L. J., Ex. 214.

6. Effect of, on Property.

Separated Wife Accepting Bill.]—Married woman separated from her husband, and having a separate maintenance, renders the same liable by accepting bill of exchange. Stuart v. Kirkwall, 3 Madd. 387.

Legacy—Payment to Separated Wife.]—A husband and wife in America, by a deed of separation agreed to live apart, and that the wife should be at liberty to carry on business, etc., and to retain for her own use all her present and future property, in any way acquired. Subsequently a legacy, having accrued in right of the wife, was carried to the account of the husband and wife. Nothing having been heard of the husband for fourteen years, on a petition presented by the wife, asking the transfer to her of the stock, the court directed the stock to be sold, and the proceeds paid to her on her sole receipt. Whitworth v. Dilworth, 2 Sm. & G. 35; 18 Jur. 445; 2 W. R. 150.

Raising Jointure notwithstanding Separation.]—By articles of separation, dated in June, 1834, the defendant agreed that he would, on or before the 1st of February, 1835, by a charge on freehold estates, or by investment of an adequate sum of money, or by the best means which might then be in his power, effectually secure to the plaintiff, his wife, an annuity of 1,000*l*. In December, 1834, a deed of arrangement was executed between the defendant and his son, by which certain family estates were conveyed to trustees to raise money for the payment of various incumbrances, afterwards to such uses as the defendant and his son should appoint, and in default of appointment to the defendant for life, and then to his son absolutely, with a power for the defendant to jointure his then present or any future wife to the extent of 1,000*l*. per annum:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have her jointure raised out of the estates, as against the defendant and his son. Mornington (Countess) v. Mornington (Earl), 18 L. J., Ch. 442.

Equity to a Settlement.]—A married woman who had left her husband, and was living separate from him, but not in a state of adultery, held to be entitled to a settlement out of a sum of stock to which her husband had become entitled in her right. Eedes v. Eedes, 11 Sim. 569; 10 L. J., Ch. 199.

—— Return to Cohabitation.]—A wife was entitled at the time of her marriage to a sum of money secured by the promissory note of her brother. A deed of separation between her and her husband was executed, in which her brother covenanted that he would hold the money upon trust for the wife and husband successively for life and then for the child of the marriage. The husband and wife, after separation, returned to cohabitation, and the husband became bankrupt:—Held, that as the deed contained provisions beyond the purview of a mere separation deed, it could be supported as a valid settlement, and that the brother, having by the deed made himself a trustee of the legal debt, it became subject to the wife's equity to a settlement. Ruffles v. Alston, 44 L. J., Ch. 308; L. R. 19 Eq. 539; 32 L. T. 236; 23 W. R. 465.

Indemnity against Thirds at Common Law—Share under Statute of Distributions.]—Husband and wife having agreed to live apart from each other, a sum of stock was invested in the name of trustees, and, by a separation deed, containing the usual provisions, the husband agreed to pay to his wife, for her maintenance, an annuity of 180*l*. a year, and it was declared that the stock was intended as a security for the payment of that annuity. The deed contained a proviso that the husband should be indemnified out of the annuity against the debts and contracts of his wife, and all dower and thirds at common law or by custom, which she, at any time thereafter might claim, challenge, or demand from, out of, or against her husband, or his present or future estate, real or personal, and an agreement that the wife should make and execute all such acts, deeds, and matters as should be requisite for the purpose of releasing, barring, or extinguishing all dower or thirds at the common law, or by custom, which she could or might claim or demand in, to, or out of any real or personal estate of her husband. The husband afterwards dying intestate:—Held, that the deed did not deprive the wife of her share of her husband's personal estate, under the statute of distributions. Slatter v. Slatter, 1 Y. & Coll. 28.

Dividend of Stock for Maintenance of Wife—Grant of Annuity.]—Trust in a deed of separation, to permit A. to receive the dividend of stock for the maintenance and support of the wife, with a covenant of indemnity to her husband; a grant by her of an annuity out of the dividends was held void. Hyde v. Price 3 Ves. 437.

Delivery Up of Separated Wife's Journals—Husband no Right to Copies.]—By a separation deed, made after the wife had instituted proceedings in the divorce court for divorce and the custody of her children, the husband covenanted to deliver up forthwith to his wife all her journals, diaries, and private correspondence and memoranda: that the two elder children of the marriage should remain at such schools in England as the husband, or such schools elsewhere as he with the consent of the wife, should direct; that he and his wife should each have access to them at all reasonable and convenient times, subject to the regulations of the schools; and that their holidays should be passed by them at such places and in such manner as the trustees of the deed should direct; and that the two younger children (who were respectively under the age of seven) should remain in the custody of the wife:—Held, that the husband was not entitled to make or retain copies of the journals, diaries, and memoranda covenanted to be delivered up. Hamilton v. Hector, L. R. 13 Eq. 511. Affirmed, 40 L. J., Ch. 692; L. R. 6 Ch. 701; 19 W R. 990.

Marriage Settlement and Covenant in Separation Deed.]—By a marriage settlement personal property was settled (as to the wife's property) to her for life to her separate use, with remainder to the children of the marriage. By a deed of separation the husband covenanted "that all such estates, real and personal, which might at the date of the marriage settlement, or which during the joint lives of husband and wife should descend, or come to, or devolve upon, or be given, or devised or bequeathed, or conveyed to or in trust for him, should be holden, enjoyed, sold, given away, devised, bequeathed, and disposed of by the wife, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns." Two children of the marriage attained twenty-one, and died intestate, leaving the husband their sole next of kin:—Held, that the beneficial interests which the children had acquired under the settlement, and which devolved upon the husband as next of kin, were not bound or affected by the husband's covenant in the separation deed. Hudson v. King, 6 L. T. 856.

Held, also, that such beneficial interests formed part of the husband's personal estate. Ib.

Admission of Will.]—Admission of will by feme covert, heiress-at-law, living separate from her husband, sufficient to establish it. Codrington v. Shelburne (Earl), Dick. 475.

Powers of Registrar—Agreement to Separate—Marriage Contract under French Law—Deed drawn by Registrar—Variation of Conditions of Contract.]—In a suit by the wife for dissolution of marriage, the parties at the hearing agreed on certain terms of separation which were made an order of court, and it was referred to the registrar to draft a deed of separation embodying these terms with the usual clauses, and with full power to determine all questions as to the form of the deed, and all questions arising out of the terms of the settlement. The parties, being English subjects, had been married in Paris, and the marriage contract declared that they adopted the French law as ruling the civil conditions of their marriage. The contract stipulated that the parents of the petitioner as her dowry should pay various sums to the husband, the wife, and the children, under certain circumstances; and also contained various conditions as to the investment and devolution of property acquired by the wife at and after her marriage, the power of disposing of property, movable and immovable, by the husband and wife, mutually in each other's favour, the mutual liability for debts contracted by either:—Held, that, under the terms of the agreement, the registrar had power to determine the questions arising under the French law as to whether a separation of bodies effected a separation of goods, or whether a separation of goods was brought about by the agreement, even though a contrary effect might be inferred from its terms; and, also, whether an intention that separation of goods should not take place could be gathered from the agreement. But, held, further, that the parties, on signing the agreement, could only be taken to have intended that the deed should embody and carry out the modifications of the marriage contract relating to the respective proportions of the income to be paid to the husband and wife, and to the giving up by the husband of all articles belonging to the wife—and that the registrar had exceeded his powers in dealing with the pecuniary relations of the parties under the other terms of the marriage contract. De Ricci v. De Ricci, 61 L. J., P. 17; [1891] P. 378.

7. Wife's Annuity Clause.

Absolute Covenant to pay Annuity—Adultery by Wife.]—In a separation deed a covenant, by which the husband undertakes to pay his wife an annuity without restricting his liability to such time as she shall be chaste, is good, and is not against public policy, and the covenant remains in force and the annuity continues payable, although the wife afterwards commits adultery. But, semble, per Cotton, L.J., on the authority of Evans v. Carrington (2 De G. F. & J. 481), that if the covenant had been inserted in the separation deed, with the intent that the wife might be at liberty to commit adultery, the deed would have been void. Fearon v. Aylesford (Earl), 54 L. J., Q. B. 33; 14 Q. B. D. 792; 52 L. T. 954; 33 W. R. 331; 49 J. P. 596—C. A.

Enforcing.]—Covenant in deed of separation to pay trustee of wife an annuity, enforced though there was none to indemnify husband. Ros v. Willoughby, 10 Price, 2.

Bill against husband and a creditor upon the wife's annuity, to have articles of separation performed; decreed fully as against the husband, and that he should exonerate the annuity from the charge upon it. Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 511.

Though a man is bound to maintain his wife and children, yet his funds are liable to creditors. Ib.

Injunction to stay proceedings at law for recovering an annuity secured to the wife by a deed of separation not containing any covenant to indemnify the husband from debts, refused. Westmeath (Earl) v. Westmeath (Countess), Jac. 126.

Decree for arrears and growing payments upon bond for annuity upon separation of husband and wife, the trustee refusing to enforce the bond without indemnity. An appropriation to answer the growing payments was refused. Cooke v. Wiggins, 10 Ves. 191. And see Walrond v. Walrond, 1 Johns. 18; 28 L. J., Ch. 97; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1099; 7 W. R. 33.

Contingent Charge.]—A., on a separation from his wife, covenants to pay her an annuity of 200*l.* during her life, and assigns a pension for his own life and that of J. R., to trustees, as an auxiliary fund in case of failure of payment by him; and covenants that in case of his and J. R.'s death in the lifetime of the wife, all his real and personal estate shall be charged with the annuity. A. dies, leaving real estate which descended on the heir-at-law, and personal to the amount of 16,000*l.* J. R. is surviving. The wife has no right to an allocation of the real and personal estate to secure her annuity. Lynar v. Mills, 2 Sch. & Lef. 338.

Whether such a bill would be entertained if it were alleged and appeared that the executors had wasted the assets, quære. Ib.

Annuity to Husband — Release of Marital Right — Consideration.]—In a deed executed upon a separation between husband and wife, by them and the trustees of their marriage settlement, the wife charged her separate property comprised in the settlement with the payment of an annuity to the husband, and the husband released his marital rights in respect of all future property acquired by the wife. The release by the husband is a good consideration for the grant of the annuity by the wife, and the court will enforce the payment of the annuity. Logan v. Birkett, 1 Myl. & K. 220; 2 L. J. Ch. 52.

Consideration.]—After a separation between a husband and wife, an action was brought by the wife's mother against the husband for necessaries supplied to the wife and was settled by arbitration. Under the award two deeds were executed, by one of which a previous post-nuptial agreement and warrant of attorney were recited; and in pursuance of them an annuity was made payable to the wife for her separate use out of trust property to which the husband was beneficially entitled. By the other deed covenants were entered into by trustees on behalf of the wife that she would not molest the husband, and for indemnifying him against her debts, and that out of the annuity granted by the other deed the wife would support the children whom the husband covenanted to leave under her charge; and there was a proviso in the latter deed making it void on the husband and the wife cohabiting. The wife's conduct rendered her unfit to have the care of the children:—Held, first, that the annuity deed was not merely voluntary or incomplete, but created an effectual trust not affected by the wife's conduct. Crouch v. Waller, 4 De G. & J. 302.

Held, secondly, that after subsequent cohabitation the children had no title to maintenance out of the annuity. Ib.

Parole Agreement — Part Performance — Statute of Frauds.]—In a deed of separation, a husband covenanted with a trustee to pay to his wife an annuity for her life. Subsequently, when oppressed with illness, he solicited his wife to return and live with him; but this she declined to do, unless he would agree to continue the payment of the annuity; and thereupon, in accordance with a stipulation proposed by the wife's trustee, he verbally agreed to secure the annuity upon his real estate. Upon the faith of this parol contract, the wife returned to and cohabited with her husband, and continued so to do up to the time of his death, which happened within a fortnight afterwards. On a bill filed by the widow, claiming to be a creditor against her husband's real estate in respect of the annuity, the devisee objected that the parol agreement was, under the statute of frauds, void; but the court held, that there had been a sufficient part performance of the agreement to entitle the wife to a decree to charge the real estate with the annuity. Webster v. Webster, 27 L. J., Ch. 115; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 655; 5 W. R. 725. And see S. C., 4 De G. M. & G. 437; 1 Sm. & G. 489; 22 L. J., Ch. 837; 1 W. R. 509.

Marriage with Deceased Wife's Sister.]—By a deed purporting to be a deed of separation between a man and his deceased wife's sister, the man covenanted with the trustees to pay to the woman, during the joint lives of himself and her, an annuity of 40*l.* per annum, and the trustees covenanted with the man to indemnify him against all the future debts and liabilities of the woman. The deed also contained a proviso that if the parties should live together again the deed should become void. The man became bankrupt:—Held, that, inasmuch as the man and woman could never legally be married, the deed was in effect a common annuity deed, and the trustees were entitled to prove for the value of it under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, s. 31. Nuden, Ex parte, Wood, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 121; L. R. 9 Ch. 670; 30 L. T. 743, 575; 22 W. R. 768.

Satisfaction of Annuity by Legacy.]—A., by deed of separation, covenanted with the trustee of the deed to pay him an annual sum of 52*l.* during the life of A.'s wife, to be paid to her on four special quarterly days for her separate use, without power of anticipation. A., by will, subsequently gave certain specific property to trustees, to pay out of the rents an annuity of 52*l.* to his wife generally, on the same special quarterly days:—Held, that there being no direction in the will to pay debts and legacies, and no expression of a contrary intention, the general rule must prevail, that the annuity given by the will was in satisfaction of the annuity covenanted to be paid by the deed of separation; and that the widow was put to her election. Atkinson v. Littlewood, L. R. 18 Eq. 595; 31 L. T. 225.

Personal Covenant.]—A., by articles of separation between himself and his wife, covenanted that he would, on or before a specified day, either by a charge on freehold estates in England or Wales, or by an investment of money, secure the payment of an annuity to a trustee for his wife:—Held, that this was only a personal covenant, and created no actual charge, but only bound the covenantor to create a charge upon his lands on or before a certain day. Mornington v. Keane, 2 De G. & J. 292; 27 L. J., Ch. 791; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 981; 6 W. R. 434.

Covenant to make Provision for Children.]—In a separation deed the husband covenanted to pay an annuity during his life to the wife for the support of her herself and her infant child, C. J., and that he would by deed or will secure for her after his decease an annuity of 30*l.* He further covenanted that he would support all the children, that was to say (naming four other children), except C. J., "and should and would, by his last will or otherwise, make a proper and sufficient provision for all the said children after his decease." The husband died without having made any provision for C. J.; and by his will, after bequeathing two annuities, gave all the residue of his property to trustees, for his other children equally:—Held, that C. J. was entitled to the benefit of the covenant. Swift v. Grazebrook, 12 Jur. 87.

Provable in Husband's Bankruptcy.—An annuity determinable on unchastity is provable in the husband's bankruptcy. Neal, Ex parte, Batey, In re, 14 Ch. D. 579; 43 L. T. 264; 28 W. R. 875.

8. Arrangements as to Children.

See 36 & 37 Vict. c. 12, s. 2.

Delivery of, to Father, notwithstanding Provision in Separation Agreement.]—Children ordered to be delivered up by their mother to their father on habeas corpus, notwithstanding provisions contained in deeds of separation for their residing with the mother. Westmeath's (Lord) Children, In re, Jac. 267, n.

Abdication of Duty by Father—Policy of Law.]—The rule of law, that a covenant by a father to abstain from seeing or exercising any control over his children is void, is grounded upon this, that such a covenant is opposed to the welfare of the child; but if the court finds that by reason of the conduct of the father his control is injurious to the child, such a covenant will be enforced. Swift v. Swift, 34 Beav. 266; 34 L. J., Ch. 209; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 148; 11 L. T. 697; 13 W. R. 378. Affirmed, 34 L. J., Ch. 394; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 458; 12 L. T. 435; 13 W. R. 731.

By a memorandum of agreement made between husband and his wife, who was suing him for a divorce, it was agreed that a deed of separation should be executed, containing, among other provisions therein mentioned, provisions that two of their children should be placed entirely in the custody of the wife; that none of the children should be sent to any school in Berkshire, or at a less sum than 60*l.* a year for each child; and that neither of the two eldest sons should be sent to any school without the written consent of both husband and wife, unless to certain specified places of education:—Held, that the provisions as to the children were contrary to public policy, as interfering with the due discharge of the father's duties with respect to them, and that on this ground, apart from all other objections, a decree for the execution of the deed of separation could not be made, though, if it had been executed, the insertion of those provisions would not have made it wholly void. Vansittart v. Vansittart, 2 De G. & J. 249 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 289 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 519 ; 6 W. R. 386.

By a deed of separation a husband and wife agreed to live separately for the rest of their lives, and the husband covenanted to pay to the wife a sum of 15*s.* per week, and to permit her to have the custody of the children of the marriage, wholly freed from his authority, as if she were a feme sole. The marriage was afterwards dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery :—Held, that the husband's agreement to permit his wife to have the custody of the children ought not to be enforced, and that the terms of the deed of separation ought to be varied by reducing the amount of the weekly payment to the wife from 15*s.* to 10*s.* Jump v. Jump, 52 L. J., P. 71 ; 8 P. D. 159 ; 31 W. R. 956.

Matrimonial Domicil in France—Agreement Contrary to Policy of English Law.]—A native of England married in England a woman a native of France and went to reside with her in France, where their children were born. Differences having arisen, the wife instituted a suit in England, where the husband was residing, for a divorce, on the ground of cruelty and adultery, to which the husband filed a responsive allegation, and caused a suit in chancery to be instituted to obtain possession of the two youngest children, who had remained in France with their mother. The Lord Chancellor made an order for delivery of the children to their father, and a court in France made an order for carrying it out. The wife appealed against both orders. An agreement was then signed by the wife in France, and by the husband in England, by which it was stipulated that the youngest child should be left with the mother, that the wife's appeals should be abandoned, and her suit for a divorce, and that she would facilitate the husband's proceedings for a divorce, and that the husband would pay her an annuity and allow her access to all her children. The wife abandoned her appeals and her suit for a divorce, and the husband's responsive allegation was also dismissed. The wife filed a bill to obtain access to her children, and to have the annuity paid her :—Held, that, assuming the agreement to be one which was to be judged of by French law, and that it was valid by French law, it would not be enforced here, inasmuch as the stipulations that the youngest child should, in contravention of the order of the Lord Chancellor, be delivered to his mother, and that the wife would facilitate the husband's proceedings for a divorce, were contrary to the laws and policy of England. Hope v. Hope, 8 De G. M. & G. 731 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 417 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 454 ; 5 W. R. 387.

Misconduct of Father towards Children.]—A husband who had indecently conducted himself towards an infant female child of the marriage, and separated from his wife in consequence, covenanted in the separation deed that the children of the marriage (who were infants) should at all times thereafter be under the sole care, management, and protection of the wife :—Held, that the covenant was not contrary to public policy, and was enforceable in equity at the suit of the wife ; and that an injunction consequently granted against the husband to restrain him from proceeding to obtain the infant children from the custody of the wife should not be a perpetual injunction, but one until further order only. S. C., 1 De G. J. & S. 710.

Misconduct by Husband—Proper Covenants enforced.]—A court of equity will enforce a legal and proper covenant in a separation deed although other covenants in the deed may be illegal. Hamilton v. Hector, L. R. 13 Eq. 511. Affirmed, 40 L. J., Ch. 692 ; L. R., 6 Ch. 701 ; 19 W. R. 990.

By a separation deed, made after the wife had instituted proceedings in the Divorce Court for divorce and the custody of her children, the husband covenanted to deliver up forthwith to his wife all her journals, diaries, and private correspondence and memoranda : that the elder two children of the marriage should remain at such schools in England as the husband, or such schools elsewhere as he with the consent of the wife, should direct ; that he and his wife should each have access to them at all reasonable and convenient times, subject to the regulations of the schools ; and that their holidays should be passed by them at such places and in such manner as the trustees of the deed should direct ; and that the younger two children (who were respectively under the age of seven) should remain in the custody of the wife :—Held, that having regard to the evidence with respect to the husband's misconduct, the covenants with respect to the holidays of the elder two children, were reasonable and proper, and would be enforced by the court, even if the covenant as to the custody of the younger children was not legal, as to which, however, the court expressed no opinion. Ib.

Access by Wife—Husband taking Children to Egypt.]—By a deed of separation made in 1880 between H., a medical officer in the army, and his wife, provision was made as to the custody of their four children (of whom the eldest was eleven and the youngest three years of age) during the approaching absence of the husband in India, after which he was to resume the entire custody of them, but he covenanted that full and free liberty of access to them should be always accorded to the wife, to the extent at least of her having the opportunity of spending one day in every fortnight with them. In 1884 he was ordered to Egypt, and proposed to take the first and third of the children with him. Mrs. H. applied for an injunction to restrain him from doing so :—Held, that the covenant did not bind H. to keep the children in a place where Mrs. H. could conveniently have access to them, and did not preclude him from taking them with him to any place where he might be ordered in the course of his duties, and that the injunction must be dissolved, there being no case made that he was removing them for the purpose of preventing Mrs. H. from having access to them. Hunt v. Hunt, 28 Ch. D. 606 ; 52 L. T. 302 ; 33 W. R. 157 —C. A.

"Usual Terms as to Access"—Custody.]—Cross petitions for divorce by husband and wife were withdrawn at the hearing, upon terms which included the execution of a separation deed to be settled by a counsel agreed upon in case of difference, and to contain "all usual terms as to access to children, &c." The parties could not agree, and the counsel settled a deed, providing that the wife should have the sole custody of the children, two boys of thirteen and fourteen, for half their vacations:—Held, in an action by the wife for specific performance of the agreement, that these provisions related to custody and not access, and it was beyond the powers of the counsel to insert them. That the court had power to settle the proper form of deed instead of referring it back. Eversheď v. Eversheď, 46 L. T. 690; 30 W. R. 732.

Semble, in an action for specific performance of an agreement to execute a separation deed, the court will not go into evidence whether the provisions agreed upon are for the benefit of the children. Ib.

Custody given to Wife—Specific Performance.]—The court will not refuse specific performance of an agreement for a separation deed—in compromise of a divorce suit—on the ground that it provides for the wife having the custody of the children. Hart v. Hart, 50 L. J., Ch. 697; 18 Ch. D. 670; 45 L. T. 13; 30 W. R. 8.

Child Born after Agreement—Participation in Fund.]—Upon a separation between A. and B. (husband and wife), a deed was executed, making a provision for the wife, and all and every the children of A., by B., who should attain twenty-one. A reconciliation took place, and another child was born:—Held, upon the construction of the deed, that such last-mentioned child did not participate in the provision. Hulme v. Chitty, 9 Beav. 437; 10 Jur. 323.

Unfitness of Wife—Atheistical Opinions—Removal of Children.]—By a covenant in a separation deed executed after the passing of the Infants' Custody Act, 1873, a father agreed that his infant daughter should remain in her mother's custody during eleven months in each year. The mother held and promulgated atheistical opinions, and refused to allow the child to receive any religious instruction. She also published and circulated an obscene book. The child was made a ward of court, being then about eight years old:—Held, that to bring up the child in the religion of her father was a duty which the court owed to its ward, and was unaffected by the covenant in the separation deed; and also that the refusal of religious instruction to the child and the publication of the obscene book were in themselves sufficient grounds for removing her from the custody of the mother. Besant, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 497; 11 Ch. D. 508; 40 L. T. 469; 27 W. R. 741—C. A.

Deed not a delegation by Husband of Parental Rights.]—Such a deed does not place the wife with respect to the child in the same position as the father would have been in if he had not executed it. It does not amount to a delegation by the husband to the wife of his rights and powers in respect of the child, such substitution or delegation not being permitted by our law. Ib.

Covenant with Trustees to Maintain Children—Right of Child to sue—Cestui que Trust—Stranger suing on Covenant.]—To entitle a third person, not named as a party to a contract, to sue either of the contracting parties, that third person must possess an actual beneficial right which places him in the position of cestui qui trust under the contract. By a deed of separation between husband and wife, the husband covenanted with the trustees to pay to them an annuity for the use of the wife and two eldest daughters, and also to pay to the trustees all the expenses of the maintenance and education of the two youngest daughters, provided that the trustees permitted them to go to such school as the husband should direct, and provided also that the covenants by the trustees were duly observed and performed: provided also that the two youngest daughters should live at such place (being reasonable and proper for the purpose) as the husband should direct, and should be maintained and educated at his expense, the husband and wife to have all reasonable access to them. And the trustees covenanted with the husband that they would, during the continuance of the separation, keep him indemnified against all liability for the maintenance of the wife and two eldest daughters, and against all molestation by them, and that the wife would not take any proceedings against the husband for alimony, except as aforesaid; and that they, the trustees, would, on the husband defraying all the expenses connected therewith, carry out his desires as to the school at which the two youngest daughters should be educated, and the place at which they should live, and would permit them, if they so desired, and without any interference on the part of the wife, to accept any invitation of the husband to reside with him. On one of the two youngest daughters subsequently attaining sixteen, the husband refused any longer to maintain her, whereupon she brought an action, by her next friend, against the husband and the trustees of the separation deed to enforce the husband's covenant, the trustees having refused to allow their names to be used as plaintiffs:—Held, that upon the construction of the deed, the plaintiff was not in the position of cestui que trust under the covenant so as to entitle her to maintain the action, but liberty was given to her under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. XVI. r. 2, to amend the writ, by adding the trustees, the wife, and the other daughters, or any of them, as plaintiffs. Touche v. Metropolitan Railway Warehousing Co. (L. R. 6 Ch. 671) considered. Gandy v. Gandy, 54 L. J., Ch. 1154; 30 Ch. D. 57; 53 L. T. 306; 33 W. R. 803—C. A.

The trustees refusing to be joined as co-plaintiffs, the statement of claim was amended by making the wife a co-plaintiff:—Held, that she had such an interest as entitled her to sue, the deed being an arrangement between the husband and wife, and the trustees being introduced on her behalf in order to get over the difficulty that the husband and wife could not at law sue each other, so that the trustees were to be considered trustees for the wife, and if they refused to sue, she could sue in equity. Ib. And see De Crespigny v. De Crespigny, col. 1016.

Party Taking Advantage of and Repudiating Deed.]—After the separation deed the husband committed adultery, and a decree was made for judicial separation, giving the custody of the two youngest daughters to the wife. After this the wife applied for increased alimony, which was granted by the president, but his decision was reversed on appeal (7 P. D. 168), both the arguments and the judgment of the court of appeal proceeding on the footing (though the court did not expressly decide the point) that the husband remained liable under the deed to pay for the maintenance and education of the two youngest daughters. He now contended that his covenant was put an end to by the custody of the youngest daughters being given to his wife:—Held, that he was not at liberty to retain the benefit of a decision given on the footing that his liability under the covenant continued, and at the same time to insist that his liability under it had determined, and the appeal was ordered to stand over, with liberty to the wife to apply to the divorce court for increased alimony, if she should be so advised. Ib.

9. Resumption of Cohabitation.

Effect of.]—A deed of separation is avoided by the parties living together again. Scholey v. Goodman, 8 Moore, 350; 1 Car. & P. 36. Angier v. Angier, Gilb. 142.

A husband and wife when before the divorce court made an agreement in writing that if judicial separation was decreed, the wife should be permitted to enjoy during her life certain furniture; but that if she annoyed her husband her enjoyment of it should cease. Judicial separation was decreed, and the wife took possession of the furniture. The husband and wife afterwards resumed cohabitation:—Held, in an action by the wife to recover the furniture, that the agreement came to an end when cohabitation was resumed; and that, as the wife was entitled to the furniture during separation only, she took nothing under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 25, which relates to property acquired by wife during separation. Dictum in Randle v. Gould (8 El. & Bl. 457) questioned. Nicol v Nicol, 55 L. J., Ch. 437; 31 Ch. D, 524; 54 L. T. 470; 34 W. R. 283; 50 J. P. 468—C. A.

—— Judicial Separation—Alimony.]—By a deed of separation in 1862, a husband and wife covenanted that the wife should not be compelled to cohabit with the husband, that she might dispose of her own property, that she might live where she pleased, and that the husband should pay to her 100*l.* a year while she should live chastely. From 1862 until 1872 the husband and wife lived apart; but in 1872 they resumed cohabitation. In 1879 they again separated, and in 1881 the wife obtained a decree of judicial separation with alimony at the rate of 180*l.* per annum. In an action by a lodging-house keeper against the husband for food and lodging supplied to the wife between July and October, 1880, the husband pleaded the deed of 1862, and that the 100*l.* a year therein covenanted to be paid by him to his wife had been so paid:—Held, that the deed was not rescinded by cohabitation having been resumed in 1872, that the decree for alimony did not affect the deed, and that the payment by the husband of the agreed sum was an answer to the action. Negus v. Forster, 46 L. T. 675; 30 W. R. 671.—C. A.

—— On Action on Bond.]—A defendant gave a bond to A. and B., conditioned for the payment of an annuity to his wife, unless she should at any time molest him on account of her debts, while living apart from her. By an indenture of the same date between the parties and the wife, reciting that the defendant and his wife had agreed to live separate during their lives, and that, for the wife's maintenance the defendant had agreed to assign certain premises to A. and B., and had given them an annuity bond; it was witnessed that the defendant assigned the premises to them in trust for the wife, and he covenanted to A. and B. to live separate from her, and not molest her or interfere with her property; and power was given to her to dispose of it by will, and to sell the assigned premises, and buy estates or annuities with the proceeds. The wife covenanted with the defendant to maintain herself during her life out of the property, unless she and the defendant should afterwards agree to live together again; and that he should be indemnified from her debts. The indenture (except as to the assignment), and also the bond, were to become void if the wife should sue the defendant for alimony, or to enforce cohabitation. And it was provided, "that if the defendant and his wife should thereafter agree to live together again, such cohabitation should in no way alter the trusts created by the indenture." There was no express covenant on the part of the trustees. The defendant and his wife separated, and afterwards lived together again for a time, and this fact was pleaded to an action by the trustees upon the annuity bond, as avoiding the security:—Held, that the reconciliation was no bar to an action on this bond, since it did not appear that the bond and the indenture of even date with it, were not really executed with a view of immediate separation; and although there might be parts of the indenture which a court of equity would not enforce under the circumstances, yet there was nothing, on a view of the whole instrument, to prevent the court from giving effect to the clause which provided for a continuance of the trusts, notwithstanding a reconciliation. Wilson v. Mushett, 3 B. & Ad. 740; 1 L. J., K. B. 250.

Agreement as to—Subsequent to Deed.]—So, where a husband in a separation deed covenanted with a surety (who covenanted to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts) to pay the wife an annuity for life:—Held, that a subsequent agreement between the husband and surety that if the wife returned to live with the husband the annuity should continue was valid and enforceable in equity. Webster v. Webster, 4 De G. M. & G. 437; 1 Sim. & G. 489; 22 L. J., Ch. 837; 1 W. R. 509.

Although generally the provisions of a separation deed are annulled by reconciliation and re-cohabitation, yet a husband may so conduct himself subsequently as to create new obligations on the footing of the old obligations contained in the deed of separation. Ib.

Covenant providing for.]—Action upon a deed of separation, by which a husband covenanted with a trustee for the wife, "that, as and by way of a provision for the wife, he and his executors would pay to the trustee or to the wife, or one of them, during her life, 10*s.* weekly"; provided, "that in case the husband and wife should at any time thereafter voluntarily and mutually consent and agree, by any writing under both their hands, subscribed and attested by and in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, to live and cohabit, and should accordingly live and cohabit, together as man and wife for one calendar month next thereafter, the deed should thenceforth be void." Equitable plea, that, before the arrears of the weekly allowance accrued, the husband and wife, without any writing under their hands, cohabited together for six months :—Held, that the deed was not impliedly avoided by such cohabitation. Randle v. Gould, 8 El. & Bl. 457 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 57 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 304 ; 6 W. R. 108.

Construction—Parties not Husband and Wife—Annuity during Life—Resumption of Cohabitation.]—The rule applicable to a separation deed between husband and wife, that a provision made for the wife is primâ facie to be taken to be during separation only, will not be extended to a separation deed in similar form made between persons who have lived together without being husband and wife. In such a case, on that ground and on the construction of the deed, which granted to the woman an annuity "during her life" :—Held, that the annuity did not cease on the resumption of cohabitation. Abdy, In re, Rabbeth v. Donaldson, 64 L. J., Ch. 465 ; [1895] 1 Ch. 455 ; 12 R. 163 ; 72 L. T. 178 ; 43 W. R. 323—C. A.

Transfer of Shares—Re-transfer.]—On the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant the whole of the plaintiff's property, except thirty-five shares in the Crystal Palace Company, was settled. The shares were taken possession of by the husband in his marital right, and were transferred into his name. A separation afterwards took place, and by the separation deed, which contained a covenant by the trustee under it to indemnify the husband against the wife's debts, the husband agreed to transfer the shares to a trustee for the separate use of the wife, and this was done. A re-cohabitation afterwards took place :—Held, that the agreement by the husband to transfer the shares was an integral part of the separation deed, and that as the latter had been rendered void by the re-cohabitation, the husband was entitled to a re-transfer of the shares. O'Malley v. Blease, 20 L. T. 899 ; 17 W. R. 952.

Maintenance of Children.]—As to the rights of children to maintenance out of annuity granted to wife under a separation deed where cohabitation has been resumed. See Crouch v. Waller, 4 De G. & J. 302.

10. Subsequent Adultery.

Effect of.]—Adultery of the wife after separation is no plea to a covenant to pay a trustee a separate maintenance for the wife. Baynon v. Batley, 8 Bing. 256 ; 1 M. & Scott, 339 ; 1 L. J., C. P. 75.

A deed of separation, if valid when executed, is not invalidated by subsequent adultery. Evans v. Carrington, 2 De G., F. & J. 481 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 364 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 197 ; 4 L. T. 65.

But the circumstance of a wife having induced her husband to execute a deed of separation, in contemplation of a renewal of the illicit intercourse, is sufficient to invalidate the deed. Ib.

A decree of dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery, is no answer to an action by the wife's trustee upon a covenant by the husband to pay her an annuity, contained in a deed of separation which recites the wife's acknowledgment of the adultery, which was afterwards made the foundation of the suit in the divorce court. Gos'in v. Clark, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 681 ; 31 L. J., C. P. 330 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 520 ; 6 L. T. 824.

Husband and wife were living apart under a deed of separation, when the husband presented a petition for a divorce, on the ground of his wife's adultery. The wife made a counter-charge of cruelty, and prayed for a judicial separation. At the hearing the jury found all the issues in favour of the wife :—Held, that the institution of the suit remitted the wife to the position which she held before the deed of separation, and, that, being the successful party, she was entitled to the full remedy allowed by the law, viz. a judicial separation. Brown v. Brown and Shelton, 43 L. J., Mat. 47 ; L. R. 3 P. 202 ; 31 L. T. 272.

—— Marriage Settlement.]—A bill by a husband against a divorced wife, the trustees of her marriage settlement, and of a deed of separation, alleged that the wife had been guilty of incontinence, before her marriage, with a person with whom she afterwards committed adultery ; and after her marriage she withdrew herself from her husband, and refused to cohabit with him, whereupon a deed of separation was executed by him, his wife, and a trustee : that the wife left the husband, and refused to cohabit with him, in collusion with her paramour, in order that she might more readily have adulterous intercourse with the paramour, and that she fraudulently procured the husband to execute the separation deed for the purpose of more securely carrying on her adulterous intercourse with the paramour ; that proceedings at law for crim. con., and in the divorce court for a dissolution of marriage, had been successfully prosecuted ; that a large sum was due to him for costs in such proceedings from the paramour ; that since the divorce he had made no payment under the separation deed ; and that an action by the trustee had been commenced against him. The bill prayed that the marriage settlement and the deed of separation might be set aside and declared void as against the husband :—Held (affirming 1 John. & H. 598 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 330 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 268), that the marriage settlement could not be set aside, either on the ground of the incontinence before marriage or of the subsequent adultery of the wife. Evans v. Carrington, 2 De G. F. & J. 481 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 364 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 197 ; 4 L. T. 65.

Held, also (reversing the vice-chancellor) that the deed of separation was fraudulent and void, there being evidence that the wife had had illicit intercourse before her marriage, and that she had induced the plaintiff to execute the deed in order more easily to renew and facilitate the criminal intercourse with her paramour. Ib.

Non-disclosure of ante-nuptial incontinence on the part of a wife :—Held, not to be such a fraud upon the husband as to entitle him to set aside settlement made upon the marriage. Ib.

But, semble, that adultery committed before separation will invalidate a separation deed. Ib.

The court of chancery has no jurisdiction to deprive an adulteress, whose marriage has been dissolved, of any benefit under a settlement made under the marriage. Ib.

The circumstance of a wife having induced her husband to execute a deed of separation, in contemplation of a renewal of the illicit intercourse :—Held, sufficient to invalidate the deed. Ib.

Under a covenant of indemnity in such a deed, the husband has no claim in respect of costs incurred in the proceedings for a divorce. Ib.

Subsequent Divorce.]—By a deed of three parts, between husband, wife, and trustees, reciting that differences existed, and that the husband and wife had agreed to live separately, the husband covenanted to pay an annuity to the wife during their joint lives and so long as they should live separately and apart ; also, in case of survivorship, to pay a sum of money to the trustees for her funeral expenses ; the trustees also covenanted to protect the husband against molestation by the wife, and to indemnify against her debts :—Held, that a plea alleging her subsequent adultery, and a decree by the divorce court of dissolution of marriage, was no answer to an action by the trustees for arrears of the annuity, the covenant for payment of annuity being absolute so long as they should live separately and apart. Charlesworth v. Holt, 43 L. J., Ex. 25 ; L. R. 9 Ex. 38 ; 29 L. T. 647 ; 22 W. R. 94.

Permanent Maintenance notwithstanding Deed of Separation.]—A wife, by a deed of separation, agreed to accept certain sums as a provision for her support, and not to sue her husband for any further maintenance. Subsequently, having discovered that he had been guilty of incestuous adultery, she obtained a decree for dissolution of the marriage :—Held, that, notwithstanding the deed, she was entitled to the usual order for permanent maintenance. Morrall v. Morrall, 50 L. J., P. 62 ; 6 P. D. 98 ; 29 W. R. 897.

A husband's adultery with one K. was condoned by his wife, but, differences between them having subsequently arisen, the parties separated, each party by the separation deed covenanting not to take proceedings to compel living together, and the husband covenanting to pay for the wife's benefit an annuity of 252*l.* The husband afterwards renewed his adulterous connection with K., and on the ground of the last adultery the wife obtained a decree for judicial separation. At the time of the proceedings the husband's means had greatly increased, and the wife applied for an inquiry as to his means, with a view to obtaining the allowance of a larger sum by way of permanent alimony :—Held, that the husband and wife were bound by the separation deed, and that the wife was not entitled to permanent alimony. Gandy v. Gandy, 51 L. J., P. 41 ; 7 P. D. 168 ; 46 L. T. 607 ; 30 W. R. 673—C. A.

No Revival by subsequent Adultery.]—Where a wife had entered into a voluntary deed of separation, in which it had been covenanted on her behalf that she should not in any future proceedings against her husband plead any offence or misconduct which had then been committed by him, and she had subsequently filed a petition for dissolution of her marriage by reason of his adultery and cruelty, but had failed to establish the cruelty alleged by her to have been committed subsequently to the date of the execution of the deed of separation :—Held, that his previous cruelty had not been revived by his subsequent adultery, and that the petitioner was only entitled to a decree of judicial separation. Rose v. Rose, 52 L. J., P. 25 ; 8 P. D. 98 ; 48 L. T. 378 ; 31 W. R. 573—C. A.

Judicial Separation, notwithstanding Deed.]—Husband and wife agreed to separate, and a deed was executed under which an allowance was secured to the wife. Subsequently the husband filed a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of her adultery, which was alleged to have taken place after their separation. The wife denied the alleged adultery, charged the husband with cruelty and prayed for a decree of judicial separation. At the trial the jury found in favour of the wife :—Held, that the wife was remitted to her original position by the institution of the suit by the husband, and being the successful party in the suit, that she was entitled to the fullest redress which the law allowed, namely, a decree of judicial separation. Brown v. Brown and Shelton, 43 L. J., Mat. 47 ; L. R. 3 P. 202 ; 31 L. T. 272.

11. Suing on Deeds.

Not Executed by Trustee.]—By a deed of separation, A. and B. were named trustees for the wife. B. never executed the deed, but promised to do so, and, on two occasions, instructed an attorney to enforce the deed against the husband. B., who survived A., having died, the wife brought an action upon the deed in the name of the executors of B. against her husband, the proceedings in which action were stayed by a judge's order. The court, on the application of the wife, set aside the order, upon payment of the costs of the application, and giving security to the executors against the costs of the action to the satisfaction of the master. Archard v. Coulsting, 6 Man. & G. 75.

In Trustee's Name, but without his Authority.]—By a deed of separation a husband agreed to pay an annuity to a trustee for the use of the wife. The annuity being in arrear, and the trustee refusing upon indemnity to sue the husband, an action was commenced in the trustee's name, but without his authority, for the recovery thereof. Under the circumstances, the court refused to stay the proceedings at the instance of the defendant. Auster or Auster v. Holland, 1 B. C. Rep. 104 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 229 ; 10 Jur. 786.

For Payment of Allowances.]—By a deed of separation, dated the 22nd April, 1797, a husband covenanted with F. to pay, during the life of the wife, into her proper hands, for her separate use, or to such persons as she should by any note in writing, signed with her proper hand, appoint, notwithstanding coverture, a yearly sum of 163*l.* 16*s.*, by weekly payments of 3*l.* 3*s.* The deed contained a proviso for redemption of the annuity, on payment by the husband to the wife, to and for her separate use, of 1,000*l.* and all arrears of the annuity. In November, 1797, the husband gave to S. a bond and a warrant of attorney for securing the principal sum of 1,400*l.*, and 5*l.* per cent. interest in July, 1799 ; and in answer to a bill filed by the husband in 1800, to restrain proceedings at law upon these securities, the covenantee, F., admitted that, as to 1,000*l.*, the consideration was the sum agreed to be paid by the husband for the redemption of the annuity ; and, upon the death of the husband, the bond and warrant of attorney were found amongst his papers. In an action by the executor of F. upon the deed, to recover thirty-nine years' arrears of annuity, the defendant pleaded that he had, under the proviso therein, paid to the wife, to and for her separate use, 1,000*l.* and all arrears due at the time. At the trial, the judge told the jury that the absence of any payment of, or claim to, the annuity for thirty-nine years, though not conclusive, was evidence for them to consider whether or not the annuity had been extinguished by payment of the 1,000*l.* and arrears under the proviso; and that, if the bond and warrant of attorney were given to S. by the authority of the wife, and for her use, for the 1,000*l.*, and the money thereby secured was actually paid to the obligee, or to his personal representative, then such payment to the wife was within the meaning of the issue:—Held, that the direction was correct. Bostock v. Hume, 8 Scott (N.R.) 590; 7 Man. & G. 893.

Plea of Dissolution of Marriage.]—A covenant in a deed, whereby a husband covenanted with trustees that he would, during the joint lives of himself and his wife, and during so long as they should live separate and apart, pay unto the trustees for the separate use of his wife an annuity, is an absolute covenant for payment of the annuity during the joint lives of the husband and wife, and during so long time as they lived separately, and not merely while the marriage tie subsisted; therefore, a plea of dissolution of the marriage is no answer to an action on the covenant for arrears of the annuity. Charlesworth v. Holt, 43 L. J., Ex. 25; L. R. 9 Ex. 38; 29 L. T. 647; 22 W. R. 94. Rowley v. Rowley, 35 L. J., P. 110; L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 63.

By a separation deed reciting that differences had arisen between a husband and wife, in consequence of which they had agreed to live apart, the defendant became a surety for the payment by the husband to the trustee for the wife, of a weekly sum during the joint lives of the husband and wife. In an action against the defendant, as surety, for arrears of the weekly sum:—Held, that a plea setting out the deed, and alleging that the defendant became a party to it to prevent any public exposure, that the wife had subsequently commenced a suit for a divorce, and that the marriage had been dissolved, was bad. Grant v. Budd, 30 L. T. 319; 22 W. R. 544.

Interference of Equity.]—The court of chancery exercises only its ordinary jurisdiction in giving effect to articles of separation between husband and wife, so far as they regard an arrangement of property agreed upon. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 H. L. Cas. 538; 12 Jur. 467.

A husband entered into a covenant, in a deed of separation, that he would permit his wife to live separate from him, and would not molest her for so doing nor visit her without her consent:—Held, that a court of equity will restrain him from infringing such a covenant. Sanders v. Rodway, 16 Beav. 207; 16 Jur. 1005.

A husband, having in a deed of separation covenanted with trustees on behalf of his wife, that he would not endeavour to compel her to cohabit or live with him by any legal proceedings, afterwards commenced a suit against her in the divorce court for restitution of conjugal rights:—Held, that the trustees of the deed and the wife were entitled to an injunction to restrain him from proceeding with the suit. Hunt v. Hunt, 4 De G. F. & J. 221; 31 L. J., Ch. 161; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 85; 5 L. T. 778; 10 W. R. 215.

Power of Court, Variation of, after Dissolution of Marriage.]—In June, 1881, a deed of separation was executed by which the husband agreed to pay, for the benefit of the wife, 52*l.* a year. Shortly after the separation she committed adultery, and in November, 1882, a decree for dissolution of the marriage was made absolute. In April, 1883, the husband obtained leave to present a petition to vary the deed, on payment of all arrears up to that time. There were three children of the marriage, who were living with the husband. A petition having been presented, the matter was referred to the registrar, who reported that the wife had no means of support, and that the husband's income was about 270*l.* a year. Butt, J., treated the case as one of alimony depending mainly on the husband's means, and refused to vary the deed. But held, on appeal, that the case was not to be treated as one of alimony, but one in which the court had a discretion as to the amount of allowance which ought to be made to the wife under all the circumstances; and that, having regard to the circumstances, and the conduct of the wife in the suit, the husband ought to be allowed to retain one-half of the allowance provided by the deed. Clifford v. Clifford, 53 L. J., P. 68; 9 P. D. 76; 50 L. T. 650; 32 W. R. 747—C. A.

12. Specific Performance.

Jurisdiction.]—Courts of equity, recognising the validity of separation deeds, will enforce them. Sanders v. Rodway, 16 Beav. 207; 16 Jur. 1005.

A court of equity will recognise separation deeds, and enforce specific performance of covenants in them. Hunt v. Hunt, 31 L. J., Ch. 161; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 45; 5 L. T. 412; 10 W. R. 161.

The court of chancery has jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of an agreement by which a person has bound himself to execute a deed, although such deed may be a deed of separation between himself and his wife. Wilson v. Wilson, 5 H. L. Cas. 40; 23 L. J., Ch. 697.

An agreement between a husband and the father of the wife, that the husband and wife should live apart, and that the husband should execute a deed of separation containing all usual and proper clauses, and securing an annuity for the maintenance of his wife and child, and that the expense of the agreement and deed should be borne equally by the husband and the father, will be decreed to be specifically performed. Gibbs v. Harding, 39 L. J., Ch. 374; L. R. 5 Ch. 336; 18 W. R. 361. Affirming, 21 L. T. 322.

—— Discretion of Court.]—There is no doubt of the general jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree the specific performance of articles between husband and wife for a separation and a separate maintenance. But the court exercises its discretion in this case very cautiously, and will not give its assistance until it has seen whether, from the circumstances of the case, there is or is not a probability of the parties being reconciled. A sentence in ecclesiastical court for the restitution of conjugal rights is a reason for this court refusing to give assistance:

in such a case, and, in general, if such an agreement is not fit to be enforced, the court will, on a cross bill, order it to be delivered up, though there may be cases in which no relief will be given to either party. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 2 Cox, 109.

—— Revising Agreement.]—Held, also, that the court was fully at liberty to examine the articles of agreement, and on finding in them a stipulation as to payment of debts inconsistent with the rest of the articles, and, insensible or absurd, to authorise the introduction into the deed of a covenant which would carry into effect the real intentions of the parties. Wilson v. Wilson, supra.

—— Trifling Breaches by Person seeking to enforce.]—A married woman can contract to live apart from her husband, and the husband is entitled to come to the court to enforce specific performance of such a contract. A husband is not debarred from enforcing a deed of separation and from obtaining an order restraining his wife from commencing an action for the restitution of conjugal rights by reason of trifling breaches of the covenants on his part. Where, in a separation deed, the husband had covenanted to allow an infant child to reside with the wife, and had subsequently concurred as next friend of the infant in a petition under the Infants' Custody Act (36 Vict. c. 12) for the removal of the infant from the wife's custody, which had been ordered by the court:—Held, that this was not a breach of the husband's covenant. Injunction granted to restrain the wife from suing for restitution of conjugal rights. Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445. And see Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45; 15 L. J., Ch. 17; 9 Jur. 1022; and Durand v. Durand, 2 Cox, 207.

Legal and Illegal Covenants.] — A court of equity will enforce a legal and proper covenant in a separation deed, although other covenants in the deed may be illegal. Hamilton v. Hector, L. R. 13 Eq. 511. Affirmed, 40 L. J., Ch. 692; L. R. 6 Ch. 701; 19 W. R. 990.

Wife having Custody of Children.] — The court will not refuse specific performance of an agreement for a separation deed, because it provides for the wife having the custody of the children. Hart v. Hart, 50 L. J., Ch. 697; 18 Ch. D. 670; 45 L. T. 13; 30 W. R. 8.

Dum casta Clause.]—Secondly, that a dum casta clause did not come within the term "usual covenants," in a separation deed agreed to as part of the terms of compromise of a divorce suit. Ib. And see col. 857.

Usual Covenants.]—Thirdly, that the court would construe the term "usual covenants" in reference to surrounding circumstances, but the adultery of the wife not having been proved could not form an element for the consideration of the court. Ib.

Arbitration Clause.]—Fourthly, that the agreement on the face of it being complete, the arbitration clause could only come into force in case of difference between the parties, and did not oust the jurisdiction of the court to settle the deed itself. Ib.

Decree for specific performance; the deed of separation to be settled in chambers if the parties differed, and no dum casta clause to be inserted. Ib.

Mistake.]—It is no answer to a suit for specific performance for the defendant to say that though he understood what the words of the agreement were he was under a mistake as to their legal effect. Ib.

Offer by Husband to receive back Wife.]—Specific performance decreed of articles of separation at the suit of the wife (to allow her separate maintenance agreed upon), though the husband offered by his answer to receive her again. Guth v. Guth, 3 Bro. C. C. 614. But see id. n. See also Seeling v. Crawley, 2 Vern. 386.

Resumption of Cohabitation.]—If the parties choose to come together again, the articles are no longer binding. Angier v. Angier, Gilb. 142. See col. 1003.

Threats by Husband—Benefit to Wife.]—By post-nuptial settlement all the husband's property was vested in a trustee, in trust for his wife for life, for her separate use, but without power of anticipation, remainder to the husband absolutely; with a proviso, that if she should leave him on any account except by his permission, or by reason of his breach of the laws against her, she should forfeit all interest under the settlement. Differences having arisen, articles of arrangement were agreed upon, by which the parties were to live separate, and the wife was to have a fixed income, and a formal deed of separation was to be drawn up and executed. The husband threatened, unless this arrangement were carried out, to impeach the wife's interest under the settlement in various ways, and in particular it was clear that the whole of the premises were in his power, the settlement being voluntary, and that he might sell the whole to any purchaser for valuable consideration, and waste the proceeds:—Held, that the arrangement was beneficial to the lady, and ought to be carried out, the deed of separation to be settled, if necessary, by the judge. Smith v. Smith, 18 Jur. 1021.

13. Other Matters relating to.

Receiving Rents with Husband's Assent.]—Where a feme covert has for many years been separated from her husband, and during that time has received, for her separate use, the rents of her own property, which accrued to her by devise after the separation, she will be presumed to receive the rents and acknowledge the tenancy by her husband's authority. Doe d. Leicester v. Biggs, 1 Taunt. 367; 11 R. R. 533.

Surrender of Copyholds by Wife.]—Where a married woman lives apart from her husband under articles of separation, by which he covenants "that she shall enjoy to her own use all such estates, both real and personal, as shall come to her during the coverture, and that he will join in the necessary conveyances to limit them to such uses as she shall appoint"; and copyhold lands having afterwards descended to her, the husband again covenants in the same manner as before, and "that he will join in surrendering such estates to such uses as she shall appoint": the wife may surrender the copyhold lands without the husband joining, and without a special custom for that purpose. Compton v. Collinson, 1 H. Bl. 334; 2 R. R. 786.

Pleading.]—In an action on a deed, reciting that differences had arisen between the plaintiff and his wife, and that it had been agreed to live apart, and that the plaintiff should be paid during the separation an annual sum of money out of the personal estate of his wife; and the defendant on behalf of the wife, with her privity, testified by her being a party, covenanted to pay the same out of the personal estate of the wife: —Held, that it was sufficiently shown by the declaration, although it contained no precise averment of the fact, that the wife had a personal estate, and the court refused to arrest the judgment. Groome v. Debenham, 6 M. & S. 345.

License to Wife to Live where She pleases.]—If a husband, by deed of separation executed by himself, but not executed by either of the trustees, gives his wife licence to live where she pleases, he is not justified in entering the house of a third person to reclaim his wife, as being improperly harboured there; and the husband, before doing so, should at least have given distinct notice to the third person that, as far as by law he could, he revoked the licence. Lewis v. Ponsford, 8 Car. & P. 687.

In an action of trespass, with a plea of justification, that the defendant entered the plaintiff's house to reclaim his wife, who was wrongfully harboured there, a deed of separation of the defendant and his wife is admissible, if executed by the defendant, although not executed by either of the trustees. Ib.

Expenses of Preparing and Executing.]—A husband who had separated himself from his wife agreed that a deed of separation should be prepared and executed:—Held, that he was not liable for the expenses of his wife's trustee in procuring a counterpart to be prepared and executed, in the absence of any promise to pay that expense. Ladd v. Lynn, 2 M. & W. 265; M. & H. 27; 6 L. J., Ex. 73; 1 Jur. 42.

Usual Covenants, what are.]—Held, that the court would construe the term "usual covenants" in reference to surrounding circumstances, but the adultery of the wife not having been proved it could not form an element for the consideration of the court. Hart v. Hart, 50 L. J., Ch. 697; 18 Ch. D. 670; 45 L. T. 13; 30 W. R. 8. And see Fearon v. Aylesford, 54 L. J., Q. B. 33; 14 Q. B. D. 792; 54 L. T. 954; 33 W. R. 331; 49 J. P. 596.

Dum casta Clause.]—A dum casta clause does not come within the term "usual covenants" in a separation deed agreed to as part of the terms of compromise of a divorce suit. Hart v. Hart, supra. And see col. 857.

Agreement apparently Complete—Arbitration Clause.] — The agreement on the face of it being complete, the arbitration clause could only come into force in case of difference between the parties, and did not oust the jurisdiction of the court to settle the deed itself. Ib.

Decree for specific performance; the deed of separation to be settled in chambers if the parties differed, and no dum casta clause to be inserted. Ib.

Mistake as to Meaning of Words.]—It is no answer to a suit for specific performance for the defendant to say that though he understood what the words of the agreement were he was under a mistake as to their legal effect. Ib.

Dum casta Clause — Cancellation.]—A wife having obtained a decree absolute for the dissolution of her marriage, a deed not containing a dum casta clause had subsequently, by order of the court, been executed by the respondent in the suit securing an annuity to the petitioner:—Held, that the court would have no power to set aside the deed by reason of any subsequent unchastity of the wife. Bradley v. Bradley, 51 L. J., P. 87; 7 P. D. 237; 47 L. T. 355; 31 W. R. 200.

Separated Wife not a Witness against Husband.]—After a deed of separation executed, the wife is not to all intents and purposes a feme sole, she cannot be a witness against her husband, or be guilty of the felony in his presence, nor can an action be maintained against her. St. John (Lord) v. St. John (Lady), 11 Ves. 530.

An agreement between a husband and the father of the wife, that the husband and wife should live apart, and that the husband should execute a deed of separation containing all usual and proper clauses, and securing an annuity for the maintenance of his wife and child, and that the expense of the agreement and deed should be borne equally by the husband and the father, will be decreed to be specifically performed. Gibbs v. Harding, 39 L. J., Ch. 374; L. R. 5 Ch. 336; 18 W. R. 361.

Satisfaction.]—A., by deed of separation, covenanted with the trustee of the deed to pay him an annual sum of 52*l.* during the life of A.'s wife, to be paid to her on four special quarterly days for her separate use without power of anticipation. A., by will, subsequently gave certain specific properties to trustees, to pay out of the rents an annuity of 52*l.* to his wife generally, on the same special quarterly days:—Held, that there being no direction in the will to pay debts and legacies, and no expression of a contrary intention, the general rule must prevail that the annuity given by the will was in satisfaction of the annuity covenanted to be paid by the deed of separation; and that the widow was put to her election. Atkinson v. Littlewood, L. R. 18 Eq. 595; 31 L. T. 225.

Injunction to restrain Breach of.]—A married woman can contract to live apart from her husband, and the husband is entitled to come to the court to enforce specific performance of such a contract. A husband is not debarred from enforcing a deed of separation and from obtaining an order restraining his wife from commencing an action for the restitution of conjugal rights by reason of trifling breaches of the covenant on his part. Where, in a separation deed, the husband had covenanted to allow an infant child to reside with the wife, and had subsequently concurred, as next friend of the infant, in a petition under the Infants Custody Act (36 Vict. c. 12) for the removal of the infant from the wife's custody, which had been ordered by the court:—Held, that this was not a breach of the husband's covenant. Injunction granted to restrain the wife from suing for restitution of conjugal rights. Besant v. Wood, 48 L. J., Ch. 497; 12 Ch. D. 605; 40 L. T. 445. See col. 990.

Wife's Conveyance—Specific Performance of.]—A married woman was entitled by an antenuptial settlement to a jointure rent-charge after her husband's death, secured upon his real estates in Ireland. The wife having left him, the husband commenced a suit for restitution of conjugal rights; with a view to a compromise by an agreement for separation a document was drawn up and signed by the husband, which stipulated that the wife should release part of her jointure. The wife signed this document with a qualification that no further steps were to be taken in the matrimonial suit, but it was not stayed or dismissed. A deed was prepared to carry out the terms of the compromise and was executed by the husband, but the wife refused to execute it, or to return to her husband, and the husband afterwards died:—Held, that the wife was not, when she signed the document, in all respects in the same position as a feme sole, and that even if any final agreement had been come to she would not have been bound by it, there having been no acknowledgment as required by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, ss. 68, 71; and that specific performance of the agreement to release her jointure could not be decreed against her. Hunt v. Hunt (4 De G. F. & J. 221) and Besant v. Wood (12 Ch. D. 605) commented on by Selborne, L.C. Cahill v. Cahill, 8 App. Cas. 420; 49 L. T. 605; 31 W. R. 861—H. L. (Ir.)

—— Apportionment of Maintenance.] — A separate maintenance, payable quarterly, at the end of each quarter, is to be apportioned at the death of the wife. Howell v. Hanforth, 2 W. Bl. 1016.

Agreement to compromise Divorce—Access to Children.]—Cross petitions for divorce by husband and wife were withdrawn at the hearing, upon terms which included the execution of a separation deed to be settled by a counsel agreed upon in case of difference, and to contain "all usual terms as to access to children," &c. The parties could not agree and the counsel settled a deed, providing that the wife should have the sole custody of the children, two boys of thirteen and fourteen, for half their vacations:—Held, in an action by the wife for specific performance of the agreement, that these provisions related to custody and not access, and it was beyond the powers of the counsel to insert them. That the court had power to settle the proper form of deed instead of referring it back. Eversheds v. Eversheds, 46 L. T. 690; 30 W. R. 732. See col. 1001.

Semble, in an action for specific performance of an agreement to execute a separation deed, the court will not go into evidence whether the provisions agreed upon are for the benefit of the children. Ib.

Construction of Stipulations as to Debts contracted by Wife.]—Declaration on bond: plea, that it was conditioned for performance of covenants which were to indemnify the obligee from alimony and debts incurred by his wife after their separation, and that the defendant had performed the covenants; replication, that a judgment was recovered against the obligee by a creditor of his wife, and he paid debt and costs of which the defendant had notice. The defendant is liable for the costs as well as the debt paid by the plaintiff; for the covenant to indemnify is general, and it was not necessary for the plaintiff to give notice that an action was commenced; and if it had been necessary, the plaintiff must have recovered on these pleadings, for the defendant admitted notice. Duffield v. Scott, 3 Term Rep. 374.

A deed of separation between husband and wife contained a covenant by the wife and her trustee, that she, her executors or administrators, or the trustees, or some or one of them, should and would at all times save, defend and keep harmless and indemnified the husband from and against the debt or debts, sum or sums of money, which the wife had then, and at the time of the making of the deed, contracted, or which she should at any time thereafter contract:—Held, that this covenant included debts previously contracted by the wife for necessaries while living with the husband. Summers v. Ball, 8 M. & W. 596; 10 L. J., Ex. 368.

To an action on this covenant assigning a breach in not indemnifying against the debt of a wife, a plea that the debt was not contracted within the true intent and meaning of the covenant is bad, as being a traverse of matter of law. Ib.

Maintenance of Children.]—A deed of separation between husband and wife contained a covenant by him, that he would pay the whole expense of the education, maintenance and support, except as thereinafter mentioned, of their three children, all of whom it was agreed, should be and remain in the custody and under the complete control of the husband, provided, that the wife, or, if she should fail to do so, the trustees of the deed should pay the expense of the education, maintenance and support of such of the children as should be permitted by the husband to reside with her during the period of such residence:—Held, that, with the particular exception mentioned, this was a general covenant on the part of the husband to maintain the children at all times, and therefore he was responsible, notwithstanding they were of age and were not residing with his wife, nor were under his care, custody or control. De Crespigny v. De Crespigny, 2 C. L. R. 404; 9 Ex. 192; 23 L. J., Ex. 27; 2 W. R. 75. And see col. 998.

Not to Molest.]—A deed of separation between husband and wife contained a covenant by the husband that he would not molest or disturb his wife in her person or manner of living nor institute any suit to compel her to cohabit with him, and a covenant by E. that the wife should not at any time thereafter molest or disturb the husband, or require, by any means whatsoever, either by ecclesiastical censure or otherwise, or in any other manner endeavour to compel the husband to cohabit with her, or to enforce any restitution of conjugal rights:—Held, that a suit by the wife in the divorce court for a judicial separation was not any breach of the covenant not to molest or disturb the husband. Thomas v. Everard, 6 H. & N. 448; 30 L. J., Ex. 214.

Cost of preparing Deeds, as to.]—See Lancaster v. Lancaster, [1896] P. 118; 74 L. T. 64; 44 W. R. 440—C. A.

IV. WIFE'S PROPERTY.

1. GENERALLY.

a. Equitable Separate Property.

i. Words Sufficient to Create.

Intention.]—To prevent the marital right in property of a married woman, a clear intention that it shall be to her separate use must appear. Lumb v. Milnes, 5 Ves. 517. Massey v. Parker, 2 Myl. & K. 174; 4 L. J., Ch. 47. Gilchrist v. Cator, 1 De G. & Sm. 188; 11 Jur. 448. Austin v. Austin, 46 L. J., Ch. 92; 4 Ch. D. 233; 36 L. T. 96; 25 W. R. 346.

—— Clause against Anticipation.]—The intention to create a separate use for the benefit of a married woman will not be inferred from the mere fact that the instrument of gift contains a clause restraining alienation or anticipation. Dictum, in Baggett v. Meux (1 Coll. 138) approved. Stogdon v. Lee, 60 L. J., Q. B. 669; [1891] 1 Q. B. 661; 64 L. T. 494; 39 W. R. 467; 55 J. P. 533—C. A.

"Own Use and Benefit."]—A trust for the wife's own use and benefit is not a trust for her separate use. Beales v. Spencer, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 651; 13 L. J., Ch. 67; 8 Jur. 236. And see Barnes v. Forsyth, 1 W. R. 142; Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare, 49; 6 Jur. 1121; Roberts v. Spicer, 5 Madd. 491; Wills v. Sayers, 4 Madd. 409; Lewis v. Mathews, 35 L. J., Ch. 638; L. R. 2 Eq. 177; Foley v. Foley, 18 W. R. 81.

"Only" for Wife.]—A trust "only" for a married woman, her executors, administrators, and assigns, is not a trust for her separate use. Spirett v. Willows, 3 De G. J. & S. 293; 34 L. J., Ch. 365; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 614; 11 L. T. 614; 13 W. R. 329.

"Sole" Use.]—The word "sole" is an operative word, and must be held in a will to mean separate, unless there be something to show an intention to apply it to something other than the marital right of a husband. Tursey, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 452; L. R. 1 Eq. 561; 14 L. T. 15; 14 W. R. 474; but see Massy v. Hayes, L. R. 1 Eq. 110; 15 W. R. 375; Massy v. Rowen, L. R. 4 H. L. 288.

"Sole Use and Disposal."]—A legacy given to a married woman for her "sole use and disposal" vests in her as separate estate. Bl end v. Dawes, 50 L. J., Ch. 252; 17 Ch. D. 794; 43 L. T. 751; 29 W. R. 416.

"Independent of any Other Person."]—Testator gave his residuary estate to L. and A., share and share alike, for their own use and benefit, independent of any other person:—Held, that they were entitled to their shares for their separate use. Margetts v. Barringer, 7 Sim. 482.

Wife's "Proper Hands."]—Bequest in trust to pay the annual produce into the proper hands of a married woman is a bequest to her separate use. Hartley v. Hurle, 5 Ves. 545; 5 R. R. 113; but see Blacklaw v. Laws, 2 Hare, 49; 6 Jur. 1121; and Trontbeck v. Baughey, 35 L. J., Ch. 840; L. R. 2 Eq. 534; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 543; 14 W. R. 790.

Wife's Receipt to be a Discharge.]—When a legacy is given to a married woman, with a direction that her receipt shall, notwithstanding coverture, be a sufficient discharge, she takes the legacy for her sole and separate use. Cooper v. Wells, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 923; 13 L. T. 319. Lee v. Prieaux, 3 Bro. C. C. 381. Molyneux, In re, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 411.

"Solely and entirely for Her Own Use."]—Bequest of 1,000*l.* stock to a married woman "solely and entirely for her own use and benefit during her life" is a bequest to her for life to her separate use. Inglefield v. Coghlan, 2 Coll. 247.

"Absolute Use and Benefit."]—A bequest to a married woman of real and personal property "for her absolute use and benefit" is sufficient to create a separate estate. Negus v. Jones, 1 Cab. & E. 52.

"To be at Her Disposal."]—S. gave his daughter (bankrupt's wife) his watch, jewels, china, and household goods, to be at her disposal, and to do therewith as she should think fit. This is a bequest to her separate use, and shall not pass to the assignees. Kirk v. Paulin, 7 Vin. Abr. 95, pl. 43. Prichard v. Ames, Turn. & R. 222; 24 R. R. 31. And see Graham, In re, 20 W. R. 289.

"To and for Her Own Use"—Jewels and Trinkets.]—A mother gave by will to her daughter, a married woman, articles of plate, china, and glass, her workboxes, baskets, jewels, trinkets, and ornaments of the person, clothes, and wearing apparel "to and for her own use." The husband of the married woman subsequently died, having bequeathed his personalty upon certain trusts:—Held, that having regard to the nature of the articles, the gifts to the wife by her mother might be considered as having been made for her separate use. Brymer, In re, 24 L. T. 263.

Possession of Husband as Trustee—Marriage Settlement made Abroad.]—The rule that a husband is a trustee for his wife of her separate property when no other trustee has been appointed, applies to that which becomes her separate property by virtue of a marriage contract entered into in a foreign country. When, therefore, such property is in the possession of a husband at the commencement of his bankruptcy it does not pass to his trustee. Sibeth, Ex parte, Sibeth, In re, 54 L. J., Q. B. 322; 14 Q. B. D. 417; 33 W. R. 556—C. A.

No Trustee Interposed.]—A legacy to a feme covert "to her sole and separate use" does not vest in the husband, though no trustee be interposed. Turnley v. Kelly, Wall. Lyn. 311.

Ante-nuptial Settlement by Intending Wife.]—Settlement by a lady about to marry of property to trustees for her own sole use, benefit, and disposition, gives a separate estate. Ray, Ex parte, 1 Madd. 199.

Though the words "separate use" are not in a note given before marriage, the words "enjoy the profits" imply it. Tyrrell v. Hope, 2 Atk. 561.

The property of a married woman, settled by an ante-nuptial settlement for her separate use for life, with remainder as she should by deed or will appoint, with remainder in failure of appointment to her executors or administrators, is an absolute settlement for her sole and separate use, without restraint on anticipation, and vests in equity the entire corpus in her for all purposes. London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lempriere, 42 L. J., P. C. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 572; 29 L. T. 186; 21 W. R. 513; 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426.

Offer of Settlement by Suitor.]—A suitor wrote to the mother of the young lady as follows:—"If your daughter has or may have money, my wish and intention would be that it should be settled for her sole and separate use." Consent to the marriage having been given, in the faith that the intention thus expressed would be fulfilled, and the marriage having taken effect without a settlement, the court ordered the wife's property to be settled in the usual way, and the costs of the suit and of the settlement to be paid out of the fund. Alt v. Alt, 4 Giff. 84; 32 L. J., Ch. 52; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1075; 7 L. T. 266.

Reservation of Disposing Power—Presumption.]—Where a woman on her marriage reserves a power to dispose of her personal estate, all that she dies possessed of is to be taken to be her separate estate, or the produce of it, unless the contrary can be made to appear, and as she has power over the principal she may dispose of the interest. Gore v. Knight, 2 Vern. 535; Pre. Ch. 255; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 464.

Gift by Husband.]—A gift by will by a husband to his wife for her sole use and benefit is equivalent to a gift for her separate use. Cox v. Lyne, Younge, 562.

The mere gift of chattels to a married woman residing with her husband will not, in the absence of some expression of intention by the donor, enure for her separate use, so as to displace the husband's marital right to them, or withdraw them from liability to the claims of his creditors. Fitzgibbon v. Pike, 5 L. R., Ir. 487.

Conditional Gift—Performance of Condition.]—A testator promised his wife a piano, on condition that she would learn to play it; the condition was fulfilled:—Held, that this was a valid gift from the husband to the wife. Whittaker v. Whittaker, Whittaker, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 737; 21 Ch. D. 657; 46 L. T. 802; 30 W. R. 787. See also Parker v. Lechmere, 12 Ch. D. 256; 28 W. R. 48.

—— By Will.]—A gift of real and personal estate by a testator to his wife "for her sole use and benefit" does not give her a separate estate in the event of subsequent coverture. Gilbert v. Lewis, 1 De G. J. & S. 38; 32 L. J., Ch. 347; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 187; 7 L. T. 164; 11 W. R. 223.

Freeholds—Agreement signed by Husband only.]—In order that a fee simple of an intended wife may be effected with a trust for her separate use by an agreement made between the intended husband and wife before marriage, the agreement must be in writing and signed by the wife as well as by the husband; if it is signed by the husband alone, it is, owing to the Statute of Frauds, s. 7, invalid as a declaration of trust for separate use as to the fee simple, a husband having in his wife's land only an estate for the joint lives of himself and his wife with a possible estate by the curtesy. Dye v. Dye, 53 L. J., Q. B. 442; 13 Q. B. D. 147; 51 L. T. 145; 33 W. R. 2—C. A.

"Are Married"—Use in Future Sense.]—Testatrix devised an estate to trustees, in trust for her brother Benjamin for life, and directed the trustees to sell it after her brother's decease, and to divide the produce amongst his children who should be living at his decease; and, after giving sums of money and shares of her residue to the children of her other brothers and sisters, she said: "I direct that the legacies and shares of such of my nieces as are married shall be to their separate use, free from the debts and control of any husband, and that my trustees shall have power to give effect to this my intent":—Held, that the testatrix had used the word "are" in a future sense, and that she intended that such of her nieces as should be married at the time when their legacies and shares became payable should take to their separate use. Bayliss's Trust, In re, 17 Sim. 178; 13 Jur. 1090.

Fund Paid to Trustees for Use of Wife—Second Marriage.]—A father gave his property to trustees on trust during the life of his son to pay, apply, and dispose of the annual produce of a portion of it for the maintenance and support of his son and his present or any future wife, and the maintenance, education, and support of their children, or any or either of them his son and his wife and children, in such manner and such proportions as the trustees should in their discretion think fit and proper, without being answerable or accountable to any person for the way in which they should apply the same; and, after the death of his son, to pay and apply the annual proceeds in like manner unto and for the benefit of any widow for life, and any children until they should attain twenty-one or marry, and subject to those trusts in trust for the children. The son died in 1849, leaving a wife and six children, the youngest of whom attained twenty-one in 1870. In 1851 the widow married again. The settlement made on the marriage did not comprise the above annual proceeds, and the trustees continued to pay them to the wife as part of her separate estate and on her separate receipt. The second husband, who was living apart from his wife, claimed to be entitled to the income during her life:—Held, that the trustees had a discretion to pay the wife the income for her separate use. Austin v. Austin, Austin v. Boyce, 46 L. J., Ch. 92; 4 Ch. D. 233; 36 L. T. 96; 25 W. R. 346.

Gift for Separate Use, Remainder Over—Residue for Separate Use.]—Gift by will of a fund to trustees for A., a widow, for life, for her separate use, with remainder over, followed by a gift of the residue to A. for her own sole use and benefit absolutely. A. subsequently married again:—Held, that the marital right of the husband in the residue was excluded. Tarsey, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 452; L. R. 1 Eq. 561; 14 L. T. 15; 14 W. R. 474.

Widow's Pension from East India Company.]—Under a trust deed providing pensions to be paid for the maintenance of widows and children of clerks in the East India Company's service, and stipulating that any recipient of a pension who should dispose of or incumber it should lose all right to such pension, a widow became entitled to a pension. She married a second husband, who claimed to be entitled to a pension in his marital right:—Held, that the pension provided for the petitioner was intended by the trust deed to be for her separate use, and the money was ordered to be paid to her upon her sole receipt. Peacock's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 265; 10 Ch. D. 490; 39 L. T. 661; 27 W. R. 500.

French Husband—Fund to Separate Use of Wife.]—A father gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his daughter for life for her separate use, and after her death to pay the fund to the children of the daughter as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment amongst them equally. The daughter appointed by deed the whole of the fund amongst her children, giving the plaintiff, who was one of them, a specified sum for her separate use absolutely. The plaintiff, after the death of her grandfather, and before the date of the appointment by her mother, married a Frenchman domiciled in France. He died before the date of the appointment, and there was one child only of the marriage. There was no settlement on the marriage, and the French law of community applied, under which the child became entitled, in the absence of any contrary declaration by the donor, to half the property acquired by her mother during the marriage:—Held, that the plaintiff must be considered to have acquired the appointed fund from the date of the appointment only, and that the fund not having been acquired during the marriage, did not become subject to the law of community. De Serre v. Clarke, 43 L. J., Ch. 821; L. R. 18 Eq. 587; 31 L. T. 161; 23 W. R. 3.

Held, also, that the fact of the gift being expressed to be for the separate use was a sufficient declaration to exclude the law of community. Ib.

Legacy to Married Woman—Separate Estate—Seizure by Husband—Trustee—Statute of Limitations.]—In 1876 a husband took from his wife by force a legacy bequeathed to her separate use, which she had, to his knowledge, just received on her separate receipt. The wife repeatedly demanded the money from her husband until his death in 1894, but did not obtain it. In 1895 she brought an action against her husband's executors for the amount:—Held, that the husband knew or was affected with notice that the legacy was his wife's separate property, and had, by taking possession of it, made himself a trustee for her; that as he had retained the money and not accounted for it, his executors could not under the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, claim the benefit of the Statute of Limitations, and that his estate was liable to refund the amount. Wassell v. Leggatt, 65 L. J., Ch. 240; [1896] 1 Ch. 554: 74 L. T. 99; 44 W. R. 298.

Settlements—Ante-nuptial—Post-nuptial—Construction.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement, a mortgage for 4,000*l.*, the property of the wife, was assigned to trustees, as to one moiety, on the usual trusts, and as to the remaining moiety of 2,000*l.* in trust only for the wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns, and when realised, be paid over to her, and them, in the same manner as she or they would have been entitled to receive the same, in case the assignment and settlement had not been executed. By a settlement after the marriage, the last-mentioned moiety was settled by the husband and wife, upon the usual trusts, for themselves and their children. Shortly afterwards the husband was adjudicated bankrupt on the petition of a creditor, whose debt was contracted before the settlement, at the date of which the husband retained enough to pay his creditors:—Held, that in the first settlement no separate use was created, in the wife's favour, of the second moiety. Spirett v. Willows, 5 Giff. 49; 34 L. J., Ch. 365; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 870; 11 L. T. 614; 13 W. R. 329.

"Savings out of Income."]—By an ante-nuptial settlement an annuity was assigned to trustees in trust to the lady for her sole and separate use for her life, with a provision that all savings arising from her income should be held by the trustees subject to her appointment, and in default of appointment in trust for her next of kin. The lady died in May, 1847, without having made any appointment, and the last payment to her in respect of the annuity had been made in the December preceding her death:—Held, that the portion of the annuity remaining in the hands of the trustees between the last payment to and the death of the lady constituted "savings out of income" within the meaning of the settlement, and that her administrator was not entitled to it as against the next of kin. Rosenthall's Settlement, In re, 6 W. R. 139.

And see Calvert v. Johnston, 3 K. & J. 556.

Trust—When Arising.]—By a post-nuptial settlement made in pursuance of ante-nuptial articles, certain policies of insurance on the life of the husband were assigned to trustees upon trust to receive the money and pay the income to the wife during her life for her separate use, independently of any future husband whom she might marry. There was no restraint on anticipation. During the life of her first husband the wife made promissory notes in favour of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, the first husband being still alive, brought an action claiming a charge on the policies:—Held, that the trust for separate use did not arise till after the death of the husband, and that as the contracts of a married woman can only be enforced against property which formed part of her separate estate at the date of the contract, the action could not be maintained. Gaffee, In re (1 Mac. & G. 541), Molyneux's Estate, In re (Ir. R. 6 Eq. 411), and Sturgis v. Corp (13 Ves. 190) discussed. King v. Lucas, 23 Ch. D. 712; 49 L. T. 216; 31 W. R. 904—C. A.

ii. Power of Disposition.

Wife a Feme Sole.]—A feme covert is considered in equity as a feme sole in respect of her separate property. Headen v. Rosher, M'Clel. & Y. 90.

A wife may dispose of her separate personal estate by act in her lifetime, or by will. Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 190.

A married woman is considered as feme sole, as to the property settled to her separate use, whether in possession or reversion, and as such, therefore, may sell, if not particularly restrained by the instrument. Her consent, on examination, required only to waive her equity to have a settlement out of her equitable interest, not to pass her separate property. Sturgis v. Corp, 13 Ves. 190; 9 R. R. 169.

The moment a woman takes personal property to her sole use, she has the sole right to dispose of it. Fettiplace v. Gorges, 1 Ves. J. 48; 1 R. R. 79.

Alimony received by a wife under a decree for judicial separation from her husband is not separate estate, and cannot be charged by a wife with payment of her debts. Anderson v. Hay, 55 J. P. 295.

Assent of Trustees not Necessary.]—A married woman may bind her separate property without the trustees, unless their assent is rendered necessary by the instrument giving her that property. Essex v. Atkins, 14 Ves. 542.

Unless the joining of her trustees is made necessary, there is no occasion for that. Grigby v. Cox, 1 Ves. 518.

Freehold Property.]—A married woman can dispose of freeholds settled to her separate use, as if she were a feme sole. Adams v. Gamble, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 102. Reversing 11 Ir. Ch. R. 269.

A feme covert having a freehold of inheritance settled to her separate use may dispose of it as if she were a feme sole, by deed or will, without a deed acknowledged, and not the less so that a specific power of appointment in a particular way over the property is given her by the instrument settling it to her separate use. Taylor v. Meads, 4 De G. & Sm. 597: 34 L. J., Ch. 203; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 13 W. R. 394.

—— Life Estate.]—Devise of freehold in trust to pay rents as they should become due and payable into the hands of testator's wife, and not otherwise, for her life for her separate use, and receipts of his wife alone for what should be actually paid into her own proper hands should be good discharges of trustees:—Held, wife had power to alienate her life estate. Acton v. White, 1 Sim. & S. 429; 24 R. R. 203.

Reversionary Interest.]—A feme covert, to whose sole and separate use a reversionary interest in property has been given, may assign that interest as if she were a feme sole, and her assignment will bind her right in case she survives her husband. Krene v. Johnston, 1 Jon. & C. 255; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 464.

Estate Tail for Separate Use—Enlargement into Fee.]—A wife having an estate tail settled to her separate use without power of anticipation as to the income may by a disentailing deed enlarge her estate tail into a fee simple, and limit the fee to her separate use, with a power to dispose of it so as to defeat her husband's title by the curtesy, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of her husband. Cooper v. Macdonald, 47 L. J., Ch. 373; 7 Ch. D. 288; 38 L. T. 191; 26 W. R. 377—C. A.

Contingency—Limitation of Separate Estate upon.]—A married woman has no power of disposition over an interest in realty limited to her separate use upon a contingency, viz. the insolvency of her husband, until the event has happened upon which her estate arises. Bestall v. Bunbury, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 318.

No Power of Disposition Reserved.]—Where a married woman stipulates that in the event of her surviving the property shall be hers, reserving no power of disposition over it during the coverture, there are no means by which she can dispose of it while covert. Lee v. Muggeridge, 1 Ves. & B. 118.

Separate Property Gives no General Power of Contracting.]—Wife, by equitable possession of separate estate, cannot acquire power to contract generally; she has incidentally a power to dispose of that property, and an actual appointment or disposition thereof will bind her. Aguilar v. Aguilar, 5 Madd. 418. See col. 1095.

Annuity—General Power of Appointment.]—An annuity was assigned to trustees in trust to pay the same to such persons as Lady B. should, by any writing signed by her, notwithstanding her coverture, appoint, but so as not to deprive herself of the benefit thereof, by sale or other anticipation, and for want of such appointment, in trust to pay the same to Lady B. for her separate use:—Held, that Lady B. had not only a limited power of appointment, but also, under the latter part of the clause, the general uncontrolled dominion over the annuity. Barrymore v. Ellis, 8 Sim. 1.

Voluntary Settlement—Draft Declaration of Trust—Locus pœnitentiæ.]—Upon evidence that a married woman desiring to execute a voluntary settlement transferred stock, to which she was entitled for her separate use, into the names of trustees, and approved of a draft declaration of trust:—Held, that there was a locus pœnitentiæ, and that the trusts did not attach, unless the draft had been finally authorised before the transfer to the trustees; and an inquiry to that effect being answered in the negative, the fund ordered on the petition of the married woman to be retransferred to her separate use. Sykes, In re, 2 John. & H. 415.

Gift to Person in Confidential Relation.]—A married woman, having separate estate, joined with her trustee, who was her confidential medical attendant, in granting annuities secured on her separate estate for his benefit. She afterwards sought to set them aside as against the grantees:—Held, that the onus of proving their invalidity was on her; and it appearing that she understood the transaction, and no undue persuasion or coercion having been proved, it was held that they could not be impeached:—Held, also, that the principle of Archer v. Hudson (7 Beav. 551) did not apply to the case. Blackie v. Clark, 15 Beav. 595; 22 L. J., Ch. 377.

When Separate Estate.]—The savings of a married woman's separate estate, like the income itself, become her separate estate in equity. Duncan v. Cashin, 44 L. J., C. P. 225; L. R. 10 C. P. 554; 32 L. T. 497; 23 W. R. 561.

Furniture was settled upon a married woman to her separate use, and with money, also her separate property, she from time to time renewed such as wore out. The whole was seized by the sheriff for a debt of her husband:—Held, that, as a court of equity would under the circumstances have restrained the sheriff from selling the accretions as well as the original furniture, a court of law, upon an interpleader summons, must take notice of the equitable claim of the wife's trustee, and direct the sheriff to withdraw. Ib.

Money received by a married woman out of the proceeds of her husband's business, or saved by her out of moneys given to her by him for household purposes, dress, or the like, and invested by her in her own name, belongs to her husband. Barrack v. M'Culloch, 3 Kay & J. 110.

Secus as to money saved by her out of the income of her separate estate, and so invested. Ib.

Where such investment had been made by her husband for her, upon its being impeached by his creditors after his death:—Held, that the onus was upon her to prove that the moneys were the savings of her separate estate. Ib.

She proved that they were saved out of rents of furnished houses, which were settled to her separate use:—Held, that threw back upon the creditors the onus of proving that the furniture belonged to the husband, and, also, what part of the rents were to be attributed to the furniture. Ib.

Purchases out of Savings.]—The savings of the income of lands settled to the separate use of a married woman, and chattels purchased by her out of such income, are primâ facie her separate property. Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 6 L. R. Ir. 486.

A feme covert who has pin-money, or a separate maintenance settled on her, may, by writing in nature of will, dispose of what she saves out of it, and such disposition shall bind the husband. Herbert v. Herbert, Pre. Ch. 44; 1 Eq. Abr. 66.

Where a woman by marriage agreement is to have the separate use of any estate during coverture, she shall have that and its produce after marriage, and, if invested in any purchase, equity will regard it as the produce of what she ought to have. Eastby v. Eastby, 2 Eq. Abr. 148.

A married woman having real property settled to her separate use, with a testamentary power over it, may dispose of leaseholds and other chattels purchased with the produce of it, but not of real estate so purchased. Churchill v. Dibben, 9 Sim. 447, n.

The savings of a wife's separate estate were invested in the joint names of husband and wife. The fund was afterwards applied in the purchase of a real estate. After the death of the husband, the court, on the evidence, held that the estate belonged to the wife. Darkin v. Darkin, 17 Beav. 578; 23 L. J., Ch. 890; 2 W. R. 135.

Purchase of Stock in names of Children—Presumption.]—Where a married woman, out of the savings of her separate estate, purchased stock in the names of her son and daughter, it was presumed that she did so to exclude her husband's rights, and not as an advancement to her children. De Visme, In re, 12 W. R. 140.

Shares—Advances to pay Calls.]—Shares were settled on a married woman for life with remainders over. At the request of the trustees, who had no money available for the purpose, she advanced sums out of her separate estate for the payment of calls on the shares. On her death a bill was filed by her legal personal representative, claiming a lien on the shares for the amount advanced, together with interest from her death:—Held, that he was entitled to have the amount advanced and interest raised by sale of the shares. Todd v. Moorhouse, L. R. 19 Eq. 69; 32 L. T. 8; 23 W. R. 155.

Where the calls on new shares allotted to trustees of a marriage settlement, in respect of original railway shares held by them upon the trusts of the settlement, had been paid out of the wife's separate income:—Held, that stock purchased with the proceeds of the sale of such new shares was subject to the trusts of the settlement as corpus, and that the wife had a lien for the amount so paid for calls, by analogy to the case of tenant for life advancing money for fines payable on renewal of leaseholds. Rowley v. Unwin, 2 Kay & J. 138.

Wife of Lunatic.]—The savings of an annual allowance for her separate maintenance, paid to the wife of a lunatic living apart from her husband, under an order in lunacy, are her separate property, although the order does not expressly state that the allowance is for her separate use. Tharp, In goods of, 3 P. D. 76; 38 L. T. 867; 26 W. R. 770—C. A.

Husband and Wife living Separate.]—Husband and wife had, for many years, lived and were still living separate. The husband remitted money for her maintenance and support. She saved a considerable portion:—Held, that the husband could not recover back these savings. Brooke v. Brooke, 25 Beav. 342; 27 L. J., Ch. 639; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 472.

Gift of Savings.]—A wife separated from her husband may make a gift of the savings of her separate allowance as a feme sole (Gage v. Lister, 2 Bro. P. C. 4), or she may dispose of them by will (Georges v. Chancie, Toth. 97). S. P., Pridgeon v. Pridgeon, 1 Ch. Ca. 118; Bletsow v. Sawyer, 1 Vern. 244; Humphery v. Richards, 25 L. J., Ch. 442; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 432; 4 W. R. 432.

—— Will—Construction.]—Under a testamentary appointment by a married woman of "all funds and property which have been or shall be purchased out of the savings of property to which I have been or shall be entitled to my separate use":—Held, that savings out of separate estate standing to her account at her banker's did not pass. Askew v. Booth, 43 L. J., Ch. 368; L. R. 17 Eq. 426; 30 L. T. 155; 22 W. R. 524.

Covenant to allow Wife to dispose of Personal Estate—After-acquired Property.]—Covenant that wife shall be at liberty to dispose of her personal estate does not extend to property acquired after marriage. Pilkington v. Cuthbertson, 2 Bro. P. C. 7.

But if wife conceals such after-acquired property till after husband's death, so that he cannot know of, or reduce the same into possession, her disposition of it shall not be set aside, even in favour of creditors. Ib.

Agreement to Settle Savings.]—Stock was settled in trust for a widow for life, and after her death, in trust for any husband with whom she might intermarry, for life; and after the death of the survivor, in trust for her children. The lady, during her widowhood, had accumulated a considerable amount of savings. When about eighty she intermarried with A., a member of the English and Irish bar. Prior to such marriage a long correspondence took place between A. and the lady, in the course of which the lady insisted that her savings should be settled upon her; to which A. ultimately assented, and he undertook to prepare a settlement according to the lady's wishes. No such settlement was prepared or executed, but on the day of the marriage A. signed a document, prepared by himself, by which he agreed to consent to a deed or document by which the lady "would be fully authorised and empowered, notwithstanding her coverture, to make such disposition as might be agreed and directed therein of such dividends or funds, amounting to 2,000*l*., out of whatever funds or dividends she should be entitled to, be possessed of, or have legally acquired at the time of her decease." No appointment was made by the lady of any part of her savings. After her death, her son and only child by her former marriage filed a bill praying a declaration that he was entitled to his mother's savings:—Held, that the correspondence showed that it was agreed that the whole of the lady's savings should be put into settlement, and that, looking at the correspondence, the only settlement which a conveyancer would have prepared, or which the court would have sanctioned, would have been one under which A. would have taken no interest in the lady's savings otherwise than by her appointment, and that her son was therefore entitled to the whole of her savings. Corley v. Stafford (Lord), 26 L. J., Ch. 865; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1225; 5 W. R. 646.

Bequest of Savings of Alimony.]—A married woman, divorced à mensâ et thoro, bequeathed the savings of alimony by will:—Held, that the legatee was entitled to such bequest, to the exclusion of the surviving husband. Moore v. Barber, 5 Giff. 43; 34 L. J., Ch. 667; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 539; 12 L. T. 664; 13 W. R. 935.

In Scotland.]—See 43 & 44 Vict. c. 26, and 44 & 45 Vict. c. 21.

iv. Separate Trading by Wife.

Husband Permitting his Wife to make a Profit.]—A husband voluntarily and after marriage permits the wife, for her separate use, to make profit of all butter, eggs, &c., beyond what is used in the family; out of which the wife saves 100*l*., which the husband borrows and dies; the court will allow of this agreement to encourage the wife's frugality, and the wife shall come in as a creditor for this 100*l*., especially where there is no deficiency of assets. Slanning v. Style, 3 P. W. 337.

So, where the husband agreed that the wife should take two guineas of every tenant that renewed a lease with the husband, beyond the fine which the husband received, that was allowed to be the wife's separate money. Ib.

A wife conducted the business of a lodging-house keeper at two houses, one of which belonged to her husband, the other being settled to her separate use:—Held, that he might permit her to appropriate the net profits of both houses to her separate estate. Lumley v. Timms, 28 L. T. 608; 21 W. R. 494.

Subsequent Interference of Husband.]—When a husband, by a post-nuptial deed, has settled a house and business to the separate use of his wife, to be managed by her for the benefit of herself as if a feme sole, he can be restrained from in any way interfering with the business, and even from entering the house. Wood v. Wood, 19 W. R. 1049.

Goodwill of Wife's Ante-nuptial Business.]—The goodwill of a business, carried on by a wife before marriage, and afterwards by the husband and wife, survives to her; she may dispose of it, and receive the purchase-money for her own benefit, even though it is carried on upon leasehold premises, forming a part of the estate of the testator, which were disposed of by his will. Morris v. Moss, 25 L. J., Ch. 194.

Earnings of Wife — Married Women's Property Act, 1870.]—A woman in 1855 entered the service of a man as housekeeper in a house which was in his occupation but was not his ordinary place of residence. He shortly afterwards engaged to marry her. In 1861 she commenced the business of preserving fruit, which was begun upon a small scale, but gradually became a large wholesale business. It was carried on by her in her own name; she kept a separate banking account; and he admitted that it was her own business, and was managed solely by her, though he sometimes assisted. In 1874 he married her. After the marriage the business was carried on by her as before, in her maiden name; her husband resided in the house where it was carried on, but it did not appear that he took any further part in it than he had done before the marriage. He shortly afterwards died intestate:—Held, that the stock-in-trade and capital of the business belonged to the widow, and were not part of the husband's estate. Ashworth v. Outram, 46 L. J., Ch. 687; 5 Ch. D. 923; 37 L. T. 85; 25 W. R. 896—C. A.

Semble, that the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 1, applies not only to the earnings of a separate business carried on by a married woman, but also to the business and stock-in-trade from which the earnings are made. Ib.

—— Executor, no Right of Retainer against.]—The separate estate of a married woman in earnings, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, becomes upon her death equitable assets and divisible amongst her creditors pari passu, so that her executor has no right to retain in full his own debt thereout. Poole, In re, Thompson v. Bennett, 46 L. J., Ch. 803; 6 Ch. D. 739; 37 L. T. 119; 25 W. R. 862.

Business carried on "separately" from the Husband.]—A., a butcher (not within the city of London), was removed to the workhouse infirmary suffering from delirium tremens. A friend lent his wife sums of money to enable her to purchase meat wherewith to carry on the business for the support of her family. She continued to do so for several months, her husband on his return from the infirmary not interfering, and residing for part of the time in an upper room of the house. Meat which had been so purchased by the wife was seized in execution for a debt of the husband; and upon an interpleader summons the county court judge held that the case was not within the Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93). Upon appeal to a divisional court, it being agreed that the court should draw inferences from the facts stated:—Held, that the case disclosed such a separate trading by the wife as to warrant them in holding that the goods seized were the property of the wife. Lovell v. Newton, 4 C. P. D. 7; 39 L. T. 609; 27 W. R. 366.

If a husband takes such a part in his wife's business as to make himself personally liable, the business is not carried on separately from the husband, within the meaning of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 93. Laporte v. Costick, 31 L. T. 434; 23 W. R. 131.

A separate business may be carried on by a wife while residing with her husband. Ib.

Wife Letting Lodgings.]—A husband furnished a house over which his wife had a general power of appointment, and subject thereto a life interest in the rents for her separate use. The wife, with the husband's consent, managed the property, and received all the profits of letting the house in lodgings:—Held, that the husband, after the wife's death, was not entitled to an inquiry as to how much of the profits of the lodgings arose from the furniture. Beecher v. Major, 13 L. T. 54.

A wife conducted the business of a lodging-house keeper at two houses, one of which belonged to her husband, the other being settled to her separate use:—Held, that he might permit her to appropriate the net profits of both houses to her separate estate. Lumley v. Timms, 28 L. T. 608; 21 W. R. 494—L.JJ.

Liability to Bankruptcy—"Carrying on Business separately from Husband."]—A married woman does not "carry on business separately from her husband" within the meaning of s. 1, sub-s. 5, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, because she has an interest in the business which is carried on, which is her separate property. The test is whether she is trading independently of her husband, and without being accountable to him for the profits of the business. Edwards, In re, Harvey, Ex parte, 15 R. 362; 43 W. R. 509; 2 Manson, 182. And see Gilchrist, Ex parte, Armstrong, In re, col. 1035, and col. 1115.

v. Property Acquired during Separation.

Transportation of Husband—Share as Next-of-kin.]—Where the husband was attainted of felony, and pardoned on consideration of transportation, and afterwards the wife became entitled to some personal estate as orphan to a freeman of London, this personal estate decreed to belong to the wife as to a feme sole. Newsome v. Bowyer, 3 P. W. 37.

Earnings of Wife.]—What the wife acquires during the time her husband has deserted her, to subsist herself and family, is her separate property, and not liable to the disposition of the husband; and what he has forcibly taken he must deliver in specie, but if disposed of he must pay her the value set by the master. Cecil v. Juxon, 1 Atk. 278.

Annuity—Desertion by Husband—Appropriation of Accumulations.]—A husband deserted his wife immediately after her marriage, in 1846, and she was supported by her sister. In 1848 an annuity was bequeathed to her for her life, which the trustee accumulated until 1862, when the wife obtained a decree for a judicial separation. In 1863 the court, on the petition of the wife and her sister, ordered the accumulations to be paid over to the sister, to the exclusion altogether of the husband. Ford, In re, 32 Beav. 621; 33 L. J., Ch. 180; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 740; 8 L. T. 652; 11 W. R. 45.

Judicial Separation—Effect of—Property subsequently acquired.]—A wife who has obtained a decree for judicial separation is to be considered as a feme sole with respect to such property only as she may acquire or which may come to or devolve upon her after the decree: s. 25 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), not applying to property to which the wife was entitled in possession at the date of the decree. Cooke v. Fuller (26 Beav. 99) distinguished. Waite v. Morland, 57 L. J., Ch. 655; 38 Ch. D. 135; 59 L. T. 185; 36 W. R. 484—C. A. See col. 798.

vi. Money at Bank.

Account Opened at Bank by Wife—Moneys Paid in by Husband.]—An account was opened at a bank by a wife in her own name as an executrix, the moneys she received as such executrix being placed to that account. The husband from time to time paid in moneys of his own to the account, cheques being drawn on it by the wife for the payment of household expenses. The husband died, and then the wife, the account still continuing:—Held, that as the husband had allowed the account to be opened in the name of the wife, and had from time to time paid in moneys of his own to the account, he showed an intention that, if the wife survived him, whatever was then remaining to the credit of the account should form part of her estate. Lloyd v. Pughe, L. R. 14 Eq. 241; 27 L. T. 474.

But, on appeal, the court held that the wife was merely the agent of her husband, and that the money belonged to his estate, and not hers. S. C., 42 L. J., Ch. 282; L. R. 8 Ch. 88; 28 L. T. 250; 21 W. R. 346.

The uncle of a married woman intimated his intention to give her 10,000*l.*, "to be settled as should be most agreeable" to her and her husband. No settlement was agreed upon, and, after an interval, the donor paid the money to a separate account which the wife had at a bank. A small balance was spent by her, but the greater portion was invested, by her direction and in her name, in securities, which she subsequently, without advice, transferred into her husband's name. He continued to pay the interest to her separate account for some years, but afterwards claimed to be entitled to the securities, jure mariti:—Held, that there was a settlement to the separate use of the wife, and her rights had not been abandoned. Carnegie v. Carnegie, 30 L. T. 460; 22 W. R. 595. Affirmed on appeal, 31 L. T. 7; 22 W. R. 783.

Wife's Cheque Paid into Husband's Bank.]—A wife, to whom a legacy had been bequeathed to her separate use, received an uncrossed country banker's draft, payable in London, for the amount, less the duty, and she indorsed the draft, and handed it over to her husband, and his bankers received the amount and placed it by his direction to his deposit account. The husband died suddenly a few days afterwards. There was evidence pointing to the fact that the wife did not intend to give the draft to her husband. In an action against his executors:—Held, that the widow was entitled to be paid the sum claimed. Green v. Carlill, 46 L. J., Ch. 477; 4 Ch. D. 882.

Joint Account—Advancement for Wife.]—A man had for a series of years lodged money in two several banks on deposit receipts, some of which were in his own name, and others in the joint names of himself and of his wife, and he frequently changed deposits already made in his own name into their joint names. There was some evidence of statements made by him to his wife, but resting on her testimony, that he had acted thus with the object of enabling the survivor to take the principal. At his death there were in the two banks four deposit receipts in their joint names and one in his own name alone:—Held, that the joint lodgments were advancements for the wife, who survived. Talbot v. Cody, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 138.

Receipts in the joint names of husband and wife at law and in equity considered. Ib.

—— Resulting Trust.]—A husband, who was in failing health, opened a new banking account in the joint names of himself and wife, authorising the bank to cash cheques drawn by either of them, and telling the bank manager that the balance of the account would belong to the survivor of himself and his wife. Cheques were thenceforward drawn by the wife only, and were applied by her in payment of household and other expenses, the husband paying in sums of money from time to time to the credit of the account. At the time of his death there was a large sum standing to the credit of the account, which the wife claimed to be entitled to for her own use:—Held, that the evidence of circumstances was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust in favour of the testator. Marshal v. Cruttwell, 44 L. J., Ch. 504; L. R. 20 Eq. 328.

Payments out of Income to Trust Account at Bankers.]—A testator gave certain property to trustees upon trust for his wife for life for her separate use, and after her death for her children. After the testator's death the widow married again. The trustees opened an account in their name at a banker's, to which they paid the produce of the trust property. The widow paid certain sums to this account from time to time out of her income. She died in the lifetime of her second husband, who claimed the sums paid in by his wife as her administrator:—Held, in the absence of express evidence of her intention, that the money was held by the trustees in trust for the children. Metcalf v. Fisher, 2 W. R. 326.

Husband Entitled as Administrator.]—A wife with a separate estate, over which she had power of disposition notwithstanding coverture, gave by will the whole of the funds constituting such separate estate upon trust for her nephews and nieces, and also bequeathed all funds purchased out of the savings of her separate estate upon the like trusts. She died leaving a large balance on her current account at her bankers:—Held, that she had not purchased any funds out of the savings at her bankers, and that such savings were undisposed of, and passed to her husband as administrator. Askew v. Rooth, 43 L. J., Ch. 368; L. R. 17 Eq. 426; 30 L. T. 155; 22 W. R. 524. See col. 1051.

Where the wife becoming entitled to separate property joined with her husband in appointing an agent to receive the rents, who by husband's direction paid them into the bankers of his family, with whom he opened an account, and the husband drew cheques on them, part of which he applied for his own purposes, and the rest in keeping down incumbrances on the estate; and at his death a large balance remained in the banker's hands, which was transferred to the account of the wife as his sole executrix, in which character she also drew on them:—Held, that by her acquiescence during his lifetime, the fund at his death was to be deemed his estate, and not to belong to her. Beresford v. Armagh (Archbishop), 13 Sim. 643; 13 L. J., Ch. 235; 8 Jur. 262.

Wife's Overdraft—Lien of Bankers.]—A wife having property settled to her separate use for life, with remainder as she should, notwithstanding coverture, by deed or will appoint, with remainder to her executors or administrators, opened two accounts with her bankers, a private and an administration account, and directed the bankers, by the joint letter of herself and her husband, to consider any overdraft on her private account secured by the administration account. The administration account was subject to the trusts of the settlement. At her death the private account was overdrawn:—Held, that she had contracted so as to bind her separate estate, and that the bankers had a lien on the administration account in respect of the overdrawn private account. London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lempriere, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426; 42 L. J., P. C. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 572; 29 L. T. 186; 21 W. R. 513.

Interpleader.]—A married woman lodged several sums of money in a bank in her own name upon deposit receipts representing herself to be a widow. Her husband and a transferee from her both afterwards claimed and brought actions for the recovery of the deposits:—Held, a proper case for interpleader. Costello v. Martin, 15 W. R. 548.

b. Statutory Separate Property—Married Women's Property Acts.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1, sub-s. 1.]—A married woman shall, in accordance with the provisions of this act, be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 5.]—Every woman married before the commencement of this act shall be entitled to have and to hold, and to dispose of in manner aforesaid as her separate property, all real and personal property, her title to which, whether vested or contingent, and whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, shall accrue after the commencement of this act, including any wages, earnings, money, and property so gained or acquired by her as aforesaid.

Title of Married Woman accrued before 1882 — Property Falling into Possession after.]—Sect. 5 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, applies only to property of a married woman her title to which accrues for the first time after the commencement of the act; it does not, therefore, include an interest to which she was contingently entitled before, but which falls into possession after the act. Adames' Trusts, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 878; 53 L. T. 198; 33 W. R. 834. Tench's Trusts, In re, L. R. 15 Ir. 406.

Property to which a married woman was, at the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, entitled for a vested interest in remainder, and which afterwards became an interest in possession, is not property "her title to which has accrued after the commencement of the act" within the meaning of s. 5. Tucker, In re, Emanuel v. Parfitt, 54 L. J., Ch. 874; 52 L. T. 923; 33 W. R. 932.

Property to which at the time of the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a woman married before the act was entitled subject to a life estate, but not for her separate use:—Held, not to become her separate estate by falling into possession after the commencement of the act. Reid v. Reid, 55 L. J., Ch. 294; 31 Ch. D. 402; 54 L. T. 100; 34 W. R. 332—C. A.

If a woman married before the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, has before the commencement of the act acquired a title, whether vested or contingent, and whether in reversion or remainder, to any property, such property is not made her separate estate by s. 5 of the act, though it falls into possession after the act. Baynton v. Collins (53 L. J., Ch. 1112; 27 Ch. D. 604) overruled. Ib.

Property to which a married woman was, at the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, entitled for a vested interest in remainder, and which, on the 4th of October, 1884, became an interest in possession, is not property "her title to which has accrued after the commencement of the act" within the meaning of s. 5. Tucker, In re, Emanuel v. Parfitt (54 L. J., Ch. 874), and Adames' Trust, In re (54 L. J., Ch. 878) followed. Baynton v. Collins (27 Ch. D. 604) not followed. Hobson, In re, Webster v. Rickards, 55 L. J., Ch. 300; 34 W. R. 195.

N., a lady married in 1860, became entitled, as one of the next of kin of C., who died without children in 1885, to a share of a fund settled by a deed of 1830, in trust for C. for life, and after her death to her children, and in default of children, for such person or persons as should, on the failure of children, be the next of kin of C. under the Statute of Distributions:—Held, that N.'s title accrued before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and that she did not take a separate estate under s. 5 of that act, in her share, but that it went to the assignee in bankruptcy of her husband, subject to her equity to a settlement. Beaupré's Trusts, In re, 21 L. R. Ir. 397—C. A.

A testator, who died in 1875, devised his real estate to his wife for life, with remainder to his children. One daughter married in 1878, and the tenant for life died in 1884:—Held, that under the operation of s. 5 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), the married woman's share in the estate was her separate property, and could be disposed of by her without the concurrence of her husband. Thompson and Curzon, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 610; 29 Ch. D. 177; 52 L. T. 498; 33 W. R. 688.

—— Spes Successionis—Contingent Interest or mere Expectancy — Gift to possible Next of Kin.]—A spes successionis is not a title to property by English law. A woman, married before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, who has a mere spes successionis to property, as one of a class of possible next of kin, has not a "contingent title" within the meaning of s. 5 of that act. Parsons, In re, Stockley v. Parsons, 59 L. J., Ch. 666; 45 Ch. D. 51; 62 L. T. 929; 38 W. R. 712.

A woman, being executrix and residuary legatee, married in 1880. She had discharged all her duties quâ executrix, save that she had not obtained payment of a sum of money which fell due to her testator's estate in September, 1879, for which sum she brought an action in 1883:—Held, that the wife's title quâ legatee accrued before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, came into operation, and that the husband was entitled to this money jure mariti. Edwards v. Edwards, 1 Cab. & E. 229.

Marriage Settlement.]—A marriage settlement made in 1862 contained an agreement for the settlement of any future-acquired property of the wife to a specified amount (except interests settled and limited to her separate use). The wife, after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, became entitled absolutely to a bequest above the specified amount, without any limitation as to separate use:—Held, that, by s. 19 of the above act, the marriage settlement was exempted from the 5th and other sections; and that the bequest to the wife came within the covenant to settle future-acquired property, and must be dealt with as if the act had never been passed. Stonor's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 776; 24 Ch. D. 195; 48 L. T. 963; 32 W. R. 413.

Settlement on First Marriage—Life Estate—General Power of Appointment — Remarriage.]—By a settlement made in 1878, upon a former marriage of Mrs. P., a fund was settled in trust for her during her life, and during her said intended coverture, for her separate use without power of anticipation; and then upon trust, in the events which happened, for such persons as she should during coverture by deed or will appoint, and when not under coverture by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment, upon trust for her executors, administrators, and assigns. Mrs. P., having survived her former husband, married again after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, without having exercised her power of appointment under the settlement:—Held, that the operation of the Married Women's Property Act was not excluded by s. 19, and that the act applied so far as to add the incident of separate use to her interest under the settlement, and that she and her husband were entitled to have the fund transferred to them. Onslow, In re, Plowden v. Gayford, 57 L. J., Ch. 940; 39 Ch. D. 622; 59 L. T. 308; 36 W. R. 883.

Life Interest for Wife's Separate Use—Remainder as she should by Will appoint, and in default to her Executors, Administrators, and Assigns—Absolute Interest.]—A testator gave property on trust for his daughter for life for her separate use, with remainder as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment, to her executors, administrators, and assigns. Subsequently to the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, she married:—Held, that by virtue of the act the interests for life and in ultimate remainder were both for her separate use, and the doctrine of Whittle v. Henning (2 Ph. 731) was no longer applicable for her protection, and that, therefore, these interests coalesced, giving her an absolute right to the property, and entitling her to release the power. Davenport, In re, Turner v. King, 64 L. J., Ch. 252; [1895] 1 Ch. 361; 13 R. 167; 71 L. T. 875; 43 W. R. 217.

Alimony.]—Alimony received by a wife under a decree for judicial separation from her husband is not separate estate, and cannot be charged by a wife with payment of her debts. Anderson v. Hay, 55 J. P. 295. See col. 845.

Damages awarded to Wife—Action by Husband and Wife for Personal Injuries to Wife.]—A husband and wife recovered a verdict for damages in an action brought by them in respect of personal injuries sustained by the wife, the jury awarding a certain sum to the wife, and a further sum to the husband for expenses. The amount of the verdict having been paid into the hands of their solicitor, a judgment creditor of the husband sought to attach the whole of the money:—Held, that the amount awarded to the wife became her separate property by virtue of s. 5 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and could not therefore be attached to answer a judgment debt of the husband. Semble, that such amount was also the separate property of the wife under s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Beasley v. Roney, 60 L. J., Q. B. 408; [1891] 1 Q. B. 509; 65 L. T. 153; 39 W. R. 415; 55 J. P. 566.

Bankruptcy of Married Woman trading separately.]—"Separate property" in s. 1, sub-s. 5, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not include a general power of appointment by deed or will of which the married woman is donee, but which she has not exercised. Gilchrist, Ex parte, Armstrong, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 578; 17 Q. B. D. 521; 55 L. T. 538; 34 W. R. 709; 3 Morrell, 193—C. A. See Edwards, In re, Harvey, Ex parte, col. 1029. And see col. 1115.

Marriage Settlement prior to Married Women's Property Act—Will of Father made Subsequent thereto — Contingent Interest under Will — Addition of Separate Use by the Act.]—By a marriage settlement made prior to the Married Women's Property Act a fund was settled upon a lady for life to her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her decease, in the event of her surviving her husband, for herself, her executors, administrators, and assigns, but in the event of the husband surviving her, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to her next of kin. By his will, made subsequently to the act, her father bequeathed a third of his residuary estate to the trustees of the settlement to be held upon the trusts therein expressed and declared. On a summons being taken out by the lady asking for a declaration that her contingent interest under the will was held by her to her separate use:—Held, that the incident of separate use was added by the statute, and that her contingent interest under the will was therefore disposable by her. Williams, In re, Williams v. Grant, 76 L. T. 150.

Separate Examination — Settled Estate.] — Where a married woman, married before the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is a petitioner under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, as to property her interest in which was acquired after the commencement of the act of 1882, she need not be separately examined as provided by s. 50 of the act of 1877. Batt's Settled Estates, In re, 66 L. J., Ch. 635; [1897] 2 Ch. 65; 45 W. R. 614.

Gift to Husband and Wife and Third Person.]—A testatrix, by her will dated in 1880, gave her residuary personal estate "to C. J. M. and J. H. and E. his wife to and for their own use and benefit absolutely"; and appointed "C. J. M. and J. H. and E. H. his wife" her executors. The testatrix died in 1883, after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. J. H. and E. H. married in 1864:—Held, that, as the will was made before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, came into operation, it must be construed in accordance with the law at that time, and that the three residuary legatees were entitled to the personal estate as joint tenants, C. J. M. taking one moiety, and J. H. and E. H. his wife taking the other moiety, between them, J. H. in his own right, and his wife for her separate use. March, In re, Mander v. Harris, 54 L. J., Ch. 143; 27 Ch. D. 166; 51 L. T. 380; 32 W. R. 241—C. A. See col. 1265.

Question as to Property—Inquiry by Registrar.]—A wife who had obtained a decree for a judicial separation, claimed certain furniture as her separate property, but her husband denied that she had a title to it:—The court made an order under s. 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, directing the registrar to inquire whether the furniture formed part of the wife's separate estate. Phillips v. Phillips, 57 L. J., P. 76; 13 P. D. 220; 59 L. T. 183; 37 W. R. 224; 52 J. P. 407.

Administratrix.]—Under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman is competent to accept the office of administratrix, and it is no longer necessary that her husband should consent or join in the administration bond. Ayres, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 98; 8 P. D. 168; 31 W. R. 660; 47 J. P. 440.

As to investments to which wife entitled at commencement of Married Women's Property Act, 1882, see ss. 6, 7, 8 of the act.

Married Women's Property Act, 1870—Personal Property not Exceeding £200—Different Sums under same Instrument.]—In a case coming under the operation of s. 7 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, where a married woman has become entitled to separate sums of money at the same time and under the same will, but coming under different titles, such sums cannot be aggregated so as to make up the total to an amount over 200*l.*; and the married woman will be entitled to any less sum than 200*l.* for her separate use. Middleton's Will, In re (16 W. R. 1107), followed. Davies, In re, Harrison v. Davis, 66 L. J., Ch. 512; [1897] 2 Ch. 204.

—— "Deed or Will."]—The limit of 200*l.*, fixed by s. 7 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, applies only to money coming to the married woman by "deed or will," and not to personal estate to which she may have become entitled as next of kin of an intestate; consequently such personal estate, whatever may be its amount or value, belongs, where unaffected by any settlement, to her for her separate use, and may be transferred or paid to her upon her separate receipt, without the necessity of any examination. Voss, In re, King v. Voss, 13 Ch. D. 504; 42 L. T. 78; 28 W. R. 565.

Quære, whether s. 8 does not apply to corpus, as the "rents and profits" therein mentioned are not limited to those arising during the life of the married woman. Ib.

—— Business and Stock-in-Trade.]—A woman in 1855 entered the service of a man as housekeeper in a house which was in his occupation but was not his ordinary place of residence. He shortly afterwards engaged to marry her. In 1861 she commenced the business of preserving fruit, which was begun upon a small scale, but gradually became a large wholesale business. It was carried on by her in her own name. She kept a separate banking account, and he admitted that it was her own business and was managed solely by her, though he sometimes assisted. In 1874 he married her. After the marriage the business was carried on by her as before, in her maiden name. Her husband resided in the house where it was carried on, but it did not appear that he took any further part in it than he had done before the marriage. He shortly afterwards died intestate:—Held, that the stock-in-trade and capital of the business belonged to the widow, and were not part of the husband's estate. Ashworth v. Outram, 46 L. J., Ch. 687; 5 Ch. D. 923; 37 L. T. 85; 25 W. R. 896—C. A.

Semble, that the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 1, applies not only to the earnings of a separate business carried on by a married woman, but also to the business and stock-in-trade from which the earnings are made. Ib.

—— School—Marriage before 1870—Earnings during Coverture.]—A lady, who was carrying on the business of a ladies' school, was married in 1862. A settlement was executed on the marriage, which did not in any way refer to or affect to deal with the business carried on by her or the goodwill thereof. After the marriage she continued to carry on the school. Her husband lived in the house, but he did not take any part in the business, nor assist in any manner in the tuition. The prospectuses, &c., of the school were in her name. Out of the earnings of the school the wife contributed to, if she did not substantially pay, the household expenses. Some of the earnings were invested by the husband in his own name, and another portion was invested in the purchase of the lease of the premises in which the school was carried on. The husband died in 1877. He did not in any way affect to deal with the school property by his will, and he had not ostensibly by any act of his treated it as his own property. Upon his death, the question arose between the executors of his will, under which his infant children were interested, and his widow, who survived him, as to who was entitled to the goodwill, property, and effects of the business:—Held, upon the evidence, that the business was carried on by the wife separately from her husband within the meaning of s. 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870; that it made no difference that the marriage took place before the passing of that act, and that the goodwill, stock, and effects belonging to the business, and all investments out of the earnings of the business made since the passing of the act, were the property of the wife. Dearmer, In re, James v. Dearmer, 53 L. T. 905—Kay, J.

—— Retainer by Executor—Separate Property—Equitable Assets.]—The separate estate of a married woman in earnings under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, becomes upon her death equitable assets and divisible amongst her creditors pari passu, so that her executor has no right to retain in full his own debt thereout. Poole, In re, Thompson v. Bennett, 46 L. J., Ch. 803; 6 Ch. D. 739; 37 L. T. 119; 25 W. R. 862.

—— Stock and Funds in Court.]—A fund in court, to which a married woman was entitled to her separate use, ordered, with the consent of her husband, to be transferred to her name, pursuant to the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 3. Frank v. Mackay, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 93.

A fund in court belonging to a married woman was ordered to be transferred in the books of the Bank of England to her name as a married woman, entitled to her separate use, according to the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 3. Butlin, In re, 23 L. T. 523; 19 W. R. 241.

A married woman and her daughter were entitled to a fund in court, subject to a power of appointment by the married woman over her life interest. An order was made with the consent of both, that the fund be transferred to the separate use of the mother. Bartholmew or Bartholomew, In re, 23 L. T. 433; 19 W. R. 95.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), does not empower a married woman, entitled under s. 7 to stock for her separate use, to transfer such stock without the concurrence of her husband, unless and until the stock has been placed, under s. 3, in her name as a married woman entitled for her separate use. Howard v. Bank of England, 44 L. J., Ch. 329; L. R. 19 Eq. 295; 31 L. T. 871; 23 W. R. 303.

Consols were standing in the names of three persons, one of whom was a married woman who had been deserted by her husband, and was entitled beneficially to the stock under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 7. Those persons applied to the Bank of England to be permitted to transfer the stock without the concurrence of the husband of the married woman; and the bank having refused:—Held, that the bank could not be compelled to permit such a transfer. Ib.

c. Policies of Insurance.

Statute.]—See Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 10, and Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 11.

For "Wife and Children"—Joint Tenancy.]—A husband effected a policy for the benefit of his wife and children under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. The husband died insolvent, and the wife being in poor circumstances, so that the income of the policy moneys was not sufficient to support her and the children, the moneys were distributed as if the husband had died intestate. Mellor's Policy Trusts, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 246; 7 Ch. D. 200; 26 W. R. 309.

A husband effected a policy for the benefit of his wife and children under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, and died insolvent. His wife and one child of the marriage predeceased him. Upon a petition by his surviving children, under s. 10 of the act for the appointment of a trustee of the policy-money and for a declaration as to the rights of the petitioners:—Held, that the court had, under that section, no jurisdiction to do more than make the order appointing a trustee; but since under the policy there was a trust either for the wife for life with remainder to the children, or, in the alternative, for the wife and children as joint tenants, the order was directed to be prefaced with an expression of opinion that the wife took no interest and that the surviving children took as joint tenants. Mellor's Policy Trusts, In re (6 Ch. D. 127; 7 Ch. D. 200), not followed. Adam's Policy Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 642; 23 Ch. D. 525; 48 L. T. 727; 31 W. R. 810.

Semble, a policy effected by a husband under s. 10 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, "for the benefit of his wife and children," should be read in conjunction with that section, and should, by virtue of the words "separate use" in the section, be construed as giving the wife a life interest only, with remainder to the children. Ib. See also 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 11.

A policy was taken out on the life of the assured for the benefit of his wife and children:—Held, that his widow and children took as joint tenants. Mellor's Policy Trusts, In re (7 Ch. For Benefit of Wife—Contingent Interest of Husband—Withdrawal.]—A policy of insurance on the life of a husband for the benefit of his wife was, in 1876, effected with an insurance company which carried on business at New York, through their branch office in London. The application for the policy was made by him on behalf of his wife. The premiums were made payable in London. By the policy the company promised to pay the amount assured to the wife for her sole use, if living, and, if she were not living, to the children of the husband, or, if there should be no such children, to the executors or assigns of the husband, at the London office. The policy also provided that, on the completion of a period of ten years from its issue, provided it should not have been previously terminated by lapse or death, the legal owner should have the option of withdrawing the accumulated reserve and surplus appropriated by the company to the policy. The husband paid the premiums until July, 1883, when he filed a liquidation petition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. In 1884 he obtained his discharge. After 1883 the wife paid the premiums out of her separate estate. In 1886 the wife exercised the right of withdrawal, and the company paid 2,959*l.* in respect of the policy:—Held, that, even if the sum thus paid did not by virtue of the policy belong to the wife for her separate use, the husband's contingent interest in it at the time when he obtained his discharge was a mere possibility, and that, consequently, it did not pass to the trustee in the liquidation. Dever, Ex parte, Suse, In re, 56 L. J., Q. B. 552; 18 Q. B. D. 660—C. A.

Discharge — Appointment of Trustee.] — A policy of insurance effected by a husband on his own life for the benefit of his wife and children previously to the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, is not affected by the provisions of s. 11 of the act of 1882 so as to enable the moneys payable thereunder to be paid to the legal personal representative of the insured; but a trustee must be appointed under s. 10 of the act of 1870 to give a good discharge for such moneys. Adam's Policy Trusts, In re (52 L. J., Ch. 642; 23 Ch. D. 525), followed; Soutar's Policy Trust, In re (54 L. J., Ch. 256; 26 Ch. D. 236), distinguished. Turnbull, In re, Turnbull v. Turnbull, 66 L. J., Ch. 719; [1897] 2 Ch. 415; 77 L. T. 47; 46 W. R. 3.

Policy in Wife's Name—Voluntary Settlement of—Payment of Premiums.]—On 5th November, 1844, a policy of insurance for 2,000*l.* was effected upon the life and in the name of B. the wife of A. By a post-nuptial settlement dated 27th November, 1844, reciting that B. was desirous of making provision for her husband and children, and that A. had agreed to join in the deed for the purpose of assuring "all his interest, if any," in the policy, A. and B. assigned to C. and D. the policy and all sums payable thereunder upon trust to invest the same and pay the income to A. and his assigns during his life, and after his decease to divide the trust funds equally among the children of A. and B. The settlement contained no power of revocation, A. predeceased his wife, having paid all premiums during his lifetime. Upon the death of B., the question arose whether the policy moneys were subject to the trusts declared by the settlement:—Held, that the policy was intended by the husband to be and was the separate property of the wife at the date of settlement, in which the husband concurred only for conformity and to bind such interest, if any, as he had; that the settlement was valid, and that the policy moneys were bound by the trusts of the settlement. Winn, In re, Reed v. Winn, 57 L. T. 332.

Appointment of Trustees—Petition.]—A petition (presented since the coming into operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882) for the appointment of trustees of the proceeds of a life policy effected by a husband, under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, for the benefit of his wife and children, ought to be entitled in the matter of the act of 1882. Soutar's Policy Trust, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 256: 26 Ch. D. 236; 32 W. R. 701.

Application for the appointment of trustees of a policy of life assurance, effected under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Acts, for the benefit of the wife and children of the assured, may be made by petition. Atkinson's Policy Trusts, In re, 13 R. 285.

—— Summons.]—Upon a motion, under s. 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), to appoint trustees of a policy of assurance effected for the benefit of the insurer's wife and children, there is no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the rights of the widow and children inter se. An application for that purpose may be made on summons under Gen. Ord. LV. Graham's Policy Trusts, In re, 29 L. R. Ir. 498.

Direction to Exchange Policy for one Fully-Paid up.]—The defendant effected a policy on his life for the benefit of his wife and children under s. 10 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. He became bankrupt and mentally deranged, and was unable to pay the premiums. By the rules of the insurance society the policy could be exchanged for a fully paid-up policy of smaller value, and thus preserved from lapsing. The wife and only child of the defendant brought this action, claiming the appointment of a trustee of the policy, and that such trustee might be authorised to exchange the policy for one fully paid up:—Held, that the court under its general jurisdiction had power to appoint two trustees; and judgment was given to that effect, and otherwise as claimed. Schultze v. Schultze, 56 L. J., Ch. 356; 56 L. T. 231.

Conviction of Wife for Murder of Husband—Failure of Trust in favour of Wife—Resulting Trust in Favour of Husband's Estate.]—A husband insured his life for the benefit of his wife under the provisions of s. 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75). He died, and his wife was tried for and convicted of his murder:—Held, that the effect of s. 11 was to create a trust in favour of the wife in respect of the sum insured, but that inasmuch as it was against public policy for the wife to benefit by her own criminal act, the trust in her favour failed, and a resulting trust arose in favour of the deceased husband's estate, in respect of which his executors were entitled to recover the sum insured from the insurance company. Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, 61 L. J., Q. B. 128: [1892] 1 Q. B. 147; 66 L. T. 220; 40 W. R. 230; 56 J. P. 180—C. A.

Accountability.]—Where a married woman has been supported by her husband, no retrospective account is given of her separate estate against his assets, and there is no distinction whether it be pin-money or not, or whether it is secured by articles remaining in fieri, or an executed trust. Arthur v. Arthur, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 511.

A., having lands and a personal estate before her marriage, conveys all her estate to her separate use, to which the intended husband was a party, and he covenanted that he would not interfere with it. On this estate there was a mortgage for 300*l*., which before these conveyances executed (the word executed is not in the original) he verbally promised to discharge. During the coverture the mortgage was assigned over, and he covenanted thus: "That I or my wife shall pay it." The husband and wife lived with great affection together, and he constantly received all the profits of this separate estate. He died, never having paid off the mortgage, leaving fortunes to children, which he had by a former wife: these the wife maintained after his decease. She brings her bill, to have an account of the profits of her separate estate received by the baron. Decreed, that the husband's effects should not be accountable for the profits of her separate estate received by him. On a rehearing, decree affirmed. Christmas v. Christmas, Sel. Ch. Ca. 20.

A married woman entitled for her separate use to the dividends of certain stock standing in the names of trustees, of whom her husband was one, permitted these dividends for a number of years to be paid to the husband's bankers to his separate account; it appeared also, by the evidence, that he made use of these funds as his own property:—Held, that a course of dealing was proved, as existing between the husband and wife, which showed that the money was paid to the husband as husband, and not as trustee; and that this being done with the assent and acquiescence of the wife, disentitled her from claiming any part of the money as against the estate of the husband. Caton v. Rideout, 1 Macn. & G. 599; 2 H. & Tw. 33.

Where a wife is living with, and is maintained by, her husband, the court will not grant an account of the arrears of the income of her separate estate, which, in the absence of a demand by her, have been paid to her husband. Leach v. Way, 5 L. J., Ch. 100.

The court proceeds, in such case, on the assumption, that some arrangement has been made between the husband and wife; but in the case of Digby v. Howard, the house of lords refused the account, although there, from the wife being a lunatic, her acquiescence could not be presumed. Ib.

Husband is not to account for the income of his wife's separate estate, which she permitted him to receive. Smith v. Camelford (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 698.

Where husband receives interest of wife's separate property, no account against his representatives. Squire v. Dean, 4 Bro. C. C. 326.

Account of wife's separate estate, or pin-money, never carried back beyond the year. Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 190.

Testator gave leasehold premises to his daughter for life, if his term or terms and interest should therein so long subsist, for her sole and separate use, notwithstanding her present and future coverture; and after her decease, to her children equally, their executors, &c., during all the remainder of the estate, term or terms and interest therein, which should be then to come and unexpired. No trustees being interposed, the husband, having possession, was held accountable, according to the uses of the will, both as to the original leases, and also as to reversionary leases granted to him, as the person entitled under the will of the former tenant upon favourable terms; and the equity was established against a purchaser from him, with notice. Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583.

Wife having specific effects to her separate use disposes of her separate property by will. After her death, her husband sells part of these effects and dies; his representative is accountable to the wife's administratrix with the will annexed. Peacock v. Monk, supra.

The wife after the death of the husband, not admitted in equity to recover the arrears of her separate estate. Power v. Hankey, 2 P. W. 82.

Maintenance of Insane Wife.]—In an account of dividends of the wife's separate property, directed against husband's estate, consideration should be had of his extra expenses in the maintenance, in consequence of her being insane. Att.-Gen. v. Parnther, 4 Bro. C. C. 409.

One Year's Arrears only.]—Wife permitting her husband to receive her separate income, the account shall go back only one year. Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 205.

A wife can only claim as a creditor one year's arrears of her separate estate, as in the case of pin-money. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 1.

Transfer of Stock Procured by Fraud.]—Agreement on marriage to settle stock and other property of the wife to the use of the wife; husband having by fraud made her transfer the stock to him, decreed upon a bill for performance, to transfer the stock, and assign the rest under the direction of the master, to trustees for her use, who should receive the dividends due and to become due till the transfer and assignment. Costs on account of fraud. Lampert v. Lampert, 1 Ves. J. 21.

Ante-nuptial Agreement.] — Husband and wife agreed before marriage that the wife should have the disposal of her own estate; the agreement was put into the hands of S., the wife's agent, who received the rents, and paid them to the husband with the wife's consent; S. shall not be answerable for what he received and paid during the coverture; for an agreement between husband and wife only is determined by the marriage. Sed quære, Darcy v. Chute, 1 Ch. Ca. 21.

—— Husband Procuring Breach of Trust — Appointment to.]—Stock was settled on a wife, for her separate use for life, with a power of appointment by will. The trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, sold out the stock, and paid the proceeds to the husband, who afterwards became bankrupt. The wife filed a bill to compel the trustees to replace the stock, and obtained a decree, under which the trustees transferred part of the stock into court, and they were allowed time to transfer the remainder. The wife died, having, by her will, appointed the stock to her husband, and appointed him her executor. He filed a bill of revivor and supplement against the trustees and his assignees, claiming the stock under the appointment, and praying the same relief as his wife might have had. But as he had received the proceeds of the stock sold out, his bill was dismissed. Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 555. And see Whistler v. Newman, 4 Ves. 129. See as to the authority of this case, 5 Ves. 17, n. and 694, n.

Estates Purchased by Husband out of Wife's Money—Lien of Wife.]—Money settled to separate use of wife, and in event of no children to her absolutely on surviving husband, with power to trustees with her consent to invest it in land: —Held, that no lien existed on estates purchased by husband, having obtained the money from trustees, the circumstances not raising the presumption, as if he had been under an engagement to purchase, that his purchases were in pursuance of engagement; and upon evidence, the fact of the application of trust fund or the inability of husband by other means not being made out. Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 511.

A wife's separate estate was invested in shares in the joint names of herself and her husband. The husband induced his wife to join in selling them upon his promise to reinvest the produce in their joint names. The husband alone received the produce, and, unknown to his wife, employed it in part payment for the purchase of a real estate conveyed to him alone. The wife survived her husband:—Held, that she was entitled to a lien on the real estate for the amount. Scales v. Baker, 28 Beav. 91; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1134; 8 W. R. 287.

Direction to Pay to Husband — Death — Rents not Received.]—Feme covert, by deed, directed rents and profits, her separate property, to be paid, during her life, to her husband, for his own proper use and benefit (the intention being only to give him the administration during coverture, without account), the widow is entitled, after his death, to the future rents, and to those accrued in his life and not received. If her interest had passed, it must, upon the circumstances of the transaction, have been set aside. Milnes v. Busk, 2 Ves. J. 488.

Stock-in-Trade of Wife used by Husband.]—A husband carried on the business of a victualler with stock, &c., which formed the separate estate of the wife; in carrying on the business he disposed of the consumable stock and substituted similar articles, and at a subsequent period he sold the stock and business; by the decree an account was directed against the husband of the stock comprised in the settlement, and sold:—Held, that the master properly included the substituted stock in the account. England v. Downs, 6 Beav. 269; 12 L. J., Ch. 85; 6 Jur. 1075.

Receipt of Legacy—Concurrence of Wife.]—A husband, with his wife's concurrence, received a legacy bequeathed upon trust for her separate use. Some time afterwards he made his will, bequeathing to her a much larger sum, and directing his executor, who was also his residuary legatee, to pay all his just debts:—Held, first, that the concurrence of the wife in the receipt of the legacy by the husband was not a gift of it to him; secondly, that the bequest by the husband to the wife was not a satisfaction of the wife's claim against his estate in respect of the first-mentioned legacy. Rowe v. Rowe, 2 De G. & Sm. 294; 17 L. J., Ch. 357; 12 Jur. 909.

Annuity of Wife Charge on Husband's Estate.]—A married woman being entitled to an annuity charged on an estate belonging to A., but of which her husband was, as she knew, in receipt of the rents under a power of attorney from A., made no demand upon A. in respect of the annuity, for several years. The husband being indebted to A., in respect of his receipts, becomes bankrupt:—Held, that as the wife had lived with her husband, and enjoyed the benefit of his expenditure, she had no claim upon A. or his estate, in respect of the arrears of the annuity. Carter v. Anderson, 3 Sim. 370; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 91. See also 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 132; and Payne v. Little, 26 Beav. 1.

—— Payment to Husband.]—An annuity given to the separate use of the wife is discharged by payments made to the use of her husband, and sums allowed him in account, the circumstances of the transactions being such as to satisfy the court that the mode of dealing between the person who was bound to pay the annuity and the husband was with the acquiescence of the wife, or with her authority, either express or implied. Bartlett v. Gillard, 3 Russ. 149 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 19.

An annuity given to the separate use of the wife, being discharged by payments made to the use of her husband with her acquiescence, where husband took the bond of tenant for life of real estate, on which it was charged, for arrears of such annuity :—Held, that such bond, if accepted by the person entitled to the annuity, would be a good discharge in respect to the remainderman, and would, therefore, also bind the surviving wife, if she assented ; but an inquiry was directed as to the fact, whether the taking the bond was by her authority or with her consent. Kelly v. Dawson, 2 Moll. 87.

Lease Bought with Wife's Money—Outlay by Husband.]—A husband contracted for a lease of some premises, and he afterwards induced the trustees of his marriage settlement, who held moneys for the separate use of his wife, without power of anticipation, to act in breach of their trust, and to purchase the property. The property was conveyed to the trustees, and, by a deed executed by the husband and wife, it was declared that it should be held for their indemnity, and on the trusts of the settlement. The husband laid out very considerable sums of money in building and repairs, and, with the consent of the wife, was permitted to receive the rents. After some years, disputes arose ; the trustees insisted on receiving the rents, and proceeded at law to enforce their rights, whereupon the husband filed a bill against the trustees and his wife, claiming a lease under the agreement, and asking for a sale of the property, and for the application of the produce, first, in replacement of the trust funds, and afterwards in reimbursing the plaintiff his outlay. A motion for a receiver was refused with costs. Wiles v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 294 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 129.

Premiums on Settled Policies paid by Wife.]—A feme covert, out of her separate income, pays the premiums on certain policies of assurance, which, by a settlement made previously to her marriage, were assigned as a collateral security for a provision settled upon her under that instrument by the covenant of her husband :—Held, that upon the money secured by the policies becoming payable, she was entitled to a lien on the policy fund for the amount of the premiums so paid. Burridge v. Row, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 183, 583 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 369 ; 6 Jur. 12, 499. Affirmed, 13 L. J., Ch. 173 ; 9 Jur. 299.

Joint Appointment of Receiver.]—A married lady became entitled to an estate for her separate use under her grandfather's will, and she and her husband joined in appointing a person to receive the rents as their agent, who, by the husband's direction, paid them to an account opened by him with H. & Co., the bankers of his wife's family, and he drew cheques on H. & Co. for sums, some of which he applied for his own purposes, and the rest to keep down the interest of incumbrances on the estate. At the husband's death, a large balance remained in the hands of H. & Co., which they transferred to the account of his executors ; and his wife, who was his sole executrix, drew on H. & Co. in that character, and died about ten months after her husband :—Held, that the balance belonged not to her, but her husband's estate. Beresford v. Armagh (Archbishop), 13 Sim. 643 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 235 ; 8 Jur. 262.

Wife's Legacy Employed in Husband's Business.]—A. during her husband's (G.'s) lifetime became, under a will, entitled to a legacy of 1,000*l.* for her separate use. The executors paid the money to her, and she and her husband executed a release to them. Immediately after the payment the money came into the hands of G., and he paid it to his own account at his banker's, employing it partly in his business and partly in the family expenditure, with the knowledge and assent of his wife. There was no evidence to show in what manner or under what circumstances the money came into G.'s hands, or was so dealt with by him, nor did it appear that A. intended that the legacy should be a gift to her husband, or be held in trust for her separate use ; but it appeared that no communication took place between G. and his wife on the subject after the payment. G. died intestate, and A. claimed to be paid out of his assets the sum paid to him, on the ground that he was a trustee of the same for her separate use :—Held, that the employment of the money by G. in the manner set forth, with the assent of A., rendered it impossible for her to claim the money out of the assets of G. Gardner v. Gardner, 1 Giff. 126 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 903 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 975 ; 7 W. R. 692.

Written Acknowledgments of Wife's Right.]—Two promissory notes and a gas share were left to a feme sole for her separate use. She married, but they were not settled, and they were subsequently transferred into the name of the husband. There being written recognitions of the husband that they were the wife's :—Held, after his death that they belonged, as separate estate, to her. Darkin v. Darkin, 17 Beav. 578 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 890 ; 2 W. R. 135.

Declaration of Trust by Husband.]—M. allowed his wife to have a separate banker's account, to which moneys belonging to her, settled to her separate use, and also moneys not so settled, were paid in. M. also allowed her to draw cheques upon such account in her own name. She from time to time paid such cheques to her husband, who always gave her a memorandum at the time, and at the end of the year gave a promissory note, including all the amounts so received. The last of such promissory notes was dated the 1st January, 1848. M. died in August, 1848, having left all his property to trustees to convert into money, at such times as they might think proper, with full power to postpone such sale ; and his wife was made tenant for life in the proceeds of such sale, and in the other items of his estate, until the same should be so converted into money. Part of the property consisted of Mexican mine shares not yet sold :—Held, first, that such promissory note operated as a good declaration of trust by the husband in favour of the wife ; secondly, that the wife was entitled to have the dividends and bonuses (the same having arisen out of profits) declared since the testator's decease ; thirdly, that she was not entitled to insist upon the said Mexican shares being left in their then state of investment, against the wish of the trustees. Murray v. Glasse, 17 Jur. 816.

Discharge of Husband's Debts.] — S. G., a married woman, by deed-poll, in execution of a power reserved to her in her marriage settlement, appointed certain estates, which had been settled to her separate use, to a trustee, in trust to sell and apply the proceeds to pay costs, incumbrances, and mortgages created thereon by the husband, to discharge the debts of the husband, and the residue in trust for S. G.'s own separate use. The husband sold the greater part of the premises comprised in the deed-poll, and the proceeds of the sales, and the rents unsold, were received by him. The husband having died, a bill was filed by his trustees and executors (one of whom was the trustee of the deed-poll) for administration of the estate. The decree ordered an account of the estates comprised in the deed-poll, and of the rents and profits of such estates, and the proceeds of any sales thereof, and an inquiry whether the testator had applied any of his moneys in payment of incumbrances, and whether anything was due to his estate in respect thereof. The master had not taken an account of the produce of the sales, and of the rents and profits of the unsold estates, as between the trustee of the deed-poll and the testator's estate. On further directions, the representatives of S. G. urged an inquiry as to the proceeds of the sales, and the rents and profits of the estates received during the husband's lifetime :—Held, that no direction for an account to charge the husband's estate, for the benefit of those interested in the separate estate of the wife, could be given, on the ground of acquiescence by the wife. Lea v. Grundy, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 951.

Solicitor Paying Cheque for Wife to Husband.]—A married woman, to whom a sum of money was payable for her separate use, received a cheque from the accountant-general, and handed it over to her solicitor, who accompanied her. The solicitor was, on motion, ordered to pay the balance to his client, and :—Held, that the onus being on the solicitor to show cause for not paying it over, he could not set up a voluntary agreement to pay her husband's debt out of it. Mawhood v. Milbanke, 15 Beav. 36.

Contract of Marriage in Scotch Form.]—A domiciled Scotchman, with the intention of continuing domiciled in Scotland, entered into a contract of marriage according to the Scotch form, but prepared in England. Some years subsequent to the marriage the Scotch domicil was relinquished, and an English one acquired. After the change of domicil the wife acquired property under her father's will, the greater portion of which was paid over to the husband by the trustee under the will, upon the joint receipt of himself and wife. The husband then became bankrupt, when another portion was paid to his assignees ; a third portion remained undistributed. The wife, by her next friend, filed a bill against the trustee, seeking to make him liable to make good the sums so paid :—Held, that although prepared in England, and a valid English contract, the contract was to be governed by the Scotch law ; that the change of domicil did not superinduce a disability in the wife not existing by the Scotch law, and that consequently the payments to the husband upon the joint receipt of husband and wife were good ; that the payments made to the assignees were bad, and must be refunded by them, or be made good by the trustee ; and that all future sums which might become payable must be treated as the separate property of the wife, subject to the life estate of the husband therein ; and that the dividends payable under the bankruptcy could not be impounded to make good the contract of the husband. Duncan v. Cannan, 23 L. J., Ch. 265 ; 18 Jur. 736 ; 2 Eq. R. 593.

Wife Separating from Husband.]—Wife entitled for life to income of settled property for her separate use, without power of anticipation. The trustees allowed the husband to use 1,000*l.*, part of the trust funds, for four years ; shortly after which period the wife separated from her husband, and then, for the first time, claimed interest on the 1,000*l.* for four years. She admitted she had allowed her husband to receive her income, so long as he behaved to her as a husband ought to do :—Held, that the wife was not entitled to the interest claimed. Rowley v. Unwin, 2 Kay & J. 138.

Wife becoming Lunatic—Payment of Income to Husband for Support.]—Property was settled upon a lady for her separate use for life ; and after the death of herself and her husband, upon certain trusts for their children. The lady, after the marriage, became lunatic. The husband requested the trustees of the settlement to pay the annual income of the property to him to maintain his wife. A petition was presented to the vice-chancellor, by the trustees, under s. 30 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, for his advice in the matter, and he desired the application to be made to the lords justices :—Held, that the income might be paid to the husband, he undertaking to apply it for the support of his wife and children ; the costs of the petition to come out of the income. Spiller, In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 386 ; 2 L. T. 74—L.JJ.

Trustee paying to Husband with Wife's Consent—Liability of Trustee's Estate.]—Where a husband, entitled to the interest of a fund for life, with remainder to his wife for life, induced the acting trustee to pay him the money, on the written consent of the wife ; the trustee having died, his estate was held liable to make good the moneys so paid, on a bill filed by the widow and the surviving trustee. Cresswell v. Dewell, 4 Giff. 460 ; 3 N. R. 148 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 357 ; 10 L. T. 22 ; 12 W. R. 123.

Arrears of Pin Money.]—The rule of the court of chancery, that an arrear of a wife's separate estate or pin-money cannot be recovered against the husband, being founded on the presumption that it has been applied to the maintenance of the wife, or the general purposes of the family with the assent of the wife, does not apply where there is a receiver over the property liable to pay it. Nor has it any application against a purchaser for valuable consideration of the separate estate or pin-money. Foss v. Foss, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 215. See PIN-MONEY, col. 1260.

Settlement on Husband procured by his Fraud.]—Money which had been bequeathed to a married woman for her separate use was, during the coverture, by her husband, at her request, lent on mortgage. The mortgage was prepared by the solicitor of the mortgagor from instructions given by him and the husband, and it recited, untruly, that the money belonged to the wife before marriage and was not comprised in any settlement, and it was made payable to the husband and wife, and to the survivor of them, his or her executors or administrators, or their, his, or her assigns. The wife had no separate solicitor, and executed the deed without its being read over to her. The husband deserted his wife, and was subsequently, on her petition, divorced from her on the grounds of adultery and cruelty. Upon a bill by the wife against her husband and the mortgagor, the deed was declared to be void, so far as it purported to be a settlement on the husband, and a new deed was ordered to be executed in favour of the wife alone. Knight v. Knight, 5 Giff. 26; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 617; 12 L. T. 699.

Joint Power of Attorney—Restraint on Anticipation.]—When a married woman, who was entitled to the income of property held on trust for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation, joined with her husband in a power of attorney to receive and to sue for any moneys due to them or either of them:—Held, that the trustee was not justified in not paying the attorney the wife's separate income. Neither would the power entitle the attorney to institute an administration suit in the name of the wife by himself as next friend. Kenrick v. Wood, L. R. 9 Eq. 333; 19 W. R. 57.

Wife may Contract with Husband as to Separate Property.]—A wife can contract in respect of her separate estate with her husband; and if she hands him money, part of the income of her separate estate, upon a contract of loan, she may sue him upon that contract. Woodward v. Woodward, 3 De G. J. & S. 672; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 882; 8 L. T. 749; 11 W. R. 1007.

Circumstances under which a wife was held upon the evidence to have lent and not given to her husband a sum of money, part of the income of her separate estate, and to be entitled to prove upon his estate in an administration suit as a creditor in respect of the loan. Ib.

Husband Speculating on Stock Exchange with Wife's Bonds—Notice to Broker.]—A husband entered into speculations on the stock exchange partly with money which was settled upon his wife for her separate use, without power of anticipation. The transactions were carried out through his broker, with whom he deposited, as a security against risks, Spanish bonds which had been purchased with the settlement funds. The broker had no direct notice that these bonds were settlement property, but he had received from the husband from time to time cheques payable to his wife or order, these cheques being indorsed by her. The bonds having been realised by the broker to cover losses incurred by him in the course of the transactions, the wife filed a bill against the broker to recover the value of the bonds and cheques on the ground that the amount constituted her separate estate, and that the broker had notice of the fact:—Held, that the broker had neither actual nor constructive notice of the settlement, and that, therefore, the bill must be dismissed with costs. Macbryde v. Eykyn, 24 L. T. 461. Affirmed, 25 L. T. 192—L.JJ.

Wife giving Cheque for Legacy to Husband to Cash—Death of Husband.]—A wife, to whom a legacy had been bequeathed to her separate use, received an uncrossed country banker's draft, payable in London, for the amount, less the duty, and she indorsed the draft and handed it over to her husband, and his bankers received the amount and placed it by his direction to his deposit account. The husband died suddenly a few days afterwards. There was evidence pointing to the fact that the wife did not intend to give the draft to her husband. In an action against his executors:—Held, that the widow was entitled to be paid the sum claimed. Green v. Carlill, 46 L. J., Ch. 477; 4 Ch. D. 882.

Goods of Wife Warehoused with Auctioneer.]—Goods, the separate property of a married woman, were placed by her husband in a hired warehouse, and entrusted to auctioneers for the purpose of sale:—Held, that the auctioneers became possessed of the goods: so that on receipt of notice of the wife's claim before sale, they were liable to the wife for the value of both the goods sold and the goods not sold but afterwards removed by the husband. Davis v. Artingstall, 49 L. J., Ch. 609; 42 L. T. 507; 29 W. R. 137.

Presumption as to Wife's Assent.]—The trustee of stock for the separate use of a married woman having improperly transferred it into the joint names of her husband and himself, the husband for six years received the dividends, after which the trustee died, and the husband, without his wife's knowledge, sold out the stock, and applied the proceeds to his own use. Some time afterwards he left her:—Held, that, though the wife might have been presumed to have assented to the husband's actual receipt of the dividends while the stock remained intact, yet no such assent could be presumed after it had been sold, and that she was entitled to recover, as against her husband and the estate of the deceased trustee, the arrears of dividends which had accrued since that time, as well as to have the trust fund replaced. Dixon's Trusts, In re, Dixon v. Dixon, 48 L. J., Ch. 592; 9 Ch. D. 587; 40 L. T. 208; 27 W. R. 282.

Presumption of Gift.]—By the law of Scotland, as well as by that of England, a married woman may make an effectual gift of her separate income to her husband: with this difference, that by Scotch law she has the privilege of revoking the donation, even after her husband's death, and reclaiming the subject of her gift in so far as it had not been consumed. The same circumstances which are in England held to imply donations between husband and wife are sufficient to sustain a similar inference in Scotland. Edward v. Cheyne, 13 App. Cas. 385—H. L. (Sc.)

A married woman living with her husband in Scotland was entitled to the income of a fund settled for her separate use, which stood in the names of trustees, of whom her husband was one; and he also acted as factor of the trust. Payments of income were at first lodged in a bank to the credit of the wife's separate account, then to the credit of an account in the names of both husband and wife; but for many years previous to the husband's death, both before and after he became sole trustee, the income was paid into the husband's private banking account, and mixed with his own funds:—Held, that these circumstances inferred a complete gift, and, in respect it had not been revoked by the wife, that her representatives were not entitled to an account of the husband's intromissions with her separate estate. Ib.

And see GRANTS AND GIFTS TO AND BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE, infra, 1264.

e. Death of Wife—Rights of Husband.

Chattels Real of Wife not vested in Possession during Coverture.]—A wife entitled to a term, subject to a life estate therein, predeceased her husband during the subsistence of the life estate: —Held, that it was not necessary for the husband to take out letters of administration to her in order to complete his title to the leaseholds. Bellamy, In re, Elder v. Pearson, 53 L. J., Ch. 174; 25 Ch. D. 620; 49 L. T. 708; 32 W. R. 358.

—— Equitable Interest.]—On the death of a wife her husband, in the absence of any disposition by her, becomes entitled jure mariti to her equitable interest in chattels real settled to her separate use. Archer v. Lavender, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 220.

Devolution of Separate Estate — Married Women's Property Act, 1882.] — The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not affect the right of the husband to succeed, on the death of the wife, to her undisposed-of separate personalty. Lambert, In re, Stanton v. Lambert, 57 L. J., Ch. 927; 39 Ch. D. 626; 59 L. T. 429.

A married woman who died on the 13th of September, 1887, leaving a husband and three children surviving, made a will on the 7th of September, 1887, in exercise of a power of appointment, and appointed executors. The will did not purport to dispose of any other property. At her death she was entitled to separate personal estate not included in the power. Probate of the will was granted under the Amended Probate Rules of April, 1887, in the ordinary form without any exception or limitation:—Held, that the executors were trustees for the husband of the undisposed-of property, and that the probate duty and the costs connected with probate ought to be apportioned ratably between the appointed and the undisposed-of property. Ib.

Debts of Deceased Wife — Administration not taken out—"Legal Personal Representative."]—A husband who, jure mariti, succeeds to leasehold property which belonged to his deceased wife as separate estate, without taking out administration, is her "legal personal representative" within the meaning of s. 23 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, so as to be liable to the extent of such separate estate for his wife's debts. Surman v. Wharton, 60 L. J., Q. B. 233; [1891] 1 Q. B. 491; 64 L. T. 866; 39 W. R. 416.

See col. 1103.

Executor of Wife—Retainer for Funeral Expenses—Estate insufficient.]—A husband, executor of his wife's will made under a testamentary power of appointment, is entitled to retain out of her estate the expenses of her funeral though such estate was insufficient for creditors, and her will did not contain any charge of debts and funeral expenses. McMyn, In re, Lightbown v. McMyn, 55 L. J., Ch. 845; 33 Ch. D. 575; 55 L. T. 834; 35 W. R. 179.

Money—Husband entitled as Next of Kin.]—It was stipulated in marriage articles that moneys in the funds, the property of the intended wife, should be for sole and separate use, to all intents and purposes, as if she were sole and unmarried: —Held, upon the death of the wife without issue and without having made any appointment of the property, that the husband was entitled to it as her administrator, and not her next of kin. Proudley v. Fielder, 2 Myl. & K. 57.

Where the wife living separate at the time of her death was possessed of money arising from funds settled to her separate use, and had made no disposition of them:—Held, that the husband was entitled to the moneys saved jure mariti, without taking out administration. Moloney v. Kennedy, 10 Sim. 254; 3 Jur. 793.

If no disposition of wife's separate property, husband succeeds as next of kin, not by marital right. Sed quære. Fettiplace v. Gorges, 1 Ves. J. 49; 1 R. R. 79. See Bro. C. C. 3, 10, n.

Undisposed-of separate Property—Bankruptcy of Husband.]—The wife of a bankrupt, having separate property, died in France, in possession of other property there, which was claimed by the creditors as belonging to the husband. She by will disposed of all her separate estate except 1,500*l.* consols (which, in default of appointment, was held in trust for her executors or administrators), and appointed a lady resident in France her executrix. Injunction granted at the suit of the assignees to restrain the transfer of the consols, but refused as to the rest of the separate estate. Stead v. Clay, 1 Sim. 294; 4 Russ. 550; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 138; 28 R. R. 169.

Next of Kin.]—By a settlement, executed on the second marriage of the Countess of K., to which her husband was a party, her property, consisting of her jointure settled on her first marriage, a life interest in a money charge, and certain furniture, was assigned to trustees in trust for her separate use, without power of anticipation; but if he should survive her, then after her decease, as to all such part of the moneys as should not have been spent or disposed of by her in her lifetime, as she should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, in trust for the persons who would have been entitled as her next of kin under the statute of distributions, if she had died without being under coverture. The Countess of K., after her second marriage, retained that title, having contracted debts before and after marriage. She died intestate, entitled to apportioned parts of the jointure and interest on the charge, and some personal estate not included in the settlement. Her husband, who survived her, became her administrator. Her daughter by her first marriage was her next of kin:—Held, first, that the trust in favour of the next of kin, as to the part of the separate estate which she should not spend or dispose of, was valid against the husband. Secondly, that the debts contracted before the second marriage should be paid pari passu out of the apportioned parts of the separate estate and the general personal estate. Thirdly, that the debts contracted after the marriage should be paid out of the separate estate. Turner v. Caulfield, 7 L. R., Ir. 347.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1870, does not free the husband from liability to be sued as the wife's administrator for debts contracted before the marriage. Ib.

Illegitimacy of Wife.]—By a marriage settlement, a fund belonging to the wife was assigned to trustees for her separate use for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage with power of appointment, and, in default, to her next of kin. On her death without issue and intestate, not having exercised the power of appointment, it appearing that she was illegitimate, the husband was held entitled to the fund in his marital right, as all the trusts of the settlement which intercepted the marital right had failed. Anon., 1 Giff. 392. And see Hawkins v. Hawkins, 7 Sim. 173; 4 L. J., Ch. 9.

Scotland—Married Women's Property Act, 1881—Retrospective Operation.]—The 6th section of the Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act, 1881, enacts, "After the passing of this act the husband of any woman who may die domiciled in Scotland shall take by operation of law the same share and interest in her movable estate which is taken by a widow in her deceased husband's movable estate according to the law and practice of Scotland, and subject always to the same rules of law in relation to the nature and amount of such share and interest, and the exclusion, discharge, or satisfaction thereof, as the case may be." A woman, married before the passing of the above-cited act, succeeded to movable property, some before and some after the date of the act, which was settled upon her for her personal use, and free from the jus mariti of her husband. She died, without issue, intestate, and domiciled in Scotland. In a claim by A., her husband, against her executrix:—Held, that s. 6 of the Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act, 1881, applies to marriages entered into before the passing of that act as well as to those contracted after that date; and that, therefore, A. was entitled in accordance with that section to half his wife's personal estate. Also that sub-s. 2 of s. 3 applies only to the preceding sections. Paterson v. Poe, 8 App. Cas. 678—H.L. (Sc.)

2. Dealings With.

Contracting as a Feme Sole.]—By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 1—(1.) A married woman shall, in accordance with the provisions of this act, be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing, by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee.

(2.) A married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued, either in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her; and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her separate property; and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate property, and not otherwise.

By Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1, every contract hereafter entered into by a married woman otherwise than as an agent, (a) shall be deemed to be a contract entered into by her with respect to and to bind her separate property, whether she is or is not in fact possessed or entitled to any separate property at the time when she enters into such contract; (b) shall bind all separate property which she may at that time or thereafter be possessed of or entitled to; and (c) shall also be enforceable by process of law against all property which she may thereafter whilst discovert be possessed of or entitled to (other than property subject to a restraint on anticipation). See col. 1064.

Trading Separately.]—By Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1 (5), every married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole. See col. 1029.

Property held as Feme Sole.]—By s. 2 (Married Women's Property Act, 1882), every woman who marries after the commencement of this act shall be entitled to have and to hold as her separate property and to dispose of in manner aforesaid all real and personal property which shall belong to her at the time of marriage, or shall be acquired by or devolve upon her after marriage, including any wages, earnings, money, and property gained or acquired by her in any employment, trade, or occupation, in which she is engaged, or which she carries on separately from her husband, or by the exercise of any literary, artistic, or scientific skill.

By s. 3, every woman married before the commencement of this act shall be entitled to have and to hold and to dispose of in manner aforesaid as her separate property all real and personal property, her title to which, whether, vested or contingent, and whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, shall accrue after the commencement of this act, including any wages, earnings, money and property so gained or acquired by her as aforesaid.

Alienation of.]—A feme covert, having freehold of inheritance, settled to her separate use, may dispose of it as if she were a feme sole, by deed or will, without a deed acknowledged, and not the less so that a specific power of appointment in a particular way over the property is given her by the instrument settling it to her separate use. Taylor v. Meads, 34 L. J., Ch. 203; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 13 W. R. 394.

Power to Dispose must be Strictly Pursued.]—Where a wife has a power to dispose of her separate estate, her disposition of it must be by acts strictly pursuing the power. Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 157.

In most cases the court will direct the trustees to hold or to convey, and transfer, according to the wife's appointment. See Roupe v. Atkinson, Bunb. 162.

Mortgage—Inquiry as to Settlement.]—When a married woman executes a mortgage there is no obligation on the mortgagee to inquire whether a settlement was made on her marriage. Lloyd's Banking Co. v. Jones, 54 L. J., Ch. 931; 29 Ch. D. 221; 52 L. T. 469; 33 W. R. 781.

Power of Tenant for Life to direct Trustees to Repair Property.]—Certain property, comprising freeholds and leaseholds, was settled on trust for a married woman for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with power of appointment by deed with the consent of the trustees. The settlement also provided that the trustees should at her discretion (inter alia) direct repairs to be done to the property, and that all expenses properly incurred by the trustees in carrying out the trusts or powers of the settlement should constitute a charge on the premises in their favour. The plaintiff, at the direction of the tenant for life, did certain repairs to the property:—Held, that the trustees were bound to carry out any repairs directed by the tenant for life, provided the cost of them did not exceed the value of the property. Skinner v. Todd, 51 L. J., Ch. 198; 46 L. T. 131; 30 W. R. 267.

Held, also, that the tenant for life herself directing the repairs to be done was in substance an exercise of her power to direct the trustees to do them. Ib.

Held, also, that the trustees must raise the amount of the plaintiff's bill for the repairs, by way of charge on the property, and pay it to him. Ib.

Authority to Pay and Receive Income.]—When a married woman, who was entitled to the income of property held on trust for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation, joined with her husband in a power of attorney to receive and to sue for any moneys due to them or either of them:—Held, that the trustee was not justified in paying the attorney the wife's separate income. Neither would the power entitle the attorney to institute an administration suit in the name of the wife by himself as next friend. Kenrick v. Wood, 39 L. J., Ch. 92; L. R. 9 Eq. 333; 19 W. R. 57.

A husband brought an action in the names of himself and wife to recover 200*l.* due on a mortgage made to his wife before her marriage. The mortgagor obtained an order that on payment of the principal and interest into court the action should be stayed; that a reconveyance should be executed, and that on its execution the money should be paid out of court. An arrangement was made that the wife should receive 100*l.*, and the husband the residue, and the mortgagor, on being informed by the plaintiffs' attorney that they had settled their differences on those terms, consented to the payment out of court to their attorney. The money was accordingly paid out to him; but he, claiming a lien on the 100*l.* for costs, offered the wife only 83*l.*, which she would not receive. The wife survived her husband, and died without having received any part of the money, and without having executed a reconveyance. A suit for foreclosure having been instituted by her executors and devisees:—Held, that, independently of the 7 Geo. 2, c. 20, the mortgagor and his estate were discharged from the debt, inasmuch as the receipt of the attorney in the action was a good discharge. Bourton v. Williams, 39 L. J., Ch. 800; L. R. 5 Ch. 655; 18 W. R. 1089.

Mortgage by Husband and Wife—Death of Husband.]—A mortgage by husband and wife of her estate is void after the husband's death, and not merely voidable, though in the form of a lease. Goodright d. Carter v. Straphan, Lofft, 763; Cowp. 201; 1 Dougl. 53, n.

Husband's Power over.]—When a husband, by a post-nuptial deed, has settled a house and business to the separate use of his wife, to be managed by her for the benefit of herself as if a feme sole, he can be restrained from in any way interfering with the business, and even from entering the house. Wood v. Wood, 19 W. R, 1049.

When a wife became entitled after marriage to a fund to her separate use and was induced by her husband to lend it on mortgage by a deed reciting that it was her property before marriage, and securing repayment of the loan to the survivor of husband and wife, the court set the deed aside, and directed a new one to be executed. Knight v. Knight, 5 Giff. 26.

Contract with Husband.]—A wife can contract in respect of her separate estate with her husband; and if she hands him money, part of the income of her separate estate, upon a contract of loan, she may sue him upon that contract. Woodward v. Woodward, 3 De G. J. & S. 672.

Circumstances under which a wife was held upon the evidence to have lent and not given to her husband a sum of money, part of the income of her separate estate, and to be entitled to prove upon his estate in an administration suit as a creditor in respect of the loan. Ib.

Wife's Conveyance—Specific Performance of.]—A married woman was entitled by an antenuptial settlement to a jointure rent-charge after her husband's death secured upon his real estates in Ireland. The wife having left him, the husband commenced a suit for restitution of conjugal rights; with a view to a compromise by an agreement for separation a document was drawn up and signed by the husband, which stipulated that the wife should release part of her jointure. The wife signed this document with a qualification that no further steps were to be taken in the matrimonial suit, but it was not stayed or dismissed. A deed was prepared to carry out the terms of the compromise and was executed by the husband, but the wife refused to execute it or to return to her husband, and the husband afterwards died:—Held, that the wife was not, when she signed the document, in all respects in the same position as a feme sole, and that even if any final agreement had been come to she would not have been bound by it, there having been no acknowledgment as required by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, ss. 68, 71; and that specific performance of the agreement to release her jointure could not be decreed against her. Hunt v. Hunt (4 De G. F. & J. 221) and Besant v. Wood (12 Ch. D. 605) commented on by Selborne, L.C. Cahill v. Cahill, 8 App. Cas. 420; 49 L. T. 605; 31 W. R. 861—H. L. (Ir.) See also Williams v. Walker, post, col. 1057.

Husband dealing with Improperly—Innocent Third Party.]—A husband entered into speculations on the Stock Exchange, partly with money which was settled upon his wife for her separate use without power of anticipation. The transactions were carried out through his broker, with whom he deposited, as a security against risks, Spanish bonds which had been purchased with the settlement funds. The broker had no direct notice that these bonds were settlement property, but he had received from the husband from time to time cheques payable to his wife or order, these cheques being indorsed by her. The bonds having been realised by the broker to cover losses incurred by him in the course of the transactions, the wife filed a bill against the broker to recover the value of the bonds and cheques on the ground that the amount constituted her separate estate, and that the broker had notice of the fact:—Held, that the broker had neither actual nor constructive notice of the settlement, and that, therefore, the bill must be dismissed with costs. Macbryde v. Eykyn, 24 L. T. 461. Affirmed on appeal, 25 L. T. 192—L.JJ.

The trustee of stock for the separate use of a married woman having improperly transferred it into the joint names of her husband and herself, the husband for six years received the dividends, after which the trustee died, and the husband, without his wife's knowledge, sold out the stock, and applied the proceeds to his own use. Some time afterwards he left her:—Held, that, though the wife might have been presumed to have assented to the husband's actual receipt of the dividends while the stock remained intact, yet no such assent could be presumed after it had been sold, and that she was entitled to recover, as against her husband and the estate of the deceased trustee, the arrears of dividends which had accrued since that time, as well as to have the trust fund replaced. Dixon's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 592; 9 Ch. D. 587; 40 L. T. 208; 27 W. R. 282.

By a marriage settlement, the husband had the wife's estate for life, with a power to grant leases for 21 years but no longer. In breach of the power, he granted a lease to A. for 99 years, determinable upon lives. The wife survived him, and conveyed the fee to B.; and in the conveyance was recited the lease to A., who was recognised as being then tenant in possession of the estate, at the yearly rent reserved. In an ejectment by B. against the assignee of the lease:—Held, that the lease being void, and the recital only matter of description, no demand of possession was necessary to sustain the action. Doe d. Biggs v. White, 2 D. & R. 716; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 170.

Wife divesting herself of.]—A woman married after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, became during her marriage entitled in possession to a sum of money to which before her marriage she was entitled in expectancy. She then joined with her husband in a petition to the court of chancery to pay the money to him in her right, and the money was paid to the husband's solicitor under a power of attorney from the husband:—Held, that the money was the husband's, as the wife had divested herself of her property in it by the petition to the court of chancery. Lane v. Oakes, 30 L. T. 726; 22 W. R. 709.

Separate Life Interest in Dividends of Stock—Assignment.]—Trust to permit married woman to receive interest or dividends of stock to her own use for life, independent of husband:—Held, she is absolutely entitled for her life to her separate use, and upon the rule that feme covert is to be considered sole as to her separate property, her assignment to secure an annuity with her husband was established. Wagstaff v. Smith, 9 Ves. 520.

Trust as Wife should Appoint.]—Trust, by marriage settlement, to pay the rents and profits according to the appointment of the wife from time to time; in default of appointment, to her for her sole and separate use; the receipts of herself or the person she should appoint from time to time, to be from time to time effectual releases, &c.; sale by her and her husband of her separate interest established. Witts v. Dawkins, 12 Ves. 501.

Separate Reversionary Rent-charge for Life.]—A married woman, to whom a rent-charge for life in reversion is devised to her separate use, without the intervention of trustees, joins with her husband in assigning it for a valuable consideration; she is bound by that assignment after the death of her husband. Major v. Lansley, 2 Russ. & M. 355; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 102.

A feme covert made a disposition of property as to which it was doubtful whether it was settled to her separate use. The husband disclaimed:—Held, that whether separate property or not, the husband's disclaimer gave effect to the disposition of the wife. Rycroft v. Christy, 3 Beav. 238; 4 Jur. 599.

Separate Life Interest Coupled with Power.]—Married woman having a life interest in stock for life to her separate use, with a power of appointment by will together with her husband, conveys it to one of the trustees by an instrument purporting to be an execution of her power:—Held, after her husband's death, not binding. Scott v. Davies, 4 Myl. & C. 87; 2 Jur. 1057.

Purchase of Annuity.]—A feme covert having an interest for life to her separate use, and a power of appointment of the fund by deed, to take effect after her death, assigned her life interest, and appointed the fund after her death to trustees, upon trust to invest the fund in the immediate purchase of an annuity for her life. The court ordered a transfer of the fund to the new trustees accordingly. Lynn v. Ashton, 1 Russ. & M. 188; Taml. 328.

Life Interest not settled to Separate Use.]—Semble, a husband and wife cannot effectually dispose of the life interest of the wife, in a fund not settled on her separate use, beyond the duration of the coverture. Stiffe v. Everitt, 1 Myl. & C. 37; 5 L. J., Ch. 138.

Reversionary Interest and Money Fund.]—A money fund was vested in trustees upon trust to permit the intended wife, during the joint lives of herself and her intended husband, to take the interest thereof for her separate use; and after the decease of the husband in trust for the wife and her assigns during her life, in case she should survive him; and after the decease of the wife, as to one moiety of the property, upon trust for the sole and absolute use of the wife, to be disposed of by her in such manner as she might by deed or will, notwithstanding her coverture, appoint; and in default of any such appointment upon trust as therein mentioned. The wife cannot, during the coverture, make an absolute disposition of the moiety of the trust fund. Nixon v. Nixon, 2 Jo. & Lat., 416; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 254.

Life Interest—Power of Alienation.]—Devise and bequest of real and personal estate in trust to pay the rents, dividends, and interest from time to time, as the same should become due, and be received unto and for the only use and behoof of the testator's daughter, for and during the term of her natural life, and to pay the same into her own hands, independent of her present or future husband, and not in any manner subject to the debts, control, or engagements of such present or future husband, and her receipt to be a sufficient discharge to the trustees, as if she were sole and unmarried :—Held, that the wife had a power of alienation of her life interest. Glyn v. Baster, 1 Y. & J. 329.

Joint Transaction—Reduction into Possession.]—A wife, entitled to property for her separate use, was desirous of raising money for the improvement of her estate, while her husband also wished to raise money to discharge a debt. They accordingly arranged, through their solicitor, to borrow money upon mortgage of the separate estate, and upon policies on the lives of each of them. The money was to be advanced by instalments, and when the first instalment was due, the husband and wife signed a joint authority for the solicitor to receive it for them. He, however, received the money, and claimed to retain part of it in respect of a separate debt due to him as solicitor of the husband :—Held, that he could not retain the money, or set it off as a debt due from the husband, as it was received by him upon the express understanding that it was to be held for the husband and wife jointly, so that there never was any reduction into possession on the part of the husband. Jones v. Cuthbertson, 41 L. J., Q. B. 145 ; L. R. 7 Q. B. 218 ; 26 L. T. 359 ; 20 W. R. 381. Affirmed, 42 L. J., Q. B. 221 ; L. R. 8 Q. B. 504 ; 28 L. T. 673 ; 21 W. R. 919.

Post-nuptial Contract with Husband.]—A married woman, immediately after the marriage, and in consideration thereof and of her husband undertaking the management of lands and tenements of which she was seised in fee, and of his paying off incumbrances and defraying the expense of managing and keeping the premises in repair, verbally agreed to convey the lands and tenements to him, and to settle them upon him absolutely, and to do all such acts as might be legally necessary for effectuating such conveyance and settlement. The husband performed his part of the agreement, but the wife died without having executed or acknowledged a deed :—Held, that this contract could not be set up as an equitable defence to a claim by her heir-at-law to recover the land. Williams v. Walker, 9 Q. B. D. 576 ; 31 W. R. 120.

Attachment of Debts.]—Judgment having been signed in an action against the defendants, a man and his wife, it was sought to attach in execution moneys, in the hands of trustees, forming part of the income of trust funds payable to the wife to her separate use, which had accrued since the judgment. The will by which the trust was created contained a clause restraining anticipation by the wife. It appeared that the action was for the amount of a promissory note made by the husband and wife jointly during the coverture :—Held, that the moneys in question could not be attached in execution. Chapman v. Biggs, 11 Q. B. D. 27 ; 48 L. T. 704 ; 47 J. P. 485.

House settled—Husband claiming right to.]—On a marriage a leasehold house was settled upon the usual trusts for the wife for life, for her separate use, and the husband and wife continued to reside in the house. Differences arose between them, they ceased to cohabit, and the wife instituted proceedings for divorce or judicial separation. The husband claimed the right to go to and to use the house when and as he thought fit, not for the purpose of consorting with his wife, but for his own purposes. In an action by the wife against the trustees and her husband claiming administration of the trusts of the settlement and an injunction to restrain the husband from entering the house :—Held, that, under the circumstances, the wife was entitled to an interim injunction. Symonds v. Hallett, 24 Ch. D. 346 ; 49 L. T. 380 ; 32 W. R. 103—C. A.

Transfer of Stock standing to separate Use of Wife.]—The Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), does not empower a married woman, entitled under s. 7, to stock for her separate use, to transfer such stock without the concurrence of her husband, unless and until the stock has been placed, under s. 3, in her name as a married woman entitled for her separate use. Howard v. Bank of England, 44 L. J., Ch. 329 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 295 ; 31 L. T. 871 ; 23 W. R. 303.

Consols were standing in the names of three persons, one of whom was a married woman who had been deserted by her husband, and was entitled beneficially to the stock under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 7. Those persons applied to the Bank of England to be permitted to transfer the stock without the concurrence of the husband of the married woman ; and the bank having refused :—Held, that the bank could not be compelled to permit such a transfer. Ib.

Registration of Stock in Name of Wife.]—Under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), s. 4, on an application by a wife to a joint-stock or an incorporated company to register stock in her name as a "married woman entitled to her separate use," the company must investigate the title ; and if it refuses to register, the court, unless a flaw in the title is shown, will compel the company by mandamus to register. Reg. v. Carnatic Ry., 42 L. J., Q. B. 169 ; L. R. 8 Q. B. 299 ; 28 L. T. 413 ; 21 W. R. 621.

Grant of Annuity—Promise to Provide for Grantee.] — An annuity granted by a feme covert, having a power to dispose of her separate estates to A., a young lady, upon her marriage, for whom she promised to provide, is a specific lien on the grantor's estate. Power v. Bailey, 1 Ball & B. 49.

Conveyance to bonâ fide Purchaser—Setting Aside—Lapse of Time.]—Conveyance to a bonâ fide purchaser, under a decree against a feme covert for a sale of part of her separate estate, cannot after an acquiescence of twenty-two years, be set aside, notwithstanding the purchase money may have been misapplied. An order, disposing of the real estate of a feme covert, made on her consent and acquiesced in during her life, will not be set aside on a doubtful case made many years afterwards by her representatives. Burke v. Crosbie, 1 Ball & B. 489.

Assignment by Wife—Confirmation by Husband.]—E. B., a single woman, transferred certain stock, her property, into the joint names of herself and two trustees ; and on the day of the transfer, she and the trustees, without reference to any marriage on her part, executed an indenture, by which it was declared, that the trustees should hold the property in trust, to pay the dividends to E. B. for her life, for her sole and separate use, independent of any husband she might marry; and, after her death, upon such trusts as E. B. should by will, notwithstanding her coverture, appoint; and in default of such appointment in trust for E. B., her executors, administrators, and assigns. E. B. afterwards married, and by a deed, reciting the settlement, and executed by her husband and herself, she, by the direction of her husband, assigned the dividends of the stock in trust, for the punctual payment of an annuity granted by the husband:—Held, that whether or not, under the deed of settlement, the wife had power to make this assignment, the husband having joined in the deed of assignment, was a confirmation of the deed of settlement, and consequently the assignment by wife was valid. Maber v. Hobbs, 2 Y. & Coll. 317; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 12.

Transfer of Fund in Court.]—A fund in court, to which a married woman was entitled to her separate use, ordered, with the consent of her husband, to be transferred to her name, pursuant to the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 3. Frank v. Mackay, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 93.

Charges on Wife's separate Estate.]—A husband paying off an incumbrance, subject to which the estate stands limited to his wife for life for her separate use with remainder as she shall by will appoint, is, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, entitled to the charge as against the estate. Whether it is a charge on the husband's estate which is paid by the wife, or a charge on the wife's estate paid by the husband, the same presumption attaches to the transaction. Outram v. Hyde, 24 W. R. 268.

Sale of Dividends.]—Under a bequest of stock, in trust to permit a woman to receive the dividends for life for her sole and separate use, &c., and to pay the same into her own proper hands, and that her receipt and receipts should from time to time be sufficient discharges, a sale by her of part of the dividends established. A bonâ fide sale of dividends of stock is not within the Annuity Act. Brown v. Like, 14 Ves. 302.

Sale of Goods by Auctioneer after Notice from true Owner.]—Goods, the separate property of a married woman, were placed by her husband in a hired warehouse, and intrusted to auctioneers for the purpose of sale:—Held, that the auctioneers became possessed of the goods; so that on receipt of notice of the wife's claim before sale, they were liable to the wife for the value of both the goods sold and the goods not sold, but afterwards removed by the husband. Davis v. Artingstall, 49 L. J., Ch. 609; 42 L. T. 507; 29 W. R. 137.

Wife of Unsound Mind — Investment.]—A married woman, of unsound mind, was entitled for her separate use to the income of certain trust funds. Her written consent was also required to the investments by the trustees. Upon a petition under the Trustees Relief Act, it was held, that the whole income might be paid to the husband on his undertaking to apply it to the maintenance of the wife, and that her consent to investments might be dispensed with. T——, In re, 15 Ch. D. 78; 29 W. R. 42.

Improper Investment at request of Wife—Remedy against Trustees.]—A fund was settled in trust for a married woman for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and she had a power of appointment by deed or will over the reversion. Her consent in writing was required to any change of the investments. Part of the fund was at her request improperly advanced upon a security which proved deficient. She concurred in the mortgage deed, and her execution of it was attested as required by the power:—Held, that she could maintain a suit to have the deficiency in the fund made good, and that the trustees had no claim to be indemnified out of the reversion subject to the power of appointment. In a suit to realise the deficient security, a fund was paid into court and invested, and then sold out at a profit:—Held, that the trustees were answerable only for the deficiency, after taking into account this profit. Fletcher v. Green, 3 N. R. 626.

Disposing by Will.]—Under a testamentary appointment by a married woman of "all funds and property which have been or shall be purchased out of the savings of property to which I have been or shall be entitled to my separate use":—Held, that savings out of separate estate standing to her account at her bankers did not pass. Askew v. Rooth, 43 L. J., Ch. 368; L. R. 17 Eq. 426; 30 L. T. 155; 22 W. R. 524.

By a marriage settlement, the income of certain property was settled on the wife, for her life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation; and the corpus, if there were no children of the marriage, and she survived her husband, on her absolutely, for her separate use; if she should not survive her husband, then as she should by deed or will appoint. She made a will in pursuance of the power in her husband's lifetime, and survived him, but did not republish the will after his death. There were no children of the marriage:—Held, that the will passed her separate property. Bishop v. Wall, 45 L. J., Ch. 773; 3 Ch. D. 194; 25 W. R. 93. See also Mayd v. Field, 45 L. J., Ch. 699; 3 Ch. D. 587; 34 L. T. 614; 24 W. R. 660.

—— Grant of Probate.]—Since the coming into operation of the amended rules 15 and 16 of the Probate Rules, which provide that probate of the will of a married woman shall take the form of ordinary grants of probate without any exception or limitation, a husband who obtains probate of his wife's will in general form is not deemed to have assented to the will as a disposition of the property which she had no right to dispose of by will without his assent. Atkinson, In re, Waller v. Atkinson, 67 L. J., Ch. 349; [1898] 1 Ch. 637.

—— Bequest of Savings of, by Wife.]—A bequest by a woman divorced a mensâ et thoro of the savings of alimony awarded by the ecclesiastical court, is good against the marital right. Moore v. Barber, 5 Giff. 43; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 539; 12 L. T. 664; 13 W. R. 935.

—— Assent of Husband—Future Separate Estate.]—The will of a married woman who had no personal estate belonging to her for her separate use at the date of the will, made without the assent of her husband, is effectual to dispose of personal estate to her separate use which she afterwards acquires and is entitled to at her

—— Renunciation of Marital Rights—Real Estate.]—Mere renunciation by an intended husband of his marital rights in his wife's real property is not sufficient to clothe her with a testamentary power, or to constitute a valid declaration of trust of the fee. And upon the death of the wife without issue during her husband's lifetime, her heir-at-law, and not her devisee, will be entitled to the land of which she is seised in fee simple. Rippon v. Dawding (Ambl. 565) commented on. Dye v. Dye, 53 L. J., Q. B. 442; 13 Q. B. D. 147; 51 L. T. 145; 33 W. R. 2—C. A.

—— Property acquired after Coverture.]—S. 1, sub-s. 1, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, gives a married woman power to dispose by will only of property of which she is seised or possessed while she is under coverture. Consequently, notwithstanding s. 24 of the Wills Act, her will made during coverture is not, unless it is re-executed after she has become discovert, effectual to dispose of property which she acquires after the coverture has come to an end. Price, In re, Stafford v. Stafford, or Price v. Stafford, 54 L. J., Ch. 509; 28 Ch. D. 709; 52 L. T. 430; 33 W. R. 20.

Banking accounts were kept in the joint names of husband and wife, and investments in railway stock were made in their joint names. The wife survived her husband five days, having executed a will during coverture:—Held, that the balances of the joint accounts and the joint investments survived to the wife, but did not pass under her will. Young, In re, Trye v. Sullican, 54 L. J., Ch. 1065; 28 Ch. D. 705; 52 L. T. 754; 33 W. R. 729.

Statute for promoting Erection of Churches—Married Women, without their Husbands, excepted.]—Under the statute 43 Geo. 3, c. 108, which contained a power to all persons having an interest in any lands or in any goods or chattels, to give by deed enrolled, or will executed, three months before death, lands not exceeding five acres, or goods and chattels not exceeding in value 500*l.*, for or towards the erecting of any church, with a proviso that the act should not extend to any persons being within age, nor women covert without their husbands to make any such gift:—Held, that the proviso was not affected by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which by s. 1, sub-s. 1, gave power to married women to dispose by will of any real or personal property as her separate property in the same manner as if she were a feme sole. Consequently a gift by a married woman, by will executed three months before death, to the vicar and churchwardens of a church of a sum of 300*l.* to be applied by them in the erection of a new church, and to be paid out of personal estate which was legally applicable for the purpose, was held to be invalid. Smith's Estate, In re, Clements v. Ward, 56 L. J., Ch. 726; 35 Ch. D. 589; 56 L. T. 850; 35 W. R. 514; 51 J. P. 692.

—— Appointment by Will — Conversion.]—There is a distinction between a will made by a married woman under a power and when disposing of property in her own right as a feme sole. The power must be looked at to see in what character the property was held when disposed of by the testator, and where by virtue of the power it has been converted into personalty, she is in fact disposing of personalty. Gunn, In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 107; 9 P. D. 242; 33 W. R. 169; 49 J. P. 72.

—— Rent-charge.]—A married woman, entitled under her marriage settlement to a rent-charge for life for her separate use, made a will operative to pass separate estate, became a lunatic, survived her husband, and died without having republished her will or made another. Her rent-charge was accumulated by her husband during his life to the amount of 13,000*l.*, which sum on his death was handed over to the trustee of the marriage settlement. The rent-charge and the income of the 13,000*l.* were both accumulated by the trustee after the husband's death:—Held, that the 13,000*l.* and all accumulations passed under the will; but that the rent-charge payable after the death of the husband did not pass. Wilson, In re, Menteath v. Campbell, 26 W. R. 848.

The will purported to be, but was not, in exercise of a power of appointment; the fund purported to be appointed, except so much as passed as separate estate, fell into the general residue; —Held, that the fund which passed by the will was liable to the costs of letters of administration with the will annexed. Ib.

Transfer to Husband obtained by his Fraud—Costs.]—Where a husband had by imposition induced his wife to transfer part of her separate property to him, on a bill by her against him for a specific performance of an agreement before marriage, he was made to pay costs on account of the fraud. Lampert v. Lampert, 1 Ves. J. 21.

3. Restraint on Anticipation.

a. Creation of.

No Particular Form of Words Necessary.]—No particular form of words is necessary to impose a restraint on anticipation in a limitation to the separate use of a married woman, the question being one of intention. Baker v. Bradley, 7 De G. M. & G. 597; 25 L. J., Ch. 7; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 98; 4 W. R. 78.

Intention.]—By an instrument giving property in trust for a married woman and her assigns for her life, for her separate use, it was declared that the receipts of the married woman alone, or of some person or persons authorised by her to receive any payment of the rents and income after such payment should have become due, should alone be good discharges:—Held, that she was restrained from anticipation. Ib.

Field v. Evans (15 Sim. 375) approved of. Ib.

A marriage settlement directed the trustees, during the lady's life, to receive the income of the settled property when and as often as the same should become due, and to pay it to such person or persons as she might from time to time appoint, or to permit her to receive it for her separate use; and it declared that her receipts, or the receipts of any person or persons to whom she might appoint the same, after it should become due, should be valid discharges for it:—Held, that the lady was restrained from anticipating the income provided for her. Field v. Evans, 15 Sim. 375.

Lands were devised to trustees "for the use and benefit of T., the daughter of the testatrix, the rents and profits of which estate she should receive from the tenants herself while she lives, whether married or single." In a later part of the will, which did not contain anything authorising a sale or mortgage, the testatrix directed that no sale or mortgage of the estate or its rents should take place during the life of T., followed by a direction to the daughter, or the executor of the testatrix, to pay 3*s.* a week to her mother while she lived. T. was unmarried when the will was made, but married after the death of the testatrix:—Held, that she took an estate for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and that a mortgage made by her and her husband was therefore invalid. Goulder v. Camm, 1 De G. F. & J. 146; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 113; 1 L. T. 224; 8 W. R. 156.

S., by her will, gave to her niece J. 3,000*l.*, and also the residue of her personal estate equally between her nieces, J., A., and C.; and she directed that any pecuniary legacy or share of her residuary estate thereinbefore given to such of her nieces as should be married at the time of her death should be paid into the proper hands of such respective nieces, or into the hands of such person or persons as such nieces should respectively appoint, so as that the same, or any part, should not in any respect be subject or liable to the control, debts, or incumbrances of their husbands, nor be alienable by them and their husbands, and that the receipts of her nieces alone, signed with their proper hands (notwithstanding coverture), or of their appointees, should from time to time be sufficient discharges to her executors. J. married, and a settlement was made on her marriage, in which was contained a covenant by the husband to settle future acquired property of the wife. The testatrix afterwards died, and her executors paid J.'s share into court. J. petitioned, by a next friend, to have it paid to her on her separate receipt:—Held, that the true construction of the direction in the will was that, during coverture, the share of J. was not alienable by her; that such share was not therefore included in the covenant, and that the fund must be retained in court, and the dividends only paid to J. during her coverture. Sarel, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 876; 10 L. T. 691; 4 N. R. 231.

—— Omission of Words "for her separate use" —Life Estate without Impeachment of Waste.]—Separate estate created by the operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is sufficient to support a restraint on anticipation, although the words "for her separate use" are not used. The words "without impeachment of waste" are not inconsistent with a restraint on anticipation. Lumley, In re, Hood-Barrs, Ex parte, 65 L. J., Ch. 837; [1896] 2 Ch. 690; 75 L. T. 236; 45 W. R. 147—C. A.

—— Negative Words.]—It is not necessary in all cases that negative words should be introduced in the receipt clause, to complete the restraint on anticipation, for that clause must be construed to relate to the income, subject to such restraints as are imposed by the former part of the settlement.

Where the former part of a settlement gave the income to the wife or her appointee, so and in such manner that she should not have power to anticipate her interest, and the following clause enabled her to give receipts without restrictive words:—Held, that such clause did not displace the restraint which the gift plainly imposed. Harrop v. Howard, 3 Hare, 624; 14 L. J., Ch. 182; 9 Jur. 82.

"Inalienable Provision."]—A declaration, concerning funds in settlement that they are to be "a separate, personal, and inalienable provision for A. during the intended coverture," operates as a restraint on anticipation during the coverture, although a subsequent clause in the settlement gives to A. a general power of disposition by deed or will. Spring v. Pride, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 646; 12 W. R. 892.

Absolute gift by will to a married woman for her separate and inalienable use. The property having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that it could not be parted with during coverture, but the dividends only should be paid to the wife. Gaskell, In re, 12 L. T. 763.

"Free from her Debts and Engagements."]—A testator bequeathed his property to trustees upon trust to pay a third of the income arising from it to G. during the whole of her natural life free from her debts or engagements, whether any such might be contracted by herself or any husband or husbands whom she might marry:—Held, that these words imported a restriction on anticipation, and, consequently, that a charge on her annual income created by her in favour of certain creditors of her husband could not be sustained. White v. Herrick, 21 W. R. 454.

Receipt Clause.]—Devise of freehold in trust to pay trusts, as same should become due and payable, into the hands of testator's wife, and not otherwise, for her life, for her separate use, and her receipts alone, for what should be actually paid into her own proper hands, should be good discharges to trustees:—Held, wife had no power to alienate her life estate. Acton v. White, 1 Sim. & S. 429; 24 R. R. 203.

Under a marriage settlement certain money and stock in the funds were vested in trustees upon trust, during the joint lives of the husband and wife, to pay the interest to such persons and for such purposes as the wife should, notwithstanding the coverture, by any writing under her hand, except in any mode of anticipation, direct or appoint; or in default of such direction or appointment, into her own hands, for her own sole and separate use, independently of her husband; and so that her receipts, notwithstanding the coverture, or the receipts of the appointee, might be good discharges:—Held, that the effect of this instrument was to restrain the wife from anticipation, whether by an appointment under the power, or by an assignment independent of the power. Moore v. Moore, 1 Coll. 54; 13 L. J., Ch. 124; 8 Jur. 139.

A testator bequeathed property to trustees from time to time during the life of B. (a married woman), to pay the clear rents, interest, dividends, &c., unto such person or persons, for such intents and purposes as she by any writing should appoint, but not by way of assignment or other anticipation; and, in default of appointment, into her proper hands, for her sole and separate use, her receipts or those of her appointees to be good discharges to the trustees :—Held, that the general limitation in default of appointment did not enable B. to anticipate; and that the case did not depend on the form of the receipt clause. Brown v. Bamford, 1 Ph. 620 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 361 ; 10 Jur. 447.

Under several bequests to living persons for life, with remainder to their children born and unborn, with a general proviso that the shares of females shall be for their separate inalienable use :—Held, that the restriction against anticipation applied only to the tenants for life, in consequence of a direction for payment to the children, and a proviso that their receipts should be good discharges. Armitage v. Coates, 35 Beav. 1.

Receipt Clause Omitted.]—A testator bequeathed the sum of 20,000*l.*, after the death of R. S., to the child or children of R. S., who should survive him, the testator, equally to be divided between them if more than one. R. S. died in the testator's lifetime, leaving two daughters, one of whom was married. The will contained a proviso that every bequest thereby made for any female during her coverture should be "for her separate use and without power of anticipation or alienation." There was no clause declaring that the receipt of a married woman should be a sufficient discharge. Upon the question whether the married woman was entitled to have her moiety of the 20,000*l.* paid to her on her separate receipt, notwithstanding the proviso :—Held, that she was so entitled. Taber, In re, Arnold v. Kayess, 51 L. J., Ch. 721 ; 46 L. T. 805 ; 30 W. R. 883. See col. 1084.

Without Liberty to Assign During Life.]—Bequest to testator's natural daughter, then a feme sole, but married before the death of testator, of money, leaseholds, plate, furniture, &c., for her own absolute use, without liberty to sell or assign during life :—Held, an absolute gift ; but with a restriction against alienation during her life. Baker v. Newton, 1 Beav. 112 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 306 ; 3 Jur. 649.

Settled Realty — Mortgage of Income of.]—By a settlement dated in 1864, freehold property was conveyed to trustees upon trust to let the same, and pay the rents and annual proceeds to C. S. W., a married woman, during her life for her own sole and separate use, free from the debts, control, or engagements of her present or any future husband ; and "the receipts of her . . . for the said rents and annual proceeds to be given after the same shall become due" to be "good and effectual discharges" to the trustees for the same ; and from and after the decease of C. S. W. then upon trust to pay the rents and annual proceeds to the husband, in case he survived her, during his life, with ultimate trusts for sale and division amongst the children and issue of C. S. W. by her then present or any future husband, as should be living at the time of such division. In 1881, C. S. W. and her husband mortgaged the income of the settled property to secure a loan of 1,000*l.*, and in 1883 they further charged such income together with other property, with the payment of 500*l.* Notices of the mortgage and further charge were duly given to the trustees of the settlement. C. S. W. did not receive any of the moneys secured thereby, but her husband received the same, and applied the whole in payment of his own debts. The question was whether the mortgage was a valid charge upon the income of the settled property, and who was entitled to be paid such income :—Held, that C. S. W. was restrained from anticipation and her receipt was the only discharge which the trustees could accept. Baker v. Bradley (7 De G. M. & G. 597) followed. Smith, In re, Chapman v. Wood, 51 L. T. 501.

By a settlement, a jointure was granted to K., "without the power of anticipation"—"the sole and separate receipt of K. to be a complete and only discharge for each gale" :—Held, that K. took an estate to her sole and separate use, with a restraint on anticipation. Molyneux, In re, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 411.

By settlement, a jointure was limited to the sole and separate use of K. in case she should survive M., her intended husband, with a restraint on anticipation : — Held, that such limitation referred as well to the then intended marriage as to every future coverture, so as to prevent her from incumbering or otherwise dealing with the jointure during her life. Ib.

Settlement to Enjoy Income during her Life for her Separate Use.]—A father gave real and personal property to trustees for his daughter, and directed that, if she should marry, it should be so settled that she might enjoy the income during her life for her separate use :—Held, that the trust for the separate use during life, being merely executory, should be carried into execution with a restraint upon anticipation. Dunnill's Trusts, In re, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 322. Affirmed, ib., 326—Ch. Ap.

A court of equity will give effect during coverture to a clause in restraint of alienation, annexed a gift to a married woman for her separate use, whether the subject of the gift is real or personal estate, or whether it is in fee or only for life. Baggett v. Meux, 1 Coll. 138 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 228 ; 8 Jur. 391. Affirmed, 1 Ph. 627 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 262 ; 10 Jur. 213.

—— Attaches to Real or Personal Estate.]—Real estate may be devised a married woman, in fee-simple, for her separate use, yet in such a manner as to disable her, during the coverture, from making any sale, mortgage, charge, or incumbrance to take effect against it during her life, or during her coverture. Ib.

Gift of mixed Residue.]—Gift by a testatrix of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert and invest, and to stand possessed of the stocks, funds, and securities representing the same in trust for her children who, being male, attained twenty-one, or, being female, attained that age or married under that age ; with a declaration that the shares of daughters should be for their sole and separate use without power of anticipation. Power was given to the trustees, upon the marriage of any of the daughters, to revoke the trusts so far as related to the share of any daughter so marrying, and to settle the same for the benefit of the daughter, and her issue as to the trustees should seem fit. The residuary estate was represented by a sum of cash and certain leasehold houses :—Held, that the gift being of an income-producing fund with a restraint upon anticipation, the trustees could not pay to the daughters during coverture their shares upon their separate receipt. Benton, In re, Smith v. Smith, 51 L. J., Ch. 183 ; 19 Ch. D. 277 ; 45 L. T. 786 ; 30 W. R. 242.

Mortgage—Marshalling.]—C., a widow, was entitled to the income of one-third of a fund in court for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and was also entitled to the income of the remaining two-thirds of the fund for her life, but subject to certain deductions. She mortgaged all her interest in the fund, and some policies of assurance on her life to F., and an order was made for payment of the income of the mortgaged property to him. C. then married M. ; and after her marriage she charged all her interest in the fund in favour of P. After this T. obtained a judgment against her, and the appointment of a receiver of her separate estate. The income received by F. was more than sufficient for payment of the interest on his mortgage and the premiums on the policies, and he did not desire to reduce his principal :—Held, that as between F. and the subsequent incumbrancers of the fund, there ought to be a marshalling of securities, and that F. ought to pay the interest on his mortgage and the premiums on the policies out of the income of the one-third with respect to which the restraint on anticipation existed, so as to leave the income of the remaining two-thirds to satisfy the subsequent incumbrances. Loder's Trusts, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 230 ; 35 L. T. 582 ; 35 W. R. 58.

Income-bearing Fund.] — Where a testator makes a bequest to a married woman for her separate use absolutely, and follows it by a clause restraining her from anticipation, the question whether the restraint on anticipation is effectual does not depend on the question whether it is a gift of an income-bearing fund or of a sum of cash, but whether the testator has or has not shown an intention that the trustees should keep the investment and pay the income to the married woman. Croughton's Trusts, In re (47 L. J., Ch. 795 ; 8 Ch. D. 460), followed. Ellis' Trusts, In re (L. R. 17 Eq. 409 ; 43 L. J., Ch. 444), disapproved. Clarke's Trusts, In re (51 L. J., Ch. 855 ; 21 Ch. D. 748), questioned. Bown, In re, O'Halloran v. King, 53 L. J., Ch. 881 ; 27 Ch. D. 411 ; 50 L. T. 796 ; 33 W. R. 58. See col. 1083.

Legacy and Share of Residue "to be paid" to Married Woman, with Restraint upon Anticipation—Absolute Unfettered Gift.]—A bequest of a fund in trust for a married woman "to be paid to her for her separate use without power of anticipation," there being no further indication that the income only is to be paid to her during coverture, will be construed as a direction that the corpus is to be forthwith paid to her, and the words "in restraint of anticipation" will be disregarded. Bown, In re, O'Halloran v. King (53 L. J., Ch. 881 ; 27 Ch. D. 411) followed. Fearon, In re, Hotchkin v. Mayor, 45 W. R. 232.

Alienation not prohibited.]—A testator, after having bequeathed a sum of stock in trust for the separate use of his wife for her life, directed that it should remain, during her life, and be, under the order of the trustees, made a duly administered provision for her, and the interest of it given to her, on her personal appearance and receipt by any banker the trustees might appoint :—Held, that the wife was not prohibited from alienating her interest in the stocks. Ross's Trusts, In re, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 196 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 293 ; 15 Jur. 241.

Appointment by Deed not to come into operation till Death.]—Although a bequest of stock for a married woman for her separate use for her life, and after her decease for her appointees by deed or will, directs that any appointment by deed shall not come into operation until after her death, the married woman is not thereby restrained from anticipation, or prevented from appointing the fund by an irrevocable deed. Alexander v. Young, 6 Hare, 393 ; 12 Jur. 996.

Free from Marital Contract.]—Where articles for a settlement directed the property to be conveyed on trust to pay the income to the wife, or such person as he should appoint, during her life, "for her own absolute use and benefit, free from marital control and liability" :—Held, that in the settlement a restraint against anticipation should not be inserted. Symonds v. Wilkes, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 659 ; 12 L. T. 598 ; 13 W. R. 1026 —L.JJ.

A testator, after giving annuities and legacies, gave all the rest and residue of his property to his three children, naming them, equally, wishing his daughters' shares to be vested in the hands of trustees in government securities, the interest only to be payable to them, and neither they nor any husband they contracted marriage with, to have any control over the principal, except that his daughters should have power to will at their decease, the son to receive his share on attaining twenty-five, with clauses for maintenance :—Held, that the daughters took an absolute interest. Bousfield v. Bousfield, 21 L. T. 136.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate in trust to pay the rents, dividends, and interest, from time to time, as the same should become due and be received, unto and for the only use and behoof of the testator's daughter, for and during the term of her natural life, and to pay the same into her own hands, independent of her present or future husband, and not in any manner subject to the debts, control, or engagements of such present or future husband, and her receipt to be sufficient discharge to the trustees, as if she were sole and unmarried :—Held, that the wife had a power of alienation over her life interest. Glyn v. Baster, 1 Y. & J. 329.

Devise of Freeholds—Wish that they should not sell.]—A testator gave, devised, and bequeathed all his freeholds and leaseholds to two of his daughters equally between them as tenants in common to and for their several and respective sole and separate use and benefit absolutely, and stated that it was "his wish and request that they should not sell or dispose of any part of his said freehold or leasehold premises." In a subsequent part of his will, there was a bequest of a sum of stock to trustees in trust to pay the income to another daughter for her life, "for her own sole and separate and inalienable use and benefit, and without power of anticipation." The two daughters, one of them being married, contracted to sell some of the freehold property. On summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act on behalf of the purchaser:—Held, that the words of the devise, even if they stood alone, would have been insufficient to operate as a restraint on anticipation; that the cases as to precatory trusts did not apply, as there was no trust imposed in favour of some other person; that the subsequent bequest strengthened this construction; and that a good title was shown as to the moiety of a married woman. Hutchings to Burt, In re, 59 L. T. 490—C. A.

Covenant while Sole to Settle.]—E. H. appointed by deed, in pursuance of a will, that after her death the trustees of the will should hold her share in certain real and personal estate, as to 1,000*l.* upon trust for and to be paid and transferred to her daughter M., and as to a certain residue of the same share upon trust for M. and two others equally to be divided, with a proviso that M.'s share as well as the 1,000*l.* should be for her sole and separate use, and that her receipts should from time to time after the same became due, and not by way of anticipation, be a sufficient discharge for the income. M. married in 1882, and by her marriage settlement she and her intended husband covenanted to settle the appointed property. E. H. died in 1889:—Held, that though the appointment created a restraint on anticipation, it was removed by the covenant. Wood, In re, Wood v. Hooper, 61 L. T. 197.

Legacy subject to Wife judicially Separated.]—A testator by his will dated the 2nd of July, 1870, gave a legacy to a married woman for her separate use without power of anticipation, and directed that "for the purpose of securing to her the separate enjoyment without power of anticipation against any husband for the time being, the trustee should settle the legacy in such manner as would carry out the said purpose." Previously to the date of the will the legatee had been judicially separated from her husband, and had ever since lived apart from him:—Held, that she was entitled to have the legacy paid to her. Munt v. Glynes, 41 L. J., Ch. 639; 27 L. T. 366; 20 W. R. 823.

Invalidity.]—A widow, having under her marriage settlement a power of appointment amongst the children of the marriage, executed the power by giving to one of her five daughters who was married, a fifth share of the fund for her separate use, independently of her then or any future husband, but without power of anticipation; and after her decease as she should generally by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment, for her executors and administrators absolutely:—Held, that the whole appointment was not void, and that it was a valid execution of the power, except as to the restraint upon anticipation, but that the attempted restraint upon anticipation was ineffectual and void. Teague, In re, L. R. 10 Eq. 564; 22 L. T. 742; 18 W. R. 752.

—— Restraint on Alienation—No gift over.]—Testator gave a sum of money for the separate use of his daughter, a feme sole, and declared that she should not be at liberty to sell or dispose of it, and if she attempted so to do, that such sale should be void. The daughter afterwards married:—Held, that the restraint on alienation was void, there being no gift over. Newton v. Reid, 4 Sim. 141.

—— Remoteness.]—Under an ante-nuptial settlement, by which the husband had a power of appointing a sum of money among the children of the marriage, he appointed the fund to the separate use of a married daughter, with a restriction against alienation:—Held, that the appointment to the separate use of his daughter was valid, discharged of the restraint upon alienation, which was too remote and void. Cunynghame, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 247; L. R. 11 Eq. 324; 24 L. T. 124; 19 W. R. 381.

—— Rule against Perpetuities.]—Bequest of a fund in trust for A. for life, and after her death in trust for her children living at her death, and the issue then living of any child then dead, in equal shares, the issue to take their parent's share; any legatees, being females, to take for their sole and separate use without power of anticipation. A. survived the testator, and died leaving two married daughters who were born in the testator's lifetime:—Held, reluctantly following previous decisions, that the restraint on anticipation was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities and that the daughters were accordingly entitled to have the fund paid to them in moieties, on their separate receipts, discharged from such restraint. Ridley, In re, Buckton v. Hay, 48 L. J., Ch. 563; 11 Ch. D. 645; 27 W. R. 527.

By indenture made in December 1874, S. and J. S., wife and husband, who had at the date of the indenture been married many years, and had two children, daughters, both married, assigned to trustees a sum of money in trust to invest for the benefit of the settlors, and after their deaths the trustees were to stand possessed of the moneys upon trust for their children as they or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment, for all the children or any the child of S. by J. S. who being a son should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter should attain twenty-one, or marry under that age, if more than one in equal shares, and if daughters for their separate use, and without power to alienate or anticipate the same. There were no other children of the marriage. S. died in 1876, and J. S. in 1879, without having made any appointment:—Held, that, notwithstanding the rule against perpetuities, the shares of the two daughters were subject to restraint on anticipation. Herbert v. Webster, 49 L. J., Ch. 620; 15 Ch. D. 610.

A testator gave his property to trustees to pay the income to two persons for life, and after the death of the survivor to divide the capital between the children of A. B. and C. D., two females, the shares of sons to be paid on their attaining twenty-one, and the shares of daughters to be invested and the interest paid to such daughters for life for their separate use without power of anticipation, and on their deaths the capital to go as the daughters should by will appoint. A. B. was dead at the date of the will, and C. D. was sixty years of age, and therefore past childbearing:—Held, that if the children of A. B. and C. D. had not necessarily been lives in esse at the date of the will, the restraint on anticipation in respect of the daughters' shares would have been bad, as infringing the rule against perpetuites; but as A. B. was dead and C. D. past childbearing, all the children were lives in esse, and the restraint on alienation was valid.

Cooper v. Laroche, 17 Ch. D. 368 ; 43 L. T. 794 ; 29 W. R. 438.

Liability for Debts.]—See infra, col. 1094.

b. During what Coverture.

Restraint annexed to the Separate Estate.]—The restraint on alienation is annexed to the separate estate only, and the separate estate has its existence only during coverture ; but whilst the woman is discovert, the separate estate, whether modified by restraint or not, is suspended and has no operation, though it is capable of arising upon the happening of a marriage. Tullett v. Armstrong, 1 Beav. 1 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 19 ; 2 Jur. 912. Affirmed, 4 Myl. & C. 377 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 41.

—— Operates during Life.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, a sum of money, the property of the wife, was vested in trustees upon trusts, which were construed to operate as a direction to pay the dividends to the wife for her life, or to her appointees without anticipation :—Held, that the restraint against anticipation operated during the whole life of the wife, and was not restricted to an existing coverture by the introduction of additional words, which obviously applied only to such existing coverture. If the restriction forms part of the only sentence which gives any estate, and is in words made part of the gift, then the estate and the restriction must be commensurate. Gaffee, In re, 1 Mac. & G. 541 ; 1 H. & Tw. 635 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 179 ; 14 Jur. 277.

And see King v. Lucas, 23 Ch. D. 712 ; 49 L. T. 216 ; 31 W. R. 904. Scarborough v. Borman, 1 Beav. 34 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 22 ; 2 Jur. 915. Affirmed, 4 Myl. & C. 377, 407 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 48 ; 4 Jur. 38 ; and Ashton v. McDougall, 5 Beav. 56 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 344 ; 6 Jur. 447.

Revival on Second Marriage.]—A trust for the separate use of a woman, with a restriction against anticipation, though expressed to be independent of her then intended or existing husband, will operate against a future husband, if the limitation of the trust is for her life. Hawkes v. Hubbard, 40 L. J., Ch. 49 ; L. R. 11 Eq. 5 ; 23 L. T. 642 ; 19 W. R. 117.

By settlement, a jointure was limited to the sole and separate use of K. in case she should survive M., her intended husband, with a restraint on anticipation :—Held, that such limitation referred as well to the then intended marriage as to every future coverture, so as to prevent her from incumbering or otherwise dealing with the jointure during her life. Molyneux, In re, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 411.

A lady being entitled, subject to a prior life estate, to certain freehold and funded property, settled the same, on her first marriage, for her separate use, independent of her intended or any other husband. Her first husband died, and she married again :—Held, that the property still belonged to her as her separate estate. Dixon v. Dixon, 1 Beav. 40 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 25 ; 2 Jur. 960.

Gift by will of a fund to trustees for A., a widow, for life, for her separate use, with remainder over, followed by a gift of the residue to A. for her own sole use and benefit absolutely. A. subsequently married again :—Held, that the marital right of the husband in the residue was excluded. Tarsey, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 452 ; L. R. 1 Eq. 561 ; 14 L. T. 15 ; 14 W. R. 474.

Purchase—Setting aside—Notice.]—Bequests of leaseholds to a married woman "for her whole and sole use during her life, free from the control of any future husband, and not to be sold or mortgaged, and after her decease to her heir or heirs ; and provided her child or children should die before her, then that she may at her decease leave them to whom she will for the remainder of the term." The husband and wife demised the premises to a purchaser, and the purchaser demised them to another. The wife then filed her bill to have the under-lease set aside :—Held, that the gift was to the separate use of the wife as well during the present as during a future coverture : that the under-lessees from the purchaser must be treated as having notice of the wife's interest, and that the under-lease to the purchaser should be set aside, but without costs. Steedman v. Poole, 6 Hare, 193 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 348 ; 11 Jur. 449.

An annuity was bequeathed to a lady, married at the death of testator, for her separate use, independent of any husband she might at any time marry and without power of anticipation. After death of testator, she married, became a widow, and married a second time :—Held, that the separate use and anticipation clauses attached to the annuity during the second marriage. Clark v. Jaques, 1 Beav. 36 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 25 ; 2 Jur. 915.

Limitation of Restraint to First Marriage.]—Real estate devised to A., the wife of B., her heirs and assigns for ever, independent of B., for her use and benefit, with power to appoint, and in default, remainder over. Personal estate to A., for her sole and separate use, independent of her husband, B. ; and her receipts alone to be sufficient discharges :—Held, that the limitations to the separate use of A. did not extend beyond the husband specifically named. Moore v. Morris, 4 Drew. 33 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 552 ; 5 W. R. 383.

Testator directed the interest of 10,000*l*. to be for the separate use of his daughter, then a feme covert, for her life, free from the debts of her husband. The daughter's husband died, and she married again :—Held, the trust for her separate use ceased on the death of her first husband. Quære, whether a trust for the separate use of a single woman is valid. Benson v. Benson, 6 Sim. 126 ; 4 L. J., Ch. 59. Affirmed, 4 L. J., Ch. 273.

By a marriage settlement, money and stock were assigned to trustees in trust, to receive the income during the life of the lady, and pay the same to her for her separate use, or as she should appoint, notwithstanding her coverture, but no payment to be made by anticipation ; and it was declared that the income should not be subject to the debts, &c., of R. G., her intended husband ; and, after her decease, in case he should survive, in trust to permit him to receive the income for his life, &c. The husband died in the lifetime of his wife, and she married again :—Held, that the provision for the separate use of the lady without anticipation was confined to the first marriage. Knight v. Knight, 6 Sim. 121 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 187.

By a marriage settlement a sum was limited by the father of the wife, in trust to raise an annuity during the life of his daughter, and to pay it after her marriage as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, into her hands for her separate use :—Held, that the annuity was given for life to the daughter, and that the trust for the separate use did not arise on a second marriage. Bradley v. Hughes, 8 Sim. 149; 5 L. J., Ch. 355.

Divorce — Wife remarrying.] — A husband, being entitled in remainder to an estate for his life in real property, settled it during the joint lives of himself and his wife, for her separate use, independently of his control, and without power of anticipation. The wife subsequently obtained a divorce, and married again without a settlement:—Held, that, notwithstanding the special circumstances of the case, the trust for separate use and the restraint on anticipation revived on the second marriage. Shafto v. Butler, 40 L. J., Ch. 308; 24 L. T. 412; 19 W. R. 595.

By a settlement made upon the marriage of the defendant with P. her property was settled upon trust to pay the income to her for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and there was an ultimate trust for her absolutely if she survived P. The defendant obtained a divorce from P. and subsequently married E. There was no evidence whether P. was alive or not. The plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendant as a married woman, and then obtained an order appointing a receiver of her interest under the settlement:—Held (allowing the appeal), that the restraint on anticipation became operative upon the second marriage, and that therefore an order for a receiver ought not to have been made. Stroud v. Edwards, 77 L. T. 280—C. A.

Judgment for Ante-nuptial Debt — Separate Estate—Restraint on Anticipation—Receiver.] —A judgment in respect of an ante-nuptial debt obtained against a married woman in the form settled in Scott v. Morley (20 Q. B. D. 120) cannot be enforced by the appointment of a receiver of her separate estate restrained from anticipation, or the income thereof. Molony v. Harney, [1895] 2 Ir. R. 169. See col. 1094.

Duration of Restraint—Arrears of Income.] —The restraint on anticipation of a married woman's separate income ceases to attach to such income as soon as it becomes due and payable to her under the trusts of the instrument under which she is entitled. Hood-Barrs v. Catheart (63 L. J., Q. B. 602; [1894] 2 Q. B. 567), and Pillers v. Edwards (71 L. T. 788) overruled. Hood-Barrs v. Heriot, 65 L. J., Q. B. 352; [1896] A. C. 174; 74 L. T. 353; 44 W. R. 481; 60 J. P. 612—H. L. (E.)

Judgment for Costs against Married Woman—Arrears of Income falling due after date of Judgment — Receiver.] — Apart from the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, a judgment against a married woman cannot be enforced against arrears of her separate estate accruing due subsequent to the date of the judgment, and subject to restraint on anticipation. Lowry v. Durham, [1895] 2 Ir. R. 123—C. A.

Arrears of Income become due and payable before Date of Judgment—Receiver.] —A judgment against a married woman possessed of separate estate which is subject to restraint on anticipation cannot be enforced by the appointment of a receiver of arrears in the hands of her trustee of the separate income which she is restrained from anticipating, although those arrears had become due and payable to her before the date of the judgment. Loftus v. Heriot, 64 L. J., Q. B. 717; [1895] 2 Q. B. 212; 14 R. 510; 73 L. T. 167—C. A.

Judicial Separation—Settlement.]—The court cannot order a settlement under s. 3 of the Matrimonial Clauses Act, 1884, out of property subject to a restraint on anticipation. Michell v. Michell, 60 L. J., P. 46; [1891] P. 208; 64 L. T. 607; 39 W. R. 680—C. A.

Does not prevent Alienation during Discoverture.] — A clause against anticipation, annexed to a life interest in a trust fund bequeathed to a female infant, does not prevent her, after she comes of age, and before marriage, from effectually assigning her whole interest in the legacy. Brown v. Pocock, 2 Russ. & M. 210; Coop. t. Brough. 70; 4 L. J., Ch. 15. Reversing, 2 Myl. & K. 189.

A gift for the separate use of a single woman, without anticipation, will not prevent alienation by her, unless it is made with reference to an intended marriage. S. C., 5 Sim. 663.

Bequest of dividends of stock to a feme covert for life, not to be subject to the debts or control of her then present or any other husband, and without power to charge or anticipate the growing payments thereof:—Held, that the legatee on becoming discovert might validly dispose of her entire life interest. Jones v. Salter, 2 Russ. & M. 208.

Prevents Alienation during Coverture.] — When a fund producing income is given absolutely to a married woman, and the gift is followed by a restraint on anticipation, the married woman is prevented from alienating the fund during coverture. Ellis's Estate, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 444; L. R. 17 Eq. 409; 22 W. R. 448.

A testatrix, by her will, gave to a married woman 500*l.* consols; and by a codicil directed that all gifts and provisions (whether absolute or limited) thereby or by her will made for any female should be for her separate use, and (whilst she should be under coverture) without any power of anticipation. The executor transferred the fund into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the married woman presented a petition for a transfer of the fund to herself:—Held, that she could only have the income paid to her during her coverture. Ib.

Wife cannot Pledge.]—A woman on her marriage settled furniture on trustees to allow her to use it during life, and to dispose of it by will or deed to operate after death:—Held, that she had no power to pledge the furniture, and her trustees might recover it from the pawnbroker. Worsnop v. Benassi, 21 W. R. 684.

Sequestration.] — By marriage settlement in 1856, property was settled to the separate use of the wife for life, without power of anticipation, with remainders over. In 1866, the wife left her husband, and he instituted a suit against her in the divorce court for restitution of conjugal rights. Judgment was given against the wife with costs. The wife withdrew from the jurisdiction, and declined to obey the judgment. In 1870, the husband procured from the divorce court a writ of sequestration against the separate property of the wife for the costs of the suit. In October, 1869, dividends and interest on the settled property fell due, and were received by one of the trustees, who retained them in his hands. In December, 1869, a hostile suit was instituted by the wife against the trustee to compel the payment of the dividends and interest, and for the removal of the trustee, but not asking for the general administration of the fund. The trustee admitted that he had in his hands the greater part of the entire fund. A few days after his answer the trustee filed a bill in the rolls court for the administration of the trusts of the settlement. On motion by the wife, in the first of the two suits, that the trustee might be ordered to pay into court the entire sum admitted by him to be in his hands:—Held, that, regard being had principally to the restraint on anticipation contained in the settlement, the money ought to be paid into court, notwithstanding the writ of sequestration, and notwithstanding that the wife's bill had not prayed the general administration of the trust fund. Miller v. Miller, 18 W. R. 750.

The court will, upon petition, order dividends accrued due upon a fund in court, settled to the separate use of a wife for life, without power of anticipation, to be paid to the sequestrator of her estate. Claydon v. Finch, 42 L. J., Ch. 416; L. R. 15 Eq. 266; 28 L. T. 101.

Grant of Annuity in ignorance of Restraint.]—A married woman having personal property under a will for life and absolutely, a settlement is made of it to her separate use without power of anticipation, with a power of appointment by deed. Without adverting to the clause against anticipation, and in alleged ignorance of its existence, she and her husband grant an annuity in consideration of 215*l.*, and an order is made for payment of the dividends of her separate property to the grantee to secure the annuity, and he receives the dividends and hands over the surplus from time to time. The clause against anticipation is then discovered, and the wife petitions for discharge of the order for payment of the dividends to the grantee of the annuity, for restitution of the money received, and for costs against the grantee and his solicitor:—Held, that the order must be discharged, and, the restitution not being pressed for, no order made upon that part of the petition, but costs given against the grantee, his solicitor, and her husband. Forty v. Reay, 3 W. R. 317.

Election.]—In the case of a married woman, to whom an interest with a restraint on anticipation attached thereto is given by the same instrument as that which gives rise to a question of election, the doctrine of election does not apply, as the value of her interest in the property to be relinquished by way of compensation has, by the terms of the instrument, been made inalienable. Wheatley, In re, Smith v. Spence, 54 L. J., Ch. 201; 27 Ch. D. 606; 51 L. T. 681; 33 W. R. 275.

——Covenant to Settle After-acquired Property—Election.]—The doctrine of election is founded on the presumption of a general intention that every part of an instrument shall take effect, and the presumption of such general intention may be rebutted by an inconsistent particular intention apparent in the instrument. Therefore, where a marriage settlement settled a fund for the separate use of the wife for life with restraint on anticipation, and contained a covenant by the wife (then an infant) to settle future property:—Held, that the wife could not be compelled to elect between after-acquired property and her interest in the settled fund, but was entitled to retain both. Vardon's Trusts, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 259; 31 Ch. D. 275; 53 L. T. 895; 34 W. R. 185.

Barring Entail not prevented by.]—A married woman, under the limitations of a will made in 1846, was equitable tenant in tail to her separate use of freehold estates. By a clause in the will she was also restrained from alienation of rents and profits. Her husband became bankrupt, and after his order of discharge joined with his wife in barring the equitable entail and limiting the estate in fee to the separate use of the wife. The wife died, having by her will devised the estate for the benefit of her children, and the husband's assignees claimed the husband's estate by curtesy:—Held, that the restraint on anticipation did not prevent the wife from barring the entail and acquiring the equitable fee; and that the wife, having thereby acquired an equitable fee to her separate use, had power to defeat her husband's right to curtesy by devising the estate. Cooper v. Macdonald, 47 L. J., Ch. 373; 7 Ch. D. 288; 38 L. T. 191; 26 W. R. 377—C. A.

Restraint on Appointment—Assignment.]—Gift by will of leasehold and other personal estates to trustees in trust to pay the rents, &c., to such person or persons as a married woman should, by writing under her hand from time to time, but not by way of anticipation, appoint, and in default of such appointment, so far as the same should not extend, into her proper hands for her sole and separate use, with a direction that her receipts, notwithstanding coverture, should be good discharges, and after her death in trust for her children:—Held, upon the particular terms of the gift, that the restraint on anticipation applied to an assignment by the married woman of her separate estate, as well as to an appointment in execution of her power, notwithstanding the will did not provide that her receipts alone should be good discharges. Brown v. Bamford, 1 Ph. 620; 15 L. J., Ch. 361; 10 Jur. 447.

Restraining Clause—Appointment.]—Testator directed his trustees during the life of his daughter, who was married, to pay the interest of a share of his property to such person or persons as she should from time to time, during her life, either covert or sole, under her hand authorise and appoint to receive the same, and, in default of appointment, into her proper hands, for her sole and separate use, independently of her then or any future husband, and so as to be free from his debts, &c., and that the receipt or receipts of her, or of the person or persons whom she might authorise to receive the same, and proceeds or any part thereof, should be alone an effectual discharge to his trustees for the payment thereof; and that his trustees should always be at liberty to require from her a separate authority or receipt from time to time for each quarterly payment, it being his intention that the annual proceeds should not be sold, charged or otherwise disposed of:—Held, that the restraining clause did not apply to the power of appointment given to the daughter, and therefore that an appointment of the interest of the share made by her for her life was good. Medley v. Horton, 14 Sim. 222; 13 L. J., Ch. 442; 8 Jur. 853, 949.

Scotch Law of Aliment.]—A testator in Scotland gave all his property to trustees, first, to pay his debts, secondly, to pay Mrs. R., a married woman, so much of the annual proceeds as they might deem necessary for the support of her and family during her life, declaring the same to be alimentary and exclusive to her husband, and not to be attachable nor assignable, nor subject to any deeds or debts of her or her husband. The acting trustee, with the consent of Mrs. R., assigned to her alimentary creditor the rents of the trust property, first, to pay debts affecting it, secondly, to pay part of the rents to Mrs. R. for aliment, thirdly, to apply the residue in payment of the debts due to the assignee:—Held, that the assignment was void on three grounds, viz.—(1) It was not competent to the trustee to substitute another person for himself in the trust, which was the effect of the assignment. (2) The rule of law in Scotland requiring the concurrence of the husband in his wife's deed could not be dispensed with by his absence abroad at the time for a temporary purpose only. (3) The assignment was void, as it violated the express prohibition against alienation; and in this respect the law in Scotland is the same as in England. Rennie v. Ritchie, 12 Cl. & F. 204.

Covenant by Married Woman Restrained from Anticipations whether a Valuable Consideration.]—A covenant by a married woman having property settled to her separate use, without power of anticipation, is not a sufficient consideration to support an agreement otherwise voluntary. Walrond v. Walrond, 1 Johns. 18; 28 L. J., Ch. 97; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 975; 7 W. R. 33.

The release and assignment, by a married woman, of her life interest in her separate estate, although fettered by a restriction against anticipation, was held to form a consideration for a settlement by another person; for, though the married woman could not pass her future interest, she might and did thereby release her past income; and the question of consideration moreover depended not upon the point whether her assignment passed her interest, but upon the question whether her concurrence enabled the settlement to be made. Harman v. Richards, 10 Hare, 81; 22 L. J., Ch. 1066.

A married woman was entitled to a gross sum, payable on the death of her father, for her separate use, subject to a restraint on anticipation. During her father's life she promised, by letters, to repay to D. out of the fund, when it fell in, advances made by him to her and her husband. After the death of her father the fund was paid into court, and she being still under coverture, verbally promised D. that he should be paid out of the fund if he would offer no opposition to her application for payment out of court; and it was accordingly paid to her:—Held, that D. had no charge on the fund, the letters being ineffectual by reason of the restraint on anticipation, and the subsequent parol promise being void for want of consideration, and void under the Statute of Frauds. Sykes, In re, 2 John. & H. 415.

Compromise by Married Woman Restrained from Anticipation.]—In a suit instituted by a married woman by her next friend against the trustees of a will for an account:—Held, that a married woman having property to her separate use, without power of anticipation, had power to bind the corpus of the estate by a compromise entered into by her. Wilton v. Hill, 25 L. J., Ch. 156; 4 W. R. 66.

Acquiescence by.]—Quære, whether a married woman who is entitled to the interest of a fund to her separate use, without restraint upon anticipation, can be bound by acquiescence in an improper investment of the fund. Davies v. Hodgson, 27 L. J., Ch. 449; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 252; 6 W. R. 355.

Release by.]—A married woman, restrained from anticipation, cannot agree to release her trustees from liability incurred by their disregard of that restraint. Dickson v. Hook, 14 W. R. 552.

Advancement to Husband Sanctioned by Court on Terms.]—Where there was a power of advancement in favour of an infant female legatee, to whom an interest for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, was given, with remainder to her children, the court, after the legatee had attained twenty-one and married, ordered an advancement to be made for the purpose of enabling the husband to enter into a partnership, upon the husband insuring his life and entering into a bond for the payment of the sum advanced and the premiums on the policy. Phillips v. Phillips, Kay, 40; 23 L. J., Ch. 7; 18 Jur. 69.

Legacy to Wife — Settlement — Husband no Interest.]—A Scotch marriage settlement gave to the husband a life interest in all property belonging to the wife, or that might be acquired by her during the marriage, and the corpus to the wife herself. Afterwards, the wife became entitled, for life, to a legacy of 2,000*l.* for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to her children:—Held, that the husband and his assignees took no interest in the fund, notwithstanding the settlement, and that the result would have been the same if the clause against anticipation had been omitted. Duncan v. Cannan, 21 Beav. 307; 24 L. J., Ch. 460; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 291.

Joint Power of Appointment Subject to Restraint.]—By marriage settlement a fund was settled in trust as husband and wife should jointly appoint, but not so as to deprive themselves of the benefit thereof by charge or otherwise by way of anticipation. The fund was appointed to trustees to pay and divide the dividends equally between the husband and wife during their joint lives:—Held, that the appointment was valid and effectual, the husband and wife not having thereby deprived themselves of the benefit of the fund. Linzee's Settlement, In re, 23 Beav. 241.

Life Interest—Cesser—Restraint on Anticipation—Admission by Deed-Poll — Estoppel.]—A married woman was entitled under a settlement to certain rents and profits for her life for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation, but subject to a proviso that in the event of her succeeding to an income of a particular amount her life interest should cease. She subsequently executed a deed-poll under a misapprehension of fact that she had succeeded to the income in question, admitting that her life estate had determined, and releasing all claims to the rents and profits:—Held, that, as the restraint on anticipation was inseparable from the life interest of the married woman, the deed-poll could not operate as a cesser of her life estate, nor was she estopped, by the admission of fact, from still claiming the rents and profits under the settlement. Bateman (Lady) v. Faber, 66 L. J., Ch. 721; [1897] 2 Ch. 223; 77 L. T. 71; 46 W. R. 151.

Apportionment of Settled Legacy—Payment to Remainderman—Purchase of Annuity.]—A sum of stock was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to A., a married woman, for her life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and after her decease to pay the capital to B. On the petition of A. and B. the court ordered a transfer of a portion of the stock to B., and a sale of such other portion as would be sufficient to purchase a government annuity equal to the dividends of the two sums of stock, and that the sum thereby produced should be laid out in the purchase of such annuity, to be settled on A. for her separate use, without power of anticipation. Dodd v. Wake, 5 De G. & Sm. 226; 21 L. J., Ch. 356; 16 Jur. 776.

Unaccrued Dividends—Inability to Charge.]—Property was held in trust to pay the dividends to such person as a married woman should, not by way of anticipation, appoint, and in default of appointment, to her for her separate use; and it was declared that the receipts of her or her appointees should be good discharges:—Held, that she could not by anticipation charge the dividends not accrued due. Harnett v. Macdougall, 8 Beav. 187; 14 L. J., Ch. 173.

Payment out of Dividends.]—Form of order for payment of dividends to a married woman where the trust is for payment to her separate use with a restraint on anticipation and no gift over, discussed and stated. Stewart v. Fletcher, 57 L. J., Ch. 765; 38 Ch. D. 627; 36 W. R. 713.

Restraint Void by Law of Wife's Domicil.]—A testator bequeathed personal estate in trust for the use of a feme covert, and without power of anticipation. The legatee was, at the date of the will, domiciled abroad, and had continued so ever since. By the law of her domicil, the restraint against anticipation was disregarded, but the court nevertheless refused to give effect to a beneficial arrangement made by her anticipating her income. Peillon v. Brooking, 25 Beav. 218.

d. Fraud by Wife.

Restraint Cannot be Infringed by.]—There is no equity to apply income which a married woman is restrained from anticipating, to make good the consequences of her fraud, where the restraint on anticipation appears from the instrument in respect of which relief is sought. Arnold v. Woodhams, 42 L. J., Ch. 578; L. R. 16 Eq. 29; 28 L. T. 351; 21 W. R. 694.

A woman who had previously to her marriage settled property upon trust for herself during the joint lives of herself and her husband for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and after the death of one of them for the survivor for life and, after trusts for the benefit of the children of the marriage, upon such trusts as she should by deed or will appoint, and (there being no children of the marriage) had by deed irrevocably appointed her reversionary interest in favour of her mother, subsequently, and, as she alleged, under the compulsion of her husband, made another absolute irrevocable appointment of her reversionary interest in favour of her husband, without noticing the previous appointment. The husband deposited the appointment in his favour to secure a debt to himself:—Held, that, assuming the second appointment to be fraud on the part of the wife, inasmuch as it was not based upon any active misrepresentation by her, but disclosed the restraint on anticipation, and only attempted to deal with the reversionary interest, the assignee of the security was not entitled to impound the income during her life to make good his loss by such fraud. Ib.

A wife having property settled to her separate use, with restraint upon anticipation, concurred in a fraudulent mortgage of such property, concealing the restraint upon anticipation. The mortgagee obtained a judgment against her for the amount lent, and a charging order to charge her next accruing dividend:—Held, that such charging order must be discharged; for in no case and by no device could the restraint upon anticipation be evaded. Stanley v. Stanley, 47 L. J., Ch. 256; 7 Ch. D. 589; 37 L. T. 777; 26 W. R. 310.

The mortgagee, having discovered the fraud, obtained from the married woman a warrant of attorney, entered up judgment thereon, and afterwards obtained a charging order on a dividend due to her the very day it accrued due:—Held, that this was a mere device to make her future income a security for the mortgage debt, and an attempt to do indirectly what could not be done directly; and that, therefore, the charging order must be discharged. Ib.

Property limited to the separate use of a married woman without power of anticipation is not bound (at least during the coverture) by a charge fraudulently created by her in favour of a mortgagee without notice of the restraint. Thomas v. Price, 46 L. J., Ch. 761.

Therefore, when the property was a fund in court, and the mortgagee had by virtue of a power in his security obtained an order directing payment of future dividends to him, the order was upon the application of the married woman discharged. Ib.

Settlement by a husband, of money, in trust to pay the interest to the wife during her life, with a proviso against anticipation. The husband joins with a surety in a covenant to pay an annuity, secured by an assignment by the wife, of the interest to become due, and of the principal sum in the event of there being no children of the marriage:—Held, the surety not entitled to any remedy in equity under the assignment, in respect of his payment of the arrears of the annuity recovered against him by an action upon the covenant, although he had no notice of the proviso against anticipation in the settlement; a charge of fraudulent concealment not being sufficiently established; and even if fraud had been fully made out against the wife, it seems it would not be sufficient to support the assignment, which would be to give her a power of alienation against the intention of the settlor. Jackson v. Hobhouse, 2 Mer. 483; 16 R. R. 200.

Mistake of Wife, as to Effect of.]—See Bateman v. Faber, 66 L. J., Ch. 721 ; [1897] 2 Ch. 223 ; 77 L. T. 71 ; 46 W. R. 151.

When allowed.]—A testatrix, by her will, gave to a married woman 500*l.* consols ; and by a codicil directed that all gifts and provisions (whether absolute or limited) thereby or by her will made for any female should be for her separate use, and (whilst she should be under coverture) without any power of anticipation. The executor transferred the fund into court under the Trust Relief Act, and the married woman presented a petition for a transfer of the fund to herself :—Held, that she could only have the income paid to her during her coverture. Ellis, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 444 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 409 ; 22 W. R. 448.

—— Before Marriage.]—A testator directed that one-third of his residuary estate should be invested in the purchase of an annuity for the life of a female, who was single at the date of the will and the death of the testator, and this annuity he gave to her separate use, and independent of any husband she might happen to marry, and without power to sell or assign the same by anticipation. The M. R., upon the ground that the restraint against alienation or anticipation would be valid in case of future coverture, refused to order payment to the legatee of the price which would be paid for the annuity. But the lord chancellor held that she was entitled, if she chose, to the fund at once, without having it laid out, and that this option was not affected by the clause against anticipation. Woodmeston v. Walker, 2 Russ. & M. 197 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 257.

—— After Death of Husband.]—Settlement in trust for the separate use of a married woman for life, but so as not to anticipate, with remainder as she should appoint by will, and in default of appointment to A. On the death of her husband, the restraint on anticipation ceases, and therefore she is entitled, with the concurrence of A., to a transfer of a fund. Barton v. Briscoe, Jac. 603.

—— Absolute Gift not producing Income.]—A testatrix bequeathed to a married woman by name, describing her as married, a reversionary share of a fund of mixed real and personal estate, expectant on a life interest. The will declared that every gift thereby made to a married woman should be for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and that her receipts alone should be good discharges for the same. The tenant for life died in the lifetime of the testatrix, who nevertheless did not alter her will. The married woman's share of the residue being represented by a sum of cash standing in court, uninvested, upon petition by the married woman to have the cash paid out to her, upon her separate receipt :—Held, that she was so entitled. Croughton, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 795 ; 8 Ch. D. 460 ; 38 L. T. 447 ; 26 W. R. 574.

—— Income-producing Fund—Right to Capital.]—A testator bequeathed an annuity to his wife. And he directed his trustees and executors to provide for the same, either by setting apart a sufficient portion of the produce of his residuary personal estate, or by purchasing an annuity. And, after bequeathing some pecuniary legacies, he devised and bequeathed all his real estate, and the residue of his personal estate, to his two daughters, their heirs, &c., as tenants in common, so that the same might be enjoyed by them, during any and every coverture, as separate property free from marital control, and without power of anticipation. The executors paid the testator's debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, and purchased an annuity for the widow. The residue of the estate then consisted of two sums of stock and a sum of cash. One of the daughters was married :—Held, that the will did not require the conversion of the residue into money, except so far as might be necessary to provide for the annuity. Clarke's Trusts, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 855 ; 21 Ch. D. 748 ; 47 L. T. 43 ; 30 W. R. 778.

Held, also, that the married daughter's share of the stocks, they being income-bearing funds, could not be transferred to her, but that only the income arising from them could be paid to her. Ib.

But held, that her share of the cash might be paid to her on her separate receipt. Ib.

Ellis, In re, supra, followed. Croughton, In re, supra, distinguished. Ib.

Gift by a testatrix of real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert and invest, and to stand possessed of the stocks, funds, and securities representing the same in trust for her children who, being male, attained twenty-one, or, being female, attained that age or married under that age ; with a declaration that the shares of daughters should be for their sole and separate use without power of anticipation. Power was given to the trustees, upon the marriage of any of the daughters, to revoke the trusts so far as related to the share of any daughter so marrying, and to settle the same for the benefit of the daughter and her issue as to the trustees should seem fit. The residuary estate was represented by a sum of cash and certain leasehold houses :—Held, that the gift being of an income-producing fund with a restraint upon anticipation, the trustees could not pay to the daughters during coverture their shares upon their separate receipt. Benton, In re, Smith v. Smith, 51 L. J., Ch. 183 ; 19 Ch. D. 277 ; 45 L. T. 786 ; 30 W. R. 242.

A testator bequeathed the sum of 20,000*l.*, after the death of R. S., to the child or children of R. S., who should survive him, the testator, equally to be divided between them if more than one. R. S. died in the testator's lifetime, leaving two daughters, one of whom was married. The will contained a proviso that every bequest thereby made for any female during her coverture should be "for her separate use and without power of anticipation or alienation." There was no clause declaring that the receipt of a married woman should be a sufficient discharge. Upon the question whether the married woman was entitled to have her moiety of the 20,000*l.* paid to her on her separate receipt, notwithstanding the proviso :—Held, that she was so entitled. Taber, In re, Arnold v. Kayess, 51 L. J., Ch. 721 ; 46 L. T. 805 ; 30 W. R. 883.

A testatrix by her will, dated in 1875, gave all her real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and after payment of debts, to raise thereout 4,500*l.*, and invest the same and hold the investments upon trust for R. for life ; and declared, after his death, the trustees should stand possessed of three several sums of 1,000*l.*, part of the 4,500*l.*, in favour of certain persons therein named; as to the remaining 1,500*l.*, in trust for and to pay the same to B. (a married woman) for her sole and separate use, and in the event of her death in the lifetime of the testatrix to divide the same amongst her children, and declared that the interest which any female might take under her will, should be for her sole and separate use, and without power to anticipate the same, and for which her receipt alone should be a sufficient discharge. The testatrix died in 1881; R. died in 1882:—Held, that B. was entitled to have the capital sum of 1,500*l.* paid to her, and to give a good discharge for the same. Bown, In re, O'Halloran v. King, 53 L. J., Ch. 881; 27 Ch. D. 411; 50 L. T. 796; 33 W. R. 58—C. A.

A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, and upon further trust as to both the capital and income, in trust for his children living at his wife's decease, who should either before or after that time attain twenty-one years or marry, in equal shares. The testator declared that all moneys (whether capital, or income) to which any female should become entitled under his will should "be paid into her own hands for her separate use free from marital control," when and as the same should become actually due and payable, "and not by way of anticipation," and her receipts alone should, notwithstanding coverture, be sufficient discharges for the same:—Held, that the restraint on anticipation was not operative to prevent payment to such females, whether under coverture or not. Bown, In re (27 Ch. D. 412), followed. Holmes, In re, Hallows v. Holmes, 67 L. T. 335—C. A.

A testator having a general power of appointment over a settled fund, appointed that a sum of 1,500*l.* should be raised and paid to his daughter, who was a married woman, absolutely, for her separate use, without power of anticipation; and appointed that one-fourth of the residue of the fund should be held upon trust for the same daughter absolutely for her separate use without power of anticipation:—Held, that the daughter was not entitled to payment of the capital of one-fourth of the residue. Grey's Settlements, In re, Acason v. Greenwood, 56 L. J., Ch. 511; 34 Ch. D. 712; 56 L. T. 350; 35 W. R. 560—C. A.

—— Fund subject to Particular Estate.]—Where a fund subject to a particular estate is given absolutely to a married woman with a restraint on anticipation, the restraint will not in the absence of any other ground be confined to the continuance of that particular estate. Bown, In re (27 Ch. D. 411), distinguished. Tippett and Newbould, In re, 37 Ch. D. 444; 58 L. T. 754; 36 W. R. 597—C. A.

A testator directed surplus income of real and personal estate, after providing an annuity, to be accumulated during the life of his wife; after her death he gave the capital to his children; he directed that the shares of his daughters should be for their separate use, without power of alienation or anticipation during the wife's life:—Held, that his married daughters, during the life of their mother, were entitled to receive only the income of invested income. Spencer, In re, Thomas v. Spencer, 55 L. J., Ch. 80; 30 Ch. D. 183; 34 W. R. 62.

Payment to Wife under Order reversed—Lien.]—A female infant entitled under a will to a share of residuary personalty contingently on her attaining twenty-one, married before—but came of age after—the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. On her marriage a settlement of her property, not sanctioned under the Infants' Settlement Act, was made under which she took the first life estate with a restraint on anticipation. On her coming of age the fund was paid to her under an order of the court. The court of appeal reversed this order and declared her liable to refund, on the ground that the fund was subject to the settlement. She refunded part, but was unable to refund the remainder, which she had spent. After this, the executors of the will paid to the trustees of the settlement an arrear of income which they had in hand:—Held, that so much of this income as accrued between the married woman's attaining twenty-one, and the order declaring her liability to refund, must be retained in part satisfaction of her liability to refund. Pike v. Fitzgibbon (17 Ch. D. 454) distinguished. Dixon, In re, Dixon v. Smith, 56 L. J., Ch. 773; 35 Ch. D. 4; 57 L. T. 94; 35 W. R. 742—C. A.

Unauthorised Investment.]—Trust funds, to which a married woman was absolutely entitled, but subject to a restraint on anticipation, were invested upon mortgages of leasehold property, one of which, not being authorised by the trusts of the settlement, the trustees proposed to call in. The court being satisfied that it would be for the benefit of the married woman, made an order, on her application, permitting the investment to continue unchanged. Wright's Trusts, In re, 15 L. R., Ir. 331.

f. Removing Restraint under Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 39.

Principles on which Court Acts.]—The power which the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 39, gives to the court of dispensing with a restraint on anticipation is a discretionary power, to be exercised with great caution, and only where a strong case is made for it, and is not necessarily to be exercised because it will be for the benefit of the married woman. Little, In re, Harrison v. Harrison, 58 L. J., Ch. 233; 40 Ch. D. 418; 60 L. T. 246; 37 W. R. 289—C. A.

The power given by s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, ought not to be used indiscriminately. Jordan, In re, Kino v. Picard, 55 L. J., Ch. 330; 54 L. T. 127; 34 W. R. 270.

Benefit to Wife.]—Section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, confers no general power of removing the restraint on anticipation, but only enables the court to make binding some particular disposition of her property by a married woman, notwithstanding a restraint on anticipation, if the court is of opinion that such disposition is beneficial to her. Warren's Settlement, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 928; 49 L. T. 696—C. A.

The court, in determining whether an order should be made under s. 39 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, binding the interest of a married woman in property notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation, must consider whether it is for her benefit, and that is not confined to pecuniary benefit. Pollard's Settlement, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 796; [1896] 2 Ch. 552; 75 L. T. 116; 45 W. R. 18—C. A.

Possibility of Issue.]—Application by husband and wife and trustees of a settlement for the removal of the restraint on anticipation, for the purpose of rendering the capital of the trust fund—which stood limited upon the death of the survivor of husband and wife in trust for the children of the marriage—available for the benefit of the husband and wife, who were fifty-three and fifty years old respectively, there being no issue of the marriage, refused, chiefly on the ground that the court ought not to assume that there would be no children, although the parties had been married for twenty-eight years, and had never had any children, and there was medical evidence that it was almost, if not entirely, impossible that there could be any issue. Ib.

—— Scheme for Paying Wife's Debts.]—Upon the application of a married woman, the court made an order under s. 39 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, binding her life interest under her marriage settlement, notwithstanding restraint on anticipation, by approving a scheme for discharging her debts and liabilities, the court being of opinion that the scheme was for the benefit of the married woman, within the meaning of the section. Wilson-Stewart, In re, Keown-Boyd v. Gilmour, 75 L. T. 381—C. A.

—— Compromise of Annuity for Lump Sum.]—By indenture M. covenanted to pay to trustees an annuity of 400*l.* in trust for H., a spinster, until her death or marriage, and in case she married with M.'s consent, then to pay the like annuity to the trustees for H. for life for her separate use without power of anticipation. H. married with M.'s consent. M. having died, his executor and residuary legatee brought an action against H. and her husband claiming that the deed did not bind M.'s estate. Terms of compromise having been arranged under which H. was to receive a lump sum in discharge of the deed of covenant, the court was asked to sanction the arrangement on behalf of H. under s. 39 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act. The court, considering the terms of compromise to be for H.'s benefit, sanctioned the arrangement, but directed that H. should attend to give her consent by separate examination before the judge in the ordinary way. Musgrave v. Sandeman, 48 L. T. 215.

Release of Power of Appointment.] — A fund was settled on a married woman for life for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation, remainder to her children and issue as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to the children equally, with cross limitations in the event of any dying under twenty-one without issue. She being in straitened circumstances, arranged with her eldest son that his fifth share in a part of the trust funds should be applied in a specified way for her benefit. With a view to this she released her power of appointment over the trust funds, and then applied to the court to have the fifth share of the son in the agreed part of the funds, together with her life interest, sold, and the proceeds applied as above:—Held, that the court would not in the exercise of its discretion dispense with the restraint on anticipation in order to give effect to a release executed by the donee of the power for her own benefit. Cunynghame v. Thurlow (1 Russ. & My. 436) approved. Little, In re, Harrison v. Harrison, supra.

Keeping up Policy on Husband's Life.]—Where a married woman was entitled to the first life interest, with restraint on anticipation, remainder to her husband for life, in property settled by herself on marriage, the court, on her application, removed the restraint to the extent of allowing the income to be applied towards keeping up policies on the husband's life, to which she was entitled, and towards keeping down the interest on certain mortgages in which she had by misapprehension joined with her husband, and by which she purported to charge her life interest, the mortgagees being put upon terms to reduce their rate of interest to 5 per cent., and not to enforce payment against either party during the life of the wife without the leave of the court. Milner's Settlement, In re, Milner v. Milner, 61 L. J., Ch. 84; [1891] 3 Ch. 547; 65 L. T. 310; 40 W. R. 76.

Securing Loan on Settled Estate.] — An estate having been purchased in court by trustees of a marriage settlement, and the trustees requiring to raise a loan by way of mortgage on the estate for the completion of the purchase, the proposed lender required that an order should be obtained dispensing with the restraint on anticipation, contained in the said marriage settlement. The court being satisfied that the removal of such restraint on anticipation would be for the benefit of the married woman, granted an order dispensing with the same. Tennant's Estate, In re, 52 L. R., Ir. 522.

Release of Annuity charged on Partnership Business and Profits.]—When a married woman was entitled to a life annuity, with restraint on anticipation, charged upon one-third share of the business and profits of a partnership, and it was proposed that the partnership should be converted into a company with limited liability, the court sanctioned the removal of the restraint on anticipation, for the purpose of enabling the married woman to release her annuity, on being satisfied that the offer in lieu thereof of an absolute allotment of perpetual preference shares in the company, producing an income equal to the annuity, to be settled in trust for her during her life, with restraint on anticipation, and with power of appointment after her decease, was to her advantage and that of her husband and children. Millar, In re, 25 L. R., Ir. 107.

Life Interest of Wife — Right of Wife to Indemnity—Conveyancing Act, 1881.] — Where the life interest of a married woman without power of anticipation has been made available by means of the sanction of the court under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to enable her to raise money to pay her husband's debts, she cannot afterwards claim to be indemnified by him in respect of the sums so raised, when no reservation of any such remedy has been made by the court giving its sanction to the application. Paget v. Paget, 67 L. J. Ch. 1; [1898] 1 Ch. 47; 77 L. T. 490. On appeal, 67 L. J., Ch. 266; [1898] 1 Ch. 470.

Statement of conditions under which the court will allow the removal of a restraint upon anticipation. Ib.

Raising Money for Son.] — Restraint on anticipation of personalty settled by a married woman on herself for life, with remainder to her husband for life, was removed, so as to allow a sum of 500*l.*, which she and her husband had appointed to their son, the only child of the marriage, free from the husband's life interest, but subject to the wife's life interest, to be raised by the trustees of the settlement and expended in buying cattle and farm implements for the purpose of starting the son as a farmer, and relieving the husband and wife of the expense of maintaining him. Sawyer's Trusts, In re, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 40.

Specific Performance — Divorce — Husband Dead.]—The court has no power under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to order specific performance of an agreement entered into by a married woman, notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation, in a case where, at the time when the application for specific performance is made, she has been divorced and her husband is dead. Thomson v. Thomson and Rodochinka, 65 L. J., P. 80; [1896] P. 263; 74 L. T. 801; 45 W. R. 134—C. A.

Advantageous Sale of Life Interest.]—A fund, secured by mortgage, was vested in trustees in trust for the separate use of a married woman during the joint lives of herself and her husband, without power of anticipation, and after the decease of either, to the survivor for life; and, after the death of the survivor, for their three children in equal shares. The judge being satisfied that it would be for the advantage of the married woman, made an order, on summons in chambers, for accepting an advantageous offer for the sale of her life interest in the fund, under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 39. Flood's Trusts, In re, 11 L. R. Ir. 355.

Rectification of Instruments—Charging Costs.] —In an action for the rectification of certain instruments on the ground of mistake, the plaintiff had undertaken to pay the costs of all parties. The plaintiff had a life interest in some property passing under a settlement, but with a restraint on anticipation. Upon the application of the defendant, and with the consent of the plaintiff, the court made an order under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, binding such life interest of the plaintiff and charging thereon the costs of all parties. Sedgwick v. Thomas, 48 L. T. 100.

To satisfy Wife's Creditors.]—A wife living with her husband was entitled to an income of 1,700*l.* for her separate use without power of anticipation. Her husband was without any means and had been adjudged bankrupt. The wife had given acceptances to many of her husband's creditors, and was harassed with actions, and a county court order for attachment in event of non-payment had been made against her. She was also suffering in health from the anxiety produced by pecuniary embarrassment:—Held, that the case was one in which the court would, in the exercise of its discretion under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, make an order relieving part of the wife's income from the restraint on anticipation, in order that a sum might be raised to satisfy creditors. C.'s Settlement, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 556; 56 L. T. 299.

A married woman was entitled to the income of a fund in court for her life, for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder in trust for her children, and in default of issue, in trust for such persons as she should, whether covert or sole, by will appoint, and in default of appointment, to herself absolutely. She having had no children, and being past the age of childbearing, and having contracted a number of debts, for payment of which the creditors were pressing her and causing her great annoyance, she with her husband applied to the court to exercise its power under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to remove the restraint on anticipation, and to order part of the fund to be paid out to her to enable her to pay her debts:—Held, that, whether she did or did not exercise her power of appointment, the fund would at her death be subject to the payment of her debts, and that under the circumstances the restraint on anticipation ought to be removed, and a portion of the fund paid out to the applicant. Harvey's Estate, In re (13 Ch. D. 216), followed. Hodges v. Hodges, 51 L. J., Ch. 549; 20 Ch. D. 749; 46 L. T. 366; 30 W. R. 483.

Payment off of Mortgage.]—By a voluntary deed lands were settled on A., the settlor for life; remainder to B., a married woman, for life, with a clause against anticipation; remainder to C. (B.'s husband) for life; remainder as B. should appoint; A., B., and C. joined in a mortgage with a power of sale, to secure advances by a bank to them. The bank sold under their power for the full value. It appearing that there were no other means of paying off the mortgage, that the lands were in danger of eviction for non-payment of headrent, and that they were sold for full value, the court, on the application of B. and C., made on order for dispensing with the restraint on anticipation. Seagrave's Trust, In re, 17 L. R. Ir. 373.

Binding Life Interest—Forfeiture.]—A married woman was, under the will of a testator, entitled to the income of a share of his residuary estate for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation. The will contained a proviso that the income to which any person should become entitled for life under the will should be forfeited in the event of such person charging, alienating, or assigning such income or any part thereof by any act of theirs, or by bankruptcy, or other act or operation of law. And there was a gift over of the income in the event of forfeiture. She applied to the court, under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, that, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation, she might be at liberty to bind her life interest under the will for the purpose of raising a loan:—Held, that the application must be refused, as it might involve a forfeiture of her life interest. Jordan, In re, Kino v. Picard, 55 L. J., Ch. 330; 54 L. T. 127; 34 W. R. 270.

Tenants in Common—House Property.]—Two married women were tenants in common in equal shares of property for their separate use without power of anticipation. The property consisted for the most part of houses of which desirable leases could not be granted because of the restraint on anticipation. A summons was accordingly taken out for an order under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 39, enabling the married women to bind their interests in the property, and for a partition, and its resettlement in moieties upon the married women for their lives for their separate use without power of anticipation, with remainders for their husbands for their lives, and ultimate remainders for the issue of the marriages:—Held, that under the circumstances an order binding the interests of the married women would be for their benefit within s. 39. Currey, In re, Gibson v. Way, 56 L. J., Ch. 389; 56 L. T. 80; 35 W. R. 326.

—— Application to Bind.]—An application to the court to bind a married woman's interest in property as to which she is restrained from anticipation must be made by summons in chambers and not by petition. Lillwall's Settlement Trusts, In re, 30 W. R. 243.

—— Title of Petition under Settled Estates Act.]—Where, on a petition under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, the court, under s. 39 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, makes an order binding the interest of a married woman who is restrained from anticipation, the petition need not be entitled under the latter act. Landfield's Settled Land, In re, 46 L. T. 227; 30 W. R. 377.

—— Strong Grounds necessary.]—In applications to bind a married woman's interest in property, on which there is a restraint on anticipation, very strong grounds must be presented in order that the application may be successful. Tamplin v. Miller, 30 W. R. 422.

—— Upon what Evidence.]—The order was made upon the evidence of the married woman's consent afforded by an affidavit made by her in support of the application, and a letter written by her to her solicitors, strongly urging them to obtain the money for her. Ib.

But, quære, whether such an order ought, in general, to be made without ascertaining the consent of the married woman by a separate examination in the ordinary way. Ib.

Application—Service on Trustees.]—On an application by a married woman, under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, for liberty to bind her life interest by way of mortgage, notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation, it is not necessary to serve the trustees of the settlement. Little, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 872; 36 Ch. D. 701; 57 L. T. 583—C. A.

4. Wife's Debts and Liabilities.

a. Ante-nuptial.

By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 13, a woman after her marriage shall continue to be liable in respect and to the extent of her separate property for all debts contracted, and all contracts entered into or wrongs committed by her before her marriage, including any sums for which she may be liable as a contributory, either before or after she has been placed on the list of contributories, under and by virtue of the acts relating to joint-stock companies; and she may be sued for any such debt and for any liability in damages or otherwise under any such contract, or in respect of any such wrong; and all sums recovered against her in respect thereof, or for any costs relating thereto, shall be payable out of her separate property; and, as between her and her husband, unless there be any contract between them to the contrary, her separate property shall be deemed to be primarily liable for all such debts, contracts or wrongs, and for all damages or costs recovered in respect thereof: Provided always, that nothing in this act shall operate to increase or diminish the liability of any woman married before the commencement of this act for any such debt, contract or wrong, as aforesaid, except as to any separate property to which she may become entitled by virtue of this act, and to which she would not have been entitled for her separate use under the acts hereby repealed or otherwise, if this act had not passed.

For what Debts, &c., Liable.]—When a married woman contracts a debt which she can only satisfy out of her separate estate, her separate estate will, in equity, be made liable for the debt. Picard v. Hine, L. R. 5 Ch. 274; 18 W. R. 178.

See the judgments in London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lempriere, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426; 42 L. J., P. C. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 572; 29 L. T. 186; 21 W. R. 513.

Debts contracted before Marriage.]—Property which is settled by a woman upon marriage to her separate use is liable, after her husband's bankruptcy, for debts contracted by her before her marriage. Chubb v. Stretch, 39 L. J., Ch. 329; L. R. 9 Eq. 555; 22 L. T. 86; 18 W. R. 483.

A married woman was sued without her husband for debts contracted before her marriage. By her ante-nuptial settlement it was agreed that all property coming to her or to her husband in her right during the coverture should be vested in two trustees, except jewels, which were to be for her separate use. The creditors obtained judgment, and issued execution against her separate estate. The sheriff seized jewels which belonged to her before her marriage, and an interpleader action was commenced between her husband and the execution creditor. The jury found that the jewels belonged to the husband:—Held, on an application for a new trial, that the jewels belonged to the wife for her separate use, and that the execution creditor was entitled to seize them. Williams v. Mercier or Mercier v. Williams, 51 L. J., Q. B. 594; 9 Q. B. D. 337; 47 L. T. 140; 30 W. R. 720—C. A.

By a settlement executed on the second marriage of the Countess of K., to which her husband was a party, her property, consisting of her jointure settled on her first marriage, a life interest in a money charge, and certain furniture, was assigned to trustees in trust for her separate use, without power of anticipation, but if he should survive her, then after her decease, as to all such part of the moneys as should not have been spent or disposed of by her in her lifetime, as she should by will appoint, and, in default of appointment, in trust for the persons who would have been entitled as her next of kin under the Statute of Distributions, if she had died without being under coverture. The Countess of K., after her second marriage, retained that title, having contracted debts before and after marriage. She died intestate, entitled to apportioned parts of the jointure and interest on the charge, and some personal estate not included in the settlement. Her husband, who survived her, became her administrator. Her daughter by her first marriage was her next of kin:—Held, first, that the trusts in favour of the next of kin, as to the part of the separate estate which she should not spend or dispose of, was valid against the husband. Secondly, that the debts contracted before the second marriage should be paid pari passu out of the apportioned parts of the separate estate and the general personal estate. Thirdly, that the debts contracted after the marriage should be paid out of the separate estate. Turner v. Caulfield, 7 L. R., Ir. 347.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1870, does not free the husband from liability to be sued as the wife's administrator for debts contracted before the marriage. Ib.

A debt contracted by a wife before marriage survives against her upon the death of her husband. Woodman v. Chapman, 1 Camp. 189; 10 R. R. 666.

Judgment against Wife alone.]—A married woman is liable at common law for a debt contracted before her marriage. The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, leaves that liability untouched, and judgment can therefore be obtained against her personally. Robinson v. Lynes, 63 L. J., Q. B. 759; [1894] 2 Q. B. 577; 10 R. 448; 71 L. T. 249; 43 W. R. 62—D.

Judgment against the Wife—Action against Husband.]—A judgment having been recovered by the plaintiff in an action brought against a married woman under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 13, for a debt incurred by her before marriage, but such judgment remaining unsatisfied because she had no separate estate, an action for the debt was afterwards brought by the plaintiff against the husband, who had acquired property from his wife to an amount exceeding the debt:—Held, that the judgment recovered against the wife was no defence to the action against the husband. Beck v. Pierce, 58 L. J., Q. B. 516; 23 Q. B. D. 316; 61 L. T. 448; 38 W. R. 29; 54 J. P. 198—C. A.

—— Statute of Limitations.]—A husband cannot be made liable under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 14, 15, for an ante-nuptial debt of the wife which accrued due against the wife more than six years before the commencement of the action. Ib.

Promise to Pay—Estoppel.]—A feme sole possessed of farms and farming stock was indebted for goods supplied to her before her marriage, when a settlement was executed, disposing of the farms upon certain trusts (the stock being mentioned in the recitals only). After the marriage the husband promised the creditor to see him paid, and the creditor, at the husband's request, gave time for payment, and continued to supply goods upon credit to the husband and wife. The husband afterwards repudiated his liability for the ante-nuptial debt. In an action against the husband and wife for the whole debt, including goods supplied before and after the marriage:—Held, that even assuming that the husband had not acquired, or become entitled to property in right of his wife, he was liable for the goods supplied before as well as after the marriage. Quinn v. Moloney, 28 L. R., Ir. 12.

Restraint on Anticipation — Marriage after 1882.]—A clause restraining alienation in a settlement made upon a feme sole by another person, of property settled to her separate use, will not, on the clause becoming operative, by her marrying after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, protect such property from the claims of her ante-nuptial creditors. Kirk v. Murphy, 30 L. R., Ir. 508.

—— Married Women's Property Act, 1870.]—Income settled to the separate use of a married woman is liable, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, for her debts contracted before marriage, although it is subject to restraint on anticipation. London and Provincial Bank v. Bogle, 47 L. J., Ch. 301; 7 Ch. D. 773; 37 L. T. 780; 26 W. R. 573.

Section 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, which makes any property belonging to a married woman for her separate use liable to satisfy her debts contracted before marriage, extends to property settled to the separate use of a married woman without power of anticipation.—A husband and wife were sued in respect of debts of the wife contracted before their marriage, which took place after the coming into operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, and before the coming into operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and judgment was recovered against them. The wife was possessed of property which upon her marriage was settled to her separate use without power of anticipation:—Held, that the wife's property was liable to satisfy the judgment. Sanger v. Sanger (L. R. 11 Eq. 470) approved. Axford v. Reid, 58 L. J., Q. B. 230; 22 Q. B. D. 548; 60 L. T. 726; 37 W. R. 291; 53 J. P. 611—C. A.

—— Debt contracted during former Marriage.]—By s. 13 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a woman after her marriage shall continue to be liable in respect and to the extent of her separate property for "all debts contracted by her before her marriage." By s. 19, nothing in this act shall affect any settlement made respecting the property of any married woman, or render inoperative any restriction against anticipation; but no restriction made in any settlement of a woman's own property to be made or entered into by herself shall have any validity against "debts contracted by her before marriage." Judgment for a sum of money was recovered against a married woman, who subsequently obtained a dissolution of her marriage, and married again; and by a settlement made by her on the second marriage property belonging to her was settled to her separate use without power of anticipation:—Held, that the judgment debt was a "debt contracted before her marriage" within the meaning of s. 13, so that the defendant continued to be liable for it after her second marriage; and also that it was a "debt contracted before marriage" within the meaning of s. 19, so that the restriction upon anticipation contained in the settlement had no validity against it. Jay v. Robinson, 59 L. J., Q. B. 367; 25 Q. B. D. 467; 63 L. T. 174; 38 W. R. 550—C. A.

—— Devised Real Estate—Liability of Devisee.]—The liability, under the acts 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 47, of a devisee of land, who alienates the land, to the unpaid debts of the testator, is such that, on the alienation, the debts become his own debts to the extent of the value of the land alienated. Consequently, when a woman to whom land had been devised settled it on her marriage, after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, the first trust being for herself absolutely until the marriage, and, after its solemnisation, on trust for herself for her life, without power of anticipation, with remainder on trusts for the issue of the marriage:—Held, that the testator's personal estate being insufficient to pay his debts, the life interest of the settlor was, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation, liable to make good the deficiency, to the extent of the value of the devised land; her liability to satisfy the debts of the testator, which arose on her alienation of the land by the settlement, being a debt "contracted by her before marriage," within the meaning of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. Sanger v. Sanger (L. R. 11 Eq. 470) and London and Provincial Bank v. Bogle (7 Ch. D. 773) followed. Hedgely, In re, Small v. Hedgely, 56 L. J., Ch. 360; 34 Ch. D. 379; 56 L. T. 19; 35 W. R. 472.

Court will not restrain Alienation pending Action.]—Therefore, in an action to obtain payment of the debt of a married woman out of her separate property, an application before the hearing for an injunction to restrain the married woman from alienating her separate property was refused. Wayford v. Heyl, 44 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 20 Eq. 321; 33 L. T. 155; 23 W. R. 848.

In an action by a creditor to enforce against the separate estate of a married woman a general engagement entered into with her on the credit of that estate, the court will not, before the creditor has established his right by obtaining a judgment, restrain the married woman from dealing with her separate estate. Robinson v. Pickering, 50 L. J., Ch. 527; 16 Ch. D. 660; 44 L. T. 165; 29 W. R. 385—C. A.

i. Cases before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

General Engagements of Married Women.]—A married woman cannot bind herself by contract, but equity holds that she may, by contract, bind her separate estate. Her separate estate will be liable to pay any debt of hers which she has secured by writing. Equity has also held, that it is sufficient if it is shown that the married woman verbally promised that her debt should be paid out of her separate estate. Shattock v. Shattock, 35 Beav. 489; 35 L. J., Ch. 509; L. R. 2 Eq. 182; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 405; 14 W. R. 600.

The principle of courts of equity is, that, as regards her separate estate, a married woman is a feme sole, and can act as such; but this is only so far as is consistent with the other principle—viz., that a married woman cannot enter into a contract. Ib.

When a married woman, who is entitled to separate estate, has entered into a contract on the faith of that estate, the person with whom she has so contracted has a right to come to the court of chancery in order to reach the separate estate by a kind of equitable execution. Picard v. Hine, L. R. 5 Ch. 274; 18 W. R. 178.

The general engagements of a married woman are enforced by a court of equity against her separate estate, not as executions of a power of appointment, but on the principle that to whatever extent she has, by the terms of the settlement, the power of dealing with her separate property, she has also the other power incident to property in general, namely, the power of contracting debts to be paid out of it. Owens v. Dickenson, Cr. & Ph. 48; 4 Jur. 1151. Affirming 3 Beav. 48.

The separate estate of a married woman is bound by her debts, obligations, and engagements, contracted for herself upon the credit of that estate; and whether such obligations were so contracted must be judged of by the circumstances of each particular case. Matthewman's case, Leeds Banking Co., In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 90; L. R. 3 Eq. 781; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 15 L. T. 266; 15 W. R. 146. And see Bolden v. Nicolay, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 884; Bolton v. Williams, 2 Ves. J. 145; 4 Bro. C. C. 297; Clerk v. Miller, 2 Atk. 379; and Hughes, In re, Brandon v. Hughes, 67 L. J., Ch. 279; [1898] 1 Ch. 529.

Taking Shares.] — There is nothing in the nature of a company, in the absence of any special clauses in the deed of settlement, to prevent a married woman being a shareholder in her own right, so as to bind her separate estate. Ib.

Writing not necessary.]—The separate estate of a feme covert is liable in equity when she has obtained goods upon credit, though there is no contract in writing, nor reference to her separate estate. Burke v. Tuite, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 467.

But if the separate estate is an interest in realty, the provisions of the Statute of Frauds prevent such liability being enforced if there is no writing. Ib.

Semble, that the separate estate of a feme covert is liable in equity to her general engagements, as well upon an implied undertaking, as by a written obligation. Murray v. Barlee, 3 Myl. & K. 209; 3 L. J., Ch. 184. And see 4 Sim. 82; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 87.

Concurrence of Trustee not necessary.]—A married woman having separate property may, by her contract, bind that property, even without the concurrence of her trustees, nor is it necessary that she should, in such contract, expressly refer to it. Dowling v. Maguire, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 1 and 2.

Wife must have Separate Property at Date of Contract.]—The contracts of a married woman can only be enforced against property which formed part of her separate estate at the date of the contract. Gaffee, In re (1 Mac. & G. 541), Molyneux's Estate, In re (L. R. 6 Eq. 411), and Sturgis v. Corp (13 Ves. 190) discussed. King v. Lucas, 53 L. J., Ch. 64; 23 Ch. D. 712; 49 L. T. 216; 31 W. R. 904—C. A. Smith v. Lucas, 18 Ch. D. 531; 45 L. T. 460; 30 W. R. 451.

Held, by Malins, V.-C., that the general engagements of a married woman entitled to separate estate will be enforced by a court of equity against such separate estate as she has at the time when judgment is given, including (if her husband be then dead) estate limited to her separate use, without power of anticipation:—But held, on appeal, that they can be enforced only against so much of the separate estate to which she was entitled, free from any restraint on anticipation, at the time when the engagements were entered into, as remains at the time when judgment is given, and not against separate estate to which she became entitled after the time of the engagements, nor against separate estate to which she was entitled at the time of the engagements subject to a restraint on anticipation. Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 50 L. J., Ch. 394; 17 Ch. D. 454; 44 L. T. 562; 29 W. R. 551—C. A.

Credit Given to Separate Property.]—Something more than the obligation which the law would create in the case of a single woman is necessary to affect the separate estate of a married woman; and in order to bind the separate estate by a general engagement, it should appear that an engagement was made with reference to and upon the faith or credit of that estate. Johnson v. Gallagher, 3 De G., F. & J. 494; 30 L. J., Ch. 298; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 273; 4 L. T. 72; 9 W. R. 506.

A married woman living apart from her husband, and having separate estate, carried on trade; after the death of her husband, tradesmen who had supplied her with goods in her trade filed a bill against her and her trustees for an account of her separate estate, and payment out of it of their demands for the price of the goods. Pending the suit she mortgaged the property which had been her separate estate, for valuable consideration, to an extent exceeding its value:—Held, that the dealings with the tradesmen were not such as to give them any remedy against the property which had been the separate estate. Ib.

A wife was left by her husband at an hotel at Baden Baden, at which they had been staying together. The landlord caused her to be detained for payment of the unsettled hotel bills. In order to get away she gave a memorandum, stating "the debt of Madame B. was 5,000 florins":—Held, there had been no credit given to her separate estate, and that, under the circumstances of the arrest, the words "the debt of Madame B." did not bind her separate estate. Bromley, In re, Bromley v. Norton, 27 L. T. 478; 21 W. R. 155. And see Littlefield v. Shee, 2 B. & Ad. 811; 1 L. J., K. B. 12.

Receiver of Rents—Elegit.]—Where by marriage settlement, freehold lands of the wife were conveyed to trustees upon trust to pay the rents and profits, after payment of the head rent and renewal fines, to the wife, during her life, to her separate use, and a judgment was afterwards obtained against the husband and wife, the court refused to appoint a receiver over such separate estate upon the petition of the judgment creditors under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 55, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105; holding, that the separate estate of a feme covert is cognisable only in a court of equity; that her right of disposition over it is not within the meaning of a "disposing power" in s. 19 of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105; and that that section does not render extendible under an elegit any species of trust estate which was not extendible under the Statute of Frauds. Digby v. Irvine, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 149.

Payment of Dividends to Sequestrator of Wife's Estate.]—The court will, upon petition, order dividends accrued due upon a fund in court, settled to the separate use of a wife for life, without power of anticipation, to be paid to the sequestrator of her estate. Claydon v. Finch, 28 L. T. 101.

Creditor has no Charge on Separate Estate.]—The circumstance that the separate estate of a married woman is liable for general engagements does not give her creditors any charge upon the separate property. National Provincial Bank of England v. Thomas, 24 W. R. 1013.

Marriage during Pending Proceedings.]—Where a woman married when proceedings were pending between her and others, which resulted after her marriage in a statutory debt being created:—Held, that her separate property was chargeable with the payment of such debt. London Corporation v. Brooke, 1 Cab. & E. 169.

Statute of Limitations.]—Moneys advanced by a stranger in providing necessaries for the support of a married woman, living separate from her husband, are debts binding her separate estate; and, being debts payable out of funds held in trust for her separate use, are not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Barber, In re, Hodgson v. Williamson, 15 Ch. D. 87; 42 L. T. 676; 28 W. R. 944. See infra, col. 1117.

Compromise.]—A married woman having property to her separate use, without power of anticipation, had power to bind the corpus of the estate by a compromise entered into by her. Wilton v. Hill, 25 L. J., Ch. 156; 4 W. R. 66.

Appointment under General Power makes Property Assets.] — The property of a married woman settled as she should appoint by deed or will, and in default of appointment to her for life for her separate use, with remainder, if she survive her husband, to her executors, administrators, and assigns, without restraint on anticipation, is in equity separate estate for the purpose of being bound by her general engagements. Mayd v. Field, 45 L. J., Ch. 699; 3 Ch. D. 587; 34 L. T. 614; 24 W. R. 660.

The property of a married woman, settled by an ante-nuptial settlement for her separate use for life, with remainder as she should by deed or will appoint, with remainder in failure of appointment to her executors or administrators, is an absolute settlement for her sole and separate use, without restraint on anticipation, and vests in equity the entire corpus in her for all purposes. London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lemprière, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426; L. R. 4 P. C. 572; 29 L. T. 186; 21 W. R. 513.

Property was settled on a married woman for her separate use for life, with remainder for such persons as she should by her will appoint, with remainder, in default of appointment, for her children or her next of kin, and the married woman made a testamentary appointment in favour of her daughter:—Held, that the appointed property was liable to the payment of the appointor's debts as if it were her separate estate. Harvey's Estate, In re, Gilbert v. Harben, 49 L. J., Ch. 3; 13 Ch. D. 216; 28 W. R. 73.

London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lemprière (L. R. 4 P. C. 572) followed. Vaughan v. Vanderstegen (2 Drew. 165) not followed on this point. Ib.

—— Testamentary Power of Appointment.]—In cases not within the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the exercise by the will of a married woman of a general power of appointment, whether the power be exerciseable by deed or will, or by will only, does not make the property appointed liable to engagements entered into with her on the credit of her separate estate. Roper, In re, Roper v. Doncaster, 58 L. J., Ch. 215; 39 Ch. D. 482; 59 L. T. 203; 36 W. R. 750. And see Beecher v. Major, 6 N. R. 351.

Under s. 1, sub-ss. 3 and 4, and s. 4 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, when read together, property appointed by a married woman by will under a general testamentary power, becomes on her death liable for her "debts and other liabilities," even though she may have had no separate estate at the time she contracted them. Ann, In re, Wilson v. Ann, 63 L. J., Ch. 334; [1894] 1 Ch. 549; 70 L. T. 273.

Restraint on Anticipation.]—The Married Women's Property Act, 1870, s. 12, extends to property settled to the separate use of a married woman without power of anticipation. Sanger v. Sanger, 40 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 11 Eq. 470; 24 L. T. 649; 19 W. R. 792.

After the passing of that act, and on the same day on which a marriage took place, but subsequently thereto, judgment was entered up against the wife for a debt incurred previously to the marriage. The judgment creditors subsequently obtained a charging order on her interest in a fund in court, to the income of which she was entitled, for her separate use, without power of anticipation:—Held, that the charging order constituted a valid incumbrance on the fund. Ib.

—— Income Settled to Separate Use.]—Income settled to the separate use of a married woman is liable under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, for her debts contracted before the marriage, although it is subject to restraint on anticipation. London and Provincial Bank v. Bogle, 47 L. J., Ch. 301; 7 Ch. D. 773; 37 L. T. 780; 26 W. R. 573.

In an action in the queen's bench division against a husband and wife jointly for a debt contracted by the wife before marriage, costs of defence were recovered by the husband under the Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 50), s. 3, and were paid to him by the plaintiff. In a subsequent action (commenced by the plaintiff in the chancery division for the purpose of enforcing the judgment obtained by him in the first action against the wife) the same costs were ordered to be repaid to the plaintiff out of the wife's separate estate. Ib.

Joint and Several Promissory Note.]—A woman, married since the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, joined her husband in signing a joint and several promissory note for money lent to him. The husband became bankrupt:—Held, that her separate estate was liable for the amount due on the note, and that it was not necessary to make any trustees for the wife parties to the action. Davies v. Jenkins, 6 Ch. D. 728; 26 W. R. 260.

Real and personal estate was given by will to A. and B. to permit X. to receive the income during his life, remainder to the use of an infant. On the death of X., leaving his widow and the infant otherwise unprovided for, the court made an order for the payment of the whole income of the property for her maintenance, to the widow by A. and B. Shortly afterwards the circumstances of the widow improved, but A. and B., till the death of B. in 1851, and after that event A. alone, still paid the gross income (without ever paying succession duty) to the widow during the minority of the child. The child attained twenty-one in 1873, married, and sought to charge A. and the estate of B. with, first, excess of payments for maintenance, having regard to the widow's altered circumstances; second, dilapidations; third, amount paid for succession duty, with interest:—Held, first, that the order was a protection during the joint lives of A. and B., but that the trust so created did not survive, and that an inquiry must therefore be directed whether A. properly paid the whole income from 1861. Brown v. Smith, 46 L. J., Ch. 866.

Held, secondly, that they were under no liability for dilapidations; third, that they were liable for succession duty, but not for the interest. Ib.

The widow, in 1863, married J. W., who died in 1872. On the 7th May, 1874, she married R. W. The infant sought to charge J. W.'s estate, her separate estate, if any, and R. W. in the same way:—Held, first, that J. W.'s liability in respect as well of his wife's receipt of income from 1861 to 1863, as of her accountability for succession duty, terminated with the coverture. Ib.

Held, secondly, that R. W. was similarly protected by s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that J. W.'s estate was liable for the receipts of income from 1863 to 1872. Ib.

Receipt of Assets by Husband need not be Alleged.]—In an action against a husband and wife married since the Married Women's Property Act, 1874, for the recovery of a debt of the wife contracted before the marriage, it is not necessary that the statement of claim should allege that the husband has received assets of the wife: it is sufficient that it should simply allege that the husband is liable for the debt, leaving it to the husband to exercise his option of pleading non-liability under the provisions of the act. A demurrer by the husband to the plaintiff's statement of claim in such an action, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to allege that the husband had received assets, was therefore overruled. The effect of the Married Women's Property Acts, 1870 (s. 12) and 1874, considered. Matthews v. Whittle, 49 L. J., Ch. 359; 13 Ch. D. 811; 43 L. T. 114; 28 W. R. 822.

Payment of Accumulated Dividends to Sequestrator—Restraint on Anticipation.]—The court will, upon petition, order dividends accrued due upon a fund in court, settled to the separate use of a wife for life, without power of anticipation, to be paid to the sequestrator of her estate. Claydon v. Finch, 42 L. J., Ch. 416; L. R. 15 Eq. 266; 28 L. T. 101.

Bankruptcy.]—A married woman cannot be a debtor, and therefore cannot be made bankrupt, even though she has separate estate and has contracted engagements after her marriage. Jones, Ex parte, Grissell, In re, 48 L. J., Bk. 109; 12 Ch. D. 484; 40 L. T. 790; 28 W. R. 287; 44 J. P. 55. But see now Married Women's Property Act, 1882, col. 1115, in case of a married woman trading separately.

Annuity—Grant of.]—An annuity granted by a feme covert, having a power to dispose of her separate estate, to A., a young lady upon her marriage, for whom she promised to provide, is a specific lien on the grantor's estates. Power v. Bailey, 1 Ball & B. 49.

—— Wife not Joining in Operative Part of Deed.]—Where a wife was a party to and executed a deed, charging her separate property with payment of an annuity, but did not join in the operative part or the covenants :—Held, that there was no charge on the separate estate. Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 Beav. 319 ; 5 Jur. 601.

—— Restraint on Anticipation.]—A testator devised certain real estates to trustees, upon trust for A. for her life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation. A. was a single woman at the date of the will, and at the death of the testator, and there was no gift over in case of her attempting to alien. She afterwards married, and she and her husband granted an annuity, and charged it on the property devised to her in the manner before mentioned :—Held, that the gift to her separate use, and also the restraint upon alienation, were valid and effectual, and that the annuitant had no claim on the property so devised. S. C., 1 Beav. 1 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 19 ; 2 Jur. 912. Affirmed, 4 Myl. & C. 377 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 41. And see Scarborough v. Borman, 1 Beav. 34 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 22 ; 2 Jur. 915. Affirmed, 4 Myl. & C. 377, 407 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 48 ; 4 Jur. 38.

—— Avoidance of—Wife "doing Equity."]—Where wife sues (which she ought to do) to avoid an annuity charged by her on her separate estate, on account of defect of memorial. the maxim, "he that will have equity," &c., does not apply to compel her to repay the consideration money, nor can it be recovered against her. Aguilar v. Aguilar, 5 Madd. 414. And see Jones v. Harris, 9 Ves. 486 ; 7 R. R. 282.

Bond by Feme Covert.]—Bond of a feme covert, jointly with her husband, shall bind her separate property. Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. C. C. 16 ; Dick. 560 ; Standford v. Marshall, 2 Atk. 69. See also Anon., 18 Ves. 258 ; 11 R. R. 194.

—— As Surety.]—Bond by feme covert as surety, enforced against her separate estate under a settlement to her separate use, with power of appointment by will, &c., and in case she should die in life of husband, and without making any will, as to the whole or any part, then as to the whole or such part, as to which no gift or disposition should be made, to the persons who would be entitled by statute if she had died intestate and unmarried. Heatley v. Thomas, 15 Ves. 596 ; 10 R. R. 122.

Rent — Agreement to Pay.] — A married woman, having separate property, and who was living apart from her husband, made an agreement to take the lease of a dwelling-house :—Held, that to the extent of her separate property she was liable to pay the rent. Gaston v. Frankum, 2 De G. & Sm. 561 ; 13 Jur. 739. And see Master v. Fuller, 1 Ves. J. 513 ; 4 Bro. C. C. 19.

Wife Surety for Husband's Mortgage Debt.]—A married woman, entitled for her separate use, mortgaged her renewable leasehold estate as surety for her husband. The husband covenanted with the mortgagee to pay the money, and also gave him a judgment. The husband renewed the lease, and paid the fine. The lease was granted to the husband and wife, their executors, administrators, and assigns. The wife survived. The executor of the husband paid off the mortgage debt, and took an assignment of the mortgage. There were other creditors, and the estate was insolvent. In a creditor's suit against the executor of the husband, the wife made a claim to have her estate re-assigned to her, discharged of the mortgage debt and the renewal fine :—Held, that the husband's estate was solely liable for the mortgage debt ; that the creditors of the husband had no right to marshal the assets, or to compel the mortgagee to resort to the wife's leaseholds ; that the fine was not an advancement by the husband for the benefit of the wife ; that the executor was an incumbrancer on the wife's leaseholds for the amount of the fine ; and, subject to the payment of the fine, the wife's claim must be allowed. Eyton v. Broughton, 1 Eq. R. 164.

Wife Depositing Bond as Collateral Security.]—A bond was vested in a trustee in trust, as to income, for a married woman for her life for her separate use, with remainder ; as to the corpus, in trust for her issue ; and in default of issue, in trust for such persons as the married woman alone, notwithstanding her coverture, should by deed or instrument in writing, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two credible witnesses, appoint. The husband being indebted to his bankers on the balance of an account current, the married woman deposited the bond with the bankers, with a letter signed by her to the effect that in consideration of the bankers paying or having already paid the cheques of the husband or otherwise advancing him sums of money, she thereby guaranteed the repayment thereof ; and that she deposited as a collateral security the bond, which she undertook to assign to the bankers on request :—Held, that the consideration was sufficient, and that the separate life-interest of the wife was effectually charged ; but that, the letter not having been executed and attested as required by the power, the court would not under the circumstances give effect to it as an appointment. Tuckwell v. Gardiner, 5 De G. & Sm. 58 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 777 ; 16 Jur. 588.

Trustee Induced to take Shares—Indemnity against Contribution.]—A married woman, having property settled to her separate use, with a restraint against anticipation, and having separate property not subject to such restraint, induced one of her trustees to apply for, and accept in his own name, certain shares in a banking company, upon the undertaking that she would pay for them out of the savings of her separate income. The bank shortly afterwards failed, and the trustee was made a contributory, and paid calls in the winding up :—Held, that he was entitled to indemnity out of such part of the separate estate of his cestui que trust as was not subject to the restraint against anticipation. Butler v. Cumpston, 38 L. J., Ch. 35 ; L. R. 7 Eq. 16 ; 17 W. R. 24.

Held, also, that a fund representing savings out of the separate income which she had from time to time, partly before and partly after the transaction, invested in the names of her trustees, but without their knowledge and without any express declaration of trust, was available for the indemnity. Ib. And see Leeds Banking Co., In re, L. R. 3 Eq. 781.

Parochial Rates—Married Woman Rated as

Owner—Non-payment—Agreement—Imprisonment.]—A married woman rated as owner of hereditaments under s. 4 of the Poor Rate Assessment Act, 1869, is liable to be imprisoned on non-payment of parochial rates, in default of sufficient goods being found whereon to levy distress. The notice given by an owner under s. 4 does not constitute an agreement between such owner and the overseers. Allen (Elizabeth), In re, 63 L. J., M. C. 267; [1894] 2 Q. B. 924; 10 R. 514; 43 W. R. 141; 59 J. P. 229.

ii. Cases since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1 (2).]—A married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of and to the extent of her separate property on any contract, and of suing and being sued, either in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme sole, and her husband need not be joined with her as plaintiff or defendant, or be made a party to any action or other legal proceeding brought by or taken against her; and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her separate property; and any damages or costs recovered against her in any such action or proceeding shall be payable out of her separate property, and not otherwise.

Married Women's Property Act, 1893, s. 1.]—Every contract hereafter entered into by a married woman, otherwise than as agent, (a) shall be deemed to be a contract entered into by her with respect to and to bind her separate property, whether she is or is not in fact possessed of or entitled to any separate property at the time when she enters into such contract; (b) shall bind all separate property which she may at that time or thereafter be possessed of or entitled to; (c) shall also be enforceable by process of law against all property which she may thereafter while discovert be possessed of or entitled to: Provided that nothing in this section contained shall render available to satisfy any liability or obligation arising out of such contract any separate property which at that time or thereafter she is restrained from anticipating.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1, sub-s. 4, not Retrospective.]—Sub-section 4 of s. 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which enacts that a married woman's contract with respect to her separate property shall bind not only the separate property to which she is entitled at the date of the contract, but all which she shall subsequently acquire, is not retrospective, and does not apply to a married woman's engagements made before the act. Roper. In re, Roper v. Doncaster, 58 L. J., Ch. 215; 39 Ch. D. 482; 59 L. T. 203; 36 W. R. 750.

Sub-section 4 of s. 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is not retrospective, and, therefore, in an action on a contract made by a married woman before the passing of that act, judgment cannot be ordered in such terms as to be available against separate property to which the defendant became entitled after the date of the contract. Turnbull v. Forman, 54 L. J., Q. B. 489; 15 Q. B. D. 234; 53 L. T. 128; 33 W. R. 768; 49 J. P. 708—C. A. And see Davies v. Stanford, 61 L. T. 234; and Conolan v. Leyland, 27 Ch. D. 632.

Contract—Existence of Separate Estate at Time of Contract—Onus of Proof.]—Under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman cannot make a contract in respect of and to bind her separate estate unless she has separate property at the time of making the contract. Therefore, in an action upon a contract made by a married woman, it lies upon the plaintiff to show that she had separate property at the time when she made the contract. Palliser v. Gurney, infra (19 Q. B. D. 519), approved. Stogdon v. Lee. 60 L. J., Q. B. 669; [1891] 1 Q. B. 661; 64 L. T. 494; 39 W. R. 467; 55 J. P. 533—C. A.

—— Onus of Proof.]—Section 2, sub-s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not make a married woman capable of rendering herself liable in respect of her separate property on any contract unless she has some separate property at the time the contract is made. In an action against a married woman to recover the price of goods sold and delivered to her:—Held, that the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the defendant had separate property at the time she made the contract. Palliser v. Gurney, 56 L. J., Q. B. 546; 19 Q. B. D. 519; 35 W. R. 760; 51 J. P. 520. And see Shakespear, In re, Deakin v. Lakin, 55 L. J., Ch. 44; 30 Ch. D. 169; 53 L. T. 145; 33 W. R. 744.

—— Evidence of Separate Property.]—In an action by certain jewellers against a married woman for jewellery supplied, the jury found that she had purchased the goods "on her own credit for her own use as her separate estate." According to the evidence, the only separate estate existing at the time of the contract was certain other jewellery previously supplied by the plaintiffs and a wardrobe of dresses, furs, and jackets, and there was no evidence of any separate property being subsequently acquired other than these:—Held, upon motion for judgment, that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment, on the ground that such separate property was property in respect of which the married woman might reasonably be deemed to have contracted credit within the meaning of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and that the words "unless the contrary be shown" in sub-s. 3 of s. 1 of that act, only admit of evidence of the fact of there being no such separate property in respect of which a married woman could reasonably be deemed to have contracted and not of any intention or absence of intention, of the married woman so to contract, at the time of making the contract or getting credit. Leak v. Driffield (24 Q. B. D. 98) distinguished. Bonner v. Lyon, 38 W. R. 541.

Question of Reasonable Inference—Clothing bought with Separate Income.]—An action of contract against a married woman, under s. 1, sub-s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is answered, if it appears that, at the time of entering into the contract, the married woman had not any separate property which she could reasonably be supposed to have intended to bind. A married woman was entitled to the income of certain stock for her separate use without power of anticipation. At the time of entering into the contract sued upon she had spent all the income then accrued in clothing for herself and her children:—Held, that it was unreasonable to suppose that she intended to bind the clothing by her contract. Leak v. Driffield, 59 L. J., Q.

B. 89; 24 Q. B. D. 98; 61 L. T. 771; 38 W. R. 93.

—— Jewellery and Clothing.]—In an action against a married woman upon a balance of account for goods supplied, it was proved that she was entitled to an income of 300*l.* a year, subject to a restraint on anticipation; this income her trustee received and paid it over to her, and she paid bills with it and kept some portion for her own immediate use. It was also proved that she lived in a house rent free which she had let on two occasions and received the sums paid for rent. She also had some jewellery and wearing apparel of value:—Held, that there was ample evidence to show that the defendant had sufficient separate estate at the times she bought the goods, and, therefore, that she was liable for the sum claimed. Everett v. Paxton, 65 L. T. 383; 56 J. P. 230.

—— Free separate Property £3 or £4.]—Where a married woman entered into a covenant in a mortgage deed for the payment of 400*l.*, and the only free separate estate that she had at the date of the covenant was about 3*l.* or 4*l.*:—Held, that there was no presumption of law that the contract was entered into with respect to, and to bind such small separate estate, and that the contract was not binding. Braunstein v. Lewis, 65 L. T. 449; 55 J. P. 775—C. A.

—— Divorce Proceedings—Costs of Solicitor.]—A married woman, having either no separate property, or only separate property subject to a restraint on anticipation, who institutes divorce proceedings after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, cannot be deemed under the act to have entered into a contract, with respect to her separate property, for payment of the costs of her solicitor incurred in the divorce proceedings. Harrison v. Harrison, 58 L. J., P. 28; 13 P. D. 180; 60 L. T. 39; 36 W. R. 748—C. A.

—— Action by Executors against Legatee for Indemnity.]—A married woman became entitled to the residue of a testator's estate for her separate use. A part of the residue consisted of certain shares not fully paid up. The certificates for the shares were handed to her by the executors, but no transfer was executed. A call was afterwards made on the shares, which the married woman refused to pay. The executors commenced an action against the married woman for an indemnity:—Held, that they were entitled thereto; that the words "or otherwise" in s. 1, sub-s. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, gave the executors the right to sue her in respect of her separate estate. The object and effect of s. 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is to enable a married woman to be sued on any cause of action on which a man can be sued, subject to the fact that her power to contract is limited, and the remedy against her is confined to her separate estate. Kershaw, In re, Whittaker v. Kershaw, 60 L. J., Ch. 9; 45 Ch. D. 320; 63 L. T. 203; 39 W. R. 23—C. A.

Post-nuptial Settlement of Wife's Property made after Debt contracted—Validity of.]—A woman at the time of her marriage in December, 1882, being then an infant, was entitled to a sum of money absolutely for her separate use, and to certain freeholds. After her marriage, and while still an infant, she contracted a debt for which judgment was recovered against her separate estate. After this debt was contracted, and before the woman attained her majority, a post-nuptial settlement of all the property was made in 1884 under the Infants' Settlement Act, to the wife for her life for her sole and separate use with a restraint on anticipation, and after her death to her husband and children. This settlement was approved by the chancery division of the high court. The judgment creditor applied to have a receiver appointed of the property, upon the ground that such settlement was void as against creditors under the last clause of s. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882:—Held, that the settlement, though made after the debt was contracted, was valid as against creditors by virtue of the first part of s. 19 of the act, and that the judgment creditor was not entitled to have a receiver appointed. Hemingway v. Braithwaite, 61 L. T. 224.

Post-nuptial Settlement before 1882—Contract during Coverture.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, made before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, property devised by will to a married woman for her separate use without restraint against anticipation was limited to her for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the children. The wife after the act and during coverture made a promissory note in favour of the plaintiffs, and after the death of the husband the plaintiffs obtained judgment upon the note against the widow and an order for the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of the property in settlement:—Held, that upon the true construction of the act, ss. 1, 5, and 19, the property in settlement was not liable to satisfy the judgment, and that the order appointing the receiver must be discharged. Beckett v. Tasker, 19 Q. B. D. 7; 56 L. T. 636; 36 W. R. 158.

Undertaking as to Damages.]—Where an injunction is wrongly granted, an undertaking as to damages given to the plaintiff is equally enforceable whether the mistake was in point of law or in point of fact. In such a case a husband-defendant is not prohibited from enforcing an undertaking given by a wife-plaintiff by reason of the provision in the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 12, debarring him from suing his wife in tort. A married woman who has given an undertaking as to damages since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, will be dealt with on the same footing as that on which a married woman's next friend who had given such an undertaking would have been dealt with before the act. Hunt v. Hunt, 54 L. J., Ch. 289.

A married woman living and carrying on business apart from her husband brought her action for specific performance of an alleged agreement to grant a lease, and moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from dealing with the property. The defendant alleged that the plaintiff had not sufficient separate property to satisfy her present liabilities, and that her undertaking in damages would be illusory, and asked for the undertaking of some responsible person:—Held, that since a married woman was for the purpose of suing in the same position as a feme sole, no distinction could be made between her and a male plaintiff; and that, therefore, her sole undertaking for damages was sufficient. Pike v. Care, 62 L. J., Ch. 937 ; 68 L. T. 650.

Action brought before, Order of Reference by Consent after Act.]—Section 1, sub-ss. 3 and 4 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, have not a retrospective operation so as to include contracts entered into by a married woman before the date of the commencement of the act. But an order made after the commencement of the act by consent in an action by a creditor against a married woman in respect of her contract before the act, by which order all questions under the contract were referred to an arbitrator, and the parties bound themselves to abide by, obey, perform, and keep the award, is an agreement by the married woman after the commencement of the act, within s. 1, sub-s. 3 ; and therefore, by s. 1, sub-s. 4, any separate estate which she had at or after the date of such agreement is liable to pay the amount found by the award to be due from her under the contract. Conolan v. Leyland, 54 L. J., Ch. 123 ; 27 Ch. D. 632 ; 51 L. T. 895.

Debt Contracted during Marriage — Death of Husband — Restraint on Anticipation.] — A judgment, in respect of a contractual liability incurred by a woman during coverture, obtained against her after the death of her husband as against her separate property not subject to any restriction against anticipation, cannot, though she is discovert, be enforced against property which during coverture was her separate estate without power of anticipation. Pelton v. Harrison, 60 L. J., Q. B. 742 ; [1891] 2 Q. B. 422 ; 65 L. T. 514 ; 39 W. R. 689—C. A.

Form of Judgment—Restraint on Anticipation.]—The proper form of judgment against a married woman under, s. 1 sub-s. 2, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, settled by the court. Scott v. Morley, 57 L. J., Q. B. 43 ; 20 Q. B. D. 120 ; 57 L. T. 919 ; 36 W. R. 67 ; 4 Morrell, 286 ; 52 J. P. 230—C. A.

An order, with costs, made against a married woman, suing or sued under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, in respect of her separate property, must contain a restriction in the words of s. 1, sub-s. 2, that the order is "with costs payable out of her separate property and not otherwise," and a proviso limiting execution to her separate property not subject to any restriction against anticipation. Scott v. Morley (20 Q. B. D. 120) followed. Galmoye v. Cowan, 58 L. J., Ch. 769. And see col. 1288.

Form of judgment against a woman married after the accrual of a debt, it being alleged that all her property was put in settlement on her marriage. Findlater's Brewery Co. v. Lynch, 24 L. R. Ir. 249.

Order for Costs against Married Woman—Restraint on Anticipation — Income accrued between commencement of Suit and date of Order.] —A married woman, entitled under a will to separate property without power of anticipation, having been ordered to pay the costs of proceedings taken by her in her own name under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 :—Held, that all income accrued due to the date of the order might be attached in execution. Glanvil, In re (31 Ch. D. 532), distinguished. Cox v. Bennett, 60 L. J., Ch. 651 ; [1891] 1 Ch. 617 ; 64 L. T. 380 ; 39 W. R. 401—C. A.

The will fixed no days for payment of the income to the married woman, but by an order in an administration suit direction was given for quarterly payments :—Held, that the restraint on anticipation did not apply to a balance of income in the hands of the trustees at the date of the order for costs, though by reason of the direction in the administration suit it was not immediately payable to the married woman. Ib.

Settlement made before 1882—Restraint on Anticipation.] — Section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, so far as it affects the validity of a settlement or an agreement for a settlement as against the creditors of a married woman, is not retrospective. Therefore execution cannot issue against property settled before the commencement of the act to the separate use of a married woman without power of anticipation. Smith v. Whitlock, 55 L. J., Q. B. 286 ; 34 W. R. 414.

Equitable Execution—Marriage Settlement—Life Interests of Husband and Wife in use of Furniture—Judgment Creditor of Husband and Wife.]—Under a marriage settlement certain furniture and effects were vested in trustees upon trust to permit the wife to use the same during her life for her sole and separate use, and after her death to permit her husband to use the same during his life, and the settlement contained a power, under certain conditions, to sell the furniture and invest the proceeds, and that the trustees should stand possessed of the annual income therefrom in trust for such persons as the husband and wife should during their joint lives jointly appoint, or as the survivor should appoint, and in default of such appointment for the wife for her life for her sole and separate use, and so that she should not have power to anticipate the same, with other trusts over in favour of the children. Upon an application by a judgment creditor of the husband and wife for the appointment of a receiver of the several interests of the husband and wife under the settlement :—Held, that, having regard to the terms of the settlement, the court had no power to appoint a receiver of the interests of the husband and wife under the settlement. Whitaker v. Cohen, 69 L. T. 451. And see EXECUTION.

Garnishee Proceedings.]—A judgment for a debt against a married woman enforceable only against property to her separate use which she is not restrained from anticipating, is a "judgment" within the meaning of Ord. XLV., r. 1, which entitles the judgment creditor to institute garnishee proceedings, and to attach a debt owing or accruing to such married woman. Holtby v. Hodgson, 61 L. T. 297. Affirmed, 24 Q. B. D. 103 ; 38 W. R. 68—C. A.

Appointment by Married Woman.]—Under s. 1, sub-s. 3, 4, and s. 4 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, when read together, property appointed by a married woman by will under a general testamentary power becomes on her death liable for her "debts and liabilities" even though she may have had no separate estate at the time she contracted them. Ann, In re, Wilson v. Ann, 63 L. J., Ch. 334 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 549 ; 70 L. T. 273. And see De Burgh Lawson, In re, 41 Ch. D. 568.

Debts of Deceased Wife—Administration not taken out—"Legal Personal Representative"—Leasehold Property.]—A husband who jure mariti succeeds to leasehold property which belonged to his deceased wife as separate property, without taking out administration, is her "legal personal representative" within the meaning of s. 23 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, so as to be liable to the extent of such separate property for his wife's debts. Surman v. Wharton, 60 L. J., Q. B. 233; [1891] 1 Q. B. 491; 64 L. T. 866; 39 W. R. 416.

Bankruptcy—Separate Trading—Discontinuance of Business.]—A married woman may be made bankrupt in respect of a debt incurred by her whilst carrying on a trade separately from her husband, notwithstanding that at the date when the act of bankruptcy on which the petition is founded was committed she had ceased to trade. McGeorge, Ex parte, Stevens, In re (51 L. J., Ch. 909; 20 Ch. D. 697), distinguished. Dagnall, In re, Soan, Ex parte, 65 L. J., Q. B. 666; [1896] 2 Q. B. 407; 75 L. T. 142; 45 W. R. 79. See infra, col. 1115.

c. Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes.

Married Woman living Abroad.]—A married woman living abroad, alone, under circumstances which led to the belief that she was a feme sole, indorsed a bill of exchange, and drew a cheque on her London bankers for the purpose of enabling her agent to raise money. The bill and cheque were cashed by a banker at Paris, but were dishonoured:—Held, that her separate estate was liable to make good the amount, irrespectively of any equities between her and her agent. M'Henry v. Davies, 39 L. J., Ch. 866; L. R. 10 Eq. 88; 22 L. T. 643; 18 W. R. 855.

Quære, whether the Statute of Limitations can be pleaded in bar of a bill filed to enforce payment out of the separate estate of a married woman, on a bill of exchange given by her in her separate capacity. Coppin v. Gray, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 205; 11 L. J., Ch. 105; 6 Jur. 512.

—— Executory Settlement.]—A married woman was, under articles for a settlement, seised and possessed of property to be settled upon her for her life for her separate use without any restraint on anticipation. By a subsequent deed (but which was inoperative) the lady and her husband purported to settle the property, with a restraint on anticipation. She carried on the business of an hotel keeper, and in so doing gave the plaintiff (a wine merchant) a bill of exchange accepted by her, to secure a debt. She was possessed of some shares, not included in the articles. The plaintiff dealt with her after her marriage on the same terms as he had done before it, and credited her as a feme sole. Her husband became bankrupt, and the bill was dishonoured:—Held, that so far as the articles were executory, the court would restrain the lady from anticipation. Symonds v. Wilkes, 10 L. T. 153.

Held, also, that the only relief to which the plaintiff was in equity entitled was an inquiry whether any and what separate property of the lady existed that was applicable to the payment of his debt, having regard to the shares, and declaring that if any of them were undisposed of he might be paid thereout. Ib.

—— Forgery by Husband — Purchaser for Value.] — A bill, payable to the order of a married woman, was remitted to her in respect of her separate estate. Her husband got possession of it without her knowledge, forged her name on the back, then indorsed his own name, and gave the bill to P. to get it discounted, stating that she had indorsed it. P. got it discounted, and in order to do so, was obliged himself to indorse it. He then paid the proceeds to the husband. The acceptor, in consequence of a notice from the wife, refused to pay the holder, who thereupon had recourse to P., who paid the holder. A suit having been instituted in equity by the wife, to establish her title to the bill, and to restrain P. from suing the acceptor:—Held, that P. was to be treated as a purchaser of the bill for value. Dawson v. Prince, 2 De G. & J. 41; 27 L. J., Ch. 169; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 6 W. R. 171.

Held, also, that assuming P. to have notice that the bill was drawn in respect of the wife's separate estate, yet, as there was nothing to excite suspicion of the forgery, he was justified in relying on the husband's statement that the bill had been indorsed by her, and was not bound to inquire further as to the genuineness of her signature, and that there was, therefore, no equity to restrain him from the assertion of the legal title which he had acquired by the husband's indorsement. Ib.

Quære, whether the circumstance of a bill of exchange being drawn in favour of a married woman amounts to notice, actual or constructive, that it is drawn in respect of her separate estate. Ib.

Promissory Note several and jointly with Husband.]—A woman who was married subsequently to the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), signed with her husband a joint and several promissory note to secure money advanced to him. The husband having become bankrupt:—Held, that the wife's separate estate was liable on the note. Davies v. Jenkins, 6 Ch. D. 728; 26 W. R. 260.

Held, also, that her trustees were not necessary parties to the action. Ib.

A married woman having property settled on her for her separate use, without power of anticipation or alienation, made, during her coverture, together with her mother and husband, a joint and several promissory note. Before it became due her husband died, after which she in no way acknowledged or ratified the contract. On action brought against her on the note when discovert:—Held, that the note being when made nudum pactum both at law and in equity, did not become binding on her after her husband's death; and her separate property could not be reached in the action. Roberts v. Watkins, 46 L. J., Q. B. 552; 36 L. T. 799.

—— Manager of Estate.]—A sum of 1,000*l.* settled in trust for S. for life, and after her decease in trust for her daughter, F. (a married woman) for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, was invested on mortgage of lands, the property of F.'s husband. Arrears of interest became due, and S. assigned the arrears at that time owing, and the future interest to become due in her own lifetime, to a trustee in trust for F., for life, for her separate use, to be paid to her on her own sole receipt, without power of anticipation, and as to so much of the said moneys as should remain due, owing or unpaid at the time of her decease, upon trust for such persons as she should appoint. F.'s husband afterwards executed a mortgage of lands to the same trustee to secure the arrears, which in the mortgage deed were recited to have been paid to F., and re-lent by her to her husband. The trustee did not execute either deed, nor did he act in the trust. The second deed contained no clause in restraint of anticipation. Some time after the execution of the deeds, F.'s husband conveyed his lands and other property in trust for his creditors, and one of the trustees joined with him in making a joint and several promissory note to secure an advance made to him. F. was subsequently appointed by the surviving trustee of the creditor's deed (who had joined in making the promissory note) manager of the trust property, and having entered into receipt of the rents and profits of the lands and property comprised in the trust deed, she joined with her husband in making and renewing from time to time joint and several renewals of the note. F.'s husband was adjudicated a bankrupt. The payees, in the ultimate renewals, deposed that she dealt with them on the credit of her separate estate, but this was disputed by her, and she alleged that she joined in renewing the notes with the intention that they should be paid out of the rents of the trust property over which she was manager :—Held, upon the evidence, that F.'s separate estate was chargeable with the amount of the notes. Devitt v. Faussett, 7 L. R. Ir. 511. Affirmed on appeal, with a variation, 9 L. R. Ir. 84—C. A.

Property subject to Testamentary Power of Appointment.]—Property was settled on a feme covert for her separate use for life, with a power to appoint it by deed or will. She executed the power by will :—Held, that the appointed property was not liable to pay a promissory note signed by her. Shattock v. Shattock, 35 Beav. 489 ; 35 L. J., Ch. 509 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 182 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 405 ; 14 L. T. 452 ; 14 W. R. 600.

A woman entitled to a sum of stock, settled it, on her marriage, for her separate use for life, with power to her to appoint it by will only, but no trust was declared in default of appointment. After her marriage she signed a promissory note, and then, by will, appointed the stock to her husband. Semble, that the holder of the note is not defeated thereby. Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 562.

See also Owen v. Homan, 13 Beav. 196 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 549 ; 14 Jur. 821 ; Vandergucht v. De Blaquiere, 5 Myl. & C. 229 ; 3 Jur. 1116 ; Bullpin v. Clarke, 17 Ves. 365 ; Devitt v. Faussett, supra. And see col. 1099.

d. Fraud by Wife.

Making Appointed Estate Liable as General Assets.]—A married woman had a life estate in personalty to her separate use, with a general power of appointment by will, and, in default of appointment, over. She had also real estate similarly settled, except that in default of appointment the ultimate limitation was to her and her heirs, so that her husband should not be benefited by the curtesy. She borrowed money, fraudulently representing herself to be single, and purported to execute a mortgage of some of the settled real estate, with the ordinary covenant to pay. Afterwards, she by will appointed her freehold and personal estate chiefly to her children, and then died :—Held, that by the fraud, the married woman made the appointed estate liable as general assets, as if she had been a feme sole in respect of it ; and that the mortgagee had a right not only to a charge on the mortgaged real estate to which she was entitled in remainder, but, if it was not sufficient, he was, by reason of the fraud, to rank as a creditor on her general assets, and to take the appointed personal fund, if there was not enough without it. Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, 2 Drew. 363 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 793 ; 2 W. R. 599.

Making good Representation as to Chargeability of Reversionary Interest.]—A wife living separate from her husband, represented to G. that she had the power of charging the reversionary interest in a fund to which she was entitled on the death of her husband, the fact being that she was restrained from anticipation during coverture. On the strength of such false allegation she induced G. to destroy certain bills of exchange he had as securities for money lent to her on her executing an agreement to charge her reversionary interest with the debt, and at the same time entreating G. to make no inquiries as to the truth of her statements, as it would lead to her husband's discovering her liabilities and prevent a reunion :—Held, on the assumption that G. was really ignorant of the trusts of the settlement, that she had been so far guilty of fraud as to make the false allegation binding on her reversionary estate. Green v. Lyon, 21 W. R. 695. And see Greatley v. Noble, 3 Madd. 79.

Suppressing Notice of Settlement.]—Husband and wife, in treating for a loan on the security of her real estate, informed the mortgagee's solicitor of the existence of a settlement executed on their marriage, whereby, on her attaining her majority, the property was to be conveyed to trustees upon the usual trusts, although no such conveyance was ever executed. The solicitor told them that he should not mention it to the mortgagee, lest he should refuse to make the advance. The mortgage deed was executed without further mention of the settlement, and it was acknowledged by the wife at the time of its execution ; but by reason of the sudden death of the solicitor, the certificate of its acknowledgment was not filed. The omission was not discovered until after the mortgagee had become aware of the settlement, upon which a new acknowledgment was made by the wife, and a certificate thereof was at once filed :—Held, that the fraud committed was one for which a married woman was as liable as a feme sole, and that the mortgagee's equity was as valid against her as against her husband, and that the mortgagee had priority over the settlement. Sharpe v. Foy, L. R. 4 Ch. 35 ; 19 L. T. 541 ; 17 W. R. 65.

Husband not to pay Costs of.]—Where a feme covert has been guilty of fraud, solely without the husband, no precedent of his paying costs. Cotton v. Luttrell, 1 Atk. 453.

e. Funeral Expenses.

Chargeability to Separate Property.]—The vice-chancellor doubted whether husband had right to throw expense of wife's funeral on her separate estate. Gregory v. Lockyer, 6 Madd. 90 ; 22 R. R. 246.

A married woman, by her will, in exercise of a power of appointment over trust moneys, made several bequests, and "after payment of her just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the expenses attending the execution of her will, appointed" the residue of the trust moneys among her nieces:—Held, that the charge of funeral expenses was not contingent upon her surviving her husband, and that her husband surviving was entitled to repayment out of trust moneys of money paid by him in respect of such expenses. Willeter v. Dobie, 2 Kay & J. 647; 4 W. R. 669.

f. Maintenance of Child or Husband.

Liable to Parish for Maintenance of Husband —45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 20.]—Where in England the husband of any woman having separate property becomes chargeable to any union or parish, the justices having jurisdiction in such union or parish may, in petty sessions assembled, upon application of the guardians of the poor, issue a summons against the wife, and make and enforce such order against her for the maintenance of her husband out of such separate property as by s. 33 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868, they may now make and enforce against a husband for the maintenance of his wife if she becomes chargeable to any union or parish. Where in Ireland relief is given under the provisions of the acts relating to the relief of the destitute poor to the husband of any woman having separate property, the cost price of such relief is hereby declared to be a loan from the guardians of the union in which the same shall be given, and shall be recoverable from such woman as if she were a feme sole by the same actions and proceedings as money lent.

Liable to Parish for Maintenance of Children —45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 21.]—A married woman having separate property shall be subject to all such liability for the maintenance of her children and grandchildren, as the husband is now by law subject to for the maintenance of her children and grandchildren: Provided always, that nothing in this act shall relieve her husband from any liability imposed upon him by law to maintain her children or grandchildren.

Chargeability to Separate Property.]—Where father is not of ability, court will allow maintenance for children, though mother has competent separate estate. Haley v. Bannister, 4 Madd. 275; 20 R. R. 299.

The court cannot, on account of the misconduct of the wife, provide for the children out of her separate property. Hodgens v. Hodgens, 4 Cl. & F. 323; 11 Bli. (N.S.) 62; Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 533.

W. having become lunatic, was taken to an asylum in London. His wife, who at the time of her marriage was entitled to separate property, removed to London, in order to be near her husband, and borrowed money on his credit to meet the expenses of such removal of herself and husband, and to provide herself with necessaries. He died, and a bill was filed for the administration of his estate. The persons who had made the advances to the wife carried in their claim for the amount against the husband's estate:—Held, that the claim must be allowed. Davidson v. Wood, 32 L. J., Ch. 400; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 589; 8 L. T. 476; 11 W. R. 791.

Semble, that a woman possessed of separate estate is entitled to maintenance by her husband although he be a lunatic, and is not bound to pledge her separate estate in order to provide herself with necessaries. Ib.

g. Rates.

Parochial—Rated as Owner—Non-payment—Agreement—Imprisonment.]—A married woman rated as owner of hereditaments under s. 4 of the Poor Rate Assessment Act, 1869, is liable to be imprisoned on non-payment of parochial rates, in default of sufficient goods being found whereon to levy distress. The notice given by an owner under s. 4 does not constitute an agreement between such owner and the overseers. Allen (Elizabeth), In re, 63 L. J., M. C. 267; [1894] 2 Q. B. 924; 10 R. 514; 43 W. R. 141.

h. Torts and Breaches of Trust by Wife.

Immunity.]—The separate estate of a married woman is not liable for general torts committed by her, nor for breaches of trust, unless the breaches of trust consist in appropriation of trust funds comprised in the same settlement as that creating her separate estate. Wayford v. Heyl, 44 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 20 Eq. 321; 33 L. T. 155; 23 W. R. 848.

Breach of Trust—Breach of Contract—Tort.]—In 1876 the defendant, a married woman, agreed to grant a lease of a piece of land to V., when he should have built a messuage thereupon, V. to have an option of purchasing the freehold. In 1877 V. assigned the agreement to the plaintiffs by way of mortgage. In 1878 the defendant conveyed the land to V.:—Held, assuming that the defendant had notice of the assignment of 1877, that she had not committed a tort, but a breach of trust or implied contract which was not such an engagement as would have bound her separate estate before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Davies v. Stanford, 61 L. T. 234.

Breach of Trust at Solicitation of Wife.]—Where the trustee of a fund settled on a husband until insolvency, and then to the separate use of his wife, at the urgent solicitation of the wife committed a breach of trust by lending part to the husband, and he became insolvent, whereupon the wife claimed the whole fund:—Held, that the trustee was responsible to her, as during the husband's estate she could not bind the remainder to her separate use. It is no answer to such a claim that the husband's insolvency was concerted, if that was done merely to evade his debts; but semble, it would be a defence if the insolvency was concerted for the purpose of calling the wife's estate into existence. Mara v. Manning, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 218; 2 Jo. & Lat. 311.

Parol Engagement will Bind.]—Semble, that a married woman may make her separate estate liable by parol engagement as well as by express contract, but there must be some engagement or contract. Wright v. Chard, 4 Drew. 673; 29 L. J., Ch. 82; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1334; 1 L. T. 138. Affirmed 29 L. J., Ch. 415; 2 L. T. 104; 8 W. R. 334.

Settlement of Necklace—Fraudulent Sale by

Settlor.]—A woman, on her marriage, settled a necklace upon trust for herself for life, with remainder to her eldest son. She also settled other property to her separate use for life, as to part of such property with, and as to other part without, restraint upon anticipation. She afterwards, in fraud of the settlement, sold the necklace, and appropriated the money to her own use:—Held, that the property settled to her separate use, with restraint upon anticipation, was not chargeable with the value of the necklace, but that the property settled without such restraint was so chargeable. Clive v. Carew, 1 J. & H. 199; 28 L. J., Ch. 685; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 487; 7 W. R. 433.

Liability of Husband.]—The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not abolish the liability of a husband for his wife's wrongful acts, and the plaintiff may sue the husband and wife jointly or the wife alone for wrongs committed by her after the marriage. Seroka v. Kattenburg, 55 L. J., Q. B. 375; 17 Q. B. D. 177; 54 L. T. 649; 34 W. R. 543.

And see Bahin v. Hughes, 55 L. J., Ch. 472; 31 Ch. D. 390; 54 L. T. 188; 34 W. R. 311.

i. Trading separately from Husband.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 5.]—Every married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall in respect of her separate property be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole.

Liability to Bankruptcy.]—A married woman, possessed of separate estate, but not carrying on a trade separately from her husband, is not subjected to the operation of the bankruptcy laws, and cannot commit an act of bankruptcy under s. 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Coulson, Ex parte, Gardiner, In re, 57 L. J., Q. B. 149; 20 Q. B. D. 249; 58 L. T. 119; 36 W. R. 142; 5 Morrell, 1.

"Carrying on Trade separately from her Husband"—Joint Business.] — A married woman cannot be made a bankrupt in respect of a business carried on by her if such business is even partially under the control of her husband. It is not sufficient that her interest in the business is her separate property. Helsby, In re, Helsby, Ex parte, 63 L. J., Q. B. 261; 10 R. 49; 69 L. T. 864; 1 Manson, 12.

Bankruptcy Notice — Separate Estate.] — A bankruptcy notice cannot be issued against a married woman under s. 4, sub-s. 1 (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, in respect of a judgment against her separate estate. Lynes, In re, Lester, Ex parte, 62 L. J., Q. B. 372; [1893] 2 Q. B. 113; 4 R. 416; 68 L. T. 739; 41 W. R. 488; 10 Morrell, 124; 58 J. P. 5—C. A.

—— Judgment against Husband and Wife—Limited to Wife's Separate Estate—Death of Husband—Service of Notice on Widow.]—A bankruptcy notice under s. 4, sub-s. 1 (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, cannot be issued against a widow against whom a creditor has in her husband's lifetime recovered a judgment in the form settled by the court of appeal in Scott v. Morley (20 Q. B. D. 120). Hewett, In re, Levine, Ex parte, 64 L. J., Q. B. 185; [1895] 1 Q. B. 328; 15 R. 162; 72 L. T. 60; 43 W. R. 237.

Discontinuance of Business.] — A married woman may be made bankrupt in respect of a debt incurred by her whilst carrying on a trade separately from her husband, notwithstanding that at the date when the act of bankruptcy on which the petition is founded was committed she had ceased to trade. She must be deemed to be still "carrying on a trade" within the meaning of s. 1, sub-s. 5, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, so long as any debts incurred by her while so trading remain unpaid. McGeorge, Ex parte, Sterens, In re (51 L. J., Ch. 909; 20 Ch. D. 697), distinguished. Dagnall, In re, Soan, Ex parte, 65 L. J., Q. B. 666; [1896] 2 Q. B. 407; 75 L. T. 142; 45 W. R. 79; 3 Manson, 218.

Separate Property—General Power of Appointment.]—By the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-s. 5, "Every married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole":—Held, that the expression "separate property" includes only that which would, if the woman was unmarried, be her "property," and does not therefore include a general power of appointment by deed or will of which she is the donee, but which she has not exercised, and a married woman who has traded separately from her husband, and who has been adjudicated a bankrupt, cannot be compelled to execute a deed exercising such a power in favour of the trustee in the bankruptcy. Gilchrist, Ex parte, or Armstrong, Ex parte, Armstrong, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 578; 17 Q. B. D. 521; 55 L. T. 538; 34 W. R. 709; 3 Morrell, 193; 51 J. P. 292—C. A.

Loan to Husband for Trade—Settlement—Right of Proof.]—H. was married to his wife in 1864, and she subsequently became entitled to certain moneys under the wills of her father and grandfather. These moneys she lent to her husband for the purposes of his business, upon the terms that he would execute a settlement of the moneys upon her, which was done. Upon the bankruptcy of H. a proof was tendered upon the settlement and rejected:—Held, that the settlement was not invalidated by s. 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, since that section was not retrospective, and could not affect previously existing rights. Home, Ex parte, Home, In re, 54 L. T. 301. See also May, In re, Crawford v. May, 60 L. J., Ch. 34; 45 Ch. D. 499; 68 L. T. 375; 38 W. R. 765.

j. Statute of Limitations—Analogy.

Simple Contract Debt.]—Feme covert, having a separate estate, borrows money, and gives a bond; the separate estate liable, and though six years pass, the demand not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. W. 144.

In 1875 a married woman borrowed money from her husband upon a parol agreement to repay him the amount with interest out of her separate estate. She died in 1884, without having paid anything in respect either of interest or principal, and without having given any acknowledgment in writing of her liability to repay the debt. After her death her husband claimed repayment:—Held, that the debt was barred by analogy to the Statute of Limitations. Norton v. Turvill (2 P. Wms. 144) explained. Hastings (Lady), In re. Hallett v. Hastings, 56 L. J., Ch. 631; 35 Ch. D. 94; 57 L. T. 126; 35 W. R. 584; 52 J. P. 100—C. A. But see next case.

The liability of the separate estate of a married woman, for what would be a simple contract debt in the case of a person sui juris, is not barred by the lapse of six years from the accruer of the cause of action. Vaughan v. Walker, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 458.

—— Moneys advanced for Necessaries—Trust.]—Moneys advanced by a stranger in providing necessaries for the support of a married woman, living separate from her husband, are debts binding her separate estate; and, being debts payable out of funds held in trust for her separate use, are not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Barber, In re, Hodgson v. Williamson, 15 Ch. D. 87; 42 L. T. 676; 28 W. R. 944.

—— Note given to Husband's Bankers—Consideration.]—A married woman, who had property settled upon her to her separate use, in 1837 made a joint promissory note with her husband for 950*l.*, and delivered it to his bankers as a security for his overdrawn account; from time to time the note was renewed until the death of the husband in 1855, the last renewal bearing date 1848. At the time of his death the debt due by the husband to the bankers was 2,340*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*, which was reduced by the realisation of other securities they held to 917*l.* 11*s.*, for which sum, on the 28th of August, 1856, she, after her coverture had determined, made and delivered her promissory note:—Held, that there was a good consideration, for the last-mentioned note, as the note made in 1848, although made during coverture, was binding on her separate estate in equity, and that it was immaterial whether it was barred by the Statute of Limitations or not. Latouche v. Latouche, 3 H. & C. 576; 34 L. J., Ex. 85; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 271; 13 L. T. 773; 13 W. R. 563.

B. WIFE'S PROPERTY OTHER THAN SEPARATE ESTATE.

1. Generally.

Unity Doctrine.—From the time of the intermarriage the law looks upon the husband and wife as but one person, and therefore allows of but one will between them, which is placed in the husband as the fittest and ablest to provide for and govern the family, and for this reason the law gives the husband an absolute power of disposing of her personal property, no act of hers being of any force to affect or transfer that which by the intermarriage she has resigned to him—Bacon, Abr. B. & F. (c).

Disposition—Property in Autre Droit.]—A wife may make a will, disposing of property, which she only has in autre droit, as executrix, without her husband's consent. Seammell v. Wilkinson, 2 East, 552.

Share under Intestacy—Death of Wife.]—If, during marriage, the wife acquires a right to a distributive share in an intestate's estate, and dies without asserting her claim, leaving the husband surviving, who dies without asserting his claim, it is necessary for the next of kin of the husband, in order to enforce the right of the wife, and to reduce it into possession for their benefit, to take out letters of administration both to the wife and the husband, and to pay stamp duty for each grant. Att.-Gen. v. Partington, 3 H. & C. 193; 33 L. J., Ex. 281; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 825; 10 L. T. 751; 13 W. R. 54—Ex. Ch.

Title Deeds—Trustee in Bankruptcy of Husband of Tenant for Life.]—Where a wife is legal tenant for life of lands, not for her separate use, the trustee in bankruptcy of her husband has no absolute right to the possession of the title-deeds during the coverture, but the court has a discretion in the matter. Rogers, Ex parte, Pyatt, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 936; 26 Ch. D. 31; 51 L. T. 177; 32 W. R. 737—C. A.

2. Equity to a Settlement.

a. General Principles.

Nature of the Equity.]—The wife's equity to a settlement does not depend on any right of property in her, but rests on the control which courts of equity exercise over property falling under their dominion. Osborn v. Morgan, 9 Hare, 432; 21 L. J., Ch. 318; 16 Jur. 52.

The right to a settlement is an obligation which the court fastens not upon the property, but upon the right to receive it. Ib.

Origin of the wife's equity to a settlement. Ib.

Court of Equity may impose Terms.]—Where husband has mere equitable right to property of wife, court may impose terms on his receiving it. Becket v. Becket, Dick. 343.

—— Otherwise where Title of Husband a Legal One.]—Where the husband has a legal title to his wife's personal estate, equity will not interpose in prejudice of such right, yet where he cannot get at it without the assistance of this court, it will put terms upon him. Milner v. Colmer, 2 P. Wms. 639.

If husband can lay hold of wife's estate, without aid of equity, he is not compelled to settle it; otherwise where he cannot. Att.-Gen. v. Whorwood, 1 Ves. 538; Murray v. Elibank (Lady), 10 Ves. 84.

Trustee may Pay over to Husband before Bill filed.]—Previously to bill filed, trustee for wife may pay her personal property, or the rents, &c., of real estate to her husband, but not after. Ib.

Court in Loco Parentis.]—As a father would not have married his daughters without a provision, neither will a court of equity, which stands in loco parentis, do it. Jewson v. Maulson, 2 Atk. 417.

Misconduct of Husband.]—The wife's equity to a settlement out of her own choses in action is in no respect founded on or influenced by the misconduct of the husband, and is the simple result of the rule, that he who seeks equity must do equity. Warren v. Newton, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 211.

Equitable Life Interest.]—Where an absolute equitable interest is given to the wife, the court will not permit husband to possess it without making provision for the wife, or without her express consent. Elliot v. Cordell, 5 Madd. 156; 21 R. R. 287.

But where equitable interest is for life only, husband may enjoy it without consent of wife, or making any provision for her. Ib.

But it is otherwise if he neglect to provide for her; therefore, in bankruptcy or otherwise, assignee is liable to make allowance. Ib.

Smallness of Sum no Objection.]—A married woman has an equity for a settlement, however small the sum. Kincaid's Trusts, In re, 1 Drew. 326; 22 L. J., Ch. 395; 17 Jur. 106; 1 W. R. 120.

Creditors of Wife.]—The creditors of a woman remaining unpaid after her marriage in respect of debts incurred before the marriage have a right to be satisfied out of her property, in priority to any equity to a settlement out of it which she may possess. Barnard v. Ford, Carrick v. Ford, 38 L. J., Ch. 671; L. R. 4 Ch. 247; 20 L. T. 289; 17 W. R. 478.

Domicil—Change by Residence—Reverter to Domicil of Origin.]—In 1855 a domiciled Manxman came to England and married an Englishwoman, and resided in England for twenty years. At the date of the marriage the wife was entitled to a vested reversionary interest in a legacy which fell into possession in 1885. In 1875 the husband and wife returned to the Isle of Man, where the husband carried on business till 1878, when he became insolvent, and executed a deed of assignment of all his property, including his wife's interest in the legacy, for the benefit of his creditors. In 1880 the parties returned to England, where they resided till 1882, when the husband went to Mexico to seek employment. The doctrine of a wife's equity to a settlement is unknown to Manx law:—Held, that the Manx domicil of the husband, which had been lost by the twenty years' residence in England, reverted on his return to the Isle of Man, that nothing happened afterwards to re-establish the English domicil, and that as the domicil was therefore Manx, the wife's equity to a settlement could not be asserted. Marsland, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 581; 54 L. T. 635; 34 W. R. 540.

Husband of Unsound Mind.]—The wife of a person of unsound mind was entitled to a fund in court. An order was made in enforcement of her equity to a settlement, directing accumulations and future income to be paid to her separate use, with liberty to apply in chambers for the disposal of capital in a similar manner. Dixon's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 592.

Fraud of Wife.]—A married woman may by fraud deprive herself not only of her equity to a settlement out of moneys to which her husband may become entitled in her right, but semble of any right to a reversionary interest falling due after his death. Lush, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 650; L. R. 4 Ch. 591; 21 L. T. 376; 17 W. R. 974.

b. What Property the Equity Attaches to.

Property must come in Marital Right.]—A wife's equity to a settlement attaches only to property which comes to her husband's hands in his marital right. Knight v. Knight, 43 L. J., Ch. 611; L. R. 18 Eq. 487; 22 W. R. 792.

Income of Realty and Personalty.]—The right of the wife extends to her income, whether it arises from real or personal estate, if that interest be an equitable one. Warren v. Newton, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 211.

Life Interest for Benefit of Husband and Wife jointly.]—A married woman has no equity to a settlement out of property given for the benefit of herself and her husband during their joint lives and the life of the survivor of them. Bryan, In re, Godfrey v. Bryan, 49 L. J., Ch. 504; 14 Ch. D. 516; 28 W. R. 761. S. P., Ward v. Ward, 49 L. J., Ch. 409; 14 Ch. D. 506; 42 L. T. 523; 28 W. R. 943.

Life Interest.]—The wife's equity to a settlement attaches to her life interest. Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, 10 Beav. 324; 16 L. J., Ch. 387; 11 Jur. 644.

Life Interest and Corpus.]—The same principles are applicable with regard to a wife's equity to a settlement whether she is entitled absolutely to the corpus or whether she takes a life interest only, and the court will, in its discretion, direct the whole of the dividends on a fund in which the wife has a life interest only, to be paid to her in exclusion of the assignee in insolvency of her husband. Taunton v. Morris, 47 L. J., Ch. 721; 3 Ch. D. 453; 38 L. T. 552; 26 W. R. 674. Affirmed, 48 L. J., Ch. 408; 11 Ch. D. 779; 27 W. R. 718—C. A.

Wife's Portion.]—When a husband comes in a court of equity for his wife's portion, the court will oblige him to make a settlement upon her, or secure her a maintenance in case she survives him. Oxenden v. Oxenden, 2 Vern. 494.

Estate Tail—Outstanding Jointure Term.]—The estate of a feme covert, tenant in tail in possession, subject to a jointure term, is equitable during the continuance of the term, for the purpose of entitling her to a settlement on a bill filed by her; and the court directed a settlement, although the bill did not expressly pray to that effect. Wortham v. Pemberton, 1 De G. & Sm. 644. S. C. nom. Newenham v. Pemberton, 17 L. J., Ch. 99; 11 Jur. 1071.

Fee Simple Estates.]—Semble, a married woman is not entitled to a settlement out of her fee simple estates. Gleaves v. Paine, 1 De G. J. & S. 87; 32 L. J., Ch. 182; 7 L. T. 811; 11 W. R. 273.

Leaseholds, Sale of—Desertion.]—A husband entitled to leaseholds in right of his wife deserted her and their children, and for eight years contributed nothing towards her or their support, except the rents of the leaseholds. During the desertion the leaseholds were sold by the wife for 250*l.* to a purchaser, who expended the greater part of the proceeds upon the maintenance of the wife and children. In an action by the husband against the wife and the purchaser to set aside the sale and recover the leaseholds or the proceeds :—Held, that, under her equity to a settlement, the wife was entitled to have the entire proceeds of the sale secured to herself, and such proceeds having practically been expended for her benefit, the action must be dismissed with costs. Boxall v. Boxall, 53 L. J., Ch. 838 ; 27 Ch. D. 220 ; 51 L. T. 771 ; 32 W. R. 896.

Railway Stock.]—Railway stock, the property of a wife before marriage, is not a chose in action, and she cannot claim a settlement out of it, though the certificates were deposited with a third person to secure a debt of her own. Warden v. Jones, 26 L. J., Ch. 427 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 456 ; 5 W. R. 446.

Fund in Court not presently Distributable.]—In an administration action, after judgment but before further consideration, a married woman, who was absolutely entitled to a share of a fund in court representing the residuary estate of the testator, presented a petition to enforce her equity to a settlement :—Held, that she was entitled to an immediate order, although the fund would not be actually distributable until further consideration, and the amount of her share in it had not yet been ascertained. Robinson's Settled Estate, In re, Robinson v. Robinson, 48 L. J., Ch. 507 ; 12 Ch. D. 188 ; 27 W. R. 781.

Debt of Husband to Testator—Wife's share in Residue—Deduction of Debt from Wife's share.]—A testator bequeathed to his married daughter after the death of his wife, a share of the residue of his real and personal estate. The daughter's husband owed the testator 725*l.*, a sum equal to or in excess of her share of residue. There were six children of the marriage. The daughter had about 70*l.* a year derived from an uncle, for her life, and remainder to her children, and her husband had no private means, and made only some 60*l.* a year by his business. The testator left six children him surviving. He died in 1877 :—Held, the case not coming within the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, that although the executors had a right to set off the debt due from the husband against the share given to the wife, yet as the claim of the husband, if there had been no debt, would have been subject to the wife's equity to a settlement, which would therefore have been prior to the husband's claim, the wife's equity was also prior to the executor's right of retainer. Knight v. Knight (L. R. 18 Eq. 487) distinguished. Briant, In re, Poulter v. Shackel, 57 L. J., Ch. 953 ; 39 Ch. D. 471 ; 59 L. T. 215 ; 36 W. R. 825.

Bond Debt to Wife.]—Where there is a bond debt to the wife dum sola, and the husband receives it at law, the court will not grant an injunction, for the action was proper. Jewson v. Moulson, 2 Atk. 417.

Joint Property.]—A married woman has no equity to a settlement out of property given for the benefit of herself and her husband during their lives and life of the survivor of them. Byran, In re, Godfrey v. Bryan, 49 L. J., Ch. 504 ; 14 Ch. D. 516 ; 28 W. R. 761.

By an ante-nuptial settlement the wife's father covenanted with the trustees to pay to them during his life an annuity of 60*l.*, to be held by them upon trust to pay the same "unto and to the use of the husband and wife during their joint lives," and after the death of the husband to the use of the wife absolutely, with trusts for the husband if he survived her, and for the children :—Held, that as the husband and wife took the annuity as tenants by entireties, the whole of it during their joint lives was liable to the husband's debts, and that the wife had no equity to a settlement out of it. Ward v. Ward, 49 L. J., Ch. 409 ; 14 Ch. D. 506 ; 42 L. T. 523 ; 28 W. R. 943. And see Atcheson v. Atcheson, 11 Beav. 485 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 230 ; 13 Jur. 665.

Legacies.]—In what case court will oblige husband to settle legacy left to wife, for which he sues, on wife. Harrison v. Buckle, 1 Stra. 239.

Where a wife's legacy was her only portion, the court allowed her husband the interest of it for her maintenance ; but where the husband had received great part, and refused to make a settlement, the court stopped the residue and the interest also, that it might accumulate for the wife's benefit. Bond v. Simmons, 3 Atk. 20.

Husband and wife sue for a legacy given to the wife ; the court will not compel the payment of it, unless the husband makes some settlement on the wife. Brown v. Elton, 3 P. W. 202.

Settlement directed of a legacy to a married woman, claimed by her husband. Blount v. Bestland, 5 Ves. 515. S. P., Green v. Scott, 1 Ves. J. 282.

If money be devised to an infant daughter who marries, the court may refuse helping the husband to the money, unless he makes a suitable settlement ; though if the portion be small and the husband a freeman of London, the custom of London is a suitable provision. Adams v. Peirce, 3 P. W. 12.

c. Previous Settlement. Effect.

All Moneys taken into Account.]—In considering the question of a wife's equity to a settlement, the court takes into account not only all moneys of the wife previously received by the husband, but conversely all moneys which have been settled upon the wife. Erskine's Trust, In re, 1 Kay & J. 302 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 327 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 156 ; 3 W. R 262.

Additional Settlement.]—The fact of a settlement having been made of part of an intended wife's personalty on her marriage, upon trusts for her and the children of the marriage, does not bar her equity to an additional settlement out of other personal property belonging to her prior to her marriage, and left unsettled upon the occasion of the marriage, as against her husband's assignee, if he is obliged to resort to chancery it order to reach it. Spirett v. Willows, 3 De G. J. & S. 293 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 365 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 614 ; 11 L. T. 614 ; 13 W. R. 329. And see Elibank (Lady) v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737 ; 5 R. R. 151 ; Barrow v. Barrow, 18 Beav. 529, and S. C. on appeal 24 L. J., Ch. 267 ; 3 Eq. R. 149 ; 3 W. R. 122—L.JJ.

Sufficiency of Existing Provision.] — The principle of a wife's equity to a settlement out of property, coming to her husband in her right, does not apply where she has already a sufficient provision secured to her, independently of her husband. Giacometti v. Prodgers, L. R. 8 Ch. 338; 28 L. T. 432; 21 W. R. 375. And see Lannoy v. Athol (Duke), 2 Atk. 448; Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 477.

Property of the wife, amounting to 17,000*l.* consols, being already settled, the court refused to settle a further sum of 2,000*l.* belonging to her, and directed it to be paid to the husband. Spicer v. Spicer, 24 Beav. 365. And see Spirett v. Willows, supra.

A provision by marriage settlement will not be held a purchase of all the property of wife, unless that purpose is clearly imported or expressed. Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 385. And see Salwey v. Salwey, Amb. 693; Sykes v. Meynal, Dick. 368; and Bois v. Hereford (Viscount), 2 Vern. 502.

Where a wife has an adequate settlement to her separate use, she is not entitled on his insolvency, desertion, or otherwise, to a further provision out of a life interest belonging to her, which he takes jure mariti. Aguilar v. Aguilar, 5 Madd. 414.

Though a settlement be made on a wife before marriage, if a great accession of fortune happen to the wife afterwards, the court will direct a further settlement out of it, when it once obtains jurisdiction. Tomkyns v. Ladbroke, 2 Ves. 591. And see March v. Head, 3 Atk. 720; Lannoy v. Lannoy, Sel. Ch. Cas. 48; Stockpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. 98.

d. Separation. Effect.

Wife Living Apart but not in Adultery.]—Where the wife was living separate, but not in adultery:—Held, that she was entitled to a settlement out of funds coming to the husband in her right. Eedes v. Eedes, 11 Sim. 469; 10 L. J., Ch. 199.

Separation without sufficient Cause—Apportionment.]—Where a separation took place without sufficient cause, the court ordered that three-fourths of a fund in court should be settled upon the wife and her isssue, and the residue be paid to the husband. Coster v. Coster, 9 Sim. 597; 8 L. J., Ch. 230.

Both Separate and Living in Adultery.]—Husband and wife made an assignment of the wife's interest in a reversionary fund, which afterwards fell into possession. It was mutually imputed, and not denied, that they were both living separate, and in adultery:—Held, that the wife was entitled to a settlement out of the fund. Greedy v. Lavender, 13 Beav. 62; 19 L. J., Ch. 494; 14 Jur. 608.

Desertion by Husband—Proceeds of Wife's Leaseholds.]—A husband entitled to leaseholds in right of his wife deserted her and their children, and for eight years contributed nothing towards her or their support, except the rents of the leaseholds. During the desertion the leaseholds were sold by the wife for 250*l.* to a purchaser, who expended the greater part of the proceeds upon the maintenance of the wife and children. In an action by the husband against the wife and the purchaser to set aside the sale and recover the leaseholds or the proceeds:—Held, that, under her equity to a settlement, the wife was entitled to have the entire proceeds of the sale secured to herself, and such proceeds having practically been expended for her benefit, the action must be dismissed with costs. Boxall v. Boxall, 53 L. J., Ch. 838; 27 Ch. D. 220; 32 W. R. 896.

e. As against Trustee in Bankruptcy or General Assignees of Husband.

General and particular Assignee—Distinction.]—There is a distinction between husband's general assignment of his wife's property on bankruptcy and of an assignment to a particular assignee for value. Tidd v. Lister, 3 De G. M. & G. 857; 23 L. J., Ch. 249; 18 Jur. 543; 2 W. R. 184.

General Assignees take Subject to the Equity.]—A feme covert, being entitled to the interest of funds for life, her husband makes a general assignment of his estate for the benefit of creditors, the assignees shall not take the dividends without making a provision for the wife. Pryor v. Hill, 4 Bro. C. C. 139.

The wife is equally entitled to a settlement, although the children of the marriage may be provided for aliunde. Ib.

The provision of wife shall in general be secured to her in equity, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of her husband. Mitchell, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 120. Holland v. Calliford, 2 Vern. 662. Middlecome v. Marlow, 2 Atk. 519. Winchester, Ex parte, 9 Mod. 471. Mitford, Ex parte, 1 Bro. C. C. 398.

The assignee of an insolvent debtor, whose wife was entitled for life to real property, being obliged to come into equity to enforce his title to the rents during the joint lives of the husband and wife, in consequence of the legal estate being vested in mortgagees:—Held, bound to make a provision for the wife. Sturgis v. Champneys, 5 Myl. & Cr. 97. See Clark v. Cook, 3 De G. & S. 333; and Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 1; 14 L. J., Ch. 13; Barnes v. Robinson, 32 L. J., Ch. 143; 7 L. T. 617; 11 W. R. 276.

f. As against particular Assignees of Husband.

Distinction between Life Interest and Corpus.]—A wife has no equity to a settlement out of her life interest, as against the husband's assignee for value. Duffy, In re, 28 Beav. 386.

Although the purchaser for value from the husband of his wife's chose in action, to the corpus of which she is entitled, is in no better position than the husband himself, yet the husband's assignment for value of his wife's equitable life interest will prevail against her if he afterwards deserts her and leaves her destitute; if he deserts his wife, a court of equity will not help him to get at the fund without securing to the wife a portion of the income; but this consideration is inapplicable to the assignee of the husband. Tidd v. Lister, 3 De G. M. & G. 857; 23 L. J., Ch. 249; 18 Jur. 543; 2 W. R. 184.

Distinction between the cases in which a wife takes an absolute interest in her property, and those in which she takes a life interest only, and between cases of an assignment by the husband of the wife's property to his general assignee on his bankruptcy or insolvency, and of an assignment to a particular assignee for value. S. C., 10 Hare, 140.

Husband entitled while Maintaining Wife.]—Husband is not compelled to make allowance to wife before he enjoys her equitable interest for life, unless he neglects to provide for her, but if, before the latter event, husband assigns it for valuable consideration, purchaser is not obliged to provide for wife. Elliott v. Cordell, 5 Madd. 156; 21 R. R. 287.

Chattels Real of Wife.]—Where a person entitled, jure mariti, to chattels real mortgages them, the wife has not any equity to a settlement thereout, as against the mortgagee seeking a foreclosure and sale. Hatchell v. Eggleso, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 215.

Real Estate of Wife.]—A married woman has no equity to a settlement as against an assignee for value of her husband's interest, in her right, in her real estate. Durham v. Crackles, 32 L. J., Ch. 111; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1174; 11 W. R. 138. And see Stanton v. Hall, 2 Russ. & M. 175; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 111.

Legacy.]—A reversionary interest of a wife in a legacy of 1,000*l.* was, upon becoming payable, settled upon herself and children, though it had been mortgaged by her husband for value. Duncombe v. Greenacre, 30 L. J., Ch. 882; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 650—L.JJ. Affirming 28 Beav. 472; 30 L. J., Ch. 413; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 987; 9 W. R. 429.

Wife Lending her Money for Use in Husband's Business.]—A trader lived with his deceased wife's sister as her husband. In 1858 she received a legacy of 3,000*l.*, which she handed over to him upon an agreement that the money should be advanced to and used by him in his business, but that as to 2,000*l.* he should be a trustee for her, and a settlement should be executed to carry out that agreement. The money was accordingly used by him in his business, but no settlement was ever executed. The trader having gone into liquidation in 1876:—Held, that inasmuch as by its primary destination under the agreement the fund was to be and was used in the business, no trust could be imposed upon it to the disadvantage of the creditors, and the wife could not prove in the liquidation for any part of it. Beale, In re, Corbidge, Ex parte, 46 L. J., Bk. 17; 4 Ch. D. 246; 35 L. T. 768; 25 W. R. 324.

Mortgage by Husband and Wife.]—Before her marriage a lady was in 1839 entitled to a reversionary interest under her father's settlement, and to 1,904*l.* consols. The 1,904*l.* was sold out and paid to the intended husband previously to the marriage; and he by a marriage settlement covenanted to pay 12,000*l.* to the trustees for the benefit of himself for life until bankruptcy, and then for his wife, with the usual limitations in favour of the issue of the marriage. The lady's father also covenanted to pay 4,000*l.* six months after his death, to be held by the trustees for the benefit of the wife for life, the husband for life, and the issue in the usual way. The lady's reversionary interest was not included. The husband became bankrupt, and 1,250*l.* only out of the 12,000*l.* was secured by the trustees of the settlement. In 1871 the husband and one of his sons assigned to a mortgagee all their right in the wife's reversionary interest as a security for 450*l.*, and this assignment contained joint and several covenants by the husband and wife for payment of this sum. The wife's reversionary interest having fallen in, the money was paid into court on a petition by the wife asking for a settlement of the whole sum upon herself and her children to the exclusion of her husband and the mortgagee:—Held, that neither the husband nor his trustee in bankruptcy were entitled to any part of the money in court; and the usual order for settling the whole fund of the petitioner and her children was made, but without prejudice to the mortgagee's security. Townsend's Trusts, In re, 41 L. T. 19.

Wife Joining in Charge.]—A wife having an absolute interest in leasehold property, never reduced into possession by the husband, joined in a letter enabling her husband to charge it:—Held, that she had no equity to a settlement out of arrears of income as against his particular assignees. Carr, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 353; L. R. 12 Eq. 609; 19 W. R. 675.

Assignee for Value — Misconduct of Wife — Quantum to be Settled.]—A husband and wife concurred in assigning for valuable consideration the wife's reversionary interests in two funds derived under instruments executed before the commencement of Malins's Act, and the deed of assignment was separately acknowledged, all parties being under the impression that the act applied. The funds having fallen into possession, the husband and wife obtained payment of one fund and applied it to their own use. Upon an application by the assignees for payment of the other fund, the wife claimed it by virtue of her equity to a settlement. At this date the wife entirely supported her husband and three children:—Held, the assignees having consented to a settlement of one half, that the wife had by her conduct disentitled herself to any further relief. Under the special circumstances a settlement was made which directed payments annually out of corpus to the wife. Roberts v. Cooper, 60 L. J., Ch. 377; [1891] 2 Ch. 335; 64 L. T. 584—C. A.

g. Rights of Children.

Death of Wife—Rights of Children.]—A wife filed a bill against the trustee of a fund to which she was entitled, and her husband, to enforce her equity to a settlement. The defendant appeared, but before any further step had been taken in the cause the wife died:—Held, that the fund was not so bound as to entitle her children to enforce their mother's equity to a settlement. Wallace v. Auldjo, 1 De G. J. & S. 643; 32 L. J., Ch. 748; 8 L. T. 750; 2 N. R. 567; 11 W. R. 972.

Must be Contract or Decree.]—Children have no right to a settlement without a contract or decree for a settlement in lifetime of wife. Lloyd v. Williams, 1 Madd. 450. And see De la Garde v. Lempriere, 6 Beav. 344; 12 L. J., Ch. 471. Winch v. Brutton, 14 Sim. 379; 8 Jur. 1086.

The right of children to a provision out of the property of their mother, under decree directing a settlement by husband on her and her children, exists, notwithstanding death of mother before the report. Murray v. Elibank (Lady) 10 Ves. 84. See also S. C., 14 Ves. 496; 13 Ves. 1. And see Lloyd v. Mason, 5 Hare, 149.

Children's Position that of Volunteers.]—The position of children in respect of their mother's equity to a settlement is substantially that of volunteers, so long as such settlement is only executory, i.e., they cannot enforce its execution or object to its rescission, although she on her part cannot enforce it without benefiting them. An executory settlement may be executed either by the execution of a formal instrument, or by a judicial decision declaring trusts of the property to take effect at once. Pemberton v. Marriott, 47 L. T. 332.

An obligation to make a settlement on the wife and the issue, includes an obligation to make a settlement on the issue after the death of the wife. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swan. 319 ; 1 Wils. 161.

Waiver by Wife.]—The wife by appearing in court, may waive her right to a settlement, in which case no provision is made for the children. Walker, In re, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 324. See Waiver, infra, col. 1128.

Even where there is no contempt or misconduct, the children can only be entitled under and after their mother ; they have no independent right, and where there is a contempt, the husband is excluded, as against the wife, altogether and generally as against the children also. Id. 327.

The court cannot, on account of the misconduct of the wife, provide for the children out of her separate property. Id. 328.

If the wife insist upon her equity, as against the assignees in bankruptcy of her husband, it attaches for the benefit of her children and she cannot afterwards release it in favour of her husband. Barker v. Lee, 6 Madd. 330. And see Fenner v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. 190.

Fortune of Children Irrelevant.]—When a married woman has established her equity to a settlement, the usual provision for her children follows as a matter of course, wholly irrespective of any other fortune they may have, and her children by a former marriage are within the equity. Comington v. Gilliat, 46 L. J., Ch. 61 ; 35 L. T. 736 ; 25 W. R. 69.

h. Terms and Limitations.

Extent of Interference with Marital Right.]—Courts of equity only so far interfere with the husband's marital right as is necessary for the purpose of providing for the wife and her children. Therefore, where a fund to which a husband becomes entitled in right of his wife is being settled by order of the court, the ultimate remainder will, as a rule, be to the husband absolutely, without reference to the question of survivorship. Croxton v. May, 39 L. J., Ch. 155 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 404 ; 22 L. T. 59 ; 18 W. R. 373.

Ultimate Limitation to Husband.]—When a wife is entitled to an equity to a settlement the fund will be limited, after her death, and in default of children of the wife, to the husband, whether he does or does not survive the wife. Walsh v. Wason, 42 L. J., Ch. 676 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 482 ; 28 L. T. 457 ; 21 W. R. 554. And see Noakes' Will, In re, 28 W. R. 762. Suggitt, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 426 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 215 ; 16 W. R. 551. Spirett v. Willows, L. R. 4 Ch. 407 ; and Carter v. Taggart, 1 De G. M. & G. 286 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 216 ; 16 Jur. 300.

Power of Appointment amongst Children.]—In a settlement of a wife's property made in pursuance of her equity an exclusive power of appointment by deed or will among her children ought to be given to her in priority to the limitations in favour of the children. And the like power was inserted in a case where the husband had by post-nuptial deed covenanted to settle the property on trusts not including such a power. Oliver v. Oliver, 48 L. J., Ch. 630 ; 10 Ch. D. 765 ; 27 W. R. 657.

Misconduct of Husband.]—Gross misconduct of a husband (adultery and desertion) will not of itself disentitle him to any share in the subsequently acquired property of his wife. Aubrey v. Brown, 25 L. J., Ch. 446 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 879 ; 4 W. R. 425.

Deduction of Costs.]—Where a married woman insisted upon her equity to a settlement, and the court gave her a moiety of the fund, her costs were deducted before the division. Archer v. Gardiner, C. P. Cooper, 340.

i. Waiver.

By Wife.]—The wife, by appearing in court, may waive her right to a settlement, in which case no provision is made for the children. Walker, In re, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 324.

After Order for Settlement.]—Wife may waive equity for settlement out of her own property, even after the order, at any time before its completion. Murray v. Elibank (Lady), 10 Ves. 88.

Joining with Husband in Assignment.]—A married lady being entitled to a share of the proceeds of real estates directed to be sold, joined with her husband in assigning, and levying a fine of her share, to a mortgagee :—Held, that she was barred of her equity to a settlement. May v. Roper, 4 Sim. 360.

Infant Wife.]—A fund in court belonging to an infant married woman will not be paid out to her husband, as she cannot waive her equity to a settlement. D'Angibau, In re, (15 Ch. D. 228) noticed. Shipway v. Ball, 50 L. J., Ch. 263 ; 16 Ch. D. 376 ; 44 L. T. 49 ; 29 W. R. 302.

Election—Assignment of Presumptive Share of Assets by Married Woman.]—In 1866 A., a married woman, being one of the presumptive next-of-kin of a lunatic, in consideration of sums advanced to her husband, and of a covenant by C. to pay her, on the death of the lunatic, two sums of 400*l.* and 500*l.*, with interest on the former sum in the meantime, for her separate use, joined her husband in assigning her presumptive share of the lunatic's assets to C. The interest on the 400*l.* was paid until 1881, when the lunatic died ; but the assignee of C. refused to pay the further interest. A. was declared one of the next-of-kin in a suit to administer the lunatic's assets, and applied to the court for payment of the balance of interest due on the 400*l.*, and a portion of the principal. In 1883 A., being then administratrix of the lunatic, acknowledged the deed of 1866 before commissioners. A part of the lunatic's assets had been lent on mortgage of real estate :—Held (1) that the deed of 1866 was void against A., and could not be confirmed by any act of hers, and that she had not elected to take under it, or waived her equity to a settlement. (2) That neither the fact of part of the assets being lent on mortgage, nor A.'s being administratrix when it was made, gave the acknowledgment any legal validity. Druitt v. Willens, 23 L. R. Ir. 436.

j. Amount Settled.

Matter of Discretion.]—The amount to be settled on a married woman under her equity to a settlement is discretionary with the court, and depends on the particular circumstances of each case. Scott v. Spashett, 3 Macn. & G. 599; 21 L. J., Ch. 349; 16 Jur. 157.

In making a settlement of property belonging to a wife, the court looks not only to the portions of her fortune which the husband may have already received, but to all the circumstances of the case, and particularly to the husband's conduct. Barrow v. Barrow, 5 De G. M. & G. 782; 24 L. J., Ch. 267; 3 Eq. R. 149; 3 W. R. 122; Aubrey v. Brown, 25 L. J., Ch. 446; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 879; 4 W. R. 425.

The court will not settle the whole of a wife's fund upon her and her children unless the husband is insolvent, or has been guilty of gross misconduct, such as adultery, cruelty, or desertion. In determining the proportion of the fund to be settled, the court is bound by no fixed rule, but will exercise a judicial discretion according to the circumstances of the case. Suggitt, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 426; L. R. 3 Ch. 215; 16 W. R. 551.

A married woman has the same equity to a settlement, as against her husband or his general assignee, out of property in which she has only a life interest, as out of property in which she has an absolute interest; and the court will make no distinction between the two cases as regards the amount to be settled. In every case the court will exercise its judicial discretion as to the amount to be settled, having regard to all the circumstances. Taunton v. Morris, 48 L. J., Ch. 408; 11 Ch. D. 779; 27 W. R. 718—C. A. Affirming 47 L. J., Ch. 721; 3 Ch. D. 453; 38 L. T. (N.S.) 552; 26 W. R. 674.

Necessities of Wife not the Limit.]—The rule of the court of equity, which entitles a married woman to a settlement out of her equitable interest, is not limited by the necessities of herself and children. Carter v. Taggart, 5 De G. & Sm. 49; 21 L. J., Ch. 216; 16 Jur. 160. And see S. C. on appeal, 1 De G. M. & G. 286; 21 L. J., Ch. 216; 16 Jur. 300.

One-half Rule.]—As to the amount to be settled, there is no rule limiting it to half the fund; but each case must be governed by its own special circumstances. When the husband was insolvent and had received 3,000*l.* out of 12,000*l.* to which his wife (who was living apart from him) had become entitled at various times, the whole of a fund of 3,094*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* was settled on her and her children, as against his mortgagees. Conington v. Gilliat, 46 L. J., Ch. 61; 35 L. T. 736; 25 W. R. 69.

Where a fund in court belonging to a married woman is small, the course is to settle one-half of it on the wife where a husband is not wholly incapable of maintaining his wife, but is in a fair way of supporting her; but where he is incapable of doing so, to settle the whole fund. Grove's Trust, In re, 3 Giff. 575; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 38; 6 L. T. 376. Bagshaw v. Winter, 5 De G. & Sm. 466; 16 Jur. 561.

—— When departed from.]—In giving effect to a wife's equity to a settlement of a fund in court, the rule of settling half on the wife is departed from, either where the fund is very small and the husband is not in a position to maintain his wife, or where the husband has received a much larger amount in right of his wife, without appropriation for her maintenance. Ward v. Yates, 1 Dr. & Sm. 80; 8 W. R. 428.

Whole Amount Settled—Bankruptcy of Husband.]—Where a married woman was entitled to a fund of 153*l.*, her husband bankrupt, and unable to maintain her:—Held, as between her and her husband's assignees, that the whole should be settled on her. Kincaid's Trusts, In re, 1 Drew. 326; 22 L. J., Ch. 395; 17 Jur. 106; 1 W. R. 120. And see Townsend's Trusts, In re, 41 L. T. 19; Cutler, In re, 14 Beav. 220; 20 L. J., Ch. 504; 15 Jur. 911; Dunkley v. Dunkley, 3 De G. M. & G. 390; 16 Jur. 767; Marshall v. Fowler, 16 Beav. 249; 16 Jur. 1128; Walker v. Drury, 17 Beav. 482; 23 L. J., Ch. 712; 2 W. R. 3; Wilson, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 569; Gent v. Harris, 10 Hare, 383; Tubb, In re, Tubb v. Curtis, 8 W. R. 270; Smith v. Smith, 3 Giff. 121; 4 L. T. 353; 9 W. R. 651; Nicholson v. Carline, 22 W. R. 819; Bray v. Langton, 2 Eq. R. 385; 2 W. R. 324; Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Eq. R. 1270; 2 W. R. 667.

—— Separation.]—A female infant with a small fortune being persuaded to contract a marriage with a young man without fortune, who, soon after the marriage, separated from her, on a bill by her for a settlement, the court ordered the whole to be settled on her and her children. Layton v. Layton, 1 Sm. & G. 179. And see Disney, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 206; 4 W. R. 425, n.

—— Misconduct of Husband.]—A wife was entitled to about 1,500*l.* The husband had disregarded an order of the court for restitution of conjugal rights, and stated that he and his wife should not again live together:—Held, that the conduct of the husband amounted to aggravated misconduct, and that under all the circumstances of the case the whole fund was to be settled on the wife and children. Reid v. Reid, 55 L. J., Ch. 756; 33 Ch. D. 220; 55 L. T. 153; 34 W. R. 715.

A married woman, whose husband had been insolvent, became entitled to a sum of 200*l.*, and to the income of 400*l.* which was divisible after her death amongst her nine children. The court settled the whole 200*l.* upon her, without giving any portion of it to her husband's assignee in insolvency. Hooper's Trusts, In re, 6 W. R. 824.

—— Wage-earning Husband.]—When a journeyman carpenter was in the receipt of wages not exceeding 12*s.* a week, and had to support a wife and six children, the court settled the whole of an incoming fund, the property of the wife, but liable to the extent of the husband's interest to the claim of a creditor, upon the wife and children. Cordwell, In re, White v. Cordwell, 44 L. J., Ch. 746; L. R. 20 Eq. 644.

Two-thirds—Bankruptcy of Husband.]—In an action by a married woman for her equity to a settlement, where the husband was an undischarged bankrupt, but was living with his wife, and contributed something out of his earnings to her support, the court directed two-thirds only of the wife's fund to be settled upon her. Callow v. Callow, 55 L. T. 154.

By a marriage settlement, 2,000*l.*, part of a mortgage debt of 4,000*l.*, belonging to the wife, was settled upon trusts which entirely excluded the husband, and the remaining 2,000*l.* was left unsettled. The husband having become bankrupt, the court approved of a settlement of three-fourths of the latter sum upon the wife and children, with the ultimate trust in default of children for the husband, without regard to the question of survivorship. Spirett v. Willows, 35 L. J., Ch. 755; L. R. 1 Ch. 520; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 538; 14 L. T. 720; 14 W. R. 941. And see Coster v. Coster, 9 Sim. 597; 8 L. J., Ch. 230; Vaughan v. Buck, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 284; 20 L. J., Ch. 335; 15 Jur. 348; Pugh, Ex parte, 1 Drew. 202; 16 Jur. 652; and Napier v. Napier, 1 Dr. & War. 407; Gross v. Errington, 3 W. R. 382.

—— Bankruptcy of Husband—Form of Settlement.]—A woman who in 1863 married without a settlement, in 1869 became entitled in remainder under his father's will to a share of his estate. Subsequently her husband became bankrupt, and was discharged in 1871. In 1894 her share vested in possession, its amount over 700*l.* being less than that of her husband's indebtedness to his creditors. She resided with her husband, whose income from business was 300*l.* a year. On an originating summons by the trustee of the will:—Held, that her equity to a settlement attached to her entire share, and that the form of the settlement should follow that ordered in Briant, In re, Poulter v. Shackel (39 Ch. D. 471). Howard, In re, Howard v. Howard, 13 R. 233.

One-half.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, a legacy of 600*l.*, belonging to the wife, was settled by husband and wife on the wife for life, for her separate use, with remainder to her children. At the time of the settlement the husband was insolvent:—Held, that the husband was entitled to one moiety of the legacy, and the other moiety was ordered to be paid to the trustees of the settlement. Wray's Trusts, In re, 16 Jur. 1126.

Out of 5,000*l.*, the property of a married woman, 2,500*l.* clear of all costs and expenses was directed to be settled upon her as against the assignees of the husband, who was an uncertificated bankrupt in prison and totally unable to provide for the support of his wife and four children. Lea v. Church, 3 W. R. 603.

Lunacy—Effect of.]—Where wife a lunatic. See Hewson, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 825; and where husband a lunatic, Baldwin v. Baldwin, 5 De G. & S. 319.

3. Wife's Equity to a Separate Maintenance.

a. Jurisdiction.

No Original.]—No court has any original jurisdiction to give a wife separate maintenance; but it may be given incidentally as on a supplicavit in chancery, or a divorce à mensâ and through propter scevitiam in the ecclesiastical court. Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. J. 195; 4 Bro. C. C. 339.

In cases of separate maintenance the court must be guided by judicial determinations and not by private judgment. Tyrrell v. Hope, 2 Atk. 560.

Writ of Supplicavit.]—Order for security under supplicavit, on articles exhibited by wife against husband, under 2 Jac. 1, c. 8. Heyn's Case, 2 Ves. & B. 182.

Order for security under a writ of supplicavit, on articles by a wife against her husband. Dobbyn's Case, 3 Ves. & B. 183.

On Agreement for Separation.]—There is no doubt of the general jurisdiction of a court of equity to decree the specific performance of articles between husband and wife for a separation and a separate maintenance. But the court exercises its discretion in this case very cautiously, and will not give its assistance until it has seen whether, from the circumstances of the case, there is or is not a probability of the parties being reconciled. A sentence in the ecclesiastical court for the restitution of conjugal rights is a reason for this court refusing to give its assistance in such a case; and, in general, if such an agreement is not fit to be enforced, the court will on a cross bill order it to be delivered up; though there may be cases in which no relief will be given to either party. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 2 Cox, 99.

b. When Ordered.

Wife and Child.]—Order upon an application of a wife under special circumstances to be allowed maintenance for herself and child out of a fund standing in the name of the accountant-general, to which the husband became entitled in right of his wife during the coverture, the husband opposing the application. Atherton v. Nowell, 1 Cox, 229.

Husband Forcing Separation on Wife.]—Where husband uses force to compel wife to execute deed of separation, and thereby to take a very small maintenance, court of equity will give relief and direct proper maintenance. Lambert v. Lambert, 2 Bro. P. C. 18.

By articles before marriage, 6,000*l.*, part of the portion, is agreed to be invested in land and settled to the husband for life, then to his wife for life, remainder as a provision for younger children, remainder to the husband in fee. The husband, having by his cruelty forced his wife to separate from him, the court decreed the interest of the 6,000*l.* to be paid for her separate maintenance till cohabitation. Oxendon v. Oxendon, 2 Vern. 493; Pre. Ch. 239; Gilb. 1.

A husband, shortly after his marriage, ceased to cohabit with his wife, and never provided her with a home, or contributed to her support, but left her to be supported by her sisters, whilst he received and appropriated to himself her income, and threatened her, by gestures as well as words, with personal violence. In a suit instituted by the wife against her husband and the trustees of an annuity of 50*l.* (which appeared to be all her income), the court directed the annuity to be paid to her for her support till further order. Gilchrist v. Cator, 1 De G. & Sm. 188; 11 Jur. 448.

Arrears of Annuity.]—A., in a letter to his wife's father, said, as he did not choose to be a witness to her infirmities, he would allow her 400*l.* per annum while she lived with her father. The wife, on a bill for separate maintenance, moved for the arrears (600*l.*) to be paid for her support till the hearing. The court granted 400*l.* in gross, but not as arrears, and said it would be refused in future. The husband, in his answer, swore he was desirous of cohabiting with his wife. Two years after the motion, the wife filed a bill for the arrears, and growing payments for the 400*l.* pursuant to agreement, and the husband contended, that the agreement was only intended to exist during his occasional absence. It appeared that the wife was dis-ordered in her mind, and that upon the husband's attempt to confine her, she obtained a supplicavit. Lord Chancellor gave judgment: 1. That the 400*l.* was only intended to continue during the husband's occasional absence. 2. As to the liberty to live separate, prayed by the wife, the court could not decree a separation or separate maintenance, unless upon the parties' own agreement. And, 3. The obtaining a supplicavit does not justify the wife's elopement, for it is granted on a supposition that they are to live together:—Decreed, that as the court saw grounds for granting a supplicavit, and the husband's offer to receive his wife was only judicially made by his answer, the arrears of the annuity should be paid, and that the husband should take his wife home and maintain her; if she refused, the maintenance should cease, but if he refused, then the maintenance to continue. Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 295, 547; 1 Ves. 17.

Desertion by Husband—Pin-Money.]—A husband deserted his wife, and went to America, having first fraudulently assigned all his property. The court decreed her a maintenance out of the estate assigned, though she had the interest of 4,000*l.* as pin-money. In a suit for alimony, separate maintenance or pin-money is not a good plea. Colmer v. Colmer, Mos. 121.

Ill-treatment the Ground of Maintenance.]—No decree for separate maintenance upon the bill of a wife on the mere fact that she and her husband were separated by consent, he not making any addition to the settlement for her on marriage out of her property. The only instances of it, either out of his property or what was originally hers, are where he turned her out of doors, or by ill-treatment obliged her to leave his house, or had quitted the kingdom leaving her destitute. Duncan v. Duncan, 19 Ves. 394; Coop. 254.

Interest of Small Legacies.]—The interest of small legacies ordered to be paid to the mother for maintenance, upon her affidavit, that the father was abroad in embarrassed circumstances. Walker v. Shore, 15 Ves. 122.

When husband and wife are living apart from the misconduct of the wife, the court will not assist her in obtaining a separate maintenance; but the case is different where the separation arises from the misconduct of the husband, as where there is a divorce à mensâ et thoro on the ground of the husband's adultery. Barrow v. Barrow, 18 Beav. 529; 24 L. J., Ch. 267.

Alleged Misconduct of Wife.]—Bill brought by wife for maintenance on suggestion of cruel usage by the husband. On the part of the defendant as an excuse for his ill-usage, depositions were offered to prove a criminal conversation: unless it is expressly charged by the answer, the court will not suffer the depositions to be read. Watkyns v. Watkyns, 2 Atk. 96.

Answer charging that the wife had behaved in an indecent manner will entitle the husband to read evidence against her of criminal conversation. Ib.

A wife will not be allowed maintenance where there is full proof of her elopement and adultery. Ib.

Husband having left the kingdom, interest of trust money directed to be paid to the wife till he thinks proper to return and maintain her as he ought. Ib.

—— Adultery of Wife.]—Mrs. D. being entitled to 3,000*l.* in reversion expectant on her aunt's death, the aunt consented, at the request of Mr. and Mrs. D., to relinquish her life interest in 2,000*l.*, part of the 3,000*l.*, in consideration of Mr. D. agreeing that remainder of the 3,000*l.*, when payable, should be paid to trustees for his wife's separate use, and that he would immediately settle 2,000*l.* out of his own funds, and also the first-mentioned 2,000*l.*, so as to provide for the maintenance of himself and his wife, and the survivor of them. The agreement was carried into effect by a deed which directed the trustees to pay the interest of the two sums of 2,000*l.* to Mr. and Mrs. D. during their joint lives, and to stand possessed of the principal for the survivor of them. Mr. D. afterwards separated from his wife in consequence of her having committed adultery:—Held, that he was entitled to receive the whole of the interest of the trust fund, and was not bound to maintain his wife out of it, notwithstanding she was destitute of the means of support. Duncan v. Campbell, 12 Sim. 616; 6 Jur. 667.

Refusal of Wife to Live Abroad.]—The court refused to order a provision for a married woman out of dividends and interest to which she was entitled for life, she refusing to live with her husband, an officer abroad with his regiment, and willing to receive her; if he had deserted her that would be a good ground. Bullock v. Menzies, 4 Ves. 798.

Insolvency of Husband.]—Money in court belonging to a married woman ordered to be applied for the benefit of herself and children, the husband having taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act. Brett v. Greenwell, 3 Y. & Coll. 230.

Right of Wife to Maintenance—Possession of Separate Property.]—Semble, a woman possessed of separate estate is entitled to maintenance by her husband, although he be lunatic, and is not bound to pledge her separate estate in order to provide herself with necessaries. Davidson v. Wood, 32 L. J., Ch. 400; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 589; 8 L. T. 476; 11 W. R. 719—L.JJ.

Interest on Arrears.]—Interest not given upon arrears of maintenance any more than upon arrears of a jointure. Mellish v. Mellish, 14 Ves. 516.

Interest on the arrear of an annuity, bequeathed to a married woman for her sole and separate use, not given, though the fund was productive, and though there was a large residuum; nor in such annuities apportionable. Secus, semble, if it had been given as a separate maintenance. Anderson v. Dwyer, 1 Sch. & Lef. 301.

Provision for Wife—Payment by Trustee to Husband.]—Where the court secures a provision for wife out of her equitable interest claimed by the husband, the trustee is at liberty to pay to the husband, and that payment is not called back. Glaister v. Hewer, 8 Ves. 206.

A woman living apart from her husband and having a separate maintenance, contracts debts, the creditors, by a bill in this court, may follow the separate maintenance whilst it continues; but when that is determined and the husband dead, they cannot by a bill charge the jointure with those debts. Kenge v. Delavall, 1 Vern. 326

Wife to Keep up Establishment.]—To put an end to litigation between a husband and wife, the husband conveyed property to trustees, upon trust to pay his wife 3,700*l.* a year, or so much as she should "order or require." The wife was, out of that sum, to keep up an establishment for herself and children, upon such a scale as she should think fit; and the husband was to have the benefit of it under certain restrictions. But if she should not require the whole for the purposes aforesaid, the surplus was to be paid to the husband:—Held, that so long as she kept up the establishment she was not liable to account for the surplus in her hands. Jodrell v. Jodrell, 14 Beav. 397.

Provision during Separation—Death of Husband.]—A husband went abroad, leaving his wife and child unprovided for, whereupon the father of the husband and the father of the wife entered into an agreement to allow the wife 30*l.* each so long as she should continue separate and apart from her husband:—Held, that the allowance was determined by the death of the husband. Miller v. Woodward, 2 Beav. 271.

c. In Case of Lunacy.

Right to Maintenance—Wife with Separate Property—Lunatic Husband.]—Semble, a woman possessed of separate estate is entitled to maintenance by her husband, although he be lunatic, and is not bound to pledge her separate estate in order to provide herself with necessaries. Davidson v. Wood, 32 L. J., Ch. 400; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 589; 8 L. T. 476; 11 W. R. 719—L.JJ.

Husband of Unsound Mind.]—Interest ordered to be paid to wife, husband being in a state of imbecility of mind. Bird v. Lefevre, 4 Bro. C. C. 100.

Where a sum of stock was bequeathed to a married woman, whose husband was of unsound mind, though no commission of lunacy had been issued against him, the court on a bill filed by the husband and wife for payment of the legacy, transferred the fund into court to the joint account of the plaintiffs, and afterwards, in consideration of the poverty of the parties, made an order on the petition of the wife that the dividends would be paid to her for her life. Steed v. Calley, 2 Myl. & K. 52.

Wife Deranged.]—Part of the capital of a fund in court belonging to a married woman, who was deranged, and had been deserted by her husband, ordered to be applied for her maintenance. Peters v. Grote, 7 Sim. 238.

A wife who was of unsound mind, being entitled to 500*l.* out of property in the cause, besides an annuity of 100*l.* to her separate use, the court refused to allow the husband more than the 500*l.* for the expense of maintaining her, though the husband showed by affidavits that that sum was insufficient to meet the expenses: but he did not state positively his own inability from other sources. Nettleshipp v. Nettleshipp, 10 Sim. 236.

Wife's Fund not Paid to Husband Unconditionally.]—A fund in court, belonging to a married woman who was a lunatic, will not be paid to her husband unconditionally. Symes v. Lee, Bone, Ex parte, 26 L. J., Ch. 665.

The court will, however, make an order for payment of the dividends to the husband; and it will also order a transfer of the stock to him, upon his giving a security, approved by the chief clerk, either upon property or personally, with sureties, to replace the stock when so directed by the court. Ib.

And see T——, In re, 15 Ch. D. 78; and Edwards v. Abrey, 2 Ph. 37; 15 L. J., Ch. 404; 10 Jur. 650.

Account by Husband subject to Presumed Maintenance.]—The husband maintaining his wife and receiving her separate income is not liable to account for more than one year upon a presumed agreement to subject that fund to maintenance. Brodie v. Barry, 2 Ves. & B. 36.

4. Real Estate.

a. Generally.

Rights of Husband.]—The freehold and inheritance of the wife is subject to other rules and regulations than the personal property of the wife: for the husband by the marriage does not become absolute proprietor of the inheritance, but as the governor of the family is so far master of it as to receive the profits of it during the wife's life, but has no power to make an absolute sale of it without her consent—Bacon, Abridg. B. & F. C.

If a man marries a woman seised in fee he gains a freehold in right of his wife.—Co. Litt. 351a.

The husband alone is entitled to the rents and profits of the wife's real estate during coverture, and only his receipt is a valid discharge. Therefore, if a tenant, even not having notice of the coverture, pay to the wife after marriage the rents reserved upon a lease made by the wife while sole, he shall pay them again. Tracey v. Dutton, Palm. 206; S. C., Cro. Jac. 617; Doe d. Leicester v. Briggs, 1 Taunt. 367.

The husband takes an interest in lands belonging to his wife in fee-simple, which he may convey to another for the joint lives of himself and his wife, and such interest passes by the deed of the husband alone. Robertson v. Norris, 11 Q. B. 917; 17 L. J., Q. B. 201; 12 Jur. 556.

Title Deeds.]—The husband is entitled to the custody of his wife's title deeds during marriage, but he cannot transfer the right to them by assigning the rents. Pyatt, In re, Rogers, Ex parte, 26 Ch. D. 31; 51 L. T. 177; 32 W. R. 737.

And see Curtesy, infra, col. 1222.

b. Contracts and Specific Performance.

Agreement by Feme relative to Estate not Binding.]—Feme, though an infant, can in no case be bound by contract relative to her estate, and though made between herself, husband, and her father during her coverture. Stamper v. Barker, 5 Madd. 157.

A feme covert, one of several devisees in trust for sale, cannot bind herself to convey the estate, and a bill by the purchaser to enforce specific performance of a contract by such trustees was dismissed. Avery v. Griffin, L. R. 6 Eq. 606.

Husband and wife agreed in writing to sell the wife's equitable estate in fee to A., and subsequently conveyed the same estate by deed duly acknowledged to B., a purchaser for value without actual notice. A, was tenant in possession, and no inquiry was made as to any claim on his part by B. :—Held, that as an agreement by husband and wife to sell the wife's fee could not be specifically performed in equity, A. took no interest under his agreement, and the conveyance to B. was good. Wilkinson v. Castle, 37 L. J., Ch. 467; 18 L. T. 100; 16 W. R. 501. Affirmed 39 L. J., Ch. 843; L. R. 5 Ch. 534; 18 W. R. 586.

Held, also, that as A. knew that he was contracting to purchase the wife's estate, he took nothing under the agreement, and could not even compel the husband to convey his interest and receive an abated price. Ib.

A wife may, by a deed duly acknowledged, to which her husband is a party, acquire a power to dispose by will of her real estates, whether in possession or in reversion. Pride v. Bubb, 41 L. J., Ch. 105; L. R. 7 Ch. 64; 25 L. T. 890; 20 W. R. 220.

—— Voidable Agreement by Female Infant to Settle—Defeating.]—Though a female infant is not bound by an agreement on marriage to settle her real estate, if she does not, when of age, choose to accede to it, her husband would not be permitted to aid her in defeating, nor is her act, during coverture, effectual. Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 275.

—— Improvident Valuation.]—Though a person may agree to sell at a price to be fixed by an award, and though the award can only be impeached for fraud or gross mistake, yet, upon such an agreement, where some of the persons to be bound were married women, and one of them had not executed, the court refused a specific performance, leaving plaintiff to law. Emery v. Wase, 5 Ves. 846.

On appeal, his honour's decree was affirmed, on the ground that the evidence did not prove as satisfactorily as it ought (especially in the case of married women) that the valuation was made with due attention and care. S. C., 8 Ves. 505.

Agreement for Partition by Husband.]—The husbands of two co-heiresses by mutual agreement made a partition between themselves and the heir of their respective wives; after death of both husbands, on bill against one of the widows, to confirm the division :—Held, that she was not bound by her husband's agreement; for the agreement of husbands cannot bind the inheritance of the wives. Ireland v. Rittle, 1 Atk. 542.

—— For Sale.]—An agreement by the husband to sell his wife's estate shall not bind her, or be carried into execution without her consent. Bryan v. Woolley, 1 Bro. P. C. 184.

Specific Performance at Suit of Husband and Wife.]—Husband and wife may maintain a suit for specific performance of an agreement by them with a third party, for the sale to him of lands whereof he is seised in right of the wife. Fennelly v. Anderson, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 706.

—— Against Married Woman.]—The court will not make a peremptory order upon a married woman to execute a conveyance of an estate not settled to her separate use. Jordan v. Jones, 2 Ph. 170.

—— Purchaser Cognisant of Coverture.]—The wife of the plaintiff, by a will made in 1838, left real property to J., a married woman, and a legacy of 1,000*l.* and an annuity of 100*l.* to the plaintiff, and by a will made in 1858 she revoked the former will, and left all her property to the plaintiff. On her death the plaintiff entered into possession of the property, and commenced a suit against the heir-at-law of the wife in the court of probate to establish the second will. By a compromise made in the suit, and signed by J.'s husband for himself and wife, and by J.'s solicitor on her behalf, the plaintiff agreed to give up the property, and all benefit under either will, on the terms of being paid 15,000*l.* out of the estate. The plaintiff gave up the estate, and helped to establish the will of 1838. J. and her husband then refused to pay the 15,000*l.* On a bill filed by the plaintiff against J. and her husband for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that as the plaintiff was aware that J. was a married woman at the time he made the contract, her estate was not bound. Nicholl v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ch. 554; L. R. 3 Eq. 696; 15 L. T. 383; 15 W. R. 393.

—— Authority to Sell by Auction—Sale by Private Contract.]—Baron and feme having joint power to sell an estate of the wife's give authority to an agent to sell by auction; he sells by private contract for more than the price they required; the buyer cannot compel specific performance. Husband delivering his wife's compliments in a letter to the agent, is no proof of her joining in giving authority to agent. Daniel v. Adams, Ambl. 495.

—— Power to Appoint—Sale.]—Husband and wife having joint power to appoint by formal deed over wife's estate, agree in writing to sell it. Specific performance refused, as agreement was not binding on married woman. Martin v. Mitchell, 2 Jac. & Walk. 425.

Semble, under contract by husband and wife for sale of wife's estate, court would not decree husband to procure her to join. Id. 525.

—— Personal Decree against Wife.]—The court will not make a personal decree on the wife, where husband and wife jointly agree to convey; but the husband was decreed to convey, and to procure his wife to join or to refund the money received. Sedgwick v. Hargrave, 2 Ves. 57.

—— Agreement for Sale by Wife.]—An estate was devised to a feme covert for her separate use. She entered into a contract for sale and died, having devised the estate to her husband, who sued for a specific performance. The purchaser objected that the feme covert had neither power to enter into a contract nor to devise the estate. The court declined to compel a specific performance in the absence of the heir. Harris v. Mott, 14 Beav. 169; 15 Jur. 978.

Wife joining in Fine—Revocation.]—Where feme covert joins with husband in fine, she cannot recall it after five years. Anon., Cary, 5.

Wife cannot Change Nature of Property.]—Wife not capable of changing the nature of her estate because under coverture, and unable to contract. Oldam v. Hughes, 2 Atk. 452.

Where feme covert was entitled to money, which was articled to be laid out in land, before she could alter the property or course of descent, the money must be invested in land, and then she may levy a fine and give it away, or upon coming into court and consenting to take the money as personal estate, and being examined as to such consent, it binds the money articled to be laid out in land, as much as a fine at law would the land, and she may dispose of it. Ib.

Agreement to Grant Lease.]—A married woman, with the concurrence and in the presence of her husband, signed an agreement in writing to grant a lease; at the date of the agreement it was believed by all parties that she was entitled to two-thirds of the property for her separate use, and that the remaining one-third belonged to her brother in India, whose concurrence it was represented that she could procure. It was soon afterwards discovered that the wife was entitled to one-fourth only for her separate use; that to another fourth she was entitled absolutely; that another fourth had belonged to a deceased sister of the wife; and that the remaining fourth belonged to the brother in India. The fourth which belonged to the sister was purchased by the husband soon after the state of the title was discovered. Upon a bill for specific performance against husband and wife:—Held, that there could be no decree against her in personam, and that her agreement did not bind the husband as to the interests in the property which he had at the date of the agreement, or which he afterwards acquired. The court will not compel a vendor to give an indemnity, unless vendor and purchaser have contracted for it. Aylett v. Ashton, 1 Myl. & C. 105; 5 L. J., Ch. 71.

Feme sole takes consideration for making lease for twenty-one years, and then marries. Lessee surrenders old lease and takes another, husband dies, wife may oust lessee, and he cannot enforce first lease against her. Anon., Cary, 21.

Where reversioner upon an estate for life made a settlement on herself for life with power for her being sole, to make leases for three lives in possession: and she and her husband in the lifetime of the tenant for life made a lease for twenty-one years, habend, from the date: it was held, not pursuant to her power: for by making the marriage she put herself under the control of her husband. Antrim (Marquis) v. Bucks (Duke), 1 Ch. Ca. 17; Salk. 276; 2 Freem. 168.

Difference between a naked power and a power which flows from an interest. Ib.

Trustee for Sale—Conveyance to Purchaser—Concurrence of Husband.]—Real estate vested in a married woman (married since the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882) jointly with other persons upon trust for sale cannot be effectually conveyed to a purchaser without the concurrence of her husband and a separate acknowledgment by her. Harkness and Allsopp's Contract, In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 726; [1896] 2 Ch. 358; 74 L. T. 652; 44 W. R. 683.

Ignorance of Purchaser as to Vendor's Title.]—A. contracted with B. for the purchase in fee of property in ignorance that B. was only entitled to an estate pur autre vie, and that C. (B.'s wife) was entitled to the remainder in fee on the determination of the particular life. D., with full knowledge of A.'s contract, took a conveyance from B. & C. of the property, acknowledged by C. so as to pass her interest:—Held, that A. was entitled, by way of specific performance, to a conveyance from D. of B.'s interest, with compensation in respect of C.'s interest, which B. was unable to bind or convey without her consent. Barnes v. Wood, 38 L. J., Ch. 683; L. R. 8 Eq. 424; 21 L. T. 227; 17 W. R. 1080.

Widow Refusing to Convey Life Estate—Specific Performance.]—A husband agreed to sell property which was settled as he and his wife should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of trustees during the life of the wife for her separate use, with remainder to the husband in fee. The purchase-money was invested in consols and paid to the trustees of the settlement. On the death of the husband before completion the wife refused to convey her life interest:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled, by way of specific performance, to a conveyance of the property subject to the widow's life interest, with compensation in respect of such interest out of the husband's personal estate, and that he was entitled to a lien of the consols in the hands of the trustees for such compensation. Barker v. Coæ, 25 W. R. 138.

Married Woman instituting Suit—Founding Jurisdiction.]—A married woman having instituted a suit and obtained a decree for specific performance of a contract entered into by her husband for the settlement of her estate cannot afterwards repudiate the contract; for by instituting the suit she gives the court jurisdiction to bind her interests, and it is no objection that this has not been done by deed, acknowledged under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Barrow v. Barrow, 4 Kay & J. 409; 27 L. J., Ch. 678; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1049; 6 W. R. 714.

Attorney to Alienate Lands.]—Husband and wife cannot, either jointly or severally, appoint an attorney to alienate the wife's lands. Graham v. Jackson, 6 Q. B. 811; 14 L. J., Q. B. 129; 9 Jur. 275.

A power of attorney by husband and wife, severally and respectively appointing an attorney to surrender the wife's customary tenement into the lord's hands is a nullity. Ib.

Devise to Convey to Husband after Wife's Death.]—A devise of real estate to trustees for an unmarried woman for life for her separate use, and after her death to convey to her husband, with a gift over in the event of her dying unmarried, vests the remainder in fee in the first person she may marry; and a title accruing under such a devise will be forced on an unwilling purchaser. Radford v. Willis, 41 L. J., Ch. 19; L. R. 7 Ch. 7; 25 L. T. 720.

Letting Wife's Lands.)—By a marriage settlement real estates were conveyed to trustees, to permit the wife to receive the rents to her sole use independently of her husband. After the marriage, the husband let the premises to tenants, speaking of them as property in which his wife was interested. The wife received the rents during her life:—Held, that it was a question of fact in what character the husband let the premises, whether as agent for the trustees, or as dealing with his wife's property, and that after the death of the wife the tenants were not estopped from denying that the husband had any interest unless it was found that he let in his own name. Howe v. Scarrott, 4 H. & N. 723; 28 L. J., Ex. 325.

—— Action for Trespass.]—To a declaration containing counts for trespass to land, conversion of goods, and assault, the defendant pleaded equitable pleas, raising substantially the same defence to each count, viz., that M., the plaintiff's wife, was seised of lands, that she afterwards married the plaintiff, whereby her estate became vested in her and the plaintiff, that afterwards by deed duly acknowledged the plaintiff and M. conveyed to E., his heirs and assigns, to hold during the life of M., to the use of M. and her assigns, to the intent that she and they should receive the rents and profits for her separate use, independently of her husband; that afterwards M. demised to the defendant, and that the acts complained of in the declaration were respectively the defendant's entry upon the lands demised, his taking the crops and his removing the plaintiff from the premises on the plaintiff's disturbing him in his possession:—Held, that these were good pleas, because the lands having been settled to the wife's separate use, and she having demised to the defendant, a court of equity would grant an injunction to prevent the plaintiff from disturbing the defendant in his quiet possession; and that as to the count for assault as well as the counts in trespass and trover, an injunction to restrain proceedings would be granted, such an injunction being necessary for the complete protection of the occupation of the wife's separate estate. Allen v. Walker, 39 L. J., Ex. 153; L. R. 5 Ex. 187; 22 L. T. 610.

Assignee of Husband and Wife—Survivorship of Wife—Action for Waste.]—Devise to A. and his wife to hold for their joint lives, and to the survivor for his or her life. The husband during the joint lives assigned, and the assignee committed waste:—Held, that the wife (who survived) could not maintain an action for waste, she having only a contingent remainder at the time of the waste done. Bacon v. Smith, 4 P. & D. 651; 1 Q. B. 345; 10 L. J., Q. B. 119; 5 Jur. 549.

Settlement—Trees Cut down by Order of Husband.]—Lands, together with the woods, were conveyed under a marriage settlement to A. and B., their heirs and assigns, during the life of W., in trust to pay the rents and profits as W. should appoint during her life; and, after her decease, to the use of such child or children of the marriage, and in such shares as W. should appoint; and, for want of appointment, to the use of the children equally, and the heirs of their bodies, with cross-remainders; and, in default of such issue, to the use of the right heirs of W. for ever:—Held, that A. and B. could not maintain trover against a stranger, for certain trees which had been cut down by order of the husband of W., and carried away by the stranger. Blaker v. Anscombe, 1 N. R. 25.

Husband Tenant by Curtesy — Wife must concur.]—Where a husband is but tenant by the curtesy of his wife's estate, he cannot affect that estate without her joining. Incledon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 436. See CURTESY, infra, col. 1227.

c. Sale of Wife's Property.

Sale of Wife's Estate.]—A husband and wife agreed in writing to sell the wife's estate in fee to A., and subsequently duly conveyed the estate to B.:—Held, that, as A. knew that he was contracting to purchase the wife's estate, he took nothing under the agreement, and could not even compel the husband to convey his interest and receive an abated price. Wilkinson v. Castle, 39 L. J., Ch. 843; L. R. 5 Ch. 534; 18 W. R. 586.

And see FINES AND RECOVERIES.

5. WIFE'S CHATTELS.

Husband's Rights in.]—Marriage is an absolute gift to the husband of all chattels personal in possession in her own right, whether the husband survive the wife or no.—Co. Litt. 351b.

Money ordered to be paid to the husband in right of his wife is a vested interest in him. Heygate v. Annesty, 3 Bro. C. C. 362.

A husband is entitled to the personal property of his wife, which she has acquired by living apart from him in adultery. Agar v. Blethyn, 2 C. M. & R. 699; 1 Tyr. & G. 160; 5 L. J., Ex. 36.

The property in wearing apparel bought for herself by a wife living with her husband out of money settled to her separate use before marriage, and paid to her by the trustees of the settlement, vests by law in the husband, and it is liable to be taken in execution for his debts. Carne v. Brice, 7 M. & W. 183; 8 D. P. C. 884; 10 L. J., Ex. 28.

N., in a marriage settlement, reciting that I., his intended wife, was possessed of goods, and that it had been agreed that, in case she survived him, she should have the goods and such articles as might be bought in lieu thereof for her own use, and, in case she should die before him, that she might dispose of the goods, covenanted with trustees that he would not dispose of the goods without the consent of I.; that he would purchase new articles in lieu of those which might be worn out or disposed of; that if she survived him she should have the goods for her own use, and if he survived her she should dispose of them subject to his life interest. No assignment of the goods was made to the trustees. N. and I. separated after their marriage, and I. demised the goods to F. as a yearly tenant:—Held, first, that the goods were, notwithstanding the settlement, the property of N., and might be seized under a fi. fa. against him; but, secondly that they could not be seized for his debt during the continuance of the demise to F. Izod v. Lamb, 1 C. & J. 35.

Money received by a married woman out of the proceeds of her husband's business, or saved by her out of moneys given to her by him for household purposes, dress, or the like, and invested by her in her own name, belongs to her husband. Barrack v. M'Culloch, 3 Kay & J. 110.

A husband and wife lived separate from each other. At the death of the wife she was possessed of cash and bank notes arisen from property settled to her separate use:—Held, that the husband was entitled to them in his marital right. Maloney v. Kennedy, 10 Sim. 254.

—— Trading by Wife.]—A married woman carrying on trade without the interference of her husband, who resided in a different part of the kingdom, advanced money to the plaintiff for the purchase of a share in a lottery, upon an agreement with him, that half should be considered a loan to him, and that they should be jointly concerned in the adventure:—Held, that the wife's money being that of the husband, the produce of the lottery prize belonged to him also; the plaintiff's bill for a moiety of the prize was dismissed. Lamphir v. Creed, 8 Ves. 599.

And see cols. 1027, 1115.

—— When Derived from Separate Estate.]—Money saved by a wife out of the income of her separate estate, and invested, belongs to her. Barrack v. M'Culloch, 3 Kay & J. 110.

Where such investment had been made by her husband for her, upon its being impeached by his creditors after his death:—Held, that the onus was upon her to prove that the moneys were the savings of her separate estate. Ib.

She proved that they were saved out of rents of furnished houses, which were settled to her separate use:—Held, that threw back upon the creditors the onus of proving that the furniture belonged to the husband, and, also what part of the rents was to be attributed to the furniture. Ib. And see col. 1024.

Paraphernalia, as to.]—See col. 1262.

Foreign Spouses acquiring an English Domicil, as to.]—See De Nicols, In re, De Nicols v. Curlier, 67 L. J., Ch. 274; [1898] 1 Ch. 403.

6. CHATTELS REAL.

Husband may dispose of—During Wife's life.]—Husband may forfeit or dispose of his wife's chattel real during her life; if he does not it survives to her; if he survives it goes absolutely to him. Moody v. Matthews, 7 Ves. 183.

A wife's term may be disposed of or forfeited by her husband, or taken in execution for his debt; but if not, it survives against his representative. Wildman v. Wildman, 9 Ves. 177; 7 R. R. 153.

—— Reversionary Interest.]—A husband may make a valid assignment of his wife's reversionary interest in leasehold property; but secus, if the interest is of such a nature that it cannot by possibility vest in the wife in possession during the coverture. Duberley v. Day, 16 Beav. 33.

Agreement for Lease a Reduction into Possession.]—An agreement by a husband for a lease of the chattel real of the wife is in equity a reduction into possession, and binding on the wife surviving. The rent agreed for is, therefore, assets of the husband. Donegani v. Hibson, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 441. And see Stead v. Cragh, 9 Mod. 43.

Copyhold Term—Death of Wife.]—If wife, tenant of term in copyhold, dies before expiration, husband continues in without new admission or fine. Bath (Earl) v. Abney, Dick, 263.

Death of Wife.]—A wife entitled to a term, subject to a life estate therein, predeceased her husband during the subsistence of the life estate:—Held, that it was not necessary for the husband to take out letters of administration to her in order to complete his title to the leaseholds. Bellamy, In re, Elder v. Pearson, 53 L. J., Ch. 174; 25 Ch. D. 620; 49 L. T. 708; 32 W. R. 358.

On the death of a wife her husband, in the absence of any disposition by her, becomes entitled jure mariti to her equitable interest in chattels real settled to her separate use. Archer v. Lavender, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 220.

A., being possessed of lands for a term of 999 years, previously to his marriage with B. granted the term to "B. and her heirs, immediately after the death of A., to hold the same to B. and her heirs to and for her and their own proper use for ever"; the marriage took place. A survived B. and died without issue, intestate, and without having taken out administration to B. his wife; the term upon the death of A. goes to his administrator, and not to the administrator of B. Doe d. Roberts v. Polgrean, 1 H. Bl. 535.

Wife Marrying an Alien.]—Wife, being possessed of term for years, and having married an alien, the marriage is not a gift in law of the term. Theobalds v. Duffoy, 9 Mod. 104.

Lease by Trinity House.]—A lease by the corporation of the Trinity House of a lighthouse, and of the tolls thereof, is a chattel real, and therefore a husband may assign his wife's interest in such a lease. Construction of the twenty-third and twenty-sixth sections of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 79, enabling the Trinity House Corporation to purchase lighthouses. Ellison, Ex parte, Trinity House Corporation Act, In re, 2 Y. & Coll. 528; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 49; 1 Jur. 283.

Merger.]—A trust term is not merged in equity by the marriage of the trustee to a woman entitled to the freehold. Thorn v. Newman, 3 Swan. 603.

Lessee of Lands Let by Husband and Wife—Arrears of Rent.]—A husband cannot maintain an action against a lessee for arrears of rent, accruing after the death of his wife, on a lease of her land by himself and his wife, under a seal, during coverture, and in which the lessee covenanted with the husband and wife and the heirs of the wife for the payment of rent. Hill v. Saunders, 2 Bing. 112; 9 Moore, 238; 1 Car. & P. 80. S. C. (in error), 7 D. & R. 17; 4 B. & C. 529; 28 R. R. 375.

If such a lease is made according to the provisions of the 32 Hen. 8, c. 28, it continues during the term, notwithstanding the death of the wife; and although her heir is entitled to the rent he cannot enter or eject. Ib.

Reversionary Interest in Leasehold Property.]—A husband may make a valid assignment of his wife's reversionary interest in leasehold property; but secus, if the interest is of such a nature that it cannot by possibility vest in the wife in possession during the coverture. Duberley v. Day, 16 Beav. 33.

A wife's leaseholds were, on her marriage, limited to her absolutely in the event of her surviving her husband, but without any trust for her separate use:—Held, that he could not, during the coverture, dispose of this contingent reversionary interest. Ib.

Secret Settlements.]—A voluntary settlement made after marriage, but without actual fraud, whereby a chattel interest of the wife's was conveyed in trust to the husband and wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, remainder to the wife's son by a former marriage, is not avoided under 27 Eliz. c. 4, by a mortgage made by the wife after the death of her husband. Doe d. Richards v. Lewis, 11 C. B. 1035; 20 L. J., C. P. 177; 15 Jur. 512.

A secret settlement by a woman, whilst under treaty of marriage, though liable to be set aside in a court of equity, is not necessarily void in a court of law. Ib.

A., pending a treaty of marriage between her and B., without B.'s knowledge made a settlement of certain leaseholds to herself for life, remainder to C., her son by a former marriage, remainder over to D. :—Held, that this deed was not avoided by the marriage, under 27 Eliz. c. 4, the husband not taking as a purchaser. Ib.

On Marrying Administratrix.]—A husband who marries a feme administratrix may surrender or dispose of a term which she has in that right. Thrustout d. Levick v. Coppin, 2 W. Bl. 801; 3 Wils. 277.

7. Choses in Action.

a. Generally.

What are.]—A chose in action is a right to be asserted or property reducible into possession either by action at law or suit in equity. Langham v. Nenny, 3 Ves. 469; Wms. Exors. 9th ed. 693.

Title of Husband.]—Marriage is only a qualified gift to the husband of his wife's choses in action, viz., upon condition that he reduces them into possession during its continuance—Co. Litt. 351b. Osborn v. Morgan, 9 Ha. 432; Fleet v. Perring, 38 L. J., Q. B. 257; L. R., 4 Q. B. 500; 20 L. T. 814.

General Probate of Will of Married Woman.]—A woman married before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, who was entitled to choses in action, but had no separate property, nor any property of which she could dispose by will, made without the assent of her husband, a will, by which she appointed executors, and gave all her property away from her husband. After her death probate of her will, which, pursuant to the Rules of 1887, was in general form, was granted to one of the executors. The husband brought an action in the chancery division against the executor to recover the choses in action :—Held, by the court below, that the action must be dismissed, for that the plaintiff suing the executor in the chancery division must treat the will as valid, in which case he had no title, and that his remedy was to apply to the probate division to revoke the probate and grant him administration of such estate of his wife as she could not dispose of by will :—But held, by the court of appeal, that the effect of the general probate was only to enable the executor to get in all the assets of the wife, whether she had power to dispose of them by will or not, and that it did not affect the beneficial title to them; that the husband was beneficially entitled to the choses in action, that the executor was a trustee of them for him, and that the husband was entitled to have them transferred to him by the executor, subject to the same deductions as they would have been subject to if the husband had taken out administration under the old practice. Smart v. Tranter, 59 L. J., Ch. 363; 43 Ch. D. 587; 62 L. T. 356; 38 W. R. 530—C. A.

Funds in Accountant-General's Name.]—The funds of a married woman, standing in the name of the accountant-general to her account, may be pledged by her husband. Simmus v. Dewar, 3 Russ. 91.

Bond given to Husband and Wife.]—If a bond is given to husband and wife, administratrix, the husband alone may declare on it, as on a bond made to himself. Ankerstein v. Clarke, 4 Term Rep. 616.

Judgment obtained by Wife before Marriage.]—Marriage does not enure as an assignment to the husband of a judgment recovered by the wife, in Ireland, before the marriage, under 9 Geo. 2, c. 5 (Irish), amended by 25 Geo. 2, c. 14 (Irish), and made perpetual by 12 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 3. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 8 C. B. 592; 19 L. J., C. P. 126; 14 Jur. 485.

b. Reduction into Possession by Husband.

Stock Vesting in Husband as Trustee.]—Stock, the property of a married woman, is not reduced into possession so as to be vested in her husband by a transfer to him merely as trustee. Wall v. Tomlinson, 16 Ves. 413; 10 R. R. 212. And see Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. 497; 8 R. R. 366.

Carrying over to Joint Account.]—The carrying over of a fund in court to the joint account of husband and wife after mortgage of fund by them is not a reduction into possession by husband. Prole v. Soady, 37 L. J., Ch. 246; L. R. 3 Ch. 220; 16 W. R. 445.

Husband never in Position to Assert his Rights by Action.]—A fund to which a married woman becomes entitled during coverture will not be considered as reduced into possession by the husband, where he has not been at any time in a position to assert his rights by action for the amount as money had and received to his use. Aitchison v. Dixon, 39 L. J. Ch. 705; L. R. 10 Eq. 589; 23 L. T. 97; 18 W. R. 989.

A., the sole surviving trustee and executor of G.'s will, appointed E. and his own solicitor, D., as his co-trustees. D., as such trustee, having opened an account at a bank in the name of G.'s executor, drew a cheque against it in favour of A.'s wife, who was entitled to a distributive share of G.'s personal estate, and applied it in payment of a railway debenture, taken in the name of D. and E., as trustees for A.'s wife. A. then died, leaving his wife surviving:—Held, that the cheque having been drawn in favour of his wife, and there never having been a moment at which A. could have brought an action for the amount of it, there had been no reduction into possession by him. Ib.

A woman entitled to property for her separate use was desirous of raising money for the improvement of her estate, while her husband also wished to raise money to discharge a debt. They accordingly arranged through their solicitor to borrow money upon mortgage of the separate estate, and upon policies upon the lives of each of them respectively. The money was to be advanced by instalments, and when the first instalment was due the husband and wife signed a joint authority for the solicitor to receive it for them. He received the money, and claimed to retain part of it in respect of a separate debt due to him as solicitor of the husband:—Held, that in an action by husband and wife the solicitor could not retain the money, or set off against it a debt due from the husband, as it was received upon the express understanding that it was to be held for the husband and wife jointly, so that there never was any reduction into possession on the part of the husband. Jones v. Cuthbertson, 42 L. J., Q. B. 221; L. R. 8 Q. B. 504; 28 L. T. 673; 21 W. R. 919—Ex. Ch.

A woman having a sum of money deposited with a merchant, and standing in her name, married a man whom she afterwards accompanied on a voyage, and both were drowned at the same time. The money was transferred by the merchant into the names of the husband and wife; but the only direction given to the merchant by the husband was to keep this property separate from his other moneys. The husband by his will, after reciting that his wife had previously to her marriage deposited with the merchant this money, which was standing in her name, disposed of the property as his own:—Held, that the husband had done no act to reduce the wife's money into possession, and that it would go to her personal representatives. Scrutton v. Pattillo, 44 L. J., Ch. 249; L. R. 19 Eq. 369; 32 L. T. 140; 23 W. R. 379.

Promissory Note given to Wife.]—The interest in a promissory note, given to a wife during coverture, the consideration for which was money advanced by her during the coverture, survives to the wife after the death of her husband, unless he reduces it into possession in his lifetime. Gaters v. Madeley, 6 M. & W. 425; 9 L. J., Ex. 173; 3 Jur. 724.

The plaintiff, who was a widow, was entitled, under the will of her aunt T., to half of 500*l.*, which had been lent by T. to the defendant, and remained in his hands, at interest, during the life of T., and during the life of T.'s sister (the plaintiff's mother), who was entitled to the interest of it for her life. Under the will of the plaintiff's father she and her sister (the defendant's wife) were each entitled to 200*l.*; of this will the defendant was executor. T. died in 1847, the plaintiff's father in 1845, and her mother on the 13th March, 1850, leaving the plaintiff and her sister surviving her. On the 2nd of March, 1850, the defendant gave a bill of exchange to the plaintiff's husband for 242*l.* 10*s.*, the amount to which the plaintiff would be entitled at her mother's death under T.'s will, and in May a receipt in full of all demands was given to the executors of T.'s will by the defendant and his wife, and by the plaintiff and her husband. After the death of the plaintiff's husband, the defendant obtained possession of the bill of exchange. In 1857, in an interview between the plaintiff and defendant, in the presence of her attorney, the defendant, being pressed for payment, made out an account of the sums in which he was indebted to the plaintiff, charging himself with interest on money lent; at the same time he said that he was going to receive money from the sale of some property, and he indorsed on the above account an authority to his solicitor to pay the amount to the plaintiff out of any moneys received for him, "subject to any legal claim he might have against the plaintiff":—Held, that as to the 242*l.*, the plaintiff had an action in her own right, it not having been reduced into possession by her deceased husband; and that as to the 200*l.*, the defendant was personally liable upon an express promise. Topham v. Morecraft, 8 El. & Bl. 972; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 611; 6 W. R. 294.

A married woman, being administratrix, received a sum of money in that character, and lent the same to her husband, and took in return for it the joint and several promissory note of her husband and two other persons payable to her with interest:—Held, that although she could not have maintained any action upon the note during the lifetime of her husband, yet that he having died, and it having been given for a good consideration, it was a chose in action surviving to the wife, and that she might maintain an action upon it against either of the other makers at any time within six years after the death of her husband, and recover interest from the date of the note. Richards v. Richards, 2 B. & Ad. 447; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 319.

Causing Wife to Indorse Note.]—In an action by payee against maker of a note, he pleaded, that, when the note was made, the plaintiff was the wife of B., and that he elected to take the note in his marital right, and caused the plaintiff to indorse; and she, by his authority, indorsed the note, and B. delivered it so indorsed to F.; and after the note became due, and before action, B. died, and the note came to the plaintiff's possession by delivery from F.:—Held, that the plea was bad, as it did not clearly show such a reduction of the note into possession by the husband as disentitled the wife to sue upon it after his death. Scarpellini v. Atcheson, 7 Q. B. 864; 14 L. J., Q. B. 333; 9 Jur. 827.

Shares in joint Names of Husband and Wife.]—A wife became in 1866 entitled, on the death of an intestate, to a share of his estate. Part of her share was paid by the administrator to the husband, and in 1867 shares in a joint-stock company, which had been appropriated by the administrator in respect of the remainder of the wife's share, were, with the assent of the husband and wife, transferred into their joint names. In May, 1874, the husband deserted the wife, and in November, 1874, she obtained from the justices a protection order, by which her property and earnings acquired since the date of the desertion were protected from her husband. In 1876 the company resolved upon a voluntary liquidation, and the liquidator gave notice to the husband and wife that he was prepared to refund 900*l.* in respect of the capital of the shares. The wife thereupon (suing as a feme sole under the protection order) commenced an action against the company and the husband, claiming payment of the 900*l.* to her as a feme sole. The money was paid into court:—Held, that the transfer into the joint names did not amount to a reduction into possession by the husband, and that the wife was entitled to the 900*l.* as a feme sole under the protection order as being property acquired by her after the desertion. Nicholson v. Drury Building Estate Co., 47 L. J., Ch. 192; 7 Ch. D. 48; 37 L. T. 459; 26 W. R. 76. See also Prole v. Soady, 37 L. J., Ch. 246; L. R. 3 Ch. 220; 16 W. R. 445.

Mortgage of Wife's Chattels Real by Husband.]—Husband executed mortgages of his wife's equitable chattels real, and died in his wife's lifetime, without having paid the mortgage money:—Held, upon the construction of the instruments of mortgage, that the transactions were intended solely as a security to the mortgagees for the money lent, and not as a reduction of chattels into the husband's possession; consequently, that the wife, by survivorship, was entitled to the equity of redemption. Clark v. Burgh, 2 Coll. 221; 14 L. J., Ch. 398; 9 Jur. 679.

Sale by Husband.]—The sale by a husband of his wife's chose in action is a reduction into possession by him. The right to avoid such a sale, e.g. on the ground of fraud, is in the husband, and, though the wife survives him, passes to his executors, who are the proper persons to sue after the death of both husband and wife, not the wife's representatives. Widgery v. Tepper, 47 L. J., Ch. 550; 7 Ch. D. 423; 38 L. T. 434; 26 W. R. 546—C. A.

Joint Receipt of Interest on Debt.] — A debt secured to a testator by warrant of attorney was appropriated by his executor, with the concurrence of a legatee and her husband, in satisfaction of the former's legacy, which was of the same amount. The legatee and her husband received interest on the debt:—Held, that this was not a reduction into possession so as to defeat the wife's equity to a settlement. Norton, Ex parte, Selby, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 258; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 479.

Appropriation of Wife's Income does not Affect Future Income.] — When a trust for accumulation is excessive, and a married woman, as one of the next-of-kin, becomes entitled to a share of the income during the excess, this interest, though lasting for her whole life, is not of such a nature as to enable her husband to assign the future payments to become due during his life, but such payments, unless actually received by the husband or his assignee, will belong to the wife by survivorship. Benn v. Griffith, 18 W. R. 403.

Solicitor Husband Drawing Will.] — B., a solicitor, drew the will of R., his father-in-law, which bequeathed a share of residue, amounting to 45,000*l.*, to B.'s wife, and appointed B. sole executor. The will contained no direction that this sum should be for the separate use of B.'s wife. There was no evidence as to what had passed between B. and R. at the time of the execution of the will:—Held, that, in the absence of evidence, the court could not assume such a dereliction of duty on B.'s part in not informing R. of the effect of the will, as to make B. a trustee for his wife. Birchall, In re, Wilson v. Birchall, 44 L. T. 243; 29 W. R. 461.

Receipt by Agent of Husband and Wife.]—The receipt by an agent, appointed by husband and wife, of money forming part of the estate of an intestate of which the wife is administratrix, amounts to a reduction into possession by the husband of the wife's distributive share of the money. Barber, In re, Dardier v. Chapman, 11 Ch. D. 442; 40 L. T. 649; 27 W. R. 813.

Payment of Debt to Wife, contracted before Marriage.]—The act of the wife in receiving during coverture the debt contracted with her dum sola operates as a reduction into possession of the chose in action, and vests the property in the husband. The husband's knowledge of the payment to the wife is only material as evidence of his authority for the payment. Rogers v. Bolton, 8 L. R. Ir. 69.

Payment into Bank to Husband's Credit.]—A sum of money having been bequeathed to a wife, she and her husband joined in giving a power of attorney to A. to receive the money. A. took out administration as the attorney of the wife, and received the money, which he lodged at a banker's to the credit of her husband. The wife bequeathed the money by her will, which was proved by the husband, and administration, &c., taken out by him. The account having been afterwards settled, and the balance struck, the husband released A. from all claim:—Held, that the giving of the power of attorney to A. did not amount to a reduction into possession by the husband, but that the receipt of the money by A., and the payment of it into the bank to the husband's credit, did. Roche v. Roche, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 436.

Account at Husband's Bank.]—A legacy, to which a married woman was entitled under a will, was paid by the executors by means of a cheque for 995*l.*, drawn to the order of the husband and wife. The husband and wife indorsed the cheque, and then went together to the husband's bankers, when the wife handed the cheque to the manager, and, in the presence and with the assent of the husband, told the manager to open an account in her own sole name, and to place to the credit of it 800*l.*, part of the 995*l.*, and to credit the residue to the husband's current account. This was done, and the wife afterwards, from time to time, drew cheques on the amount in her sole name. The husband never interfered with the account. The wife drew various cheques, for amounts varying from 20*l.* to 50*l.*, in favour of the husband, for the purpose of those sums being employed by him in his business. Part of the money was, by the wife's directions, invested by the bankers in the purchase of some bonds, they sending her a memorandum which stated that they held the bonds as her property. The husband afterwards asked the wife to sign a memorandum charging her money and securities with the payment of the overdrawn balance of his account with the bankers, but she refused to do so:—Held, that the legacy had never been reduced into possession by the husband. Parker v. Leehmere, 12 Ch. D. 256; 28 W. R. 48.

Administrator of Husband—Rights of.] — The administrator of a husband who survives his wife, and dies without taking out administration of her effects, cannot recover her choses in action; for that purpose administration must be taken out to the wife. Betts v. Kimpton, 2 B. & Ad. 273; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 192.

Double Administration, when Necessary.]—A married woman died intestate, entitled to a chose in action. The husband, who survived her, did not reduce her property into possession during his lifetime, and died intestate, without having administered to her effects:—Held, that a double administration was necessary to enable their only child to possess himself of his mother's property. Harding, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 65; L. R. 2 P. 394; 26 L. T. 668; 20 W. R. 615.

Transfer by Order in Husband's Lunacy.]—A married woman, who was the committee of the estate and person of her lunatic husband, was entitled to stock, which was standing in the name of a trustee for her; this stock was, under an order made in the lunacy, transferred into the name of the accountant-general, in the matter of the lunacy, and part of it was afterwards sold out, and applied in payment of costs; the lunatic died, leaving his wife him surviving:—Held, that the stock had been reduced into the possession of the lunatic, and that the wife was not entitled to it by right of survivorship. Jenkins, In re, 5 Russ. 183.

Post-nuptial Settlement.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, reciting that a sum of stock, originally standing in the name of the wife, had been transferred into those of trustees, and that it had been agreed that a promissory note for 500*l.*, given to the wife by her brother, should be cancelled, and that he should give his bond to the trustees for that amount, it was witnessed, agreed, and declared, that the trustees should stand possessed of these funds in trust to pay the interest and dividends to the husband for life, then to the wife for life; and upon the death of the survivor, to transfer the funds to the children of the marriage, and in case there should be no children, then to such persons as the wife should, by deed or will, during and notwithstanding her coverture, appoint; and in default of such appointment, to the husband, his executors, administrators, and assigns. There were no children of the marriage. The wife survived the husband:—Held, that in the event of the death of the wife without making a valid appointment, the fund would belong to the husband's personal representatives, as having been reduced into the husband's possession by the settlement. Burnham v. Bennett, 2 Coll. 254; 9 Jur. 888. See S. C., 1 De G. & Sm. 513.

Payment to Husband by Trustee of Mortgage.]—A woman being entitled to two sums, one secured by a mortgage in fee to herself, and the other to a trustee for her, married. The mortgagors having been applied to, but being unable to pay the sums, the trustee paid them to the husband. The husband died, leaving the mortgages untransferred:—Held, that he had reduced both sums into possession. Rees v. Keith, 11 Sim. 388; 10 L. J., Ch. 46; 5 Jur. 20.

Request by Husband to Trustees to Transfer to Wife's Separate Use.]—A married woman being entitled under a will to stock and to cash, forming part of a residue, her husband wrote to one of the executors, requesting that the stock should be transferred into the names of certain trustees for the wife's separate use, and that the cash should be paid to himself. These requests were complied with. The husband employed part of the cash in increasing the amount of stock. He afterwards became bankrupt and died:—Held, that the stock transferred by the executors was not reduced into possession by the husband, and therefore belonged to the wife by survivorship; but that the assignee under the bankruptcy was entitled to the increase made by the husband. Ryland v. Smith, 1 Myl. & C. 53; 5 L. J., Ch. 186.

Second Husband.]—Where the first husband of a woman entitled to a legacy of 600*l.*, chargeable in default of personalty on the testator's real estate, verbally agreed with the three devisees of the real estate, to sell the legacy to them for 200*l.* apiece, but received the consideration from one only of the devisees, taking interest on the 400*l.* due from the two others:—Held, that to the extent of 400*l.* this was not a reduction of the legacy into possession, and that to a suit instituted by the woman and her second husband, to recover what was due on the legacy, the representatives of the first husband were not necessary parties. Harwood v. Fisher, 1 Y. & Coll. 110; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 10.

D., the father of C., after marriage, drew a cheque in her favour on his bankers for 10,000*l.* Bankers gave her a promissory note for the amount. C.'s husband, L., received 1,000*l.* upon the note, and interest of it up to time of his death:—Held, on L.'s death, that C. was entitled to the note as a chose in action, and that it was not reduced by husband into possession by his receiving the 1,000*l.* and interest. Nash v. Nash, 2 Madd. 133.

Legacy Payable out of Realty—Acceptance of Land for Money.]—A married woman, entitled to a share in a legacy payable out of real estate, with the consent of her husband agreed, together with other parties beneficially interested, to accept the lands in lieu of the money. The lands were accordingly conveyed by the trustee of the will to a trustee; and by a subsequent deed declaring the trusts a portion of the lands was limited to the husband and wife for their joint lives, and to the survivor for life, with remainder to such of their children as the husband in his lifetime, or the wife if she survived him, should appoint:—Held, that the assignment of the lands to the trustee did not operate as a reduction into possession of the wife's chose in action, and that the lands into which the money was thereby converted were subject to the same uses and trusts as the money. Bayley, In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 215.

Held also, that the modification of the prior rights and interests of the husband and wife in the lands formed a sufficient consideration, in the deed declaring the trusts, to make it a deed for valuable consideration. Ib.

Inoperative Mortgage.]—A fund in court belonging to a married woman residing with her husband at the Cape of Good Hope was, whilst he was temporarily in this country, assigned by him by way of mortgage. Afterwards, the husband and wife were divorced by the proper tribunal at the Cape. The fund was never reduced into possession by the husband during the coverture. On a petition by the wife as feme sole:—Held, that the attempted mortgage was inoperative, and that she was absolutely entitled to the fund. Heath v. Lewis, Johnson, Ex parte, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1093; 11 L. T. 333; 13 W. R. 129.

Interest defeasible on Second Marriage—Concealment of Marriage.]—A widow was entitled for life to property, under a will which contained a condition that, should she marry again without consent of the trustees, the property should go over to her children. She did marry again, and until her death concealed her marriage from the trustees:—Held, that her second husband, who knew of the condition in the will, was bound to refund that which the trustees had in ignorance of her marriage paid to her. Charlton v. Coombes, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 904; 8 L. T. 653; 11 W. R. 1038.

c. Survivorship.

i. Of Husband.

Husband cannot Sue till he has Administered.]—A husband cannot sue for a wife's choses in action till he has administered. Grosvenor v. Lane, 2 Atk. 180.

Husband suing after his wife's death for her chose in action must take out administration to her. Bourne v. Crofton, 2 Moll. 318.

A man marries an orphan who died under twenty-one, her orphanage part shall not survive to the other children, but shall go to the husband. Fouke v. Lewen, 1 Vern. 88.

Where there was a fund in court standing to the separate account of a married woman, whose husband survived her, and died before administering to her estate, the fund was ordered to be paid to the wife's legal personal representative, although such representative had not also obtained administration to the husband's estate. Gutteridge v. Stilwell, 1 Myl. & K. 486.

And see Turner v. Crane, 1 Vern. 170 ; 1 Ch. Rep. 242.

Though a husband died before he took out administration to his wife's estate, it shall go to his representatives, for it is vested in him at her death ; but had the wife survived, her choses in action, not reduced into the husband's possession, would have survived to her. Elliot v. Collier, 3 Atk. 526.

Though ecclesiastical courts are bound by statute to grant administration to the next of kin of the wife, yet that does not bind the right of the husband in equity. Ib.

On a marriage, the father of the wife purchased 1,000*l.* consols, and the same were vested in trustees to pay the dividends to the wife for her life ; and then trusts were declared for the children of the marriage, under which the court had decreed, in a former suit, that the only child of the marriage, a daughter, took a vested interest. This daughter married J. M. and died in the lifetime of the mother, leaving J. M. her surviving. J. M. did not take out administration to the effects of his deceased wife, and afterwards died : —Held, that his executors were entitled to the 1,000*l.* consols, and that the representatives of the wife were not entitled. One of J. M.'s executors, who was a defendant, having colluded with the other defendant, the court gave costs against both of them. Platt v. M'Dougall, Tam. 290 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 150.

And see Cary v. Taylor, 3 Vern. 302 ; Burnett v. Kinaston, Pre. Ch. 118 ; 2 Vern. 401 ; 2 Freem. 239.

Residuum—Legacy of Wife not reduced to a Certainty.]—Where the residuum of a testator's estate, bequeathed to a feme covert, is not collected and reduced to a certainty in her lifetime, it is not a vested interest, but remains a chose in action, and shall go to the administrator of the wife. Amhurst v. Selby, 11 Vin. Abr. 377, pl. 8.

Illegitimacy—Title of Crown.]—By a marriage settlement, a fund, the property of the wife, was settled on her and her husband, and their issue, and in default of issue, on the wife's next of kin. The wife, who was illegitimate, died without issue, and her husband administered to her :—Held, that the crown was not entitled to the fund, but that it belonged to the husband as administrator to his wife. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 7 Sim. 173.

Promissory Note to Wife dum sola—Payment during Coverture.]—The amount of a promissory note made to a feme sole was paid to her after marriage, but without the authority of her husband :—Held, that such payment was no answer to an action, brought after her decease by her husband as her administrator upon the note : —Held, also, that if administration had been granted to a stranger, the administrator would have been equally entitled to recover. Hart v. Stephens (6 Q. B. 937) distinguished. Rogers v. Bolton, 8 L. R., Ir. 69.

A feme sole, payee of a promissory note payable with interest, married, and her husband survived her :—Held, first, that the note did not become the property of the husband, but passed to her administrator, though the husband had received the interest during her life, for that he did not thereby reduce the chose in action into possession. Hirt v. Stevens, 6 Q. B. 937 ; 14 L. J., Q. B. 148 ; 9 Jur. 225.

ii. Of Wife.

Money in Trustee's Hands.] — Money in trustee's hands for a feme covert, shall go to the feme, if she survives the baron, and not his executors. Twisden v. Wise, 1 Vern. 161.

Income of Wife's Property.]—The income of wife's property being choses in action, and not possessed or reduced into possession in the lifetime of her husband, belongs to the wife by survivorship, and not to the representatives of the husband or his assignee. Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, 10 Beav. 324 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 387 ; 11 Jur. 644.

Legacy to Wife.]—If husband dies before legacy left to wife is received, it survives to her. Brotherow v. Hood, 2 Comb. 725.

Where the husband agreed that a legacy to the wife should be set off against a debt due from him to the estate, and husband and wife gave a joint receipt for the legacy :—Held, on death of husband, that as nothing but a release by him or payment could be a discharge from the wife's claim, she was entitled to be paid it. Harrison v. Andrews, 13 Sim. 595 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 243.

Power—Survival to Wife.]—Where feme sole conveys stock to trustees, to use of intended husband and self for life, with power to dispose of part, this power survives to wife. Horner v. Bendloes, 9 Mod. 335.

Equity to a Settlement—Death after Proposal for Settlement.]—Notwithstanding an order for a proposal for settlement under the equity of married woman, by the death of either, while resting in proposal the right by survivorship, as between the husband and wife, is not affected. Murray v. Elibank (Lord), 10 Ves. 91. And see Macaulay v. Phillips, 4 Ves. 15.

Rent-charge.]—Husband, during coverture, has a legal remedy by distress for arrears of rent-charge devised to wife for life, without first making a provision for her, but he cannot convey it away, for she may be entitled to it wholly by surviving him. Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 514.

A woman entitled to a rent-charge, marries, and at the husband's death there are arrears due ; they shall go to the wife surviving, notwithstanding she had a settlement, there being no express or implied intention that the husband should be a purchaser of all her fortune. Salwey v. Salwey, Ambl. 622.

Specific Property of Wife.]—Specific property of wife not reduced into possession on death of husband, survives to wife as joint tenant. Becket v. Becket, Dick. 343.

Release of Executors and Sale.]—A married woman was entitled, on attaining twenty-one, to stock under her mother's will, and the executors of the will transferred the stock to the trustees of the married woman's post-nuptial settlement. The husband released the executors, and the trustees of the settlement afterwards sold out, and reinvested the stock, paying the dividends to the husband for his life:—Held, a good reduction of the stock into possession by the husband. Hamilton v. Mills, 29 Beav. 193; 3 L. T., 766.

Deposit by Husband to Secure Loan.]—M., having in his possession, in right of his wife, title deeds, security for a mortgage debt, which was a chose in action of the wife, the interest upon which had been paid to him, deposited the deeds, by way of equitable mortgage, to secure money borrowed and interest, and the balance of an account current at his banker's. He died insolvent, leaving his wife surviving. Two of his creditors paid off the debts of the equitable mortgage, and claimed to be entitled to the moneys due on the title deeds:—Held, that as neither M. nor the mortgagee by deposit had in his lifetime enforced the wife's security, her right by survivorship had not been barred. Michelmore v. Mudge, 2 Giff. 183; 29 L. J., Ch. 609; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 770; 8 W. R. 429.

Acknowledgment by Executors to Husband of Wife and Legacy.]—H. died in 1811, having bequeathed a legacy to a woman who afterwards married the plaintiff. In December, 1825, the two executors of H. gave the plaintiff a written acknowledgment whereby they separately and jointly acknowledged that they owed the plaintiff 150*l.* for the legacy and 50*l.* for interest. In 1835, the plaintiff's wife died:—Held, that whether the written memorandum amounted to an admission of assets or not, it gave the plaintiff no right of action, that unless equivalent to an admission of assets it did not create a personal demand against the defendants enforceable in a court of equity, and that it had not the effect of barring or prejudicing the right of the plaintiff's wife in the legacy, or his title in right of his wife as a legatee. Holland v. Clark, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 151.

Fulfilment of Condition by Wife.]—J. M. W., after appointing his wife and a cousin executrix and executor of his will, gave to his wife all such moneys, &c., as he was entitled to by virtue of his intermarriage with her, for her absolute use; but if he should die leaving a child or children by his wife living at his decease, or born in due time afterwards, then he gave to his executor 2,000*l.*, to be taken and received by him out of the moneys so acquired by his marriage, upon trust to invest the same for the benefit of such child or children as in the will mentioned. J. M. W. gave all the rest of his real and personal estate to his son J. W. for his own use; but in case he should die under twenty-one without issue, then he gave the same in trust to sell, and to invest, and to pay one moiety of the interest to his wife while she continued his widow. He died in November, 1854, and his will was proved by his widow alone. J. W. was the only son living at his father's death, and he died shortly afterwards an infant, but another son was born in July 1855. The wife was before her marriage entitled to 11,000*l.* stock, 7,000*l.* of which she in November 1853 settled upon herself for life, with remainders over. The remaining 4,000*l.* was standing in her own name in the bank books at the time of her marriage in August, 1854; but in October, 1854, this sum was transferred into the name of "H. W., formerly C., now the wife of J. M. W." In November, 1854, three days before the death of J. M. W., 500*l.*, part of the 4,000*l.* stock, was sold out and the proceeds paid to him. The produce and some dividends on the stock settled previously to the marriage were invested on mortgage:—Held, that although the 3,500*l.* stock was not reduced into possession by J. M. W. in his lifetime, yet the widow having proved the will, she took the gift therein to her subject to her fulfilling the terms upon which it was made, and therefore the gift of the 2,000*l.* was to be provided for out of the proceeds of the 500*l.* stock and the remaining 3,500*l.* stock. Webb v. Webb, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 852.

Legacy Presumed Received.] — A testator devised lands to his widow for life, with remainder to a nephew in tail, charged with payment of a legacy to a niece at the widow's death. After his death the niece married, and the father advanced to her husband the amount of the legacy, taking from the husband an assignment of it. The tenant in tail in remainder of the land charged became the residuary legatee and executor of the father, and paid the father's debts and legacies to an amount greater than that of the father's personal estate. Upon the widow afterwards dying:—Held, that the son must be considered to have been beneficially entitled both to the legacy and the land charged with it, and must be presumed to have received the legacy, and that it was thus so reduced into possession that the niece was not entitled to a a settlement out of it. Allday v. Fletcher, 1 De G. & J., 82; 26 L. J., Ch. 519; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 422; 5 W. R. 584.

Held, also, that the result would be the same whether the assignment to the niece's father was absolute or by way of mortgage only. Ib.

Money awarded to Husband in right of Wife.] —A sum of money awarded to the husband, which he is entitled to in right of his wife, will go to his executor and will not survive to his wife. Oglander v. Baston, 1 Vern. 396,

Note given to Wife.]—A note given to the wife, in the husband's lifetime, for money, is part of the husband's assets. Hodges v. Beverley, Bunb. 188.

Voluntary Assignment by Husband.]—Voluntary assignment by husband of a fund in court, belonging to the wife, will not bar her right by survivorship. Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Jac. & Walk. 472. And see col. 1185.

Pro tanto Disposition by Husband.]—Intestate left three sisters, his personal estate being agreed to be divided into thirds: two mortgages, one in fee, the other for a term, for 50*l.* each, were allotted to the defendant, one of the sisters. Before any assignment her husband borrowed 200*l.* from the plaintiff on note, and, as a further security, left the two mortgages with him, and gave his note, promising to assign them, and died. On a bill of foreclosure against the mortgagors and the administrator of the husband:—Held, that the husband's promise to secure an assignment of the mortgages amounted in equity to a disposition of them pro tanto, so as to satisfy plaintiff's debt, which being done, they belong to the wife as her choses in action. Bates v. Dandy, 2 Atk. 207.

Reversion in Money.]—Where the wife, an infant, was entitled to 1000*l.*, and to the reversion of 2,000*l.* on her father's death, and by her marriage articles she agreed to assign them to trustees upon certain trusts, shortly before she attained twenty-one, the executors of the will without any direction from her or her husband transferred the 1,000*l.* to the trustees, and the husband afterwards died:—Held, that the transfer to the trustees was a reduction into possession of the 1,000*l.*, and that it was bound by the articles; but that the wife was entitled by survivorship to the 2,000*l.*, subject to her father's life interest. Cunningham v. Antrobus, 16 Sim. 436; 13 Jur. 28.

Promissory Note.]—A feme sole, payee of a promissory note payable with interest, married, and her husband survived her:—Held, first, that the note did not become the property of the husband, but passed to her administrator, though the husband had received the interest during her life, for that he did not thereby reduce the chose in action into possession. Hart v. Stevens, 6 Q. B. 937; 14 L. J., Q. B. 148; 9 Jur. 225.

—— Statute of Limitations.]—Held, secondly, that the payment of such interest in the wife's lifetime to the husband, within six years before action brought, must be considered as made to him in the character of agent to the wife, and was an answer to a plea of the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

iii. Where Articles or Settlement.

Where part of Consideration for Settlement.]—Where choses in action of wife are part of consideration of settlement, they will not survive to her, unless settlement is inadequate. Seys v. Price, 9 Mod. 217.

Condition of Settlement not Performed.]—Four thousand pounds portion is secured by articles, wherein is a proviso that if the husband did not within two years settle a jointure he should only have the interest for his life. The wife dies within the two years, and before any settlement made; the husband not entitled to the portion. Vermuden v. Read, 1 Vern. 68.

Intention — Arrears of Rent-charge.] — A woman entitled to a rent-charge marries, and at the husband's death there are arrears due; they shall go to the wife surviving, notwithstanding she had a settlement, there being no express or implied intention that the husband should be a purchaser of all her fortune. Salwey v. Salwey, Ambl. 692.

Post-nuptial Settlement—Purchase by Husband.]—Husband, by making settlement after marriage, considered a purchaser of mortgage of wife, though he did not reduce it into possession. Sykes v. Meynal, Dick. 368.

Wife's Portion—Husband's Debts.]—Whether the wife's portion, consisting of choses in action, shall, upon the husband's death, be liable to his debts, the husband, before his marriage, having made an adequate jointure on his wife. Lister v. Lister, 2 Vern. 68.

The wife's portion, though out on bond or mortgage, which by law survives to her, shall yet, in equity, be subject to the husband's bond debts, to ease the heir, where a settlement is made on the wife; for that makes the husband a purchaser of her fortune: but if the settlement were only in consideration of part, then the remaining part out on bond shall survive to the wife, unless there were an express agreement that the husband should have it. Cleland v. Cleland, Pre. Ch. 63.

Where a wife had a chose in action, which was considered as part of her portion, for which the jointure was made, and the jointure was adequate; it was decreed upon the husband's death, it should go to his executor. Narborne's case, 2 Freem. 282.

Covenant to Settle Lands in Jointure—Death of Husband.]—Covenant by husband, before marriage, to settle lands in jointure for wife, and other part for the issue of the marriage, her fortune to remain in trustees till such settlement made; the husband dying insolvent, without performing it, the wife's fortune survives for her own benefit, and the issue not entitled to take it from her. Pyke v. Pyke, 1 Ves. 376.

Legacy from Mother—Lapsed Share of Residue.]—Settlement in consideration of marriage of the wife's present fortune, and subsequent covenants, one of which was that the mother should give to the wife, or any child, equal to what was given to the rest. The mother leaves her a legacy, and, by lapse, part of the residue comes to her; wife survives husband: what he had not reduced into possession goes to her representatives by survivorship, not to his, there being no contract to give him a certain right. Garforth v. Bradley, 2 Ves. 675.

Infant Wife—Settlement—Silence as to Personal Estate.]—A. marries B., who has an estate in land, and a fortune in money: they being both infants, an act of parliament is obtained for settling a jointure on the wife, in bar of dower, provided that the jointure shall cease, if the wife, when of age, did not settle her land, but nothing said as to the personal estate: part of the fortune is a mortgage for 1,300*l.*, taken in a trustee's name. The wife, when she came of age, settled her own land, and afterwards the husband dies: decreed, the mortgage to the executors of A., and that it should not survive to his wife as a chose in action. Blois v. Hereford (Viscount), 2 Vern. 501.

Claim as Purchaser by Father of Husband.]—A woman, having 12,000*l.* in possession, and 1,200*l.* in the chamber of London on her marriage, the husband's father in consideration of this fortune settles 240*l.* per annum jointure upon her; the husband dies, and the wife administers to him, and the representatives of the husband's father bring a bill for the 1,200*l.* in the chamber of London, the father being, as alleged, a purchaser of it by the settlement. Bill dismissed, the husband having done nothing to alter the property in his lifetime. Rudyard v. Neirin, Pre. Ch. 209.

Title of Creditors of Husband.]—Where the wife's fortune, though the husband made no settlement on her, shall go to the creditors and representatives of the husband, and not to the representatives of the wife. Packer v. Wyndham, Pre. Ch. 412 ; Gilb. 98.

—— Of Administrator of Husband.]—Where the wife's portion, charged by will on certain lands, pursuant to a power in settlement, shall go to the administrator of the husband, and not to the administrator of the wife, though the husband and wife are both dead and the portion not raised. Meredith v. Wynn, Pre. Ch. 312 ; Gilb. 70.

Title of Wife in her own Right over Administratrix.]—A. devises the residuum of her personal estate, about 2,000*l.*, to B., by her maiden name (not knowing her to be married), most of it being South Sea stock : her husband agrees to settle it on two trustees, in trust for husband and wife ; and they transfer it to the trustees accordingly. There is a deed prepared, but not executed, being objected to by the husband, as not in pursuance of the agreement ; and, by letter, he gives directions to prepare another. Before that is done, he dies : his wife administers : she shall have this South Sea stock, &c., in her own right, and not as an administratrix to her husband. Fort v. Fort, Forrest. 171.

Bond—Husband a Purchaser.]—The husband upon marriage (in consideration of his wife's fortune, computed at 500*l.*) agrees to yearly payments to her separate use ; that she may dispose of 100*l.* by will, in his lifetime ; that, if she survive, he is to leave her 200*l.*, apparel, plate, &c. Part of her fortune was a bond of 200*l.* The husband dies, having made his will, and the plaintiff residuary legatee, but had not recovered the 200*l.* due on the bond ; then the wife dies : this bond shall go the representative of the husband, he being a purchaser of it by the settlement on her. Adams v. Cole, Forrest. 168.

Subject to Wife's Disposition.]—A testator gave and bequeathed all his personal estate and effects to his daughter, the same to be always considered as vested in her, upon her attaining twenty-one, and to be subject to her disposition thereof ; and the testator further directed that in case his daughter should happen to depart this life without attaining twenty-one, or without disposing by her will of the property bequeathed to her, then the same to be subject to the disposition by will of his wife. The testator's daughter married under twenty-one, and by articles previously to her marriage the husband covenanted to settle all the property left her by the testator upon his wife and himself for life, and then for the benefit of the children of the marriage :—Held, that the daughter took the property not absolutely but for life only, with power to dispose of it by will, and that her husband not having reduced it into possession the articles were not binding upon the wife. Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 219 ; 13 Jur. 247.

Limitation to Next-of-Kin of Wife.]—The marital right of the husband, as administrator by law, excluded by a limitation to the next-of-kin of the wife. Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 537.

Under a limitation in a marriage settlement of the wife's property, in default of her appointment, for her next-of-kin or personal representative, the husband is not entitled. Bailey v. Wright, 18 Ves. 49 ; 1 Swanst. 39 ; 1 Wils. 15.

d. Assignment by Husband.

Power of Husband to Assign.]—A man may dispose of his wife's personal chattels by will as he pleases, but not of her chattels real or choses in action, unless he has done some act to reduce them into his possession ; for those, upon his death, shall survive to her ; but if he survives, they shall be his own to all intents. Sharp v. Poole, 4 Co. Rep. 51.

So with respect to debts due to the wife before marriage, and which were not got in during the joint lives of the husband and wife ; and so likewise it will be with regard to her paraphernalia. Graham v. Londonderry (Lord), 3 Atk. 393.

A man possessed of a chose in action in his own right may assign it, though without a consideration. Carteret (Lord) v. Paschal, 3 P. W. 199.

Baron possessed of a chose in action in right of his wife, may assign it for a valuable consideration. Secus, as it seems, if there be no consideration. Ib. But see Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. 65 ; 27 R. R. 15 ; Watson v. Dennis, id. 90.

—— For Satisfaction of bonâ fide Creditors.]—Choses in action are assignable by husband for satisfaction of bonâ fide creditors, though no settlement be made on wife. Paschal v. Thurston, 2 Bro. P. C. 10.

A. gave to B., his niece, a legacy of 1,000*l.* while she lived sole ; afterwards, on a treaty of marriage with defendant, it was agreed by articles, that 700*l.* of the legacy should be applied towards his debts. After marriage, defendant, without his wife, assigned the remaining 300*l.* to plaintiffs, his creditors, who brought their bill to be paid out of the remaining 300*l.* Decreed an account to be taken, and upon proofs, that plaintiffs were real creditors, and that the assignment was bonâ fide, they were to have satisfaction accordingly, and that the residue of the 300*l.*, if any, to be put out for the benefit of the wife. Povey v. Brown, Pre. Ch. 325 ; Gilb. 80 —— Release of Wife's Annuity by Husband.]—A single woman being entitled to an annuity secured by bond married. Her husband executed a release of the annuity, and died, leaving his wife surviving :—Held, that, as he could release the security, he could release the annuity, so as to bind his wife. Hore v. Becher, 12 Sim. 465 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 153 ; 6 Jur. 93.

Consideration of Natural Love.] — Wife's chose in action assigned by the husband to unprovided child by former wife, natural love, &c. recited as consideration, not good. Becket v. Becket, Dick. 340.

Where husband has mere equitable right to property of wife, court may impose terms on his receiving it. Ib.

Specific property of wife not reduced into possession on death of husband survives to wife as joint tenancy. Ib.

Assignment of Possibility.]—A husband may assign a wife's possibility, if it be for a valuable consideration, but he can release her bond without receiving any part of it. Bates v. Dandy, 2

Atk. 208. And see Benn v. Griffith, 18 W. R. 403.

Power of Advancement.]—Where funds were settled upon the husband and wife, and the survivor for life, and afterwards for the children, with power for the trustees with the consent of the wife to advance part of the fund for the benefit of the children in her lifetime; after the death of her husband she married again, and the second husband assigned her life interest, and the trustees afterwards, with the wife's consent, exercised the power of advancement of the children of the first marriage:—Held, that the power was well executed as against the assignee of the husband. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Coll. 570; 14 L. J., Ch. 157; 9 Jur. 125.

Bond Conditioned to Pay Wife Annuity.]—A husband having taken a bond conditioned to pay his wife an annuity by the obligor, the latter cannot, without the assent of the husband, agree with the wife to discharge himself from future payments of the annuity for a certain period, in consideration of his discharging certain debts of the husband; but the husband may, notwithstanding, sue for the arrears of the annuity when due. Brown v. Benson, 3 East, 331.

Salary of Separated Wife.]—Though a wife lives separate from her husband, and supports her children, and earns a salary for her services, yet the party owing it cannot pay her after notice from the husband not to do so; and if the employer pays her such salary, the husband may sue him for its amount. Glover v. Drury Lane Theatre, 2 Chit. 117.

Dividends of Wifes' Stock.]—Assignment by husband of part of wife's equitable interest, viz. dividends of stock in trust for her, for valuable consideration, enforced upon bill of surety for husband, to be indemnified against past and future payments, the assignment extending only to 100*l.* a year out of 260*l.* The remaining dividends under bill on behalf of wife paid to her, the husband having after the assignment gone abroad without making any provision for her. Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 21; 8 R. R. 69.

Fund of Married Woman in Name of Accountant General.]—The fund of a married woman, standing in the name of the accountant-general to her account, may be pledged by her husband. Sansum v. Dewar, 3 Russ. 91; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 46.

Portion of Lunatic Wife—Assignment by Husband to Creditors.]—The portion of a lunatic was ordered to be paid to the master, and the husband was to have it on making a settlement. He made no settlement, but assigned it to his creditors and died without issue; then the wife died. Decreed, the creditors of the husband to have this portion. Nightingale v. Lockman, Mos. 231; Fitzg. 148.

e. Rights of Trustee in Bankruptcy.

Interest of Husband.]—Creditors in bankrupt cases are entitled to the interest of the husband in the wife's chose in action during his life. Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 511.

What interests of the wife so vest in the husband as to vest in his assignees upon a bankruptcy. Saddington v. Kinsman, 1 Bro. C. C. 44.

Assignees of husband, bankrupt, not entitled to legacy vested in wife, but not reduced into possession before husband's death. Gayner v. Wilkinson, Dick. 491.

Wife's Equity to a Settlement.]—By the marriage settlement of a widow, her property was assigned to two trustees, upon trust to invest and pay the dividends to her for life for her sole and separate use, and after her decease, upon trust to pay the fund to her daughter by her first husband, "for her own use and benefit." The daughter's husband F. H., who was one of the trustees of the settlement, became bankrupt:—Held, that on the death of the tenant for life the assignee of F. H. was entitled to the fund, subject to the wife's equity to a settlement. Kensington v. Dolland, 2 Myl. & K. 184; 3 L. J., Ch. 209. See col. 1118.

Satisfaction of Legacy by Portion.]—One devises to his daughter a portion of 500*l.*, and afterwards in his lifetime gives her 300*l.* for her portion in marriage, and four years after dies without revoking the will; the husband is a bankrupt; the assignees not entitled to the 500*l.* legacy, nor any part thereof. Bishop v. Whitmore, 1 P. W. 681; Pre. Ch. 541.

Feme Sole Mortgagee Marrying.]—A feme sole mortgagee marries; husband becomes bankrupt and dies; the assignees entitled, in opposition to the wife suing, to the mortgage. Secus, if, by articles before marriage, it was agreed that mortgage should continue wife's. But quære, if assignees had been parties suing. Bovil v. Brander, 1 P. W. 458.

Husband Taking Benefit of Insolvent Act.]—A sum of 140*l.* belonged to a husband in right of his wife. He had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act. The court held, that his assignees were entitled to no part of the fund. Foden v. Finney (4 Russ. 428), is considered not binding. Cutler, In re, 14 Beav. 220; 20 L. J., Ch. 504; 15 Jur. 911.

Legacy—No Exclusion of Marital Rights.]—A testatrix gave the interest of her residuary property to her two grand-daughters who were both unmarried at the date of the will, and she directed that the interest should be for and under their sole control, the principal to be equally divided for the use of their surviving issue, and that M. W., their mother, should have no control whatever over it. One of the grand-daughters, E. W., married after the death of the testatrix, and her husband became insolvent:—Held, that the words of the will did not indicate an intention to exclude the marital control, and that the legacy to E. W. passed to her insolvent husband's assignees. Semble, that, if the words had indicated an intention to give the interest of the property to the separate use of the grand-daughters, the legacy would still have passed to the assignee of the insolvent husband; for a gift to the separate use of an unmarried woman will not restrict her right of disposing, in any manner, of the property given, and, consequently, of giving it, if she think fit, by act of marriage, to her husband. Massey v. Parker, 2 Myl. & K. 174; 4 L. J., Ch. 47.

Deposit of Wife's Certificates—Bankruptcy.]—A bankrupt, whose wife previous to her marriage was entitled to some shares in a gas company, which were still standing in her name, deposited the certificates with a banking company, for the security of advances; but no notice was given to the gas company, until after the act of bankruptcy:—Held, that the banking company were not entitled to those shares, as against the creditors of the bankrupt. Spencer, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 468; 3 Mont. & Ayr. 697.

Divorce after Bankruptcy of Husband.]—Divorce obtained by wife after husband's bankruptcy does not entitle her to whole fund bequeathed to her, which came into possession after bankruptcy, though no settlement was made on her at marriage, and her husband at that time received 1,500*l.* stock with her. Green v. Otte, 1 Sim. & S. 250; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 87.

Arrears of Annuity—Wife Maintained.]—A married woman being entitled to an annuity, charged on an estate belonging to A., but of which her husband was, as she knew, in receipt of the rents under a power of attorney from A., made no demand upon A. in respect of the annuity for several years. The husband being indebted to A., in respect of his receipts, becomes bankrupt:—Held, that as his wife had lived with her husband, and enjoyed the benefit of his expenditure, she had no claim upon A., or his estate, in respect of arrears of the annuity. Carter v. Anderson, 3 Sim. 370; 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 91. See also 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 132.

Apportionment of Dividends.]—The dividends of stock standing in the accountant-general's name, to which a woman was entitled for life at the time of her marriage, were ordered to be paid to her husband during her life, or until further order. Some time afterwards the husband deserted his wife, and became bankrupt, having previously possessed himself of 2,000*l.* to which she was absolutely entitled:—The court ordered two-thirds of the dividends to be paid to the wife, and the other third to the husband's assignees. Vaughan v. Buck, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 284; 20 L. J., Ch. 335; 15 Jur. 348.

Note, under Hand of Husband, Part of Settlement.]—A note under the hand of a husband ought to be looked upon as part of the marriage agreement, and consequently as part of the settlement and where the wife would have been relieved if she had brought a bill against the husband, so she would equally against his assignees, who stand in his place. Tyrrell v. Hope, 2 Atk. 558.

Where, by acts before marriage, husband made himself in the nature of a trustee for the wife, his assignees must be so too. Id. 562.

Creditors' Deed—Husband refusing to Complete.]—A lady was, before marriage, entitled to a tontine share. After the marriage, upon which no settlement was made, her husband assigned all his personal estate to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The trustees sold the share, but the husband refused to complete the transaction by putting the requisite indorsement on it; but, on a bill filed, he was ordered to do so, and to pay the costs of the suit. Alexander v. Cana, 15 Jur. 51.

Accumulating Legacy.]—By will the father-in-law of the bankrupt gave 4,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for life, to her separate use, then to the bankrupt for life, and then to the issue of the marriage. The will, reciting that the bankrupt was indebted to the testator 6,000*l.* on bond, declared so much of the debt on the bond as remained unpaid in the testator's lifetime should go in redemption and satisfaction of the above bequest of 4,000*l.* Prior to the bankruptcy, and subsequently, by means of dividends from his estate, 1,069*l.*, part of the 6,000*l.* bond debt, was paid off and invested in the funds. On petition of the assignees, claiming to be entitled to the interest of the 1,069*l.*, the wife being dead:—Held, that until the 4,000*l.* should be made up, the 1,069*l.* should accumulate; after which the assignees were declared entitled to the interest for the bankrupt's life. Young, Ex parte, Prior, In re, 4 Deac. & C. 645; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 228; 4 L. J., Bk. 60.

Insurance of Wife's Life by Creditors.]—Husband and wife assign to two creditors of husband a contingent interest to which wife would be entitled if she survived a particular person. Creditors insure wife's life; she dies before contingent interest fell in, and creditors receive the insurance money. Husband being bankrupt, the creditors only allowed to prove amount of what was due to them after deducting money received from insurance office, minus the sum paid for insurance and expenses. Andrews, Ex parte, 1 Madd. 573; 16 R. R. 263.

Assignment subject to Wife's Right by Survivorship.]—The husband of a woman having a vested interest in possession in a legacy, becomes bankrupt; a bill is filed by his assignees for payment of the legacy; the bankrupt soon after dies, and that fact is pleaded:—Held, that the widow was entitled to the legacy, the assignment of the husband being subject to the wife's right of survivorship. The fact of the bill having been filed before the husband's death, did not affect the question. Pierce v. Thornely, 2 Sim. 167.

Vested Reversionary Interest in Fund—Bankruptcy of Husband.]—A testator gave a sum of money to trustees on trust to pay the income to his wife for life, and then to divide the capital between his three daughters. One of the daughters, who was married, died; her husband became bankrupt in 1839, and died before the tenant for life. When the tenant for life died, a bill was filed by the assignees of the husband against the defendant, who was the administrator of both husband and wife, claiming to be entitled to a third of the money left by the testator:—Held, that the husband was absolutely entitled, in right of his wife, to the reversionary interest expectant upon the death of the tenant for life, although that interest was not reduced into possession, and that the assignees had the same right to receive the money as the husband would have had. Drew v. Long, 22 L. J., Ch. 717; 17 Jur. 173; 1 W. R. 318.

f. Joint Interests.

Disposition.]—Where husband and wife acquire a joint right or interest in personalty, husband alone may dispose of it as he pleases. Paschall v. Thurston, 2 Bro. P. C. 10.

Survivorship.]—A testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* to husband and wife, to be put in their joint names and that of his executor, the husband and wife to enjoy the interest during their joint lives, or the life of the survivor. The fund was paid into court to the credit of the cause, "the husband and wife, their stock acccount":—Held, that the dividends unreceived at the death of the husband belonged to the wife by survivorship. Laprimaudaye v. Teissier, 12 Beav. 206; 19 L. J., Ch. 16; 13 Jur. 1040.

A wife, with the knowledge and approval of her husband, invested money belonging to the latter in the purchase of government stock, in their joint names. Subsequently, under the authority of a power of attorney given to her by the husband, she sold a portion of the stock, and kept the money in her custody, and it so remained at the husband's death:—Held, that the stock remaining in the joint names of the husband and wife survived to her; but there being no evidence of an intention on the part of the husband to make an absolute gift to the wife, that the proceeds of sale of the stock formed part of the husband's general assets. Gadbury, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 780; 11 W. R. 895.

A woman, joint tenant of a reversionary interest in a legacy of 2,000*l.* stock, married, and after the marriage the husband became bankrupt, and then the wife died, leaving the tenant for life of the fund surviving:—Held, that by the death of the wife, the other joint tenants of the fund became entitled to her interest therein by survivorship; that that was the elder title to that of the husband, which also accrued after the death of the wife; and that, upon the death of the tenant for life, the other joint tenants, and not the assignees of the husband, were entitled to what had been the wife's share of the fund. Barton's Will, In re, 10 Hare, 12; 16 Jur. 631.

A testatrix gave a legacy to R. S. A., his wife and children; the husband and wife being entitled to one share equally with the children, the wife, who was living separate from her husband, in a suit instituted by the husband and his assignee, to have the rights of himself, and wife and children, in the legacy, ascertained, claimed a settlement out of the whole share given to her and her husband. The husband, on the other hand, claimed a moiety of the share in his own right, and a moiety in right of his wife, and insisted that she was only entitled to a settlement out of the latter moiety:—Held, that all the court could do was to preserve the wife's right by survivorship; and the whole share was directed to be carried over to the joint account of the husband and wife, the dividends to be paid to the husband during their joint lives, with liberty on the death of either, for the survivor to apply. Atcheson v. Atcheson, 11 Beav. 485; 18 L. J., Ch. 230; 13 Jur. 666.

Held, also, that if such a legacy were not brought under the consideration of the court, payment to the husband would be a good payment; but in case of no payment, the wife would be entitled by survivorship. Ib.

Bond given to a baron and feme during coverture; baron dies; the bond will survive to the wife. Copin v. ——, 2 P. W. 406.

If baron and feme have a decree for money in right of the wife, and the husband dies, she shall have the benefit of the decree. Nanney v. Martin, 1 Ch. Ca. 27; 2 Freem. 72.

g. Merger by Marriage.

Lien on Realty.]—Chose in action of wife, and charged on A.'s estate, is merged on her marriage with A., and will not survive. Seys v. Price, 9 Mod. 220.

Extinguishment.]—A., on his marriage, gave a bond of 600*l.* with a warrant of attorney to confess judgment thereon, defeasance on payment of 300*l.* to his wife if she survived, afterwards she joined with him in a conveyance by fine of his real estate:—Held, that this extinguished her right or any lien created by this judgment on the real estate. Goodrick v. Shotbolt, Pre. Ch. 333; Gilb. Eq. R. 18.

h. Reversionary and Contingent.

i. Disposition of, by Husband.

General Principle—Assignment by Husband void against Wife.] — Discussion upon the doctrine and authorities applicable to the rights of a married woman over her reversionary interests in personal chattels. Box v. Box, Box v. Jackson, Dru. 42; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 174. And see S. C., 2 Con. & L. 605.

It is now established that the husband cannot, even for a valuable consideration, assign the reversionary choses in action of his wife so as to bind her surviving. Ib.

Husband cannot reduce wife's reversionary interest into possession. If they join in assigning it as security of debt of husband and she survives, she takes it disencumbered. Hornsby v. Lee, 2 Madd. 16.

Wife's reversion, which cannot fall into possession during the husband's life as if it is contingent upon his death, not assignable by him. Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. 122.

Husband assigns his wife's reversionary chose in action to a particular assignee for value. He survives the person upon whose life the reversion depends, but dies without actually reducing the property into possession: the assignment is void against the surviving wife. Ashby v. Ashby, 1 Coll. 553; 14 L. J., Ch. 86; 8 Jur. 1159.

—— Possibility of Wife.]—A husband cannot in law assign a possibility of the wife, nor a possibility of his own; but a court of equity will support such assignment for a valuable consideration. Grey v. Kentish, 1 Atk. 280. Bates v. Dandy, 2 Atk. 207.

Where a particular assignee took with notice of an equity in a wife (and the assignees under a commission of bankruptcy against the husband take subject to the same equity), the court, as it is her property, will decree it to be transferred to her. Ib.

A husband may dispose of a wife's possibility in equity, if assigned for a valuable consideration; but it must be an assignment of that particular thing, and not rest only on intention and construction of words in a covenant. Hawkyns v. Obyn, 2 Atk. 549.

Assignment operates in Equity as Agreement to assign.]—A chose in action, though not assignable at law, yet is so in equity; where the husband may assign it alone, as he may any other part of the wife's personal estate, so may a contingent interest which the husband has in right of his wife, or a possibility of a term, which, though not good strictly by way of assignment, yet will operate as an agreement where for a valuable consideration. Chandos (Duke) v. Talbot, 2 P. W. 608. And see Atkins v. Danbury, Gilb. 88; 1 Ch. Cas. 232; 3 Ch. R. 90; 1 Roll. Abr. 380.

Assignment good against all but Wife.]—Husband can dispose of his wife's property in expectancy against every one, except the wife surviving. White v. St. Barbe, 1 Ves. & B. 405.

Release by Husband.]—When a feme covert is entitled to a reversionary interest in a chose in action, the release of the husband is as inoperative as his assignment, to bind his wife's right by survivorship. Rogers v. Acaster, 14 Beav. 445.

Trust of a Term of Years.]—The contingent reversionary interest of the wife in the trust of a term for years may be sold by the husband, and the wife surviving will be bound by such sale, though the husband dies before the contingency is determined, or the reversion falls into possession. Done or Donne v. Hart, 2 Russ. & M. 360; 1 L. J., Ch. 57.

Leaseholds.]—A husband may make a valid assignment of his wife's reversionary interest in leasehold, but secus, if the interest be of such a nature that it cannot by possibility vest in the wife in possession during the coverture. Duberley v. Day, 16 Beav. 33; 16 Jur. 581.

A wife's leaseholds were, on her marriage, limited to her absolutely in the event of her surviving her husband, but without any trust for her separate use:—Held, that the husband could not, during the coverture, dispose of this contingent reversionary interest of his wife in the term. Ib.

Mortgage — Costs — Priority.]—A husband mortgaged his interest in his wife's reversionary personal estate. The wife died in the husband's life, and before the fund fell into possession. Expenses were incurred in taking out administration by persons entitled to the equity of redemption, without any express request by the mortgagee:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to priority over such costs. Saunders v. Dunman, 47 L. J., Ch. 338; 7 Ch. D. 825; 38 L. T. 416; 26 W. R. 397.

Disability of Wife.]—Wife cannot by consent dispose in favour of her husband of her reversionary interest in personalty. Pickard v. Roberts, 3 Madd. 384.

A married woman who was entitled to a trust fund in reversion having had the life interest assigned to her, the court ordered the fund to be transferred to her husband, she consenting. Hall v. Hugonin, 14 Sim. 595; 16 L. J., Ch. 14; 10 Jur. 940.

Money vested in trustees, in trust for husband and wife successively for life, remainder to the children, and in default thereof, to such person as the wife should appoint; a deed of the wife, conveying this contingent interest, was established. Guise v. Smell, 1 Anstr. 277.

Where trustees are interposed, the court will not authorise a woman's parting with her reversionary life interest in a sum of money, upon examination, in analogy to that of a private examination. Fraser v. Baillie, 1 Bro. C. C. 518.

There is no jurisdiction in equity by consent of married woman upon examination to transfer to her husband personal property, settled in trust for her surviving her husband absolutely. Richards v. Chambers, 10 Ves. 580.

The court cannot take the consent of the wife to part with her reversionary interest. The consent of the wife taken in a court of equity, to part with her interest in property about to be distributed, is not analogous to a fine at law with respect to real estate. A court of equity will not lend itself as an instrument to enable a husband to acquire a right in his wife's property which he has no means of acquiring at law. Osborn v. Morgan, 9 Hare, 434; 21 L. J., Ch. 318; 16 Jur. 52.

On marriage, a sum of 9,000*l.* was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to the husband for life, and after his death, to the wife for life, and after the death of the survivor to pay the principal to such persons as the survivor should direct. The husband having occasion for money, the wife joined him in executing a deed poll, whereby they appointed the money immediately to the husband; but the trustees declining to act without the directions of the court, this bill was filed; and upon personal examination of the wife, the court directed the trustees to pay the money to the husband, and to deliver up the settlement to be cancelled. Macarmick v. Buller, 1 Cox, 357.

Gift to a lady for life, and, after her death, amongst all her children "which should be living at her death," and if but one, to such only child, such shares to become vested interests at twenty-one. The lady being sixty-three, and desirous of giving up her life interest, she and her children, all of whom had attained twenty-one, presented a petition for payment to the children. One of the children was a feme covert. The court declined making the order. Brandon v. Woodthorpe, 10 Beav. 463.

A married woman cannot by consent, on examination in court, part with her interest in a fund settled on her marriage for her separate use for life, with remainder to survivor of her and her husband. Ritchie v. Broadbent, 2 Jac. & Walk. 456.

The court refused to take the consent of a married woman to give up her reversionary interest, in part vested and in part contingent, in a fund in court, in favour of a purchaser from her husband. Wade v. Saunders, Turn. & R. 306.

A., a married woman who was absolutely entitled to stock in court, being separately examined, desired it to be transferred into the names of trustees, "upon trust for her absolutely, and that the dividends should be held and applied for her separate use, for her life." This was accordingly done:—Held, that during coverture she could dispose of her life interest held for her separate use, but not of her reversionary interest; and the trustee having, at her request, advanced the fund to her husband, whereby it was lost, he was liable to replace it; but her life interest was made answerable for the trustee's indemnity. Hanchett v. Briscoe, 22 Beav. 496.

A feme covert was entitled to a reversionary interest in a sum in the funds. All the other parties entitled surrendered their interest to her. The fund was in court:—Held, that the feme covert was still unable to dispose thereof. Whittle v. Henning, 11 Beav. 22 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 151 ; 12 Jur. 298. Affirmed, 2 Ph. 731 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 51 ; 12 Jur. 1079.

Fund in court was subject to a trust for a husband for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to their son absolutely. The husband and son, by deed, surrendered and released their respective interests to the wife, for the express purpose of giving her a present absolute interest in the fund, and thereby enabling her to assign it at once to the son. But a petition by the three for the payment of the fund to the son was refused, on the ground that this court will not establish an equitable merger by analogy to law, where the effect would be to defeat its own rules and practice in the protection of married women from the marital control. Ib.

A married woman entitled to a reversionary life estate in personal property, in the event of surviving her husband, cannot by consenting to waive her interest give the court the power to dispose of it. Batt v. Cuthbertson, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 200. Affirmed, 4 Dr. & War. 392.

In 1809, by a marriage settlement, a sum of 1,000*l.* was vested in trustees, upon trust, to pay the interest thereof to the husband and wife for their lives and the life of the survivor ; and, after the death of the survivor, upon trust for the children of the marriage, in such shares as the husband should appoint, and, in default of appointment, share and share alike. There were three daughters issue of the marriage, and in 1824 the husband died without appointing the fund, leaving his wife and three daughters him surviving. A suit having been instituted in relation to the property of the mother and daughters, this sum of 1,000*l.* was paid into court, invested in government stock, and transferred to the credit of the cause. One of the daughters subsequently married, but without making any settlement of her share of the fund. The three daughters, having attained their full age, entered into a consent that the entire fund should be paid to the mother. This consent was signed, as well by the three daughters, as by the mother, and the husband of the married daughter. Upon a bill filed for the purpose of effectuating this consent :—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to take the consent of the married daughter to dispose of her interest in the remainder expectant upon the death of her mother, the tenant for life of the fund, and that the bill could not be supported. Boæ v. Jackson or Boæ, Dru. 42 ; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 174. And see S. C., 2 Con. & L. 605.

Release of Prior Estate.]—A wife entitled to a reversionary interest in a chose in action cannot by obtaining a release of the previous estate effectually dispose of the property. Story v. Tonge, 7 Beav. 91 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 191.

A feme covert being entitled to a reversionary interest in a sum of money obtained a surrender of the prior interest of the tenant for life. The court, with the consent of the married woman, ordered payment of that sum. Lachton v. Adams, 5 L. J., Ch. 382. And see Creed v. Perry, 14 Sim. 592.

Settlement by Infant Wife.]—On the marriage of a female infant her reversionary interest in choses in action was settled under the court for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. She afterwards contracted two subsequent marriages, but no further settlement was executed on those occasions. Part of the reversionary interests fell into possession during the first coverture, and part during the second, and were transferred to the trustees :—Held, first, that although the deed made during infancy was not binding in respect of the reversionary interests as against the wife surviving, still she might, while discovert, adopt it for her benefit. Secondly, that the wife having survived, and not having called for transfer of the fund, must be deemed to have acquiesced in and adopted it, as it was for her interest to do so. Thirdly, that she must be deemed to have married her second husband on the faith that her property was protected by the settlement, and that he was bound by it. Fourthly, that the third husband who had notice of the settlement previous to his marriage, and had for some years after acquiesced in it, was bound thereby, and had no interest in the settled property. Ashton v. M'Dougall, 5 Beav. 56 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 344 ; 6 Jur. 447.

Contract for Sale.]—Consent of a married woman taken in court de bene esse, and with much doubt, under a bill by her and her husband, for execution of a contract for sale of her reversionary interest in stock : consent not taken until the subject is ascertained. Woollands v. Crowcher, 12 Ves. 174.

A fund in which a married woman has a reversionary interest was transferred to a purchaser, on her consent taken in court. Howard v. Damiani, 2 Jac. & Walk. 458.

Election.]—Quære, can a married woman, entitled to a reversionary chose in action, elect to take a legacy against the will of her husband. Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 513 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 305 ; 11 Jur. 403.

A married woman cannot, by election, part with her reversionary choses in action. Williams v. Mayne, 16 W. R. 173 ; Ir. R. 1 Eq. 519.

Charge on Expectancy.]—A married woman can give a valid charge on her expectancy under the will or as one of the next of kin of a living person. Flower v. Buller, 49 L. J., Ch. 784 ; 15 Ch. D. 665 ; 43 L. T. 311 ; 28 W. R. 948.

A fund in court was subject to a trust, to be laid out upon land, which was to be settled in trust for A. for life, and after her decease in trust to pay a sum of money to a married woman :—Held, to be at least doubtful whether the married woman could affect her reversionary interest in the money charged on the land. Hobby v. Collins, 4 De G. & Sm. 289 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 199 ; 15 Jur. 835.

Money to be Laid out in Land.]—Money subject to be laid out in the purchase of land, "or otherwise advantageously," is not within the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, s. 68, and therefore a married woman could not, in 1849, by a deed acknowledged, release a reversionary interest in such money, it being mere personalty. Smithwick v. Smithwick, 5 L. T. 23.

Power to Appoint under Settlement.]—Consols stood in the names of two deceased trustees of a marriage settlement, which gave the husband the dividends for life in case he should survive his wife, with remainder to the child or children of the marriage ; or in case there should be no child, then to the person whom the wife should appoint ; and in default, to the husband, if living, or, if dead, to the wife's next-of-kin. The wife, being fifty-eight, and having had no child, assigned all her interest in the fund to her husband, and, on the petition of husband and wife, the court ordered that the right to transfer the fund might vest in the husband, and that he might transfer it to himself. Ryan's Settlement, In re, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1069; 9 W. R. 137.

Fraudulent Representation by Wife.]—A wife, living separate from her husband, represented to G. that she had the power of charging the reversionary interest in a fund to which she was entitled on the death of her husband, the fact being that she was restrained from anticipation during coverture. On the strength of such false allegation, she induced G. to destroy certain bills of exchange he had as securities for money lent to her on her executing an agreement to charge her reversionary interest with the debt, and at the same time entreating G. to make no inquiries as to the truth of her statements, as it would lead to her husband's discovering her liabilities and prevent a reunion:—Held, on the assumption that G. was really ignorant of the trusts of the settlement, that she had been so far guilty of fraud as to make the false allegation binding on her reversionary estate. Green v. Lyon, 21 W. R. 695.

The court has jurisdiction to sanction on behalf of a married woman a compromise of a suit to make a trustee liable for a breach of trust in relation to a fund in which she has a reversionary interest. Wall v. Rogers, 39 L. J., Ch. 204, 381; L. R. 9 Eq. 58.

Payment—Assignor not before the Court.]—A married woman entitled to a reversionary interest in a fund had assigned her interest absolutely, and was resident abroad. Upon the fund coming into possession:—Held, that the assignee was entitled to payment, though the assignor was not before the court. Hall v. Lys, 2 Eq. R. 42.

ii. Disposition of, by Husband and Wife, jointly.

Covenant to Assign.]—A husband, by a deed to which the wife was a party, covenants to assign a contingent portion of the wife's to the uses of the marriage. The husband dies without calling in the portion. The wife is bound by the covenant. Bash v. Dalway, 1 Ves. 19. S. C., nom. Bash v. Dalway, 3 Atk. 530.

Form of Stop Order.]—Form of a stop order, where husband and wife join in the assignment of the wife's reversionary chose in action. Moreau v. Polley, 1 De G. & Sm. 143.

Security for Debt of Husband.]—Husband cannot reduce wife's reversionary interest into possession; if they join in assigning it as security for debt of husband's, and wife survives husband, she takes it disencumbered. Hornsby v. Lee, 2 Madd. 16.

Female Infant.]—A female infant, being entitled to a reversion of a chose in action, expectant on the decease of the survivor of A. and B., she and her husband covenanted, in contemplation of their marriage, to assign it to trustees in trust, as to one moiety, for the husband absolutely; and as to the other moiety, for the wife and the issue of the marriage. The husband died first, and afterwards A. and B. died:—Held, that the wife was entitled to have the chose in action transferred to her. Le Vasseur v. Scratton, 14 Sim. 116.

Rent-charge for Life in Reversion.]—A married woman, to whom a rent-charge for life in reversion is devised to her separate use, without the intervention of trustees, joins with her husband in assigning it for a valuable consideration; she is bound by that assignment after the death of her husband. Major v. Lansley, 2 Russ. & M. 355; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 102.

Assignment of Charge.]—If a married woman has in equity a charge upon an estate, and she and her husband, for valuable consideration, execute a conveyance of the estate to a third person, such conveyance does not pass the premises in consequence of their having been previously conveyed to a trustee, the instrument may nevertheless operate as an assignment of the wife's charge. Birch v. Calley, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 173.

Share of Estate.]—A married woman, who was entitled under a will to one-fifth of a residue, during the pendency of a suit for the administration of the testator's estate, in which she and her husband were plaintiffs, but before the right of the parties had been declared by the court, joined with her husband in assigning her share as a security for a debt due from the husband. The husband died, and afterwards a decree was made directing one-fifth of the residue to be paid to the wife. The assignee had never presented any petition in the suit, nor did he take any steps to enforce his security till after the decree:—Held, that by the decree the wife's share vested absolutely in her free from the husband's debt. Quære as to the validity of the assignment by husband and wife of wife's chose in action to a particular assignee for value as against the wife surviving. Hutchings v. Smith, 9 Sim. 137; 7 L. J., Ch. 128; 2 Jur. 231.

By articles entered into on the marriage of a female infant, she and her intended husband agreed to assign, on her attaining twenty-one, a share of her deceased grandfather's residuary estate, to which she was entitled under the trusts of his will, to trustees in trust for themselves and their children; and after the lady had attained twenty-one, a settlement was made in pursuance of the articles, but before the settled property was transferred to the trustees the husband died:—Held, that the wife's right to the property by survivorship was not barred. Ellison v. Elwin, 13 Sim. 309. S. C., nom. Elwin v. Williams, 12 L. J., Ch. 440; 7 Jur. 337.

Testator gave a third of a moiety of his residuary personal estate to P., who marries, and whilst out of the kingdom she and her husband assigned it in trust for their daughter, provided they died before they came to England. P. afterwards married a second husband, who survived her:—Held, if the mother had continued a widow she would have been entitled to a decree for this third, and no notice would have been taken of the child's interest. Grosvenor v. Lane, 2 Atk. 180.

Release of Bond.]—The release by husband and wife of a sum of money secured by bond to A., and payable to the wife after A.'s death:—Held, not binding on the wife on her surviving both A. and her husband. Rogers v. Acaster, 14 Beav. 445.

Purchaser for Value.]—Where husband and wife, by deed executed by both, assign to a purchaser, for valuable consideration, a moiety of a share of an ascertained fund, in which the wife has a vested interest in remainder, expectant on the death of a tenant for life of that fund, and both the wife and the tenant for life outlive the husband, the wife is entitled, by right of survivorship, to claim the whole of her share of the fund against such particular assignee, for valuable consideration. Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 1 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 1.

Where husband and wife assign to a purchaser for valuable consideration, a share of an ascertained fund in which the wife had a vested interest, in remainder, expectant on the death of a tenant for life, and both the wife and the tenant for life outlive the husband, the wife is entitled, by right of survivorship, to claim the whole of that share of the fund against such particular assignee for valuable consideration. Honner v. Morton, 3 Russ. 65. S. P., Watson v. Dennis, id. 90.

If the wife, after her husband's death, execute an assignment of the fund which recites former assignments by the husband, and purports to be made subject to them, she does not thereby recognise or confirm those former assignments. Ib.

The wife does not acquiesce in those assignments, or waive her right to claim against them, by forbearing to impeach them till the death of the tenant for life. Ib.

Assignment by several Married Women.]—A deed relating to a reversionary interest in a fund was executed by some married women and their husbands. One having survived her husband, who died before the fund fell into possession :—Held, that the deed was not binding on her, and that therefore it was not binding on any of the other parties to it. Bolitho v. Hillyar, 34 Beav. 180.

Deposit of Title Deeds.]—D., being indebted to C., a married woman, deposited with her certain title deeds, and by his will charged the debt on freehold property. He directed that the debt should not be claimed until the death of the tenant for life, and devised the estate in remainder to C. and others. C., after the death of D., joined with her husband in conveying her interest, by a deed acknowledged to secure sums of money advanced by bankers to her husband. After the death of the tenant for life, C. claimed to have the debt charged on the estate by the will of D. settled upon herself :—Held, that the amount must be paid to the bankers, under the assignment to them by husband and wife. Williams v. Cooke, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 658 ; 8 L. T. 145 ; 11 W. R. 504.

Mortgage of Policy and Life Interest.]—A husband, being in want of money, effected a policy with an insurance company for the payment of 800*l.* to the survivor of himself and his wife, on the death of either, and on the same day he assigned the policy, and the wife assigned a separate life estate, to the company by way of security for 700*l.* advanced :—Held, that the policy and mortgage were one transaction, and that the assignment of the policy was valid against the wife surviving. Winter v. Easum, 33 L. J., Ch. 665 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 759 ; 12 W. R. 1018.

A wife entitled to reversionary interest for her separate use joined with her husband in assigning it, together with a policy of insurance belonging to him, to a banking company, in trust to receive the assigned moneys and premises, and thereout, after payment of the costs of the assignment, and on keeping on foot the policy, to retain and pay such sums of money as should from time to time be due to the company, and to pay the residue to the husband and wife according to their respective interests therein. The deed contained no proviso for redemption or power of sale :—Held, that the wife was to be regarded as a surety against whom the provisions of the security could not be extended beyond their express terms, and that a decree for a foreclosure or sale could not be maintained. Stamford, Spalding & Boston Banking Co. v. Ball, 4 De G. F. & J. 310 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 143 ; 5 L. T. 594 ; 10 W. R. 196.

Judicial Separation.] — Where a married woman entitled to a reversionary interest in personalty has joined with her husband in mortgaging such interest, and has afterwards obtained a decree of judicial separation, and is living apart from her husband ; on the property coming into possession she is entitled to it absolutely under 20 and 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 25, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 8. Insole, In re, 35 Beav. 92 ; 35 L. J., Ch. 177 ; L. R. 1 Eq. 470 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1011 ; 13 L. T. 455 ; 14 W. R. 160.

Covenant for Settlement of Future Property.]—On the marriage of a lady, who was entitled under her father's will to interest in his residuary estate and two sums of cash in reversion, expectant on her mother's death or marriage, and to no other property, a settlement was executed whereby the intended husband and wife covenanted that if at any time during the life of the lady any real or personal estate should be given or devised, descend or devolve, be bequeathed or come to her or her husband in her right, it should be settled. The property was to be held by the trustee upon trust to pay the income to the wife or her appointees, to the intent that the same might be and remain a separate personal and inalienable provision for the wife during the coverture ; and upon further trust to pay, assign, or otherwise dispose of the same from time to time to the wife's appointees by deed or will :—Held, first, that the reversionary interest of the wife was bound by the covenant. Spring v. Pride, 4 De G. J. & S. 395 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 646 ; 10 L. T. 473 ; 12 W. R. 892.

Held, secondly, that the wife could not during the coverture affect against herself by way of anticipation any portion of the income arising from them. Ib.

The reversionary interests in question, whilst still reversionary, were assigned by the wife by a deed duly acknowledged to the trustee of the settlement by way of sale, he having been removed from his office by deed of even date ; the consideration was in fact in part made up of advances made by him to the husband. The wife received no explanation of her rights when she executed the assignment :—Held, that the sale must be set aside. Ib.

Separately-acknowledged Deed.]—Though no assignment can be made of the reversionary interest of a married woman, so as to bind her, in the event of the death of her husband in her lifetime, and before it falls into possession, yet a perfect conveyance may be made by her and her husband under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 77, of a reversionary interest in the produce of real estate directed to be sold. Tuer v. Turner, 20 Beav. 560 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 663 ; 3 W. R. 583.

Where a married woman is entitled to a fund to be raised out of real estate on the death of a tenant for life, a deed executed during the lifetime of the tenant for life by her and her husband and the parties entitled to the estate, and acknowledged by her under the Fines and Recoveries Act, will not bar her right. Hobby v. Allen, 20 L. J., Ch. 199 ; 15 Jur. 835.

A fund of personalty was settled in 1842 upon trust during the joint lives of a husband and wife for the wife for her separate use without power of anticipation, then for the survivor during his or her life, and after the death of the survivor for such of their children as, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry, in equal shares. There was no power to invest in purchase of land. The trustees bought a freehold house with part of the fund. The only children were two daughters, who attained twenty-one and married. After this the trustee, the husband and wife, and the daughters and their husbands, by deed duly acknowledged by the daughters, conveyed the estate to such uses as the father and mother should jointly appoint, and in default as the survivor should by deed or will appoint. After the death of the mother the father contracted to sell the estate. The purchaser objected to the title on the ground that, as the purchase of real estate was unauthorised, the interest of the daughters was still to be treated as a reversionary interest in personalty of which they could not dispose :—Held, that the father could make a good title. Durrant and Stoner, In re, 18 Ch. D. 106 ; 45 L. T. 363 ; 30 W. R. 37.

iii. Malins' Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57). Effect.

By ante-nuptial agreement, a fund belonging to a wife was agreed to be settled to her own use exclusive of her husband, but it was to go to the husband if he survived :—Held, that the wife's contingent interest in the fund after the coverture accrued to her under the settlement, and, therefore, she could not dispose of it, as being within the exception contained in 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, s. 4. Clarke v. Green, 2 H. & M. 474 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 851 ; 13 L. T. 38.

B. had, under his marriage settlement executed in 1839, a life interest in a sum of money which was vested in trustees to pay the principal to and amongst the issue of that marriage, in such shares as he should appoint. In 1867 a daughter of B. married. On the 10th of December, 1868, B., by deed poll, appointed part of the money to the daughter to be held in trust for her, and assigned to her all his life interest in that part ; —Held, that she was entitled under the settlement of 1839, and that the deed of 1868 was not, within 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, an instrument executed after the 31st of December, 1857, so as to enable her to dispose of her interest in the sum appointed to her. Butler, In re, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 138.

A legatee, who is also a debtor to the testator's estate, cannot claim payment of the legacy without paying the debt ; and a legacy given to a married woman, but payable by law to the husband, is in the same position for this purpose as a legacy to the husband himself, subject to her right of survivorship where the interest is reversionary, and to her equity to a settlement when it became vested in possession. Where, however, the legacy to the wife is reversionary, and she, with her husband's concurrence, under the provision of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, assigns it to a purchaser for value, the deed acknowledged under the statute overreaches the jus mariti, and the purchaser takes the legacy discharged from all right of retainer which the executor might have asserted against the husband. Batchelor, In re, Sloper v. Oliver, 43 L. J., Ch. 101 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 481 ; 21 W. R. 901.

Semble, that if the husband had previously assigned his interest the case would have been different. Ib.

Exceptions from Act.]—By an ante-nuptial agreement, a fund belonging to a wife was agreed to be settled to her own use, exclusive of her husband, but it was to go to the husband if he survived :—Held, that the wife's contingent interest in the fund after the coverture accrued to her under the settlement, and therefore she could not dispose of it, as being within the exception contained in 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, s. 4. Clarke v. Green, 2 H. & M. 474 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 851 ; 13 L. T. 38.

8. Mortgages and Charges.

a. Generally.

Joint Power to Mortgage.] — A husband's estates were limited to himself for life, with remainder to such uses as he and his wife should jointly appoint, for the purpose of raising money by way of mortgage or otherwise, and subject thereto to a termor to raise certain moneys due from the husband, with remainder to the wife for life, and with an ultimate remainder to the husband and wife in moieties. The husband and wife exercised the joint power, and thereby raised money for the use of the husband :—Held, that the case was not one in which the wife's estate had been pledged or charged for the husband's moiety of the estate under the limitations of the settlement subsequent to the joint power. Scholefield v. Lockwood, 4 De G. J. & S. 22.

By a partition deed of real estate of which a wife was joint tenant, land was conveyed to such uses as she and her husband should appoint, and in default to her separate use during their joint lives, with remainder to the survivor for life, and ultimate remainder to her in fee. She joined in mortgages under the power to secure repayment of advances to her husband, and he afterwards executed a composition deed under the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, assigning all his property to trustees for the benefit of creditors. He afterwards sold the estate and requested the trustees to release it on the ground that only his life estate passed to the trustees, and that his wife was entitled to throw on his life estate the debt, which far exceeded it in value :—Held, that she was so entitled, and that the trustees ought therefore to release the property. Trueman, Ex parte, 42 L. J., Bk. 1 ; 21 W. R. 105.

Wife joining in Security by Husband—Effect of.]—When a feme covert having separate property, joins in a security for money advanced to her husband, the court acts upon it, not as an agreement to charge her separate property, but as an equitable appointment under the settlement, to be satisfied from the rents and profits of that property, and not by sale or mortgage. The death of the husband after the filing of the bill, and before the hearing, makes no difference. If the feme covert insist upon the exercise of undue influence by the husband, she must prove it, and it is not for the plaintiff to prove a negative. Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. 112.

Deposit of Bond with Bankers.]—A bond was vested in a trustee in trust, as to income, for a married woman for life, for her separate use, with remainder in trust for her issue; and in default of issue, in trust for such persons as the married woman alone, notwithstanding coverture, should by deed, or instrument in writing, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of, and to be attested by, two credible witnesses, appoint. The husband being indebted to his bankers, on the balance of an account current, the married woman deposited the bond with the bankers, with a letter signed by her to the effect, that in consideration of the bankers paying, or having already paid, the cheques of the husband, or otherwise advancing him sums of money, she thereby guaranteed the repayment thereof; and that she deposited, as a collateral security, the bond, which she undertook to assign to the bankers on request:—Held, that the consideration was sufficient, and that the separate life interest of the wife was effectually charged; but that the latter not having been executed and attested as required by the power, the court would not under the circumstances give effect to it as an appointment. Thackwell v. Gardiner, 5 De G. & Sm. 58.

A married woman having a charge on settled estates for her jointure, joined with her husband in mortgaging them and another estate of which he was absolute owner. Afterwards the husband sold the unsettled estate, the mortgagees joining, and the purchase-money was paid partly in reduction of the mortgage debt and partly to the husband. The wife did not join in the conveyance, but consented to the transaction:—Held, that whatever equity the wife might have against her husband or the estate which had been sold, she had no equity to charge the mortgagees with the sum paid to her husband. Noyes v. Pollock, 55 L. J., Ch. 513; 32 Ch. D. 53; 54 L. T. 473; 34 W. R. 383—C. A. And see Skottowe v. Williams, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 665; 4 L. T. 719—L. JJ.

Resorting to Husband's Property before Wife's.]—Where the bankrupt and his wife executed a power of appointment of the wife's estate to a creditor as security for a debt due from the bankrupt:—Held, that the creditor might prove for the whole debt without giving up the security, it being incumbent on him to recover what he could from the bankrupt's estate before he resorted to the property of the wife. Hedderley, Ex parte, Hicklin, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 487.

Creditor of Husband getting Himself made Trustee of Wife's Property.]—Securities obtained from a married woman having property settled to her separate use, by a creditor of her husband, who, by suppressing that fact, procured himself to be appointed one of the trustees, his co-trustee not being a party to the transaction, set aside. Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. 116.

Execution of, by Wife shortly before Marriage.] — Under the will of her father, Mrs. M'Wade was interested for life in the profits of a mine. A fortnight before her marriage she executed a mortgage of her interest to secure the payment to her mother, Mrs. Brodhurst, of a sum of money. Mrs. M'Wade, with her children, was residing with her mother. This was a bill by the husband (a pauper) and his children (he being their next friend) seeking to have the mortgage (of which he alleged he knew nothing before marriage) set aside, or that an account should be taken of what, if anything, was due to Mrs. Brodhurst:—Held, that the bill must be dismissed so far as it regarded the mortgage, there being no evidence of fraud. M'Wade v. Brodhurst, 34 L. T. 924—C. A. Affirming 24 W. R. 232.

Husband's Reversionary Interest in Wife's Estate—Costs.]—A husband mortgaged his interest in his wife's reversionary personal estate. The wife died in the husband's life, and before the fund fell into possession. Expenses were incurred in taking out administration by persons entitled to the equity of redemption, without any express request by the mortgagee:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to priority over such costs. Saunders v. Dunman, 47 L. J., Ch. 338; 7 Ch. D. 825; 38 L. T. 416; 26 W. R. 397.

Trustee — Same Hand to pay and to receive—Statute of Limitations.]—Where a married woman was, under a will, entitled for life for her separate use to the income of a sum of money which the trustee of the will had lent to the husband on the security of a mortgage, and the husband and wife had lived together in amity for a period of more than twenty years after the date of the mortgage, during which time the husband had never paid any interest on the mortgage debt, or given any written acknowledgment of the mortgage to the mortgagee-trustee for the wife:—Held, that the husband retained the interest as a gift from the wife: that it was the same hand to pay and to receive: that, therefore, no payment over was requisite: and, consequently, that the statute of limitations did not run, and the mortgage was still subsisting. Hawes, In re, Burchell v. Hawes, 62 L. J., Ch. 463; 3 R. 133; 67 L. T. 756; 41 W. R. 173.

Mistake as to Title.]—Where husband and wife executed a mortgage of her property, as to which it was at the time supposed she had power over the fee, but afterwards it appeared that she and her husband had only life interests, and as to her to her separate use:—Held, that the deed operated to the extent of the interests which they each had. Wainwright v. Hardisty, 2 Beav. 363.

Settlement — Inquiry.] — When a married woman executes a mortgage there is no obligation on the mortgagee to inquire whether a settlement was made on her marriage. Lloyd's Banking Co. v. Jones, 54 L. J., Ch. 931; 29 Ch. D. 221; 52 L. T. 469; 33 W. R. 701.

Agreement to charge Expectancy on Death of Living Person.]—A married woman can give a valid charge on her expectancy under the will or as one of the next-of-kin of a living person. Flower v. Buller, 49 L. J., Ch. 784; 15 Ch. D. 665; 43 L. T. 311; 28 W. R. 948.

And such a charge will be enforced after that person's death against separate estate bequeathed by his will to the married woman. Pike v. Fitzgibbon (14 Ch. D. 837) followed. Ib.

Such an agreement in writing is not void for want of consideration where it appears on the face of it that the money, to secure which the charge is given, was borrowed for and received by the husband, and it otherwise appears that such money was partly expended in discharging the liabilities incurred in keeping up the joint establishment of the husband and wife. Ib.

Where in such an agreement it was recited that A. was or might become "entitled to certain moneys under the will" of B., or as one of his next of kin to certain interests in his estate, "and that A. had agreed to charge all such interests so as aforesaid expectant" upon the death of B., and A. thereby assigned "all the interest to which she might become entitled as aforesaid expectant upon the death" of B. by way of security:—Held, that all the interest and not only the cash taken by A. under B.'s will was charged. Ib.

Semble, that in any case "moneys" would have carried railway debentures. Ib.

Covenant by Husband and Wife—Equitable Defence.]—Action upon a covenant by the defendant and wife to pay money. Equitable plea, that the defendant and wife, by the deed in question, mortgaged lands of which they were seised in fee in right of the wife, to the plaintiff in fee, as a security for money (of which the sum pleaded to was parcel) lent by the plaintiff to the defendant and wife, at the request of the latter, for the purpose of repaying with the sum a sum borrowed of another person by the defendant and wife, also at her request, for the purpose of discharging a debt of the wife contracted before marriage; that the wife died, leaving the plaintiff her heir-at-law, who thereupon became entitled to the equity of redemption in fee, in addition to the legal estate in fee-simple in the lands; that the lands were of more value than the moneys as to which the plea was pleaded, and all costs, &c., and became, upon the death of the wife, the primary fund for paying the moneys to which the plea was pleaded, which sums, as the plaintiff was entitled to the lands and the moneys and the equity of redemption, were in equity satisfied before action by the value of the lands:—Held, that the plea disclosed facts which would entitle the defendant to an absolute and perpetual injunction, and was therefore good as an equitable defence. Gee v. Smart, 8 El. & Bl. 313; 26 L. J., Q. B. 305; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1056; 5 W. R. 761.

Advances by Husband for Improvements on Faith of Settlement.]—A married woman and her husband, by deed duly acknowledged by her, reciting that the husband had begun to make improvements on the wife's land, and that they were therefore desirous of settling it to the uses thereinafter declared, conveyed, or purported to convey, the land to certain uses. On the faith of this settlement the husband made considerable improvements on the property, and money was advanced by the plaintiff on mortgage of the husband's interest in it, in which mortgage a person having a life estate by title paramount concurred:—Held, that supposing the legal estate not to have passed, the settlement was good in equity by way of contract for valuable consideration. Crofts v. Middleton, 25 L. J., Ch. 513; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 528; 4 W. C. 439—L. JJ.

—— Subsequent Divorce.]—A husband, who lays out money in repairing and improving his wife's realty, cannot, after being divorced from her à vinculo matrimonii on account of her adultery, come into equity to have such money declared a charge on the estate. Hamer v. Tilsley, 1 Johns. 486; 29 L. J., Ch. 32; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1344; 1 L. T. 54; 8 W. R. 20.

Mortgagee has Notice of Wife's Capacity.]—Upon a marriage, an estate was vested in trustees for the wife for life, for her separate use, and after the death of her husband, for such persons as she should by her deed or will appoint. She appointed the reversion expectant on her death, to secure money lent to her husband; and subsequently she executed another deed, and appointed the estate to her son:—Held, that a mortgagee contracting with a married woman must be taken to have known that she could only charge that which was settled to her separate use. Hobday v. Peters, 29 L. J., Ch. 780; 8 W. R. 512.

Held, also, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation that the reversion expectant on her death was not subject to the mortgage debt, and that the son as appointee took the estate discharged of the mortgage. Ib. And see Durnford v. Lane, 1 Bro. C. C. 106; and Martin v. Martin, 2 Russ. & My. 507.

Evidence that Mortgage for Benefit of Wife.]—A husband and wife joined in mortgaging the wife's separate estate, and the husband covenanted to secure the repayment of the debt:—Held, that parol evidence might be admitted to show that the money so borrowed was for the benefit of the wife; that the husband's joining in the mortgage deed was only by way of suretyship; and that his estate would be indemnified by the separate estate of his wife. Gray v. Dowman, 27 L. J., Ch. 702; 6 W. R. 571.

Husband Paying off Incumbrance on Wife's Property.]—A husband paying off an incumbrance, subject to which the estate stands limited to his wife for life for her separate use with remainder as she shall by will appoint, is, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, entitled to the charge as against the estate. Whether it is a charge on the husband's estate which is paid by the wife, or a charge on the wife's estate paid by the husband, the same presumption attaches to the transaction. Outram v. Hyde, 24 W. R. 268.

Specific Performance Decreed against Wife.]—Where lands were conveyed to the use of the wife for life, or of such person as she, by writing under seal, should appoint, and in default in trust to pay her the rents for her separate use, and she, during coverture, by writing not under seal, with her husband on a loan to him, agreed to execute a mortgage of the trust premises when required, and she survived her husband:—Held, that having a legal estate vested in her, and the power to enter into such agreement, she was bound to a specific performance.

Stead v. Nelson, 2 Beav. 245 ; 9 L. J., Ch. 18 ; 3 Jur. 1046.

Assignment of Annuity — Anticipation.]—Where there was a bequest of an annuity to a feme sole for her life, for her separate use, free from the control of any husband she might marry, without anticipation :—Held, that an assignment of such annuity, made by the annuitant and her husband after marriage, by way of security, was valid. Johnson v. Freeth, 6 Sim. 423, n. ; 5 L. J., Ch. 143.

Further Advance to Husband alone—Consols.]—A married woman, entitled for life, for her separate use, to the dividends of consols standing in the names of trustees, joined with her husband in assigning her interest to secure 400*l.* advanced to herself and him upon their joint receipt, and such further advances as might be made either to her or her husband. Soon afterwards the mortgagee advanced to the husband alone, upon his sole receipt, a further sum :—Held, that no further receipt or acknowledgment from the wife was necessary, and that the security comprised as well the further as the original advance. Greenough v. Sherrock, 10 L. T., 316.

Charge of Reversionary Interests.]—A wife living separate from her husband, represented to G. that she had the power of charging the reversionary interest in a fund to which she was entitled on the death of her husband, the fact being that she was restrained from anticipation during coverture. On the strength of such false allegation she induced G. to destroy certain bills of exchange he had as securities for money lent to her on her executing an agreement to charge her reversionary interest with the debt, and at the same time entreating G. to make no inquiries as to the truth of her statements, as it would lead to her husband's discovering her liabilities and prevent a reunion :—Held, on the assumption that G. was really ignorant of the trusts of the settlement, that she had been so far guilty of fraud as to make the false allegation binding on her reversionary estate. Green v. Lyon, 21 W. R. 695. But see 21 W. R. 830.

Mortgage of Policy—Payment of Premiums by Mortgagee.]—By a marriage settlement a policy of assurance on the life of C. was assigned to trustees for the benefit of the wife for her separate use, for life, and after her death as she should appoint. The husband covenanted that he would pay the premiums, and in default the trustees were authorised to apply the income for that purpose. Subsequently the wife appointed the reversion in the policy by way of mortgage to secure sums of money advanced to her, with interest at 5 per cent. The husband and the trustees refused to pay the premiums, and they were paid by the mortgagees. On the death of C. the mortgagees claimed to be repaid out of the policy moneys the sums they had advanced for keeping the policy on foot, with interest at 5 per cent. :—Held, that they were entitled to immediate payment of the premiums paid by them, with interest at 4 per cent., and to a charge for the remaining 1 per cent. upon the reversion of the policy moneys. Gill v. Downing, L. R. 17 Eq. 316 ; 30 L. T. 157 ; 22 W. R. 360.

Mortgage of Consols—Limitations giving Wife Absolute Title.]—By a settlement a sum of 3,500*l.* consols was settled upon P. for her life, to her separate use ; and after her decease, to such persons as she should by will appoint ; in default of appointment, for her executors and administrators. P. mortgaged to F., for security of 1,300*l.* and interest. Afterwards P. and F. presented this claim to have the 1,300*l.* raised by a sale of the requisite amount of consols, and paid to F., and to have the residue transferred to P. : —Held, that P. was (subject to the mortgage rights of F.) absolutely entitled to the fund. Page v. Soper, 22 L. J., Ch. 1044 ; 17 Jur. 851.

Voluntary Joint Settlement—Mortgage by Wife.]—Husband and wife, by a voluntary deed, assigned a term of years of the wife to trustees. She, having survived him, mortgaged the term : —Held, that the first deed wholly divested the wife's interest, and that the subsequent mortgage by her was no revocation thereof within the 27 Eliz. c. 4, and conferred no estate on the mortgagee. Doe d. Richards v. Lewis, 11 C. B. 1035 ; 20 L. J., C. P. 177 ; 15 Jur. 512.

Advances in Excess of Agreed Limit.]—A. B., a married woman, conveyed her separate estate to C. D. in trust to sell, &c., and pay a debt due to him from her, and further advances, not exceeding in the whole more than 400*l.*, and to hold the surplus for her separate use. C. D. afterwards made further advances, far exceeding the limit, part of which was paid upon bills drawn on him by A. B., with directions "to charge the same to the account of" her separate estate :—Held, that C. D. was not entitled to appropriate his receipts, in the first place, in payment of the advances not covered by the security, the court considering that C. D.'s receipts could not be considered as indefinite payments ; that he had them only for the purpose of paying off the charge, and afterwards for A. B.'s separate use ; and that, upon the true construction of the instruments, C. D. was bound to apply the separate estate, which he received, in satisfaction of the charge, and could only consider the surplus, after such satisfaction, as subject to the disposition of C. D., or liable to such ordinary lien as he might acquire by advancing money to her. Smith v. Smith, 3 Beav. 80.

Wife Restrained from Anticipation.] — See col. 1075.

b. Right to Redeem.

Intention.]—In a conveyance, by way of mortgage, by a husband of his wife's chattels real, the court will look at the instrument to ascertain the real intention of the mortgagor : whether merely to give a security, or, also, to actually change the property in the equity of redemption ; and such intention is to be ascertained by applying to the instrument the ordinary rules of construction, coupled with the presumption on which the court acts in such cases. M'Cullagh v. Littledale, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 465. And see Clark v. Burgh, 2 Coll. 221 ; 14 L. J., Ch. 398 ; 6 Jur. 679.

—— Wife's Intention.]—Husband and wife joined in executing a mortgage in fee of the wife's estate, reserving the equity of redemption to the husband and his heirs. The husband subsequently, out of moneys belonging to the wife, paid off the mortgage, and the estate was reconveyed to the husband and his heirs. After the husband's death the wife filed a bill against the son and heir-at-law of the husband for a reconveyance of the estate; and the evidence showing that the wife, in joining in the mortgage, did not intend to deprive herself of the benefit of the equity of redemption, and was ignorant of the effect of the proviso for redemption, a decree for a reconveyance to the wife in fee was made accordingly. Stansfield v. Hallam, 29 L. J., Ch. 173; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1334; 1 L. T. 179; 8 W. R. 34.

Where a wife joins in a mortgage deed, her equity of redemption is not released if there is no express contract on her part to do so, and that at any rate the title was too doubtful to be forced upon the purchasers. Bettin's Trusts, In re, L. R. 12 Eq. 553; 25 L. T. 404; 19 W. R. 1052.

Bankruptcy of Husband — Disclaimer.]—A husband and wife mortgaged in fee land in which they were seised in right of the wife, to whom the equity of redemption was reserved by the mortgage deed. The husband became bankrupt; and in a suit by the wife for a settlement of the equity of redemption on her and her children, and for redemption as against the mortgagee, and for foreclosure against the assignees and the husband, the assignees disclaimed, and a decree was made giving the wife the right to redeem as against the mortgagee, and settling the whole fee upon herself and her children, the husband not objecting. (See Gleaves v. Paine, 1 De G. J. & S. 87; 32 L. J., Ch. 182; 7 L. T. 811; 11 W. R. 273.) The mortgagee afterwards applied in the bankruptcy, and was there allowed to prove the whole amount of his mortgage debt against the bankrupt's estate:—Held, first, that the disclaimer of the assignees was intended only to accelerate the wife's right to redeem, if she elected so to do; but if she elected not to redeem, and her bill was consequently dismissed with costs against the mortgagee, the assignees would no longer be bound by their disclaimer; their interest in the bankrupt's estate would remain unaffected by the dismissal of the bill, and they would be restored to their right to the bankrupt's life interest in the property. Paine, Ex parte, Gleaves, In re, 3 De G. J. & S. 458; 32 L. J., Bk. 65; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 701; 11 W. R. 553.

—— Redemption by Wife.]—A husband and wife assigned leasehold premises, of which the husband was possessed in her right, to a mortgagee for securing money then lent, and interest, by a deed containing a proviso for redemption by the husband and wife, or either of them, or the representatives of either. The husband subsequently became insolvent, and the mortgagee filed a claim seeking a foreclosure against the assignee in insolvency, and the insolvent and his wife. The married woman proved that her husband had been without employment, and that she and her child were destitute, and claimed an equity to a settlement out of the mortgaged property:—Held, that the married woman had no equity to a settlement; but the proviso for redemption being on repayment of the sum advanced by the insolvent and his wife, the power to redeem must be given to the married woman as well as to the insolvent's assignee. Hill v. Edmonds, 5 De G. & Sm. 603; 16 Jur. 1133.

—— Pledge of Mixed Property.]—Where wife in security for husband's debt pledges her separate property mixedly with his in the same instrument, she, as between herself, her husband, and his assignee in insolvency, is entitled to have husband's property first applied. Aguilar v. Aguilar, 5 Madd. 414.

Sale—Surplus Moneys—Husband's Executor.]—A husband and wife appointed by way of mortgage real estate legally settled, but subject to an absolute power in the husband and wife. On redemption it was provided that the reconveyance should be reserved to the uses of the settlement. There was a power of sale under which any surplus purchase money was to be held on trust for the husband, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. The power of sale was exercised after the death of the husband:—Held, that the surplus purchase money belonged to the personal representative of the husband. Jones v. Davies, 47 L. J., Ch. 654; 8 Ch. D. 205; 38 L. T. 710; 26 W. R. 554.

Reservation of Equity of Redemption to Husband.]—Where husband and wife mortgage wife's estate, and equity of redemption is reserved to the husband and his heirs, without recital or special circumstances to show the intention to make a new settlement of estate, the husband has the equity of redemption, as he before had the legal estate only in jure uxoris. Ruscombe v. Hare, 6 Dow, 1; 19 R. R. 1.

Wife Foreclosed.]—The equity of redemption of a mortgage comes to a feme covert, against whom and her husband a bill is brought to foreclose; the feme covert shall be foreclosed absolutely, and shall have no time to show cause after the death of her husband. Mallack v. Galton, 3 P. W. 352.

Wife's Right after Mortgagee's Title absolute.]—Wife entitled in her own right, and also by settlement, to estate which had been mortgaged by her husband, and suffered to become absolute in mortgagee. Wife, after death of husband entitled to redeem. Hill v. Bristol (Bishop), Dick. 526. And see Corbett v. Barker, 3 Anstr. 755; 4 R. R. 856.

Suit—Wife Party by next Friend.]—In a suit by husband and wife for redemption of real estate of the wife, she ought to be a party separately by her next friend, as having an interest distinct from that of her husband. Smith v. Etches, 9 L. T. 476; 12 W. R. 192.

The husband, though bankrupt, is a proper party, as having the legal estate. Ib.

c. Wife's Equity to Exoneration.

Presumption of Application to Husband's Use.]—Presumption, that money borrowed by a husband on the security of his wife's estate is applied to his use. The husband is bound to exonerate the estate; but that equity may be rebutted by parol evidence, that the money was applied in discharge of the wife's debts. Kinnoul (Earl) v. Money, 3 Swanst. 208, n. And see Hudson v. Carmichael, 1 Kay, 613; 23 L. J., Ch. 893; 18 Jur. 851.

Doctrine of courts of equity concerning money raised by husband and wife from wife's estate. Id. 217, n.

Covenant by Husband—Wife's Property.]—A. and his wife mortgage the wife's estate, and A. covenants to pay the money, but the equity of redemption is reserved to them and their heirs; A. dies, and his wife survives: the mortgage shall be discharged out of the husband's estate. Pocock v. Lee, 2 Vern. 604.

—— Wife's Mortgage.]—Where a feme sole makes a mortgage, or takes an estate subject to a mortgage, and afterwards upon a transfer her husband covenants to pay the money, his personal estate shall not be liable. Secus, where the husband has received the money himself. Bagot v. Oughton, 1 P. W. 348; Fort. 332.

Bar to Exoneration—Disclaimer by Wife.]—Wife barred from her right to be exonerated out of the assets of her husband, in respect of money raised by mortgage of her estate, and received by him, by telling executor she would not raise her claim, and no difference, whether legacies were paid before or after. Parol evidence of her declarations admissible to prove that it was not applied for the husband's use, not to prove the transaction itself different from what it appears to be by the instruments and the other evidence, as that it was intended as gift to him. Clinton v. Hooper, 1 Ves. J. 173; 1 R. R. 102.

Proof of application of money raised on wife's estate to her use bars her demand on husband's assets. Wife does not stand in the place of mortgagee. Id. 181.

No Mortgage of Wife's Estate.]—If there is no proper mortgage of the wife's estate there will be no exoneration. Scholfield v. Lockwood, 4 De G. J. & S. 22; 33 L. J., Ch. 106; 9 L. T. 1258; 12 W. R. 114.

Bill to Redeem—Next Friend.]—A bill to redeem a mortgage on the real estate of a married woman, should not be filed by husband and wife merely, but by the wife by her next friend, making her husband a co-plaintiff. And this is the right course even where the husband is a bankrupt. Smith v. Etches, 1 Hem. & M. 558; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 124. Affirming 9 L. T. 476; 12 W. R. 192.

III. FUND OF MARRIED WOMAN IN COURT—PAYMENT AND TRANSFER.

1. In General.

Special Act—Substituted Machinery for Protection.]—Where an act of parliament authorised the purchase of lands in which a feme covert is interested, and gave the court of exchequer authority to distribute the purchase-money amongst the parties beneficially entitled, the exercise of that authority by the court is in lieu of the solemnities ordinarily required for the conveyance of the real property of a feme covert, or on the payment of her money out of court. Ellison, Ex parte, 2 Y. & Coll. 528; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 49; 1 Jur. 283.

Appointment of Trustee to Receive.]—A testator gave a legacy to a trustee, to invest it for the benefit of E. S., independent of the control of her husband. On a bill by the husband and wife against the trustee, to have it declared that the wife was absolutely entitled to the fund, and to have the same transferred to her or to her husband, by her direction, or in her right:—Held, that the wife was entitled to the entire disposal of the fund, but that the husband could not obtain it in that suit, and it was referred to the master to approve of a trustee, to whom the fund might be transferred upon the trust declared in the will, and to approve of a deed declaring that trust. Simons v. Horwood, 1 Keen, 7.

Husband and Wife living Separate.]—A fund was brought into court, being the arrears of an annuity charged on real estate in favour of a married woman. Husband and wife both applied for the fund; they had lived separate for a long period, but the wife was not in fault; the wife had a separate estate for life, and a jointure settled on her after her husband's death, and supported herself and children, the husband failing to contribute to their support, although possessed of a sufficient estate. The court granted the application of the wife, and ordered the fund to be paid to her. Warren v. Newton, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 211.

Order for Payment to Husband vests Interest in Him.—Money ordered to be paid to the husband in right of his wife, is a vested interest in him. Heygate v. Annesty, 3 Bro. C. C. 362.

Ill-treatment of Wife.]—Application by husband for interest of wife's money in court, refused on her affidavit of ill-treatment. De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. 56.

Identity.]—Where a fund belonging to a married woman was about to be settled, the court will not be satisfied with her sole testimony to the identity of parties. Anon., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1084.

Whole Fund paid to Adulteress.]—The court, under very peculiar circumstances, ordered the whole income of a fund in court belonging to a feme covert, who had committed adultery, to be paid to her, on terms. Lewin, In re, 20 Beav. 378.

Misdescription of Wife.]—The court will make a payment of money out of court to a married woman entitled thereto, notwithstanding that she is misdescribed in the petition, where the husband gives his consent. Clark v. Clark, 14 L. T. 98; 14 W. R. 449.

Bank of England — Transfer to Married Woman.]—The Bank of England does not permit a transfer into the name of a married woman alone. Therefore, where through misapprehension an order had been obtained for such a transfer, the court will alter the order by directing the accountant-general to pay the sum into the hands of the feme covert, she appearing personally again in court and consenting. Waybank's settlement, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 324.

Trustee—Refusal to Pay to Husband.]—A trustee is always justified in refusing to pay over a wife's fund to the husband, even at her request, and insisting on affording her an opportunity of asserting her equity to a settlement. Swan, In re, 2 Hem. & M. 34; 12 W. R. 738.

—— Advance by, on Misrepresentation.]—A wife was entitled in remainder to a share of moneys in the hands of a trustee. She deserted her husband, and married another man. The trustees, relying upon her representations that she was legally married, advanced a portion of her reversionary share to the bigamous husband. The fund having fallen into possession:—Held, that the trustee was answerable to the husband for the money which he had so advanced. Sporle v. Barnaby, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1142: 11 L. T. 412; 13 W. R. 151.

Order for Payment to Husband—Petition.]—An order for payment to the husband, of money to which the wife is entitled, cannot be inserted in the order on further directions, but must be obtained by petition, although the wife consents. Campbell v. Harding, 6 Sim. 283.

Claim by Assignee—Notice to Wife.]—In 1824 husband and wife assigned the reversionary interest in a legacy. In 1826, the cestui que vie being dead, the money was paid into court to the credit of the cause, not to be paid out without notice to the married woman. On the application of the representative of an assignee of 1815 to have the fund, notice having been duly given to the married woman, but she having taken no steps for or against the application, an order was made accordingly, but notice of this order was to be given to the married woman forthwith. Doody v. Higgins, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1068.

Settled Estates Act—Fund in Court under Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]—Notwithstanding the provision of s. 50 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, that when a married woman consents to an application to the court under the act, she is to be examined apart from her husband as to her consent, such an examination is not now necessary in the case of a woman who has married since the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Riddell v. Errington, 26 Ch. D. 220; 50 L. T. 584; 32 W. R. 680.

A sum of money was in court under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120), subject to the trusts of a marriage settlement. There was no issue, and the wife was past child bearing. Under the settlement the survivor of the husband and wife was entitled absolutely in default of children:—Held, that, upon the execution of a deed acknowledged by the wife, the court would order the fund to be transferred to the joint account of the husband and wife. Belt, In re, 37 L. T. 272; 25 W. R. 901.

Proceeds of Realty under £200.]—The court will not permit a married woman to elect to take her share of proceeds of sale of real estate as personalty without her separate examination, even where the share does not amount to 200*l*. Shaw, In re, Topham v. Burgoyne, 49 L. J., Ch. 213; 41 L. T. 670.

Purchase-money in Court of Land taken by Railway Company.]—Where purchase-money paid into court by a railway company belongs to a married woman, the court will pay it out to her without deed acknowledged, but simply upon her examination. Hayes, In re, 9 W. R. 769.

A share of the purchase-money of an entailed estate taken by a company paid out to the husband of a married woman upon her consent, without a disentailing deed as to the particular share being required. Tyler, In re, 8 W. R. 540.

Election on Separate Examination.]—The purchase-moneys of real estate to which a married woman was absolutely entitled having been paid into court by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 69, upon a petition by the owner and her husband for payment out to the latter:—Held, that the married woman might elect upon her separate examination in court to take the fund as personalty, and an order was, by her consent, made for payment out to her husband without a deed. Robins's Estate, In re, 7 W. R. 705.

2. CONSENT AND SEPARATE EXAMINATION.

a. When Necessary and Effect.

Payment to Husband—Consent of Wife.]—Where a married woman will consent to have part of her fortune (in court) paid to her husband, it must be so. Dimmock v. Atkinson, 3 Bro. C. C. 195.

—— Whole Fortune.]—The court refused to let the whole of wife's fortune be paid to her husband, although she was present in court, and consented to it. Higham, Ex parte, 2 Ves. 579. And see Sherling v. Rochfort, 8 Ves. 164.

Voluntary Settlement—Transfer to Trustees of.]—There must be the consent of the married woman previously to an order that funds belonging to her, although not in court, shall be transferred to the trustees of a voluntary settlement. Henry v. Ogle, Coop. C. C. 447.

Wife joining in Fine.]—Wife may dispose of personal estate as well as real by joining in fine with husband, over which she has absolute power, and on her consent her whole fortune was paid over to husband, though stated to be insolvent. Willats v. Cay, 2 Atk. 67.

Payment of Annuity to Husband.]—A life annuity had been given to a married woman by will, and the husband and wife applied for an order for payment of the annuity to the husband. The registrar refused to draw up the order unless the consent of the wife was taken:—Held, that her consent was not necessary. Shilleto v. Collett, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 385.

Lands Clauses Act—Election to take Purchase-money as Personalty.]—The purchase-moneys of real estate to which a married woman was absolutely entitled, having been paid into court, by a railway company, under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, s. 69, upon a petition by the owner and her husband for payment out to the latter:—Held, that the married woman might elect upon her separate examination in court to take the fund as personalty, and an order was, by her consent, made for payment out to her husband without a deed. Robbins's Estate, In re, 27 W. R. 705.

Legacy—Advance to Husband—Husband to Insure.]—A legacy being left upon trust for the separate use of a married woman during her life, without power of anticipation, and, after her decease, for her children, with power to the trustees to advance 1,000*l*., part thereof, to place her in any trade, business, profession, or employment, or otherwise, or for her preferment or advancement in the world; and this legacy having been transferred into court in this cause to the account of the legatee and her children, the court, on the petition of herself and her husband, advanced to her 1,000*l.*, to be employed with another 1,000*l.*, belonging to the husband, in establishing him in an advantageous partnership with two other persons, in a lucrative business with which he had been connected for thirteen years, upon his effecting an insurance upon his own life in the names of two trustees appointed by the court, to be held by them upon the trusts of the said legacy, and also entering into a bond in a proper penalty to the same trustees to secure the due payment of the premiums upon such policy of insurance. Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Kay, 40.

The court will not order payment to a married woman on her separate receipt without examination. Gibbons v. Kibbey, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1298; 5 L. T. 416; 10 W. R. 55.

Taking—No connection of Husband to be present.]—No person connected with the husband ought to be present when a married woman's examination as to her consent is taken. Bendyshe, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 814; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 727.

And see FINES AND RECOVERIES.

As to Examination of a Married Woman as to her Equity to a Settlement.]—See col. 1118.

As to Examination of a Married Woman on Removal of Restraint on Anticipation.]—See col. 1086.

b. Separate Estate.

Paid out without Examination.] — Money settled to the separate use of a married woman is paid out of court without any personal examination. Lechmere v. Brotheridge, 32 Beav. 353.

On payment to a married woman, on her separate receipt, of a fund in court belonging to her absolutely to her separate use, it is not necessary that she should be separately examined. Anon., 3 Jur. (N.S.) 839.

—— Leave to Apply.]—Bequest to a married woman to her separate use, the court would not order payment into her hands, but ordered the legacy to be carried to her account, with liberty to her to apply. Owen v. Lys, Taml. 404.

Marriage after Married Women's Property Act, 1870.]—A fund standing to the separate credit of a married woman, unless married after the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, will not be paid to her by the court, even on her separate receipt, without her separate examination. Secus, where the marriage was after the act, and the applicant takes under an intestacy. Deignan v. Deignan, 13 L. R., Ir. 278.

Annuity.]—Money bequeathed to be invested in an annuity for the life of a married woman for her separate use, paid to the husband upon her consent taken in court. Gullan v. Trimbey, 2 Jac. & Walk. 457.

Settled Stock.]—Settlement of stock to the separate use of a married woman for life, and after her death for her husband absolutely. Decree, upon the bill of the husband and wife, for a transfer to him upon his personal security. Chesslyn v. Smith, 8 Ves. 183.

Appointment of Trustee.]—A testator gave a legacy to a trustee in trust to invest it for the benefit of E. S., independent of the control of her husband; on a bill by the husband and wife against the trustee, to have it declared that the wife was absolutely entitled to the fund, and to have the same transferred to her, or to her husband by her direction, or in her right, it was held that the wife was entitled to the entire disposal of the fund, but that the husband could not obtain it in that suit, and it was referred to the master to approve of a trustee to whom the fund might be transferred upon the trust declared in the will, and to approve of a deed declaring that trust. Simons v. Horwood, 1 Keen, 7.

Trustees — Refusal — Presence of Wife in Court.]—The course is not to establish a deed between husband and wife on her separate estate without the presence of the wife in court, where the trustees put the parties to file a bill. Milnes v. Busk, 2 Ves. J. 500.

Consent taken in Court.]—Husband and wife joined in a petition asking payment to the husband of a sum which represented an annuity bequeathed to the separate use of the wife. The consent of the wife to the prayer of the petition was taken in court. Wordsworth v. Dayrell, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 631; 4 W. R. 689.

Where there was a fund in court to which a married woman was entitled absolutely under a will, the court directed that she should attend, and give her consent, and sign a separate receipt for the money, her husband appearing by counsel, and consenting to the payment. Mawe v. Hearside, 30 L. J., Ch. 937; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 817; 9 W. R. 649.

Transfer into Joint Names.]—Stock in court, settled absolutely to the separate use of a married woman, ordered, upon her petition, to be transferred into the joint names of herself and her husband, her separate examination and consent being dispensed with. Crump, In re, 34 Beav. 570.

c. Amount.

Ascertained, Must be.]—Court will not receive feme covert's consent to bar her equity until her share is ascertained. Jernegan v. Baxter, 6 Mad. 32.

Court will not act in disposition (according to her direction) of fund in court of feme covert, until the amount of her share be ascertained, or of any specific part of it. Godber v. Lawrie, 10 Price, 152.

And see Moss v. Dunlop, 29 L. J., Ch. 39.

Waiver of Equity to a Settlement.] — A married woman can waive her equitable right to a settlement out of a fund in court to which she has been declared entitled, although the clear amount payable in respect of such fund has not been ascertained. Packer v. Packer, 1 Coll. C. C. 92.

See EQUITY TO A SETTLEMENT, col. 1118.

The court cannot take the consent of the wife to the disposal of her fortune, unless the amount is ascertained. Edmonds v. Townshend, 1 Anstr. 93.

Sum under £200.]—Payment of a sum of money under 200*l.* to the husband, in right of the wife; ordered, notwithstanding a suggestion that the petition had not her concurrence. Elworthy v. Wickstead, 1 Jac. & Walk. 69.

Money in court belonging to a married woman, if less than 200*l.* will be paid to the husband, although she has been deserted by him, and she opposes the application. Foden v. Finney, 4 Russ. 428; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 153.

A consent in the case that one-fourth of 500*l.*, to which a feme covert was entitled, be paid to her and to her husband, was made a rule of court without the feme covert being examined to waive her equity. Loughney v. Lahiffe, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 511.

In a suit by an executor to administer his testator's estates, where the fund to be administered was divisible in equal shares among many persons ascertained by the master, the court ordered the apportionment to be made by affidavit at the hearing. Where the share of a married woman was subject to payment of costs unascertained, which might be expected to reduce it to 200*l.* or less, the court, to save further expense, ordered it to be paid to the husband, and dispensed with any examination as to the consent of the wife. Roberts v. Collett, 1 Sm. & G. 138.

—— Ward of Court.]—A ward of court was entitled to an income of more than 200*l.* a year for her life for her separate use, but she was not restrained from anticipation. An allowance was was made for her maintenance, and the surplus was accumulated in court. She attained twenty-one, and the next day married. She then, by her next friend, petitioned for payment of the accumulations to herself on her separate receipt:—Held, that the fund must be paid out to the wife on her separate receipt, but, though the fund was under 200*l.*, she was required to attend and be examined separately as to her consent. White v. Herrick, 38 L. J., Ch. 679; L. R. 4 Ch. 345; 20 L. T. 386; 17 W. R. 522.

Sum over £200.]—The court will not make any other than the usual order for the payment of money exceeding 200*l.*, belonging to a feme covert, out of court, although the amount will be reduced below that sum, after payment thereout of certain costs, to which the sum is liable. Beaman v. Dodd, 13 L. J., Ch. 141.

Sum under £500.]—The court will make an order for payment out of a fund in court, not exceeding 500*l.*, to a wife, with her husband's consent, on her separate receipt, without requiring her separate examination. Morton, In re, 31 L. T. 82.

Residue Subject to Costs.]—A married woman entitled to residuary estate is only entitled to the residue subject to the payment of costs. Therefore, when by consent in court of a married woman entitled to the residue of an estate which had been the subject of a common administration suit, an order had been obtained for the settlement of the funds on her, but the minutes, as taken down in the registrar's book, did not provide for costs, leave was given, in drawing up the order, to provide for costs out of the said residue, without any further consent on the part of the married woman, as being a dealing with the fund in which she had no voice. Musgrove v. Flood, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1086.

Mortgage — Part Satisfaction.]—The court, in settling a fund in court, will not, as against a mortgagee, let a married woman, to whom the fund belongs, receive a portion of it on her separate receipt, but, after directing payment of a sum in part satisfaction of the mortgagee's claim, will settle the residue of the fund upon her and her children. Grant, In re, 13 L. T. 583.

Reservation of Part of Annuity.]—A personal annuity was bequeathed to a married woman for life, and ordered to be paid out of the dividends of a fund in court. The court refused to pay out the whole fund on an assignment of the annuity by the husband and wife, but reserved a sum to meet the annuity in case she should survive the husband. Godfrey, In re, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 531.

d. Where Married Woman Abroad.

Form of payment of wife's money to husband when the parties are abroad. Minet v. Hyde, 2 Bro. C. C. 663.

A married woman living in America being entitled to a legacy, a commission to examine her would have been necessary; but as she had been examined under a commission issued by the American Government, that was considered sufficient. Campbell v. French, 3 Ves. 322.

Form of separate examination of a married woman, taken by commission. Bryant, Ex parte, 1 Ves. & B. 507.

Wife's legacy not to be paid to the husband without her consent taken before commission, she being abroad. Bourdillon v. Adair, 3 Bro. C. C. 237.

Where a fund is standing in a cause to the credit of a married woman whose domicil is Scotch, the court will not, on petition, order it to be transferred to her husband, but will order a commission to take the consent of the wife. The practice of the court is not affected by the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 86. Ireland v. Trembaith, 13 L. T. 626; 14 W. R. 275.

e. Revocation of Consent.

Death of Husband before Order.]—A married woman, upon a separate examination, expressed her wish that a fund in court, standing to her credit, should be transferred to her husband, and an order and transfer were made accordingly, but the husband died before the order was made. No consideration passed between the husband and wife:—Held, that she was entitled to have the fund re-transferred into her name by the personal representative of her husband. Penfold v. Mould, 36 L. J., Ch. 981; 17 L. T. 39; 15 W. R. 1196.

Previous Insolvency of Husband.]—A feme covert will be allowed to revoke a consent to the payment of her fund in court to her husband, when the object of that consent may be defeated by his previous insolvency. Watson v. Marshall, 17 Beav. 363; 22 L. J., Ch. 895.

3. AFFIDAVIT OF NO SETTLEMENT.

Requisite on all Applications for Payment to Husband.]—Form of payment of wife's money to husband when the parties are abroad. Minet v. Hyde, 2 Bro. C. C. 663.

Lord Chancellor said in future, on all applications for wife's money to be paid to husband he should expect an affidavit that there was no settlement on the marriage. Clayton v. Gresham, 10 Ves. 288.

On an application for payment out of court, of money belonging to a feme covert, it must either be shown that there has been no settlement, or agreement for a settlement; or if any settlement exists, it must be produced, to enable the court to judge whether it affects the fund in question: it is not sufficient to show by affidavit that the particular fund is not the subject of any settlement. Rose v. Rolls, 1 Beav. 270.

Where a woman who is or has been married, is entitled to a legacy, the court expects a positive affidavit that the legacy has not been in any manner settled, before it will direct payment. Hough v. Ryley, 2 Cox, 157.

Money devised to be laid out in lands for feme covert in tail, with reversion to her in fee, she chose to have it paid to her husband; not paid without affidavit by the husband and wife that there is no settlement. Binford v. Bawden, 2 Ves. J. 38. And see S. C., 1 Ves. J. 512.

—— What Form Necessary.]—When payment out of court is asked of money belonging to a married woman, an affidavit that the fund is not settled is insufficient. It must be shown either that there is no settlement, or what the settlement was. Britten v. Britten, 2 Beav. 143.

Fraudulent Settlement.] — Although feme covert, if no settlement was made, may in ordinary cases come in, and desire her fortune to be paid over to her husband, she cannot do so if a fraudulent settlement was made. In that case the wife cannot act upon her fortune remaining in court, and the whole disposal must remain with the court. Barrington v. Grogan, 2 Moll. 242.

No Settlement Whatever.] — The affidavit, that there is no settlement affecting money in court, the property of the wife, must state that there is no settlement whatever of the money; and it is not sufficient to say, that there is no settlement, nor agreement for settlement, upon the wife affecting the money in question. Lawrence v. Johnson, 7 Jur. 1122.

Intention to avoid Proposed Settlement.]—The court refused to pay a wife's money to her husband, though she consented in court, and had no children, proposals having been formerly made to settle an equivalent in strict settlement, but which the parties wished to abandon. Gardner, Ex parte, 2 Ves. 671.

Affidavit by Wife alone.]—A. sold a fund to which his wife was entitled in reversion, and when it fell into possession he was resident in Africa. The wife consented to waive her equity to a settlement, and that the fund should be transferred to the purchaser:—Held, that the usual affidavit that there was no settlement affecting the fund might be made by the wife alone. Elliott v. Remmington, 9 Sim. 502. S. P., Wilkinson v. Schneider, L. R. 9 Eq. 423.

It is proper to have an affidavit by the husband as to the absence of a settlement. Where such an affidavit cannot be had, however, payment will be ordered on production of an affidavit by the married woman that there was no settlement, or agreement for a settlement, coupled with another affidavit that the husband had expressly refused to make any affidavit on the subject. Anon., 3 Jur. (N.S.) 839.

Affidavit by Solicitor.]—The court will accept as evidence that there was no settlement on the marriage of a woman resident abroad an affidavit by a solicitor, disclosing facts which make it unlikely that there was a settlement, and stating positively that he was told by the lady and her husband that there was none. Woodward v. Pratt, 42 L. J., Ch. 891; L. R. 16 Eq. 127.

Petition by Widow.]—Upon a petition by a widow for payment out of court of money to the payment of which she has become entitled since the death of her husband, the court requires an affidavit that no settlement was made on her marriage with her late husband. Ebrington v. Ebrington, 4 Drew. 545.

Proof of no Children.]—A fund in court belonged in reversion to a married woman. After her death, the husband in 1821 sold and assigned it. The tenant for life died, and it having been found impossible to obtain from him an affidavit of no settlement, the court, in 1858, ordered payment to the assignee without one, on proof of there having been no children. Clarke v. Woodward, 25 Beav. 455.

Shares under £10—Affidavit dispensed with.]—In paying out of court a sum divisible into shares of less than 10*l.* each, to some of which married women are entitled, the court will dispense with affidavits of no settlement. Veal v. Veal, 36 L. J., Ch. 816; L. R. 4 Eq. 115.

Where Domiciled Abroad.]—Money belonging to the wife paid to the husband, the parties being subjects of Denmark, and the law of that country not requiring a settlement. Chapple v. Cadell, Jac. 544.

Where it is sought to have funds belonging to a domiciled Scotch feme covert paid out of court, and any Scotch settlement exists, the court requires the testimony of a Scotch advocate to show that it does not affect the fund. Todd, In re, 19 Beav. 582.

A fund in court belonging to a married woman, who and her husband were both domiciled in Scotland, was ordered to be paid to the assignee of the husband, without requiring the consent of the wife, upon it being proved, as matter of fact in the cause, that by the law of Scotland a married woman had no equity to a settlement. M'Cormick v. Garnett, 23 L. J., Ch. 777; 18 Jur. 412; 2 Eq. R. 536; 2 W. R. 403—L. JJ.

On a motion that a fund standing to a separate account of a married woman, a foreigner domiciled abroad, should be paid to her husband, upon affidavit that there was no settlement, and that by the law of the country where the parties were domiciled the husband was entitled to the fund, the court refused to make the order without the consent of the wife. Schwabacher v. Becker, 2 Sim. & G. (App.) iv.

E. HUSBAND'S LIABILITIES.

1. For Wife's Debts &c., Contracted before Marriage.

By 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 14.]—A husband shall be liable for the debts of his wife contracted, and for all contracts entered into and wrongs committed by her, before marriage, including any liabilities to which she may be so subject under the acts relating to joint-stock companies as aforesaid, to the extent of all property whatsoever belonging to his wife which he shall have acquired or become entitled to from or through his wife, after deducting therefrom any payments made by him, and any sums for which judgment may have been bonâ fide recovered against him in any proceeding at law, in respect of any such debts, contracts, or wrongs for or in respect of which his wife was liable before her marriage as aforesaid; but he shall not be liable for the same any further or otherwise; and any court in which a husband shall be sued for any such debt shall have power to direct any inquiry or proceedings which it may think proper for the purpose of ascertaining the nature, amount, or value of such property: Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall operate to increase or diminish the liability of any husband married before the commencement of this act for or in respect of any such debt or other liability of his wife as aforesaid.

Suits for Ante-nuptial Liabilities—45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 15.]—A husband and wife may be jointly sued in respect of any such debt or other liability (whether by contract or for any wrong) contracted or incurred by the wife before marriage as aforesaid, if the plaintiff in the action shall seek to establish his claim, either wholly or in part, against both of them; and if in any such action, or in any action brought in respect of any such debt or liability against the husband alone, it is not found that the husband is liable in respect of any property of the wife so acquired by him or to which he shall have become so entitled as aforesaid, he shall have judgment for his costs of defence, whatever may be the result of the action against the wife if jointly sued with him; and in any such action against husband and wife jointly, if it appears that the husband is liable for the debt or damages recovered, or any part thereof, the judgment to the extent of the amount for which the husband is liable shall be a joint judgment against the husband personally and against the wife as to her separate property; and as to the residue, if any, of such debt and damages, the judgment shall be a separate judgment against the wife as to her separate property only.

Cases Decided before preceding Act.]—The Married Women's Property Act, 1870, c. 12 (repealed by act of 1874), extends to property settled to the separate use of a married woman without power of anticipation. Sanger v. Sanger, 40 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 11 Eq. 470; 24 L. T. 649; 19 W. R. 792.

After the passing of that act, and on the same day on which a marriage took place, but subsequently thereto, judgment was entered up against the wife for a debt incurred previously to the marriage. The judgment creditors subsequently obtained a charging order on her interest in a fund in court to the income of which she was entitled for her separate use without power of anticipation:—Held, that the charging order constituted a valid incumbrance on the fund. Ib.

Wife's Ante-nuptial Debt—Judgment against the Wife—Action against Husband.]—A judgment having been recovered by the plaintiff in an action brought against a married woman under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 13, for a debt incurred by her before marriage, but such judgment remaining unsatisfied because she had no separate estate, an action for the debt was afterwards brought by the plaintiff against the husband who had acquired property from his wife to an amount exceeding the debt:—Held, that the judgment recovered against the wife was no defence to the action against the husband. Beck v. Pierce, 58 L. J., Q. B. 516; 22 Q. B. D. 316; 61 L. T. 448; 38 W. R. 29—C. A.

A feme sole made a promissory note jointly with an accommodation maker, upon which a judgment was obtained by the payee against both; she afterwards married, and (after the marriage) the accommodation maker paid the amount due on the judgment and sued his co-maker and her husband for the amount on an implied contract of indemnity:—Held, that the debt sued for was contracted by the wife before marriage, and consequently, that under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93, s. 12, repealed), the husband was not liable. Conlon v. Moore, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 190.

—— Statute of Limitations.]—A husband cannot be made liable under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 14, 15, for an ante-nuptial debt of the wife which accrued due against the wife more than six years before the commencement of the action. Beck v. Pierce, supra.

Husband getting Portion with Wife.]—Though the husband cannot be charged with the wife's debts after her decease unless judgment be obtained in her lifetime, equity will make him answerable where the wife brought him a sufficient estate. Ball v. Smith, 2 Free. 231.

Enjoyment of House by Wife dum sola.]—A husband is not liable to pay for the enjoyment of a house by his wife dum sola. Richardson v. Hall, 1 Br. & B. 50; 3 Moore, 307.

Husband must be sued in Wife's Lifetime.]—Husband is liable for wife's debts contracted before marriage, but not unless sued in her lifetime, or she had a separate maintenance. Lewis v. Nangle, Ambl. 150.

And see Powell v. Bell, Blackmore v. Ley, 1 Eq. Abr. 61.

A husband cannot be sued alone for the debt of his wife contracted before marriage. Mitchinson v. Hewson, 7 Term Rep. 348.

And see Jordan v. Foley, Sel. Ch. Ca. 19.

Express Promise by Husband.]—An express promise by a husband to pay a debt incurred by his wife, for which he is not otherwise liable, is binding. Harrison v. Hall, 1 M. & Rob. 85.

Pleading in Action by Creditor.]—In an action against a husband and wife married since the Married Women's Property Act, 1874, for the recovery of a debt of the wife contracted before the marriage, it is not necessary that the statement of claim should allege that the husband has received assets of the wife: it is sufficient that it should simply allege that the husband is liable for the debt, leaving it to the husband to exercise his option of pleading non-liability under the provisions of the act. A demurrer by the husband to the plaintiff's statement of claim in such an action, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to allege that the husband had received assets, was therefore over-ruled. The effect of the Married Women's Property Acts, 1870 (s. 12) and 1874, considered. Matthews v. Whittle, 49 L. J., Ch. 359; 13 Ch. D. 811; 43 L. T. 114; 28 W. R. 822.

After Wife's Death.] — A husband is not liable under the Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 50), after his wife's death for her debts contracted before the marriage. Bell v. Stocker, 52 L. J., Q. B. 49; 10 Q. B. D. 129; 47 L. T. 624; 31 W. R. 183; 47 J. P. 8.

Debts contracted Abroad.] — By the law of Jersey a husband is liable for the ante-nuptial debts of his wife, and the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 50), does not apply to Jersey:—Held, notwithstanding, that an Englishman married in England after the passing of the act, to a woman who has contracted debts while a feme sole in Jersey, is liable, in an action brought against them in England for those debts, to the extent only of the assets derived from his wife and specified in s. 5 of the act. De Gruchy v. Wills, 48 L. J., C. P. 726; 4 C. P. D. 362; 41 L. T. 345; 28 W. R. 169.

For Wife's Shares.] — A woman, being entitled absolutely to shares in a company, married in May, 1878, and before the marriage the shares were settled for her own benefit. Upon the winding up of the company:—Held, that the liability of the husband to contribute to the assets of the company was not limited by the Married Women's Property Act, 1874, to the interest acquired in right of his wife, but that he was liable as a contributory in his own right under s. 78 of the Companies Act, 1862. West of England Bank, In re, Hatcher, Ex parte, 48 L. J., Ch. 723; 12 Ch. D. 284; 41 L. T. 181; 27 W. R. 907.

"Subsequent Action."] — The Married Women's Property Act, 1874, s. 5, enacts that when a husband after marriage has a judgment bonâ fide recovered against him in any action brought under the act to recover a debt of the wife contracted before marriage, "then to the extent of such judgment the husband shall not in any subsequent action be liable:"—Held, that the words "any subsequent action" mean any action commenced subsequently to the time of bringing the action in which judgment has been recovered, and not merely an action commenced subsequently to the recovery of the judgment. Fear v. Castle, 51 L. J., Q. B. 279; 8 Q. B. D. 380; 45 L. T. 544; 30 W. R. 271.

As to Wife's Children.]—Formerly a husband was not bound to maintain his wife's children by a previous marriage. Tubb v. Harrison, 4 Term Rep. 118; S. P., Cooper v. Martin, 4 East, 76. Though a husband was not bound before 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, to provide for the children of his wife by a former husband, yet if he took them into his house, and they became part of his family, he was deemed to stand in loco parentis, and was liable on a contract made by his wife for their education. Stone v. Carr, 2 Esp. 1.

If a husband educates a wife's child by a former husband, he cannot recover compensation from such child when it comes of age. Pelly v. Rawlins, Peake's Add. Cas. 226.

Wife's Creditors priority over her Equity to a Settlement.]—The creditors of a woman remaining unpaid after her marriage in respect of debts incurred before the marriage have a right to be satisfied out of her property, in priority to any equity to a settlement out of it which she may possess. Barnard v. Ford, Carrick v. Ford, 38 L. J., Ch. 671; L. R. 4 Ch. 247; 20 L. T. 289; 17 W. R. 478. See col. 1118.

Purchase of Estate by Wife before Marriage—Payment of Balance by Husband.]—Where an estate had been contracted to be purchased of a woman who married, leaving part of the purchase money unsatisfied, which was paid by her husband, who took the conveyance to himself, and devised the estate:—Held, that the estate was the property of the wife, subject to a charge in favour of her husband for the amount of the purchase-money contributed by him. Maddison v. Chapman, 1 John. & H. 470.

Bankruptcy—Set off.]—A debt due from a bankrupt to a married woman, dum sola, cannot be set off against a debt from her husband to the bankrupt. Bladgen, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 465; 2 Rose, 249.

Taxation of Costs against second Husband.]—A husband became liable for bills of costs due from his wife, dum sola, and from her former husband, to a solicitor:—Held, that though the relation of solicitor and client did not exist between the solicitor and the second husband, yet that the latter was entitled to a taxation of the bill of costs. Waring v. Williams, 2 Beav. 1. And see Eagle, Ex parte, Buck, 548.

Equity and Wife's Creditors.]—A woman indebted dum sola, marries, and brings a portion to her husband, and dies; equity will not help the creditors against the husband, to the value of what he received with the wife. Heard v. Stamford, 3 P. Wms. 402; Ca. t. Talb. 173.

So, on the other hand, where a woman, indebted dum sola, marries, and brings no portion to her husband, against whom judgment is recovered for debt, and then the wife dies, equity will not relieve the husband against the judgment. Ib.

2. Liability of, for Wife's Debts, &c., Contracted after Marriage.

a. While Living with Wife.

Necessaries — Wife has implied Authority to bind Husband for.]—A wife has implied authority to pledge her husband's credit for such things only as fall within the domestic department ordinarily confided to the wife's management, and are necessary and suitable to the style in which her husband chooses to live; or for goods, if she carries on a separate trade with the concurrence of her husband, suitable for such trade. It is not enough, where the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff, for him to prove facts which are equally consistent with the negative as with the affirmative of the proposition which he has to establish. Phillipson v. Hayter, 40 L. J., C. P. 14; L. R. 6 C. P. 38; 23 L. T. 556; 19 W. R. 130.

—— Presumption of Authority to Pledge Credit.]—Where a wife is living with her husband, the presumption is, that she has his authority to bind him by her contract for articles suitable to that station which he permits her to assume; but that presumption may be rebutted by showing that she had no such authority. Jolly v. Rees, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 628; 33 L. J., C. P. 177; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 319; 18 L. T. 299; 12 W. R. 473.

The liability of a husband for goods supplied to his wife depends upon whether she is his agent for the purpose of binding him by contracts for goods supplied to her, which is a question for the jury to determine upon the facts of the case; and in determining that question, the extravagant nature of her orders is a matter to be taken into consideration, as showing she had no such authority. Lane v. Ironmonger, 13 M. & W. 368; 14 L. J. Ex. 35.

Where a wife is living with her husband, and in the ordinary arrangement of their household she gives orders which are proper and not extravagant, it is presumed that she has the authority of her husband. Emmett v. Norton, 8 Car. & P. 506.

If a feme covert, without any authority from her husband, contracts with a servant by deed, the servant having performed the service stipulated may maintain assumpsit against the husband. White v. Cuyler, 6 Term Rep. 176; 1 Esp. 200; 3 R. R. 147.

The general rule is, that a wife cannot bind her husband by her contract, except as his agent; but in cases of orders given by the wife in those departments of her husband's household which she has under her control, or of orders for articles which are necessary for the wife, such as clothes, the jury (if the wife is living with the husband) ought to infer agency, if nothing appears to the contrary; but if the order is excessive in point of extent, and such as the husband never would have authorised, that will alone be sufficient to repel the inference of agency. Freestone v. Butcher, 9 Car. & P. 643.

If it is proved that the wife has a separate income, that of itself goes to repel the inference of agency; and evidence that the plaintiff has made out the invoices to the wife, and has drawn bills of exchange on her for part of the amounts which she has accepted in her own name, payable at her own bankers from her separate funds also goes to prove that the wife was not acting as the agent of the husband; and the fact that the husband sold some of the goods which were supplied to the wife and received the money for them, will not of itself make the husband liable in point of law to pay for them; but it is a fact for the consideration of the jury in determining whether the goods were supplied on the credit of the husband, and whether the wife was the agent of her husband. Ib.

A wife is the general agent of her husband with reference to such matters as are usually under the control of the wife. Ruddock v. Marsh, 1 H. & N. 601; 5 W. R. 359.

Therefore, where the wife of a labourer incurred a debt for provisions for the use of the family, the husband was held liable, though he had supplied his wife with money to keep the house. Ib.

When goods for which a wife has ordinarily authority to contract on the part of her husband, such as articles of dress, are ordered by her and delivered at his residence where she also resides, primâ facie the husband is liable, there being a presumption of law in favour of the creditor, and any evidence to rebut the presumption, as that the articles are unnecessarily costly in their character, or that the credit was given exclusively to the wife, must be submitted to the jury. Jewsbury v. Newbold, 26 L. J. Ex. 247.

The question whether the party who ordered the goods was the wife of the defendant must be raised at the trial; and the point is not raised, but rather waived, by an objection, that the credit was given to the wife alone; and semble, that if the parties live together, and the woman represents herself as the wife of the defendant, that is primâ facie evidence that they were married. Ib.

In Matters of Business.]—A wife having carried on business on her own account during the imprisonment of her husband, and he having returned to live with her after his discharge:—Held, that he was liable for articles furnished in his business, with his knowledge, after his return, though the invoices and receipts were in the name of the wife, and she was acknowledged as tenant by the landlord, and rated to and paid the poor and paving rates. Petty v. Anderson, 3 Bing. 170; 10 Moore, 577; 2 Car. & P. 38; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 223.

A., who kept a fruiterer's shop, in 1824 became bankrupt, but did not surrender to his commission; and from that time to 1833 the business was carried on by A.'s wife. Fruit was supplied to her between 1828 and 1832, to an amount exceeding 266*l.*, and evidence was given that A. was seen in London a few times between 1824 and 1833, and was arrested at the shop in 1833, and that he attended the marriage of two of his daughters at Marylebone church:—Held, that these facts were evidence to go to the jury, to show that A.'s wife acted as the agent of A., so as to charge him with the price of the fruit, although it might not be sufficient to charge him with necessaries supplied to his wife. Smallpiece v. Dawes, 7 Car. & P. 40.

A married woman carried on in her maiden name a millinery business separately from her husband. A debtors summons was issued against the husband and wife, claiming the payment of a sum due upon some bills of exchange drawn by the summoning creditor upon and accepted by the wife in her maiden name, and dishonoured. The husband applied to the court to dismiss the summons. He deposed that he never authorised his wife to pledge his credit, and that five years previously he had given notice to the summoning creditor that he had nothing to do with his wife's business:—Held, on this evidence, which was uncontradicted, that the husband was not liable for the debt; that the issuing of the summons was an abuse of the procedure; and that the summons must be dismissed with costs. Shepherd, Ex parte, Shepherd, In re, 48 L. J., Bk. 35; 10 Ch. D. 573; 39 L. T. 652; 27 W. R. 310—C. A.

—— Evidence of Agency of Wife.]—It is competent to a jury to infer agency in a wife to accept a notice with respect to a particular transaction in her husband's trade, from the circumstance of her being seen twice in his counting-house, appearing to conduct his business with reference to the transaction in question, and on one of these occasions giving directions to the foreman. Plummer v. Sells, 3 N. & M. 422.

Money Lent or Paid.—A husband is liable for a loan of money to his wife made at his request. Stevenson v. Hordie, 2 W. Bl. 872.

Where a sum of money was advanced to a wife who was living with her husband, and after her death the husband promised to repay the sum when convenient to him, but stated he had not been privy to the loan:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury, that the wife had borrowed the money with the sanction of the husband, or that she proposed so to do, and that he had ratified her act. West v. Wheeler, 2 Car. & K. 714.

A husband is not liable for money lent to his wife, though it is afterwards applied by her in procuring necessaries, for the supply of which he would have been liable. Knox v. Bushell, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 334.

A. lent B.'s wife 59*l.* for the purpose of enabling her to pay debts, and to provide herself a passage to the Cape of Good Hope, whither she was going to join her husband, at his direction, and so she applied it:—Held, that A. could not recover any part of the amount from B. Ib.

An action, in the absence of an express promise, cannot be maintained against a husband for money either lent to the wife to conduct, or actually paid out by a stranger in conducting, at the wife's request, an indictment against the husband, for an assault upon his wife. Grindell v. Godmore, 1 N. & P. 168; 5 A. & E. 755; 2 H. & W. 339; 6 L. J., K. B. 31.

A husband, who was a sea-captain, handed over his income, amounting to more than 1,000*l.* a year, to his wife for the support of herself and the household, of which she was the responsible manager. The wife got into difficulties, and borrowed from her sister various sums amounting in all to 1,327*l.*, for which a proof was tendered in the subsequent bankruptcy of the husband on the ground that the wife had authority to pledge his credit:—Held, that although in certain cases it might be that an authority to a wife to pledge her husband's credit would be presumed, even though that which the wife did was to borrow money, viz., where a wife borrowed money to pay for absolute necessaries, yet in the present case that had not been done: that the allowance made by the husband to the wife was ample for all purposes; and that there being no authority either in law or in fact to the wife to incur the debt, the proof in question against the husband's estate could not be admitted. Vernall, Ex parte, Cook, In re, 10 Morrell, 8.

Education of Child.]—In an action for a school bill, it appeared that the defendant's wife took the child (her niece) to the plaintiff's school, and that the defendant had visited her while there; but there was no evidence of any communication between the plaintiff and the parent of the child:—Held, that the fact of the defendant having paid for articles for domestic use ordered by his wife, was evidence for the jury of her authority to charge him with the education of the child. M'George v. Egan, 7 Scott, 112; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 196; 3 Jur. 266.

Costs of Solicitor to Defend Wife.]—Where a wife was indicted for keeping a disorderly house, which she had done with her husband's concurrence:—Held, that he was liable to an attorney, whom she employed to defend her, and by whom he knew she was defended. Shepherd v. Mackoul, 3 Camp. 326; 14 R. R. 752.

Wife's Funeral.]—When a wife whose husband has separated from her dies, the husband is bound to provide for her a funeral at a reasonable expense, and if he does not do so, any person who voluntarily employs an undertaker, and pays him for performing such a funeral, is entitled to recover the sum so expended from the husband in an action for money paid. Ambrose v. Kerrison, 10 C. B. 776; 20 L. J., C. P. 135. And see Bertie v. Chesterfield (Lord) 9 Mod. 31.

To whom Credit given.]—It is a question of fact, whether a tradesman who furnishes goods to a wife gives credit to her or her husband; if the credit is given to her, the husband is not liable, though the wife lives with him, and he sees her in possession of some of the goods. Bentley v. Griffin, 5 Taunt. 356. See Taylor v. Brittan, 1 Car. & P. 14, n.; Dixon v. Hurrell, 8 Car. & P. 817.

If wearing apparel is supplied to a married woman in quantities unsuitable to her husband's degree, and without his knowledge, for which the credit is to be given to her, and her promissory note is taken in payment, the husband is not liable for any part of the goods; and in an action against him for their value, it is not necessary to prove that his wife was supplied with suitable wearing apparel from any other quarter. Metcalfe v. Shaw, 3 Camp. 22; 13 R. R. 740.

Revocation of Implied Authority.]—Where the husband neither does nor assents to, any act to show that he has held out his wife as his agent, to pledge his credit for goods supplied on her order, the question whether she bears that character must be examined upon the circumstances of the case. The question is one of fact. The management of the husband's house would raise a presumption of agency as to matters necessarily connected with that management, which might not be got rid of by a mere private arrangement between husband and wife. Otherwise where such management did not exist. A. was the manager of a limited company's hotel at Bradford—where the wife acted as manageress—they cohabited—he made his wife an allowance for clothes, but forbade her to pledge his credit for them. She purchased clothes in London, the bills for which were at first made out in her name and were paid by her. She afterwards incurred, with the same tradesmen, a debt for clothes, payment for which was demanded from the husband, with whom previously, they had had no communication:—Held, that the husband was not liable—that under the circumstances here the mere fact of cohabitation did not raise a presumption of agency, nor require a proof of notice not to trust the wife. Debenham v. Mellon, 50 L. J., Q. B. 155; 6 App. Cas. 24; 43 L. T. 673; 29 W. R. 141; 45 J. P. 252—H. L. (E.).

A husband who is able and willing to supply his wife with necessaries, and who has forbidden her to pledge his credit, will not be held responsible for necessaries bought by her. Thus, where a proof was tendered in the bankruptcy of a husband in respect of the amount due for certain dresses and other articles of attire supplied to the wife, to whom an ample allowance was made, and a direction given by the husband not to incur debt :—Held, that there was no evidence of any authority, either express or implied, to the wife to pledge the husband's credit ; and proof against his estate could not be allowed. Holmes, Ex parte, Cook, In re, 10 Morrell, 12.

—— Evidence of Authority.]—Where a wife had in one single instance bought goods, which were delivered at the lodgings of her mother, without her husband's knowledge, but for which he subsequently paid :—Held, in an action for other goods, also bought by the wife from the same tradesman, and delivered at the lodgings of the mother, but at a different place, that evidence of the facts was proper to be left to the jury, to show an agency in the wife, and a sanction of her dealings by her husband ; and the jury having found for the plaintiff, the court refused to disturb the verdict. Filmer v. Lynn, 4 N. & M. 559 ; 1 H. & W. 59.

In an action for goods supplied by a tradesman to a wife while living with her husband, the question for the jury to decide, in order to find the husband liable, is, whether the wife was authorised by him to purchase the goods, and not merely whether they were necessaries for the wife in her station of life. Reid v. Teakle, 13 C. B. 627 ; 22 L. J., C. P. 161 ; 17 Jur. 841.

If an action is brought against a husband for the price of goods supplied to his wife, who is living with him, it lies on the husband to show that the goods were furnished under such circumstances as that he is not liable to pay for them. Clifford v. Laton, 3 Car. & P. 15 ; M. & M. 101.

A husband who supplies a wife with necessaries in her degree, is not liable for debts contracted by her without his previous authority, or subsequent sanction. Seaton v. Benedict, 5 Bing. 28 ; 2 M. & P. 66 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 208.

What are Necessaries—Articles of Dress.]—In an action for the price of articles of dress, supplied to the wife of a defendant, on her orders, while they were living together, but without his actual assent or knowledge, the question whether they are necessaries, and suitable to her estate and degree as his wife, depends on one hand, not only on his actual but apparent income as represented to the world by the rate at which he lives, and allows her to live : and, on the other hand, it depends partly upon the supply of similar articles which, in fact, she may have had at the time of ordering the goods in question. Apart from the authority implied in law, to pledge his credit for necessaries, there may be an authority implied, in fact, from his approving of her having such things, and knowing that she had no means for paying for them ; and thus, if a husband approves of his wife's hunting, and going to balls, and knows she has no separate income, or not sufficient to pay for the requisite dresses, there may be an authority, implied in fact, to pledge his credit for them, as otherwise she would not be able to obtain them. So far as the question depends on her having a separate income or allowance, the question is not only whether it is adequate to the expenses, which he tacitly encourages and allows, but whether it is paid, and when the question is as to an express prohibition to the wife to order goods on credit, it must appear that there was a direct, present, positive, absolute prohibition, and not a mere complaint of extravagance, or a declaration as to the future, that if such extravagance is continued, he will not be answerable for her debts. Morgan v. Chetwynd, 4 F. & F. 451.

See Jewsbury v. Newbold, 26 L. J., Ex. 247.

A husband living with his wife, and who makes her a sufficient allowance for dress, is not liable for dresses supplied to her without his knowledge ; and the fact of the wife having, within a particular period, purchased various articles of dress of different tradesmen, is admissible to rebut the presumption, arising from cohabitation, of an implied authority to contract for necessary clothing. Reneaux v. Teakle, 8 Ex. 680 ; 22 L. J., Ex. 241 ; 17 Jur. 351 ; 1 W. R. 312.

A married woman living with her husband, who made her an allowance for dress, incurred without his authority a bill for dress. An action having been brought against the husband for the amount :—Held, first, that evidence was receivable to show that she had incurred other debts of the same kind with other parties. Ib.

Held, secondly, that it was improperly left to the jury to say whether the goods in respect of which the action was brought were fitting for her station in life. Ib.

If a husband, not separated from his wife, makes an allowance to her for the supply of herself and family with necessaries during his temporary absence, and a tradesman, knowing this circumstance, supplies her with goods, the husband is not liable for the amount. Holt v. Brien, 4 B. & Ald. 252.

If a married lady, who has sufficient clothes, goes contrary to her husband's wish to a watering-place, and to balls, and for that purpose orders dresses, some of them expensive and unsuitable to her husband's circumstances, he is not bound to pay for any of them ; and it is immaterial whether the tradesmen knew these facts or not, and whether the clothes the lady had before were paid for or not ; and the fact that the husband afterwards saw some of the dresses does not vary the case, if it is shown that he disapproved of the conduct of his wife in ordering them. Atkins v. Curwood, 7 Car. & P. 756.

Where husband and wife are cohabiting, it is a presumption of fact, that she is his agent for ordering articles supplied to their establishment, which are suitable to the station which he allows her to assume ; but, if they be unsuitable to that station, a presumption arises that she was not his agent to pledge his credit for them. Harrison v. Grady, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 140 ; 13 L. T. 369 ; 14 W. R. 139.

It is for the husband, and not the jury, to fix the standard of living for his family. Ib.

—— Costs of employing Solicitor against Husband.]—The costs of a solicitor, employed by a married woman to institute proceedings on her behalf against her husband to obtain a decree of judicial separation, are not necessaries for which the husband is liable, unless there was at least great probability of ultimate success ; and to entitle a solicitor so employed to recover the costs from the husband, or to prove for them against the husband's estate, he must, in the absence of actual success, be at least able to show that he made proper investigation and inquiry into all the circumstances of the case before he commenced the proceedings. Hooper, In re, Baylis v. Watkins, 33 L. J., Ch. 300 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 114 ; 9 L. T. 741 ; 12 W. R. 324.

—— Doctoring — Disease communicated by Husband.]—Baron gives feme the foul distemper,; A. lends the wife 30*l.* to pay the doctor for her cure : baron devises lands for the payment of his debts ; this 30*l.* is a debt of the husband, and A. is a creditor in the doctor's place. Harris v. Lee, 1 P. Wms. 482 ; Pre. Ch. 502.

—— Supply of Furniture—Repairs—Agency.]—Where a husband and wife were living together, and furniture was supplied for, and work done at, the house on the order of the wife, but the husband took part in making selections, and giving directions as to the execution of the orders :—Held, that the husband was liable to pay for the goods and work, although he had expressly prohibited her from pledging his credit, and they had agreed together that she should pay for the goods and work. Jetley v. Hill, 1 Cab. & E. 239.

Furniture for a house may be considered a necessary, provided it is suitable to the rank and income of the wife. Hunt v. De Blaquiere, 3 M. & P. 108 ; 5 Bing. 550 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 198; 30 R. R. 737.

—— Jewellery.]—Where a tradesman clandestinely supplied a gentleman's wife with jewellery, unnecessary for her station in life, and there was no evidence, either express or implied, that the husband assented to the contract :—Held, that he was not liable. Montague v. Benedict, 3 B. & C. 631 ; 5 D. & R. 532 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 94 ; 27 R. R. 444. S. C., 1 Car. & P. 356, 502.

—— Looking after Lunatic Husband.]—T. having become lunatic was taken to an asylum in London. His wife, who at the time of her marriage was entitled to separate estate, removed to London in order to be near her husband, and borrowed money on his credit to meet the expenses of such removal of herself and her husband, and to provide herself with necessaries. T. died, and a bill was filed for the administration of his estate. The persons who made the advance to the wife carried in their claim for the amount against T.'s estate :—Held, that the claim must be allowed. Davidson v. Wood, 32 L. J., Ch. 400 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 589 ; 8 L. T. 476 ; 11 W. R. 719—L.JJ.

Husband a Lunatic.]—By marriage a wife acquires the right to be maintained according to the estate and condition of her husband, of which she cannot be divested except by her own misconduct, and therefore it is no defence to an action against a husband, for necessaries supplied to his wife, that at the time they were so supplied he was confined in an asylum as a dangerous lunatic. Read v. Legard, 6 Ex. 637 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 309 ; 15 Jur. 494.

In an action for the price of necessary repairs done to the defendant's house, it appeared that he was a lunatic, and that the work was done by order of his wife, with knowledge on the part of the plaintiff of the husband's lunacy. The wife had always received a sufficient allowance from her husband's estate :—Held, that the husband was not liable, as, under the circumstances, the wife had no more authority to pledge his credit than she would have had if he had been sane, and had provided her with means for all necessaries. Richardson v. Du Bois, 10 B. & S. 830 ; 39 L. J., Q. B. 69 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 51 ; 21 L. T. 635 ; 18 W. R. 62.

Husband absent Abroad.]—Where a husband is sought to be charged with supplies furnished to his wife during his absence from England, it lies upon the plaintiff to show what means of subsistence the wife possessed. Bird v. Jones, 3 Man. & Ry. 121.

An officer in the army, being required to join his regiment in the East Indies, left his wife in England, and settled a certain sum upon her, which was regularly paid :—Held, in an action by a tradesman for goods delivered at the house in which the wife was living, that it was not to be treated as a case of separation, but that the questions for the jury were, 1st, whether the goods supplied were necessaries, considering the condition in life of the husband ; 2ndly, whether the sum of money settled was sufficient ; and 3rdly, whether it was or was not notorious in the neighbourhood that the wife was living in a style not justified by the rank of her husband ; and the jury having found the first question in the negative, and the others in the affirmative :—Held, that their verdict must be for the defendant. Dennys v. Sargeant, 6 Car. & P. 419.

Where a man, who had been in the habit of dealing with a butcher for meat supplied to his house, went abroad, leaving his wife and family resident in this country, and died abroad :—Held, that the wife was not liable for goods supplied to her after his death, but before information of his death had been received ; she having had originally full authority to contract, and done no wrong in representing her authority as continuing, nor omitted to state any fact within her knowledge relating to it ; the revocation itself being by the act of God, and the continuance of the life of the principal being equally within the knowledge of both parties. Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 357.

b. While Living Apart from Wife.

i. By Mutual Consent.

Wife having Separate Maintenance.]—A husband is not liable for necessaries furnished to his wife living apart from him (there being no evidence of the cause of separation), if she has a sufficient separate maintenance, although no part of it is supplied by the husband. Clifford v. Laton, 3 Car. & P. 15 ; M. & M. 101 ; Hyde v. Price, 3 Ves. 445.

If husband and wife separate by mutual consent, the husband is liable for reasonable maintenance for his wife, unless she has a competent provision either from the husband or from some fund of her own ; and if she has such provision, it lies on the husband to show that. Dixon v. Hurrell, 8 Car. & P. 717.

A mere notice by a husband that he will not pay for goods supplied to his wife, will not avail him, if, under the circumstances of the separation, he is liable ; but if the husband and wife both deal with the same tradesman, and the latter agrees with the husband not to charge him for goods to be supplied to the wife, the tradesman cannot, after that, charge the husband for such goods. Ib.

In an action against a husband, for lodging and necessaries supplied to his wife, who lives separately from him without any fault of her own, and who is possessed of funds of her own, the question is, whether she has such means as are adequate to her support, according to her situation in life. Lidlow v. Wilmot, 2 Stark. 86; 19 R. R. 684.

A voluntary pension from the crown to a wife during pleasure, will not exempt the husband from being liable to be sued by his wife's creditors, by whom she was supplied with necessaries. Thompson v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2177.

—— Creditor may follow Maintenance but not Portion.]—A woman living apart from her husband and having a separate maintenance contracts debts, the creditors by a bill in this court may follow the separate maintenance whilst it continues, but when that is determined and the husband dead, they cannot by a bill charge the jointure with these debts. Kenge v. Delavall, 1 Vern. 326.

Goods Ordered by Wife to be sent to Third Person.]—If a wife living apart from her husband orders goods to be addressed and sent to a third person, and they are sent to the house of such third person, that not being the place of abode of the wife, the husband is not liable to pay for those goods. Reeve v. Conyngham (Marquis), 2 Car. & K. 444.

Husband making Wife adequate Allowance.]—If husband and wife live separate, and he pays her an adequate allowance for her support, he is not liable to be sued for her debts, although the separation is not by deed, and there is no written agreement between them with respect to the allowance. Hodgkinson v. Fletcher, 4 Camp. 70; 15 R. R. 725.

Where a husband, living apart from his wife, allows her sufficient for her maintenance, he is not liable for necessaries supplied to her; and notice to the tradesman of that allowance is immaterial, and need not be given. Mizen v. Pick, 3 M. & W. 481; 1 H. & H. 163; 7 L. J., Ex. 153.

A husband is not liable for necessaries furnished to his wife, after a tradesman has had notice from the husband that she had a separate maintenance. Rawlyns v. Vandyke, 3 Esp. 250.

But if a husband, living in a state of separation from his wife, suffers his children to reside with their mother, he is liable for necessaries furnished to the children. Ib.

If husband and wife are living apart, and the husband makes the wife a sufficient allowance for her support, he is not liable in an action by a tradesman for goods supplied to her, and it is immaterial whether the tradesman knew of such an allowance or not. Reeve v. Conyngham (Marquis), 2 Car. & K. 444.

If husband and wife are living separate and apart, and the husband makes the wife a regular allowance of a sufficient sum for her maintenance, which is regularly paid, this is sufficient to repel the inference of agency, and he is not liable for any debt she may contract; and it is not necessary that there should be any deed of separation; but the allowance must be such as the jury shall think sufficient, reference being had to the station of the parties and the income of the husband. Holder v. Cope, 2 Car. & K. 437.

Where a husband consents to his wife living apart from him, on the terms that she shall accept an allowance, which is paid, she has no authority to pledge his credit, though the allowance is inadequate. Biffin v. Bignell, 7 H. & N. 877; 31 L. J., Ex. 189; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 647; 6 L. T. 248; 10 W. R. 322.

A deed of separation between husband and wife, even although executed by the wife under restraint, and securing an allowance duly paid, is an answer to an action against the husband for necessaries supplied to the wife. Mallalieu v. Lyon, 1 F. & F. 431.

But after a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife not having been really restored to cohabitation, but placed under improper restraint, is, on her escape from such restraint, authorised to bind her husband for necessaries. Ib.

When a wife lives apart from her husband under an agreement by which she is to receive a specified income for her maintenance, and is not to apply to him for anything more, she has, so long as he fulfils those conditions, no authority to pledge his credit; nor can any such authority be implied from the alleged inadequacy of her income. Eastland v. Burchell, 47 L. J., Q. B. 500; 3 Q. B. D. 432; 38 L. T. 568; 27 W. R. 290.

A husband and wife executed a deed of separation, by the terms of which the wife retained the income of property settled to her separate use on marriage. The husband covenanted to pay her 20*l.* a year towards the maintenance of three of the children of the marriage, and the wife covenanted to maintain these children until they were twenty-one, and not to apply for further assistance to her husband. The husband had kept up the annual payment of 20*l.* in accordance with the terms of the deed. A tradesman sued them in the county court to recover the price of meat supplied to the wife after the separation, and the judge at the trial, on hearing the wife's evidence, found that her income was insufficient for her support, and ruled that she had authority to pledge her husband's credit for the price of the meat. On appeal:—Held, that this ruling was wrong, and that the wife, after the separation, had no implied authority to pledge her husband's credit. Ib.

—— Adequacy—Question for Jury.]—If a husband has not turned the wife out of doors, and they have separated in consequence of differences, the question will be, whether the husband has given the wife sufficient for necessaries suitable to his degree; for if he has, he is not liable to her debts even for necessaries. Emmett v. Norton, 8 Car. & P. 506. S. P., Hodgkinson v. Fletcher, 4 Camp. 70.

—— Onus probandi on Husband.]—Where, on the separation of husband and wife, the former, by deed, absolutely transferred to trustees for the wife certain personal property, no longer to be liable to his interference; in an action against the husband for a debt subsequently contracted by the wife, the defendant must show that the trustees gave effect to the deed by taking possession. Barrett v. Booty, 8 Taunt. 343.

—— How far an Answer to Action for Necessaries.]—A separate maintenance secured by a deed executed by the husband and wife, but not by her trustee, is void, and such separate maintenance is no answer to an action for necessaries furnished to her, after having left her own house, though she solicited to be received again by her husband. Ewers v. Hutton, 3 Esp. 255.

—— Right of Husband to Savings of Allowance.]—A husband and wife ceased to live together, without any divorce or deed of separation, he allowing her a sum per week. Out of the allowance thus made she saved some money, with which she bought stock, but afterwards sold out and made a gift of the proceeds to a third party:—Held, that the husband was entitled to those proceeds, and might maintain an action to recover them; aliter, if she had disposed of them in the payment of debts incurred for necessaries, or parted with them for a good and valuable consideration. Messenger v. Clark, 5 Ex. 388; 19 L. J., Ex. 306; 14 Jur. 748.

Covenant by Husband with Third Person.]—If husband and wife separate by deed, and the former covenants with A., her sister, to pay to his wife, or such person as she should appoint, a certain weekly allowance, during their separation, and the wife afterwards lives with A., and is by her supplied with necessaries, and the husband fails to pay the stipulated allowance to his wife, A. may maintain an action against the husband for such necessaries. Nurse v. Craig, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 148.

A husband who had separated from his wife, agreed that a deed of separation should be prepared and executed:—Held, that the husband was not liable for the expenses of his wife's trustee in procuring a counterpart to be prepared and executed, in the absence of any promise to pay that expense. Ladd v. Lynn, 2 M. & W. 265; M. & H. 27; 6 L. J., Ex. 73; 1 Jur. 42.

A husband who allows his wife a separate maintenance, and promises to pay the amount of a debt which she contracts in a state of separation, cannot afterwards recede from his promise, on the ground that the plaintiff knew that he allowed his wife a separate maintenance, and that he made the promise under a misapprehension of law. Hornbuckle v. Hornbury, 2 Stark. 177; 19 R. R. 698.

No Allowance made to Wife.]—Where husband and wife live apart by mutual consent, and nothing is said, and she has no means, and cannot maintain herself, a jury may infer that the husband meant his credit should be pledged by her. Johnston v. Sumner, 3 H. & N. 261; 27 L. J., Ex. 341; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 462; 6 W. R. 574.

In an action against a husband for goods supplied to his wife, who lives apart from him, the onus lies on the plaintiff to show either an express or implied authority from the husband to the wife to pledge his credit. Ib.

Such an authority cannot be implied when they part upon terms negativing any such authority, and making a provision for her not shown to be insufficient for her maintenance. Ib.

Where a wife separated from a husband under an agreement with his father for a specific weekly sum, which was not paid, and a tradesman having recovered about that amount for board and lodging:—Held, in an action by another tradesman for clothes supplied to her, that the husband was liable if the clothes were suitable to her position in society as his wife. Collier v. Brown, 3 F. & F. 67.

Though the wife, in the case of a separation by consent without an allowance, primâ facie deals for her husband, he will be discharged, if the dealing took place on the credit of another. Harvey v. Norton, 4 Jur. 42.

Money Lent or Paid.]—There is no authority in law, in a married woman, living apart from her husband, to borrow money on his credit. Paule v. Goding, 2 F. & F. 585.

—— In Equity.]—A party who advances money to a married woman, whose husband, resident abroad, makes no provision for her maintenance, for the express purpose of providing necessaries, and which is actually expended by the wife for that purpose, does not thereby obtain an equitable right against the husband for the repayment of the money so advanced. May v. Skey, 16 Sim. 588; 18 L. J., Ch. 306; 13 Jur. 594.

Medical Expenses—Allowance not regularly Paid.]—A husband and wife were living apart. The husband allowed the wife 12*l.* 10*s.* per month, which, however, he did not pay regularly, and directed her not to run up bills. She incurred expenses for medical attendance in part rendered necessary by his cruelty:—Held, that he was liable for these expenses. Beale v. Arabin, 36 L. T. 249.

Ratification.]—Although a husband is not cohabiting with his wife, yet if she improvidently takes up goods of a tradesman for which he would not otherwise be liable, he assents to the contract, if, having any control over the goods, he does not cause them to be returned to the vendor. Waithman v. Wakefield, 1 Camp. 120; 10 R. R. 654.

Evidence of Authority.]—In an action against a husband for goods supplied to his wife living apart from him, the plaintiff must give some evidence of the circumstances of the separation, to show that the wife had authority to bind her husband for necessaries. Edwards v. Towels, 6 Scott (N.R.) 641; 5 Man. & G. 624; 12 L. J., C. P. 239.

—— Funeral Expenses.]—The estate of husband is liable to funeral expenses of wife, though she had lived separate from him, and had separate maintenance. Bertie v. Chesterfield (Lord), 9 Mod. 31. And see Ambrose v. Kerrison, 10 C. B. 776; 20 L. J., C. P. 135.

A wife many years before voluntarily left her husband's house, and went to reside at her brother's about a mile distant, where she continued to live apart from her husband until her death, when her brother, without any communication with the husband, buried her in a suitable manner:—Held, that the brother was entitled to sue the husband for the expenses of the funeral. Bradshaw v. Beard, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 344; 31 L. J., C. P. 273; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1228; 6 L. T. 458.

Husband not Bound to inform Tradesman of Separation.]—A husband is not bound to give notice to a tradesman, with whom he has dealt for ready money during his cohabitation with his wife, of his separation from her, and the consequent revocation of her ordinary authority to bind him by her contract for necessaries. Wallis v. Biddick, 22 W. R. 761.

If he had, during the cohabitation, authorised her to deal with the tradesman on credit, he would have been bound to give notice of the revocation of that authority on the separation. Ib.

Re-cohabitation — Judicial Separation — Alimony.]—By a deed of separation in 1862, a husband and wife covenanted that the wife should not be compelled to cohabit with the husband, that she might dispose of her own property, that she might live where she pleased, and that the husband should pay to her 100*l.* a year while she should live chastely. From 1862 until 1872 the husband and wife lived apart; but in 1872 they resumed cohabitation. In 1879 they again separated, and in 1881 the wife obtained a decree of judicial separation, with alimony at the rate of 180*l.* per annum. In an action by a lodging-house keeper against the husband for food and lodging supplied to the wife between July and October, 1882, the husband pleaded the deed of 1862, and that the 100*l.* a year therein covenanted to be paid by him to his wife had been so paid:—Held, that the deed was not rescinded by cohabitation having been resumed in 1872, that the decree for alimony did not affect the deed, and that the payment by the husband of the agreed sum was an answer to the action. Negus v. Forster, 46 L. T. 675; 30 W. R. 691—C. A.

ii. Owing to Wrongful Act of Husband.

Cruelty.] — If a husband conducts himself towards his wife with such a degree of misconduct and of cruelty as to render it no longer safe for her to remain in his house, she is justified in leaving her home, and goes forth into the world with a credit for the necessaries of life suitable to her condition; and those who, from charity, or other motives, are willing to provide them, are entitled to recover a compensation from the husband. Emery v. Emery, 1 Y. & J. 501; 6 Price, 336; 30 R. R. 834.

No ill-treatment by a husband of the wife, short of personal violence, or such as to induce a reasonable fear of it, will enable a stranger to maintain an action against her husband for necessaries furnished to her subsequently to her leaving his house. Horwood v. Heffer, 3 Taunt. 421. And see Corbett v. Poelnitz, 1 Term Rep. 5.

Where a husband by his cruelty compels his wife to live apart from him, he is liable upon contracts made by her for necessaries, notwithstanding she, in fact, receives from him an allowance which is found by the jury to be insufficient, regard being had to his means and position in life. Baker v. Sampson, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 383.

An action lies against a husband for the reasonable costs of proceedings at law and in equity, instituted by an attorney against him on behalf of his wife, who had been forced to leave his house by extreme ill-treatment; the husband having previously tendered to the plaintiff the rent of a cottage occupied by the wife after her departure, and undertaken to pay the bill of costs, if reasonable. Williams v. Fowler, M'Clel. & Y. 269.

Where a husband separated from his wife, by his violent conduct renders it necessary for her to exhibit articles of the peace against him, he is liable to expenses thereby incurred, although he allows her a separate maintenance. Turner v. Rooks, 2 P. & D. 294; 10 A. & E. 47; 8 L. J., Q. B. 211.

Divorce Proceedings — Before 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 26.]—A husband separated from his wife by a divorce (à mensâ et thoro) for adultery on his part, with a decree for alimony, was liable for necessaries supplied to the wife if he omitted to pay the alimony. Hunt v. De Blaquiere, 5 Bing. 550; 3 M. & P. 108 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 198; 30 R. R. 737.

A husband was liable for necessaries supplied to his wife, pending a suit between them in the ecclesiastical court, until alimony was assigned; nor did a decree, directing the alimony to be paid from a date preceding the time when the necessaries were supplied, remove his liability. Keegan v. Smyth, 8 D. & R. 118; 5 B. & C. 375; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 189; 29 R. R. 273.

A wife having sued her husband in the consistory court, obtained a decree against him for alimony. He removed the cause into the arches court. The decree then became, in law, inoperative; but the husband continued making the payments under it; and it was proved that if he had omitted doing so, a new decree could, by a short process, have been obtained from the arches court, but that such application was not usually made unless payment of the alimony was discontinued:—Held, that he was not liable for necessaries supplied to the wife while the above payments were going on, and that such payments could not be considered a voluntary allowance. Wilson v. Smyth, 1 B. & Ad. 801; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 155.

After a sentence of divorce, ab initio, the liability of a husband for the debts of his wife does not continue. Anstey v. Manners, Gow, 10.

Wife Apprehensive of Personal Violence.]—If a wife, from reasonable apprehension of personal violence, leaves her husband's house, and it becomes necessary, for her protection, that she should obtain a divorce à mensâ et thoro, the law gives her authority to pledge her husband's credit for the expenses of the proceeding, and the question as to the husband's liability is, whether, at the commencement of the proceeding, there was such reasonable ground in fact for anticipating ill-treatment that the divorce was necessary for the protection of the wife. Brown v. Ackroyd, 5 El. & Bl. 819; 25 L. J., Q. B. 193; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 283; 4 W. R. 229.

Such reasonable ground is not furnished by a momentary ebullition of temper on the part of the husband, nor by a threat of violence, from which no serious intention to commit violence can be inferred. Ib.

If a wife quits her husband's house, under a fair apprehension of personal violence, that is equivalent to her husband's turning her out of doors. Houliston v. Smyth, 3 Bing. 127; 10 Moore, 482; 2 Car. & P. 22; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 200; 28 R. R. 609. And see col. 740.

Husband taking Prostitute into House.]—If she quits her husband's house because he brought a common woman to reside in it, that is also a sufficient reason for her going; and if the husband is sued for necessaries supplied to her, it is no answer to the action that she had committed adultery previously to the credit being given, if the husband did not know it till after the credit. Ib.

Wife put under Improper Restraint.]—A reasonable apprehension on the part of a wife that her husband intends to place her under improper restraint, will warrant her removal to a separate residence, and thereby render him liable for necessaries. Tempany v. Hakewill, 1 F. & F. 438.

Improper restraint of a wife in a madhouse is, for this purpose, personal violence; and therefore a party supplying her with necessaries may recover for them against the husband. Houliston v. Smyth, 3 Bing. 127; 10 Moore, 482; 2 Car. & P. 22; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 200; 28 R. R. 609.

Turning Wife out of Doors.]—A husband, without misconduct on the part of his wife, refused to receive her into his house:—Held, that an action might be maintained against him for money lent to his wife, at his request, and for money paid for her necessary support and clothing, at his request, it being proved that the money so lent and paid was actually expended for and in the purchase of necessaries for the wife. Johnston v. Manning, 12 Ir. C. L. R. 148.

—— Adultery—Connivance.]—In an action against a husband for necessaries supplied to his wife it appeared that the wife had committed adultery with the connivance of her husband, and the husband subsequently turned her out of doors; that she had no means of support; and that the plaintiff supplied her with the necessaries in question while she was living separate from her husband:—Held, that the husband was liable. Wilson v. Glossop, 57 L. J., Q. B. 161; 20 Q. B. D. 354; 58 L. T. 707; 36 W. R. 296; 52 J. P. 246—C. A.

If a husband by selling up all the furniture turns his wife out of doors without providing her with the means of obtaining necessaries suitable to her estate and degree, it is a presumption of law, which cannot be rebutted, that she was turned out with her husband's authority to pledge his credit for such necessaries, and medical attendance is such a necessary. Forristall v. Lawson, Connelly v. Lawson, 34 L. T. 903.

If a husband has turned his wife out of doors, and given notice either by a general advertisement in the newspapers, or by particular notice to individuals not to trust her, he cannot exempt himself from a demand for necessaries furnished to her while so living apart from him. Harris v. Morris, 4 Esp. 41.

Where a husband turns away his wife, and she is unable to maintain herself, she has an authority of necessity to pledge his credit for goods supplied to her. Johnson v. Sumner, 3 H. & N. 261; 27 L. J., Ex. 341; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 462; 6 W. R. 574.

Where a wife is turned out of the house by her husband without necessaries, and without the means of procuring them, it is a presumption of law, incapable of being rebutted, that she has authority to pledge his credit for necessaries suitable to her station. Harrison v. Grady, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 140; 13 L. T. 369; 14 W. R. 139.

If a husband turns his wife out of doors, and it is necessary for her safety to exhibit articles of the peace against him, he is liable to an attorney employed by her for that purpose. Shepherd v. Mackoul, 3 Camp. 326; 14 R. R. 752.

Desertion.]—When a husband had taken his wife to a particular place, and left her there with an intention on his part of not returning to her, of which she was not aware, and she not having been furnished with funds, had gone into debt with the plaintiff for lodging and board, and the defendant, after being applied to by the plaintiff, wrote to him in such a way as to imply acquiescence in her continuing there, these circumstances were left to the jury as evidence of liability. Jenner v. Hill, 1 F. & F. 269. And see col. 747.

—— Money Lent in Consequence of.]—A husband deserted his wife, and left her unprovided for, and the plaintiff advanced her money to pay for necessaries supplied for her maintenance, and she applied it accordingly:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled in equity to recover from the husband such sums as had been expended in necessaries. Deare v. Soutten, L. R. 9 Eq. 151; 21 L. T. 523; 18 W. R. 203.

A person who advances to a deserted wife money, to enable her to supply herself with necessaries, has no demand, enforceable at law, against the husband for the advances, but has a remedy in equity against him for so much of the money as is actually applied by the wife in paying for necessaries. Jenner v. Morris, 3 De G. F. & J. 45; 30 L. J., Ch. 361; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 375; 3 L. T. 871; 9 W. R. 391.

—— Claim in respect of Children.]—But a person who takes the wife into his house cannot maintain any action for the education of the children. Hodges v. Hodges, Peake's Add. Cas. 79; 1 Esp. 441; 4 R. R. 889.

Where a wife living separately from her husband in consequence of misconduct on his part rendering it improper for her to remain with him, has the custody of their child under the age of seven years against the husband's will but by force of an order made under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, the reasonable expenses incurred in providing for it are part of the wife's reasonable expenses, for which she has by law authority to pledge her husband's credit. Blackburn, Mellor and Lush, JJ., Cockburn, C.J., dissentiente. Baseley v. Forder, 9 B. & S. 599; 37 L. J., Q. B. 237; L. R. 3 Q. B. 559; 18 L. T. 756.

Law Costs—In respect of Restitution of Conjugal Rights.]—A husband having deserted his wife without cause, and left her without means of subsistence, she by advice of an attorney instituted a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, and obtained a decree for alimony pendente lite. She also, by the advice of the same attorney, took the opinion of counsel whether a verbal promise of a settlement made by the husband at the time of the marriage could be enforced in equity. She further consulted her attorney as to the best means of dealing with tradesmen who had supplied her with necessaries and were pressing her for money, and also with the landlord of a house in which she and her husband had lived, who was threatening to distrain for rent upon furniture in the house, which had been hers before marriage, but had become her husband's on marriage:—Held, that all these steps taken by the wife were reasonably necessary under the circumstances, and that she had an implied authority to pledge her husband's credit in respect thereof, and that on the death of her husband her attorney was entitled to recover his costs from the husband's executors, including the costs for expenses preliminary to the suit.

Wilson v. Ford, 37 L. J., Ex. 60 ; L. R. 3 Ex. 63 ; 17 L. T. 605 ; 16 W. R. 482.

—— Of Procuring a Divorce.]—A wife is entitled to pledge her husband's credit for all the costs as between solicitor and client reasonably incurred by her in respect to the institution and prosecution of a divorce suit against her husband. Ottaway v. Hamilton, 47 L. J., C. P. 725 ; 3 C. P. D. 393 ; 38 L. T. 925 ; 26 W. R. 783 —C. A.

A solicitor employed by a wife to prosecute a divorce suit against her husband, which terminated in a decree absolute for a dissolution of the marriage, had his costs in the suit taxed, as between party and party, in the divorce court. He then sued the husband for costs incurred before but in reference to the institution of the suit ; extra costs in the suit as between solicitor and client, disallowed on the taxation as between party and party ; and the extra costs, as between solicitor and client, of rectifying the wife's marriage settlement after decree nisi, these costs having been allowed on taxation as between party and party :—Held, that the wife could pledge her husband's credit for, and the solicitor was entitled to recover, such of the costs included in all the three classes as had been reasonably incurred. Ib.

The costs of a suit justifiably instituted by a wife against her husband for a divorce or a judicial separation, are necessaries for which she may pledge his credit. Stocken v. Pattrick, 29 L. T. 507.

A wife, living apart from her husband, consulted attorneys respecting the ill-usage she had received from her husband, consisting of his adultery and cruelty. They therefore made inquiries, and having satisfied themselves that there were good grounds for legal proceedings, they commenced a suit in the divorce court on the wife's behalf. Before such suit was brought to a hearing, she and her husband came to an arrangement whereby he executed a deed securing to her an annual allowance. The attorneys having sued the husband for their bill of costs, the jury, in reply to questions left to them by the judge, found that there was legal cruelty ; that they made full inquiries to satisfy themselves and to justify them in acting as her solicitors ; but that it was not necessary in order to obtain the deed of separation, to carry on the proceedings by filing the petition in the divorce court :—Held, that the action was maintainable, and that the costs incurred by the attorneys in the proceedings at the suit of the wife were (subject to taxation) properly chargeable against her husband. Ib.

A husband is liable to an action at the suit of his wife's solicitor, for costs necessarily incurred by her in filing a petition in the divorce court for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty and adultery, although the petition is not proceeded with, and the course prescribed by the practice of the divorce court for obtaining the wife's costs has not been pursued. Rice v. Shepherd, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 332 ; 6 L. T. 432.

The costs of a solicitor employed by a married woman to institute proceedings on her behalf against her husband to obtain a decree of judicial separation are not necessaries for which the husband is liable, unless there was at least great probability of ultimate success ; and to entitle a solicitor so employed to recover the costs from the husband, or to prove for them against the husband's estate, he must, in the absence of actual success, be at least able to show that he made proper investigation and inquiry into all the circumstances of the case before he commenced the proceedings. Baylis v. Watkins, 33 L. J., Ch. 300 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 114 ; 9 L. T. 741 ; 12 W. R. 324—L. JJ. And see col. 954.

—— In respect of Proceedings of Habeas Corpus.]—An attorney had been employed by a wife (while she was for just cause living apart from her husband) to resist a habeas corpus which the husband had procured to be issued to recover from her the possession of their child, aged over seven years, and now sought to recover from the husband the costs of the proceedings, averring specially that the wife was living separately from her husband, on account of his cruelty ; that the work was done upon the retainer of the wife, and at her request, and that it was necessary for the purpose of maintaining her rights :—Held, that, upon the facts alleged, the attorney was not entitled to recover. Mecredy v. Taylor, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 256 —Ex. Ch. Reversing Ir. R. 6 Eq. 336 ; 20 W. R. 252.

Onus probandi in Action for Necessaries.]—To make a husband liable for his wife's board and lodging at the house of a third person, when the wife leaves in consequence of a dispute, it must be shown, either that his conduct rendered it improper for her to live with him, or that he knew where she was residing, and did not make any offer to take her back, except upon conditions which he had no right to make. Reed v. Moore, 5 Car. & P. 200.

If a tradesman brings an action against a husband for goods furnished to his wife, while she was living apart from her husband, it is for the tradesman to show that her so living proceeded from some cause which would justify it. Mainwaring v. Leslie, 2 Car. & P. 507 ; M. & M. 18; 31 R. R. 691. S. P., Clifford v. Laton, 3 Car. & P. 15 ; M. & M. 101.

iii. Owing to Wrongful Act of Wife.

Adultery.]—A husband is not bound to receive or to support his wife after she has committed adultery, though he has before committed adultery himself, and turned her out of doors without any imputation on her conduct. Govier v. Hancock, 6 Term Rep. 603 ; 3 R. R. 271.

If a husband has put away his wife for adultery, he is not liable even for necessaries supplied to her, if it is proved on the trial of an action for the price of such necessaries, that she has been guilty of adultery. Hardie v. Grant, 8 Car. & P. 512.

If a husband puts away his wife on a charge of adultery, and informs a tradesman with whom his wife has been dealing, that he has so done, the tradesman cannot recover for articles supplied her unless they are necessaries, and the tradesman proves that the wife was actually in want of them ; even though no evidence is given of adultery. Ib.

When husband and wife do not live together, and the husband has turned the wife out of doors, the law makes her his agent to order such things as are reasonable and necessary for herself ; but if she is living in open adultery, her husband is not bound by any contract she may make, even for necessaries. Emmett v. Norton, 8 Car. & P. 506.

The adultery of a wife living apart from her husband destroys her implied agency to bind him by her contracts for necessaries. Cooper v. Lloyd, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 519.

In such a case the wife herself is an admissible witness to prove the adultery. Ib.

A husband went abroad in 1852, leaving his wife and three children here with (what the jury found to be) a sufficient provision for their proper maintenance in his absence. On his return, in 1856, he found that his wife had formed an adulterous connection with another man who lived with her, and passed by her husband's name, and he immediately removed his children:—Held, that he was not liable for medicines and attendances provided for his children at the wife's request, although the plaintiff was not aware of the state in which she was living at the time. Atkyns v. Pearce, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 763; 26 L. J., C. P. 252; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1180. And see col. 798.

—— How far Divorce Proceedings Evidence of.]—In an action for necessaries supplied to the wife of the defendant whilst living apart from him, the defendant relied for defence upon the adultery of the wife, to establish which he put in proceedings in a suit against her in the divorce court, in which it was found by the jury that she had been guilty of adultery with the co-respondent, but in which there was no decree, the jury having also found that the petitioner had committed adultery:—Held, that, there being no judgment in the divorce court altering the status of the parties, the proceedings therein afforded no defence to the action. Needham v. Bremner, 1 H. & R. 731; 35 L. J., C. P. 313; L. R. 1 C. P. 583; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 434; 14 L. T. 437; 14 W. R. 694.

—— Wife Continuing to Reside in Husband's House.]—The defendant's wife having committed adultery, he left her in his house with two children bearing his name, but without making any provision for her in consequence of the separation; she continued to live in a state of adultery:—Held, that the husband was liable for necessaries furnished to her, unless it appeared that the plaintiff knew, or ought to have known, the circumstances under which she was living. Norton v. Fazan, 1 Bos. & P. 226; 4 R. R. 785.

—— Condoned — Subsequent Ill-usage.]—Though a wife has been guilty of adultery, but the husband takes her again into his house, if he afterwards turns her out he is liable for necessaries furnished to her. Harris v. Morris, 4 Esp. 41.

Leaving Husband Voluntarily.]—Where, in pursuance of articles of separation securing a maintenance to the wife, she quits her husband's house against his wishes, and continues to live apart from him, although he is willing and wishes to receive her back and provide for her in his own house:—Semble, that he is not liable to be sued by tradesmen for debts contracted by her, even for necessaries. Hindley v. Westmeath (Marquis), 6 B. & C. 200; 9 D. & R. 351; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 115; 30 R. R. 290.

c. Cohabitation with Woman other than Wife.

When Woman Treated as Wife.]—Although a man is conclusively liable for necessaries supplied to a woman while he is living with her as his wife; when they have separated he is not liable for necessaries supplied to her on the ground that he has lived with her, and represented her as his wife, if he can show that in point of fact they are not married. Munro v. De Chemant, 4 Camp. 215.

If a man allows a woman to use his name, and pass for his wife, he will be bound to pay for goods furnished to her even by a man who knew that the parties were not married. Watson v. Threlkeld, 2 Esp. 637; 5 R. R. 760.

Where a man, who had for some years cohabited with a woman who passed for his wife, went abroad, leaving her and her family at his residence in this country, and died abroad:—Held, that the woman might have the same authority to bind him by her contracts for necessaries, as if she had been his wife; but that his executor was not bound to pay for any goods supplied to her after his death but before notice of it had been received. Blades v. Free, 9 B. & C. 167; 4 M. & Ry. 282; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 211.

If a man marries a woman, and holds her out to the world as his wife, he does not discharge himself from his liability for necessaries supplied to her, by proving a previous marriage between himself and another woman, unless he brings home a clear knowledge of the celebration of the first marriage to the person who supplied the necessaries to the second wife. Robinson v. Nahon, 1 Camp. 245.

Cohabitation by a man, for many years, with a woman, and introducing her as his wife, was admitted as some evidence of a marriage, in an action by a third party against him as her husband, for necessaries or money supplied to her. Paule v. Goding, 2 F. & F. 585.

The defendant and a Mrs. S., his mistress, lived together as husband and wife four years, and occupied three residences successively. At each time of their coming into a house plaintiff was employed to do work and furnish materials for the fitting up. Mrs. S. as well as the defendant gave directions, and the defendant sanctioned her orders and paid the bills; the plaintiff knew that she was only his mistress. While residing in the third house they separated, but Mrs. S., without the defendant's sanction, sent for the plaintiff to that house which she had not left, and ordered fittings up for a new house of her own. The plaintiff did the work, and had not in the meantime any notice of the separation:—Held, in an action for the last-mentioned work and goods, that it was a proper question for the jury, whether or not the defendant had given the plaintiff reason to believe that Mrs. S., at the time of the orders, continued to be the defendant's agent, and that on their finding in the affirmative the defendant was liable. Ryan v. Sams, 12 Q. B. 460; 17 L. J., Q. B. 271; 12 Jur. 745.

The mere fact that a man has allowed a woman to call herself by his name, he not cohabiting with her, nor otherwise holding her out as his wife, will not suffice to make a primâ facie case against him of liability for her debts. Gomme v. Franklin, 1 F. & F. 465.

Quære, whether a woman who cohabits with a man, assumes his name, and represents herself as his wife, can maintain trespass against a sheriff for taking in execution furniture alleged to be her property, but being in the house in which the parties resided. But it having been left to the jury to say whether, under the circumstances, the property might not have been given up by the woman to the man during cohabitation, and they having found it in the affirmative, the court refused to disturb the verdict. Edwards v. Farebrother, 2 M. & P. 293 ; 3 Car. & P. 521 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 72.

Deed Agreeing to Pay Annuity—Consideration for.]—Past seduction and cohabitation are not a good consideration to support an annuity. Beaumont v. Reeve, 8 Q. B. 483 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 141 ; 10 Jur. 284.

—— Pleading.]—The declaration stated that the defendant had seduced, debauched, and cohabited with the plaintiff, and it was agreed that no further immoral connection should take place between them, and the defendant, as a compensation to the plaintiff, and in consideration of the premises, agree to pay her an annuity during her life. Held, bad, on demurrer. Ib.

3. FOR WRONGFUL ACTS OF WIFE.

A wife possessed authority from her husband, a papermaker, to give in his absence certain requisite excise notices and receipts, without which paper could not be legally removed from the mill, though the making of it might continue. She had also paid excise duty by his authority. But it did not appear that she had any other authority from him respecting the manufacture, or to remove paper at all. She afterwards removed paper in an illegal manner, and pledged it, stating that she wished to make up a sum to pay duty with. The husband having been proceeded against for such removal :—Held, that her former acts were evidence to be left to the jury to decide whether or not the illegal act was done by his authority. Att.-Gen. v. Riddell, 2 Tyr. 523 ; 2 C. & J. 493 ; 1 L. J., Ex. 182.

A wife may be guilty of a forcible entry in the dwelling-house of her husband, and other persons also if they assist her in the force, although her entry in itself is lawful. Rex v. Smyth, 1 M. & Rob. 155.

A man is answerable to a third person for what is done by his wife, so long as the relation of husband and wife continues, though they may be permanently living apart, at least if it is not shown that the wife at the time was living in adultery. Head v. Briscoe, 5 Car. & P. 484.

In trover, the plaintiff having proved a taking of the goods from his premises by the defendant, and a subsequent demand and refusal, the defendant may prove under not possessed, that the plaintiff's wife, with his authority, gave the goods to the defendant in discharge of a debt due to him from the plaintiff. Ringham v. Clements, 12 Q. B. 260 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 289.

A bailiff seized the goods of the plaintiff under a fi. fa. against a third person, and deposited them in an outbuilding of an inn, with the assent of the innkeeper. The innkeeper's wife assisted him in the management of his business. On a demand being made to her to deliver up the goods, she said she had seen the attorney of the plaintiff in the original suit ; that he had told her not to bother herself about them, he would see her harmless, and that she would not give them up :—Held, in an action against the innkeeper and his wife, in which was alleged a conversion by her to her husband's use, that this refusal was evidence of a conversion by her. Catteral v. Kenyon, 2 G. & D. 545 ; 3 Q. B. 310 ; 6 Jur. 507 ; 11 L. J., Q. B. 260.

A married woman is responsible for all torts committed by her during coverture, and the husband must be joined as a defendant, and consequently they are liable for frauds committed by her as for other personal wrongs ; but when the fraud is directly connected with a contract with the wife, and is the means of effecting it, and parcel of the same transaction, the wife cannot be responsible, and the husband cannot be sued for it together with the wife. Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairhurst, 2 C. L. R. 512 ; 9 Ex. 422 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 163 ; 18 Jur. 191 ; 2 W. R. 233.

Action against a husband and wife, for that she fraudulently represented to the plaintiff that a bill of exchange was accepted by her husband, whereby the plaintiff was induced to discount the same, the bill not having been so accepted : —Held, by Erle, C.J., and Byles, J., that these facts did not constitute a cause of action against the husband and wife, but by Williams and Willes, J.J., that the fraudulent representation not being shown to have been connected with any contract of the wife's, these facts did constitute such a cause of action. Wright v. Leonard, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 258 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 365 8 Jur. (N.S.) 415 ; 5 L. T. 110 ; 9 W. R. 944.

A husband is liable in damages to a servant who has sustained an injury by riding in a defective cart by the directions of the wife. Miell v. English, 15 L. T. 249.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882.] — The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not abolish the liability of a husband for his wife's wrongful acts, and the plaintiff may sue the husband and wife jointly or the wife alone for wrongs committed by her after the marriage. Seroka v. Kattenburg, 55 L. J., Q. B. 375 ; 17 Q. B. D. 177 ; 54 L. T. 649 ; 34 W. R. 543.

After Dissolution of Marriage.] — One who has obtained a sentence of dissolution of marriage in the divorce court is not liable to be joined in an action for a tort committed by his wife during the coverture. Capel v. Powell, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 743 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 168 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1255 ; 11 L. T. 421 ; 13 W. R. 159.

Forcible entry for Rates—Resistance—Authority.]—A wife has implied authority to resist a forcible entry by a constable in executing a distress warrant for rates. Rossiter v. Conway, 58 J. P. 350.

4. FOR WIFE'S BREACH OF TRUST.

Breach of Trust before Marriage.]—Liability of husband for the breach of trust of his wife before marriage. Palmer v. Wakefield, 3 Beav. 227.

Defaults of feme trustee chargeable to Husband.]—The defaults of a feme trustee during coverture are chargeable to her husband. Smith's Estate, In re, Clifford v. Washington, 48 L. J., Ch. 205.

A testator appointed his wife and two others executors and trustees ; directed his business and a leasehold house to be sold, and gave the residue (which was principally leasehold property) to his wife, directing that if she married again it should be settled to her separate use for life—then he bequeathed the house "if not sold, and the money settled as above stated, and all money, &c., so settled upon her for her lifetime" to certain other persons; but if his wife should not marry again he left the property to her own disposal at her death. The widow married again two years after testator's death; the leaseholds were not converted, and she received the entire income till her death, twenty-nine years afterwards, by which time the greater portion of the terms of years had run out. Her second husband, who survived his wife and her co-trustees, never acted in the trust:—Held, that the leaseholds ought to have been converted upon the widow's second marriage, and that the second husband was liable as a trustee having legal control over the trust property, for a breach of trust in permitting the tenant for life to receive the entire income of the unconverted property. Ib.

The husband was ordered to recoup to the trust estate the difference between the income of the leaseholds received by himself or his wife during the coverture, and the dividends which would have been produced by a sale thereof at the time of her marriage and investment of the proceeds in consols. Ib.

Semble, that the excess of income thus received by the tenant for life must be held as received by husband through her hands. Ib.

Breach of Trust by Negligence.]—A husband's liability for his wife's breaches of trust extends to breaches of trust arising from negligence, and is not confined to losses caused by her active misconduct. Bahin v. Hughes, 55 L. J., Ch. 472; 31 Ch. D. 390; 54 L. T. 188; 34 W. R. 311—C. A.

Trust of Land for Creditors—Wife taking Profits—Third Husband.]—A. settled his lands for payment of his debts, but the trustees never acting, his wife, after his death, entered and took the profits; she married a second, and then a third time, still continuing to take the profits. An unsatisfied creditor appearing, decreed, that the third husband should account for what had been received by himself and the second husband, and the wife when sole. Gilpin v. Smith, 1 Ch. Cas. 80.

Life Estate—Wasting Assets.] — Husband, though parted from his wife, charged in equity with his wife's wasting of goods which were devised to her for her life only. Paget v. Read, 1 Vern. 143.

5. As to Other Liabilities.

Assault on Wife during Coverture.]—A wife after being divorced from her husband cannot sue him for an assault committed upon her during coverture. Phillips v. Barnet, 45 L. J., Q. B. 277; 1 Q. B. D. 436; 34 L. T. 177; 24 W. R. 345.

Wife guilty of Fraud.]—Where a feme covert has been guilty of fraud solely without the husband, no precedent of his paying costs. Cotton v. Luttrell, 1 Atk. 453.

Wife Concurring in Mortgage when no Power.]—If a wife concurs with her husband in mortgaging property over which she has no power, the husband is primarily liable, unless the wife received the money for her separate use; and the court will direct an inquiry as to this fact. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 K. & J. 79; 25 L. J., Ch. 159; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1160; 4 W. R. 135.

Wife Trading—Husband taking Profits.]—Feme covert trades with her husband's consent, and gives bills for money; he receives the profits. She dies and leaves a stock-in-trade; he shall be answerable for the debts contracted in the trade. Bowyer v. Peake, 2 Freem. 215.

Separate Trading—Debtor's Summons against Husband.]—A married woman carried on in her maiden name a millinery business separately from her husband. A debtor's summons was issued against the husband and wife, claiming the payment of a sum due upon some bills of exchange drawn by the summoning creditor upon and accepted by the wife in her maiden name, and dishonoured. The husband applied to the court to dismiss the summons. He deposed that he never authorised his wife to pledge his credit, and that five years previously he had given notice to the summoning creditor that he had nothing to do with his wife's business:—Held, on this evidence, which was uncontradicted, that the husband was not liable for the debt; that the issuing of the summons was an abuse of the procedure; and that the summons must be dismissed with costs. Shepherd. Ex parte and In re, 48 L. J., Bk. 35; 10 Ch. D. 573; 39 L. T. 652; 27 W. R. 310. See col. 1095, and cols. 1027, 1115.

Contract for benefit of Husband—Ratification.]—A contract entered into and paid for by a wife, without the knowledge, but for the benefit, of her husband, is valid and binding when ratified by the husband. Millard v. Harvey, 34 Beav. 237.

Maintenance of Wife.]—See Poor Law.

VI. CURTESY.

1. When it Arises.

Tenant by the curtesie of England is where a man taketh a wife seised in fee simple or in fee taile generall or seised as heir in tail especiall, and hath issue by the same wife male or female born alive, albeit the issue after dieth or liveth, yet if the wife dies the husband shall hold the land during his life by the law of England. Co. Litt. s. 35.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, has not affected the right of a husband to an estate by the curtesy in the undisposed-of real estate of his wife. Hope v. Hope, 61 L. J., Ch. 441; [1892] 2 Ch. 336; 66 L. T. 522; 40 W. R. 522.

Tenancy by curtesy must come out of the inheritance. Summer v. Partridge, 2 Atk. 47.

It is a continuance of inheritance in husband. Ib.

It cannot exist where children take by virtue of remainder over, and not by descent from their mother. Ib.

To entitle husband, the inheritance must descend on children. Ib.

There shall be a tenancy by the curtesy of a trust as well as of a legal estate. Watts v. Ball, 1 P. W. 108.

Mother receiving profits, and continuing in possession as guardian in socage, is a sufficient seisin of daughter to be entitled as tenant by curtesy; but ejectment without confession of lease, entry, and ouster, would not be sufficient. Sterling v. Penlington, 9 Mod. 247.

A papist may be tenant by the curtesy. Witherington v. Banks, Sel. Ch. Ca. 30; 3 P. W. 49, n.

The evidence of a father claiming an estate for life as tenant by the curtesy will be considered sufficient proof that his child was born alive, when it was acquiesced in and acted upon by the father of the wife, who was residing in the house. Jones v. Ricketts, 31 L. J., Ch. 753; 7 L. T. 43; 10 W. R. 576.

On the death of a wife her husband, in the absence of any disposition by her, becomes entitled jure mariti to her equitable interest in chattels real settled to her separate use. Archer v. Lavender, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 220.

Lands on which there were leases for years existing, and a rent incurred, descended on a wife as tenant in tail general, who survived three months after the rent day incurred. Though she made no entry, nor received any rent during her life, yet this was such a possession in the wife as made the husband tenant by the curtesy. De Grey v. Richardson, 3 Atk. 469.

The husband would have been tenant by the curtesy if the wife had died before the rent day came. Ib.

Money by marriage articles to be laid out in land to uses of husband and wife for life, then to the children as they should appoint, in default of appointment equally, but if one to that one in tail, reversion to husband in fee. There is one daughter; the trustee pays it to her and her husband, she not being sui juris, nor separately examined; the payment not sufficient to make it considered as money, and sister of the half-blood may claim the reversion in fee from the father; but the husband of the other sister who was tenant in tail will be tenant by curtesy. Cunningham v. Moody, 1 Ves. 174.

A., tenant in tail, with power to lease, remainder to B., the wife of C., made leases exceeding his power. By will he devised some benefits to B., but B. elected to take her estate tail in opposition to the will. After her death, C. claimed as tenant by the curtesy, though he also derived and accepted benefits under testator's will. C. brought ejectment against the lessees:—Held, that the lessees could not raise an equity against C., holding as tenant by curtesy under B.'s election of her estate tail, but their bill was retained that they might have satisfaction from testator's assets. Darlington (Earl) or Cavan (Lady) v. Pulteney, 2 Ves. J. 544; 3 Ves. 384.

Devise to A. and her heirs, but if she died leaving issue, then to such issue and their heirs. A. died, leaving issue:—Held, that her husband was not entitled to be tenant by the curtesy. Barker v. Barker, 2 Sim. 249.

Devise to wife, remainder to issue male of her body, and to heirs male of such issue male, remainder over. She had issue a son, who died in her lifetime, and then she died; but being heir at-law to testator, the reversion in fee descended on her:—Held, that the husband shall not be tenant by curtesy. Boothby v. Vernon, 9 Mod. 148.

By a marriage settlement, the wife's freehold estates were vested in a trustee, in trust for her separate use during her life, remainder for such persons as she should appoint by deed or will; and in default of appointment, in trust for her right heirs. The wife died without having made any appointment, leaving her husband and a son surviving. After her death the trustee sold the estate under a power in the settlement, which directed the proceeds to be invested in the purchase of other lands, or on mortgage, or in the funds, and the securities to be held on the trusts aforesaid:—Held, that on the wife's death the husband became equitable tenant by the curtesy of the estates, and therefore was entitled to the interest of the purchase money during his life. Follett v. Tyrer, 14 Sim. 125; 13 L. J. (N.S.) Ch. 441; 8 Jur. 528.

Although the right of the husband as tenant by the curtesy of an equitable estate of the wife may perhaps be excluded by a possession of the estate strictly adverse to the husband and wife, and to all other parties interested under the settlement, during the whole period of coverture; yet the possession of the estate in conformity with the equitable interest of the cestui que trustent for however short a time during the coverture, and after the interest of the wife has become vested in possession, will support the title of the husband as tenant by the curtesy. Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 400.

There is no estate by the curtesy issuing out of an estate pur autre vie. Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50.

Where money is given to be laid out in land, for a place of retirement for testator's sister, "to be for ever entailed on her issue," the husband of one of the daughters of the sister entitled as tenant by the curtesy to one-third. Dodson v. Hay, 3 Bro. C. C. 404.

S. being entitled under a will to real and personal estate marries twice, having issue by both husbands, and concurs with her second husband in mortgaging property belonging to them both, levying three fines. The second husband becomes insolvent, and a deed of arrangement is executed to which the husband and wife, assignee and mortgagee, are parties, whereby it is agreed, that in consideration of a small sum, to be paid in part liquidation of the mortgage, the mortgagee shall give up certain property of the husband's to the assignee, for the creditors, the joint property of the husband and wife being charged with the remainder of the mortgage, reserving the power of sale, and subject thereto in trust for S. for her separate use; so that she might dispose of her property by deed or will attested by three witnesses as a feme sole, with a proviso that her intestacy, entire or partial, should not prejudice her husband's right as administrator. The deed was acknowledged, and S. died intestate, her husband administered to her estate, and her eldest son claimed to have the mortgage paid off, to receive back whatever the mortgagee had received since S.'s death, and subject to the mortgage, claimed the freeholds free from the right of the husband to curtesy:—Held, that the husband was entitled to curtesy, that there was no right to exonerate S.'s estate, and that the husband being her representative made no difference. Wheeley v. Garfield, 4 W. R. 700.

A. devised 300*l.* to be laid out in land, and settled to the use of her daughter and her children, and if she died without issue, to go over. She married B., and had a child by him, and she and the child being dead, and the moiety not laid out, on a bill brought by B.:—Held, the money to be considered as land, and the plaintiff to be tenant by the curtesy. Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536.

Money is to be invested in land, and settled on a woman in tail. She marries, has a child, and dies before the money is laid out. The husband shall have the interest of the money for his life. A man shall be tenant by curtesy of a trust as well as of a legal estate. Otway v. Hudson, 2 Vern. 585.

A husband may be tenant by the curtesy of the wife's equitable estate, but not of a mortgage in fee, unless there be a foreclosure, or the mortgage has subsisted so long as that the court will not be induced to grant a redemption; nor of a condition. Casborne v. English, 1 Atk. 606; 2 Eq. Abr. 728, pl. 6; 2 Jac. & Walk. 194.

In gavelkind lands a husband may be tenant by the curtesy without having issue; but it is only of a moiety of the wife's lands: and it ceases if the husband marries again. Ib.

Husband may be tenant by curtesy of the wife's equity of redemption. Ib.

A., by will, directed his trustees to convey his freehold lands to his daughter, P., and so as that she alone should receive the rents, and so as her husband should not intermeddle therewith; and from and after her decease, in trust for the heirs of the body of the said P. for ever:—Held, that this was an executory trust, and that the wife took an estate for life only; therefore the husband could not have curtesy; sed secus, if it had been an estate tail. Lord Hardwicke said in this case, that the devise being to the wife's separate use, would not bar the husband; for here is a sort of seisin in the wife. And though Coke says that to make a tenancy by the curtesy there ought to be an inchoate right in the husband in the wife's lifetime, he does not say he should be seised of the rents and profits. Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atk. 607.

A husband may be tenant by the curtesy of a trust for payment of debts, or of an equity of redemption devised to the wife for her separate use; for in a trust for payment of debts it is only a chattel interest in the trustees; and the first taker has a freehold over. Ib. See also Tradd v. Downs, 2 Atk. 304. And see Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50.

As to circumstances amounting to Waiver of Curtesy, see Stone v. Godfrey, 5 De G. M. & G. 76; 23 L. J., Ch. 769; 18 Jur. 524.

Though in settlement there was a direction to pay rents, &c., of wife's equitable estate of inheritance to her separate use for life, yet husband might be tenant by curtesy. Morgan v. Morgan, 5 Madd. 408.

The rents under a will being to be applied to the separate use of the wife, and the trustees who had the fee in all the real estate being to permit her to dispose of it, the whole legal estate of the inheritance was in them, and therefore neither in law nor equity was the husband tenant by the curtesy. Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 716.

Where a testator gave real estate to his children and their heirs, as tenants in common, to hold to such as should be daughters, to them or her, "independently of any husband or husbands she or they might have, and free from his or their control and liabilities, and to be assigned and disposed of as she or they might think fit, by any deed or will in writing," and one daughter married, had issue, and died without exercising her power of disposition:—Held, that the words were sufficient to exclude every possible interest of the husband, and that he took no estate by the curtesy. Moore v. Webster, 36 L. J., Ch. 429; L. R. 3 Eq. 267; 15 L. T. 460; 15 W. R. 167.

When freeholds were devised to trustees upon trust to hold the same unto and to the use of A., her heirs and assigns, for ever, for her separate use, and A. died, leaving a husband and child surviving, without having made any disposition of the property:—Held, that the husband became tenant by the curtesy. Appleton v. Rowley, 38 L. J., Ch. 689; L. R. 8 Eq. 139; 2 L. T. 600.

When a wife's real estate did not fall into possession till after her husband's bankruptcy and discharge:—Held, that the husband, though there had been issue of the marriage, had not at the time of his bankruptcy any such contingent interest in the estate, as tenant by the curtesy, as passed to his assignees. Gibbins v. Eyden, 38 L. J., Ch. 377; L. R. 7 Eq. 371; 20 L. T. 516; 17 W. R. 481.

A wife having an estate tail settled to her separate use without power of anticipation as to the income may by a disentailing deed enlarge her estate tail into a fee simple, and limit the fee to her separate use, with a power to dispose of it so as to defeat her husband's title by the curtesy, notwithstanding the bankruptcy of her husband. Ib.

A testator died in 1875, having by his will, dated in 1872, devised a freehold estate to his daughter (the plaintiff's wife), her heirs and assigns, for her separate use. The daughter died in 1874, in the lifetime of the testator, leaving an only child, who was her heiress at law. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled for his life as tenant by the curtesy:—Held, upon demurrer, that the plaintiff was entitled for his life to the property devised by the testator as tenant by the curtesy. Eager v. Furnivall, 50 L. J., Ch. 537; 17 Ch. D. 115; 44 L. T. 464; 29 W. R. 649.

Evidence of Father.]—The evidence of a father claiming an estate for life as tenant by the curtesy will be considered sufficient proof that his child was born alive, when it was acquiesced in and acted upon by the father of the wife, who was residing in the house. Jones v. Ricketts, 31 Beav. 130; 31 L. J., Ch. 753; 10 W. R. 576.

Limitation to Separate Use.] — When real estate is limited to the separate use of a wife, so as to leave to the husband no legal or equitable interest in the estate, he cannot be a tenant by curtesy. Moore v. Webster, 36 L. J., Ch. 429; L. R. 3 Eq. 267; 15 L. T. 460; 15 W. R. 167.

A testator devised a freehold estate to his daughter (the plaintiff's wife), her heirs and assigns, to her separate use. The daughter died after the date of the will in the lifetime of the testator, leaving the only child her heiress-at-law. The plaintiff claimed the estate as tenant by the curtesy:—Held, that he was so entitled. Eager v. Furnivall, 50 L. J., Ch. 537; 17 Ch. D. 115; 44 L. T. 464; 29 W. R. 649; 45 J. P. 503.

Equitable Estate of Inheritance to Separate Use.]—It is now settled that where a married woman has an equitable estate of inheritance to her separate use, and does not dispose of it by deed or will, her husband is entitled to curtesy. Cooper v. Macdonald, 47 L. J., Ch. 373; 7 Ch. D. 288; 38 L. T. 191; 26 W. R. 377.

The husband is tenant by the curtesy of the equitable inheritance of his wife, notwithstanding a direction to pay the rents and profits to her separate use during the coverture. Morgan v. Morgan, 5 Madd. 408.

On the death of a wife, her husband, in the absence of any disposition by her, becomes entitled jure mariti to her equitable interest in chattels real settled to her separate use. Archer v. Lavender, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 220.

Fee-simple with Executory Devise Over.]—Where there is a devise in fee-simple, with an executory devise over, the husband's right to curtesy attaches on the first estate, and is not defeated by its determination. Buckworth v. Thirkel, 10 Moore, 235, n.; 3 Bos. & P. 652, n.; 4 Dougl. 323.

Gift Over to Issue.]—Devise to A. and her heirs; but if she died leaving issue, then to such issue and their heirs. A. died, leaving issue:—Held, that her husband was not entitled to be tenant by the curtesy. Barker v. Barker, 2 Sim. 249.

Trust for Separate Use—Power of Appointment.]—Freehold property was conveyed by a deed of settlement to trustees for the separate use of the wife for life, with remainder to such persons as she should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to her right heirs for ever. The trustees had power to sell and hold the proceeds upon the like trusts. The wife died without exercising the power, leaving her husband and an only son surviving her. The trustees sold the property after the wife's death:—Held, that the husband was entitled to the purchase-money for life by the curtesy. Follett v. Tyrer, 14 Sim. 125; 13 L. J., Ch. 441.

Estate pur autre vie.]—There is no estate by the curtesy issuing out of an estate pur autre vie. Stead v. Platt, 18 Beav. 50.

Tenancy Initiate not Consummate.]—A., being lessee for a term of years of lands, the lessor devised them in fee to A.'s wife. A. had issue by his wife:—Held, that A. held the term and the fee in separate and distinct rights, and that the term was not merged, and that the fact that A. had issue by his wife made no difference, for the wife being still alive, the tenancy by the curtesy was only initiate, and not consummate. Jones v. Davies, 5 H. & N. 766; 29 L. J., Ex. 374; 8 W. R. 628. Affirmed on appeal, 7 H. & N. 507; 31 L. J., Ex. 116; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 592; 6 L. T. 444; 10 W. R. 464—Ex. Ch.

2. Incidents.

Where a husband is but tenant by the curtesy of his wife's estate, he cannot affect that estate without her joining. Incledon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 436.

Tenant by curtesy shall have the aid of equity against a trust term assigned in trust to attend the inheritance. Snell v. Clay, 2 Vern. 324.

Tenant must keep down Interest.]—A tenant by the curtesy must keep down interest. Casborne v. English, 1 Atk. 606.

No Forfeiture by Adultery.]—The husband does not forfeit his estate by the curtesy, nor the wife her jointure, by adultery. Walker, In re, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 326.

Insolvency of Husband.]—Under a settlement made upon the marriage of M., his daughter C. became upon his death, subject to the rights of her husband, tenant in tail in possession of a certain real estate and absolutely entitled to a share of personalty. M., by his will, gave to C. an annuity of larger value than her share under the settlement for her separate use, which she was required to accept in lieu of her share under the settlement. C.'s husband was an insolvent, and his assignee refused to give up her husband's interest in the settled property:—Held, that as to the share of personalty, which was outstanding in the trustees, the court, electing on C.'s behalf to take under the will, could order it to be made over in accordance with the testator's directions, but that, as to the realty, the court could not affect the estate which had passed to the assignee, and that C. must make compensation to the amount of rents and profits withheld. Griggs v. Gibson, 35 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 1 Eq. 685; 14 W. R. 513.

Voluntary Settlement.]—A married woman, having become entitled under a will to freehold and leasehold property for her sole and separate use, joined her husband in making a settlement, whereby the husband and wife conveyed the freeholds and the husband alone demised the leaseholds, subject to the annual payment of a shilling, if demanded, to trustees, upon trust for the wife for her separate use for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder for the children (if any), with ultimate remainder to the wife absolutely. Two years afterwards the husband and wife (there being no children of the marriage) made a mortgage of the property:—Held, that the conveyance by the husband, though binding on the estate by the curtesy which he would have had in his wife's freeholds if there had been issue, in the absence of any conveyance by her, was not sufficient to raise a consideration moving from the husband; and that the settlement was voluntary and void under the statute as against the mortgagee. Shurmur v. Sedgwick, 24 Ch. D. 597; 49 L. T. 156; 31 W. R. 884.

VII. Dower and Freebench.

1. Of What Lands.

Generally—Meaning of "Thirds."]—The word "thirds" is a general expression which may signify, according to the intent and scope of the instrument in which it is used, the interest of a widow in any property, personal or real, of her deceased husband in case of his intestacy. Sambourne v. Barry, 6 Ir. R., Eq. 28.

—— Death of Dowress.]—The claim to dower is extinct on the death of the widow. White v. Parnther, 1 Knapp, 179.

—— Alien.]—By the common law of England an alien woman married to an Englishman is not entitled to dower. Wall's Case, 6 Moore, P. C. 216; 12 Jur. 145.

—— Marriage in Scotland.]—A marriage celebrated in Scotland (but not between persons who go thither for the purpose of evading the laws of England) will entitle the woman to dower in England. Ilderton v. Ilderton, 2 H. Bl. 145.

Seisin — Freeholds.] — A., on his marriage with C., being equitable tenant in tail of certain lands, conveyed, by deed of 1804, these lands to B., as an indemnity against incumbrances on other lands purchased by B. from A.; the legal fee subsequently descended upon A., on the death of his father. Semble, C. became dowable out of the lands. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Con. & L. 592; 4 Dr. & War. 354.

A. purchases lands in his eldest son's name, and puts him into possession, and the son falling sick, takes a declaration of trust from him; and after the son's recovery, he is permitted to remain in possession; the son marries and dies, and the father gets a conveyance from his younger son, who took as heir to eldest. The eldest son's wife shall have dower in these lands. Bateman v. Bateman, 2 Vern. 436.

The conuzee of a fine is not so seised as to give his wife a title to dower. Sneyd v. Sneyd, 1 Atk. 442.

Husband borrowing an estate for the purpose of getting out of court 14,000*l.* therein, to be laid out in lands to him in tail, and by means thereof the fee simple vesting in him for a time, though under an agreement that it was only for that particular purpose:—Semble, wife is dowable of this estate. Henley v. Webb, 5 Madd. 407.

A., seised in fee of estates let at the time of his marriage upon leases for lives which do not expire during the coverture, his wife is not entitled to dower. D'Arcy v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 387.

A widow concurred in a partition of her husband's estate, and released a moiety allotted to the other tenant in common from her dower, the other moiety was conveyed to the trustees of her husband's will:—Held, that she was entitled to dower out of the entirety of the latter moiety. Reynard v. Spence, 4 Beav. 103; 5 Jur. 478.

—— Estate of Inheritance in Possession—Interest Equal to.]—Under the will of M., who died in 1844, certain real estate and funds settled to devolve with the realty stood limited, subject to a prior life interest, to the use of the plaintiff for life, with remainder to the use of his second and subsequently born sons successively in tail male, with remainder to the use of his first son in tail male. In 1872, J., the only son of the plaintiff, executed a disentailing assurance, by which the real estate was assured, subject to the prior limitations, to the use of him, his heirs and assigns, and the personalty upon trust for him, his executors, administrators, and assigns. In 1883 the first tenant for life died, and in 1884 the life estate of the plaintiff ceased by reason of his non-compliance with a name and arms clause contained in the will. Thereupon J. became entitled, under the provisions of the will, to an equitable estate in the property during the life of the plaintiff, defeasible in the event of his having a second son, which had not happened. J. died intestate, and without ever having had any issue. The plaintiff was his heir-at-law and the administrator of his personal estate. The defendant was his widow:—Held, that J. had not an estate of inheritance in possession, nor an interest equal to an estate of inheritance in possession, and his widow was, therefore, not entitled to dower. Michell, In re, Moore v. Moore, 61 L. J., Ch. 326; [1892] 2 Ch. 87; 66 L. T. 366; 40 W. R. 375.

—— Compensation Moneys.] — When land belonging to an infant, subject to his mother's right of dower, was taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money, as determined by two valuers, was paid into court:—Held, that the dowress was entitled to have the value of her right of dower, as determined by the valuers, paid to her out of the fund in court. Hall's Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 392; L. R. 9 Eq. 179.

—— Sale of Lands—Payment of Capitalised Value.]—In an administration suit, real estate subject to dower was sold and the proceeds paid into court:—Held, that the dowress was entitled to be paid the capitalized value of her dower out of the funds liable thereto. Gleeson v. Byrne, 25 L. R., Ir. 361.

—— Out of Improved Value of Land.]—Where customary lands, between the time of alienation by a husband and of his death, have been improved in value by buildings, the widow is entitled to dower according to their value at the time of his death, although one-third remains not built upon; and if the lands so aliened are, at the death of the husband, in the possession of several persons, whether by the immediate act of the husband or the act of his alienee, dower must be assigned as to one-third of the lands of each of such possessors. Doe d. Riddell v. Gwinnell, 1 G. & D. 180; 1 Q. B. 682; 10 L. J., Q. B. 212.

—— Land Contracted to be Sold—Gift to Wife of Income of Proceeds of Land.]—A testator having entered into a contract for the sale of real estate to a purchaser, died before completion. By his will he devised all his real estate to trustees for sale, and of the proceeds to invest 1,000*l.* and pay the income thereof to his widow. He then gave various other legacies out of the proceeds, but made no disposition of the ultimate residue. After the testator's death it was found that no title could be made to a material part of the property comprised in the contract, and thereupon the trustees of the will rescinded the contract:—Held, that the gift to the widow of the income of part of the proceeds of the real estate was a gift to her of an "interest in land" within s. 9 of the Dower Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, and that, therefore, she was not entitled to dower out of any part of her husband's estate. Thomas, In re, Thomas v. Howell, 56 L. J., Ch. 9; 34 Ch. D. 166; 55 L. T. 629.

—— Lands Conveyed under Power of Appointment.]—Where lands were conveyed by A. to such uses as B. should by deed appoint; and in default of and until appointment, to the use of B. in fee; and B. afterwards, in execution of the power, conveyed the lands by deed of appointment to C. in fee; and B., at the time of the appointment, was married:—Held, that his wife was not dowable out of these lands, in case she survived him. Ray v. Pung, 5 B. & A. 561.

—— Lands Devised.]—A., being seised in fee, devised to his son F., and his heirs for ever, all his houses and lands, charged with an annuity to the testator's wife for life, and if F. should have no children, child, or issue, the estate, on the decease of F., to become the property of the heir-at-law, subject to such legacies as F. might leave by will to any of the younger branches of the family. On the death of the testator, F. took possession of the lands devised, and died without issue, leaving his widow surviving, who afterwards intermarried with another :—Held, that she was entitled to dower out of the devised premises, but with a cesset executio during existing outstanding terms, to which they were subject. Moody v. King, 10 Moore, 233 ; 2 Bing. 447.

And see Buckworth v. Thirkel, 10 Moore, 235, n.; 3 Bos. & P. 652, n. ; 4 Dougl. 323 ; 28 R. R. 674.

—— Conveyed to Trustees under Husband's Will.]—A widow concurred in a partition of her husband's estate, and released a moiety allotted to the other tenant in common from her dower ; the other moiety was conveyed to the trustees of her husband's will :—Held, that she was entitled to dower out of the entirety of the latter moiety. Reynard v. Spence, 4 Beav. 103.

—— Subject to Trust.]—A husband was seised in fee, subject to a trust term to secure life annuities, and to pay him half the surplus rents : —Held, that his widow was entitled to have her dower set out at once. Sheaf v. Cave, 24 Beav. 259.

Freeholds — Equitable Interests.] — By the Dower Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105), s. 2, when a husband shall die beneficially entitled to any land for an interest which shall not entitle his widow to dower out of the same at law, and such interest, whether wholly equitable or partly legal and partly equitable, shall be an estate of inheritance in possession, or equal to an estate of inheritance in possession (other than an estate in joint tenancy), then his widow shall be entitled in equity to dower out of the same land.

A woman is not dowable of a use not executed. Chudleigh's Case, 1 Co. 22 ; Vernon's Case, 4 Co. 1.

The wife of cestui que trust not to be endowed. If a rent de novo be granted in tail, without any remainder over, and tenant in tail takes wife, and dies without issue, the wife shall not be endowed : because the thing out of which the dower is to arise, is not in being : secus, if the rent were granted in tail, remainder over. Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. W. 229.

A man, before his marriage, vests the legal estate in trustees in trust for him and his heirs ; equity will not assist the wife in recovering the dower. Bottomley v. Fairfax, Pre. Ch. 336.

A wife is not dowable out of the trust of a customary freehold. Godwin v. Winsmore, 2 Atk. 526.

That a wife is not dowable of a trust estate, is now an established doctrine. Ib.

In Banks v. Sutton (2 P. W. 712), Sir Joseph Jekyll took distinction in regard to a trust, where it descends to the husband from another, and not created by himself ; but Lord Talbot afterwards, in the case of the Att.-Gen. v. Scott (Forrest, 138) determined directly contrary to this distinction. Ib.

It is a dying seised of the husband, and not a seisin during coverture, which entitles the widow to freebench. Ib.

G. B., by his will, devised his fee simple and freehold estates to T. L. upon trust to pay several annuities, and amongst others, an annuity of 300*l.* to T. L. himself, his heirs and assigns. On a bill filed by the widow of T. L. against a purchaser of T. L.'s annuity of 300*l.*, seeking to be declared entitled to dower out of it :—Held, that the rent-charge was but an equitable interest, and that the legal and equitable estates not being commensurate, the widow could not by means of her husband's legal estate enforce her right of dower in the annuity of 300*l.* Lyster v. Mahoney, 1 Dr. & War. 236. And see Selby v Alston, 3 Ves. 341.

Semble, the court, however anxious to aid the wife's equity against the annuity, has no jurisdiction to take the whole estate into its hands and so administer it as to pay the wife a third of such annuity. Ib.

H. devised to trustees her freehold premises situate at B., in trust to receive the rents, and after providing for repairs, &c. and applying part of them towards the maintenance of F. S. to let the residue accumulate until F. S. should attain twenty-one, and then to pay such accumulations to him ; but if he should die under such age, without issue living at his decease, &c., "then such accumulations" should be applied for the benefit of the person to whom, and in the like manner and form as, the premises were limited ; and when F. S. should have attained twenty-one, then the trustees were to stand possessed of the premises in trust for him in fee ; but if he should not leave any issue living at his decease, &c., then the premises were to be held in trust for A. S. in fee ; and if she should not leave any issue, &c., then over. F. S. attained twenty-one, intermarried with E. S., and died intestate, and without ever having had issue :—Held, that upon the death of F. S. without issue, A. S. took an equitable estate in fee determinable in the event of her dying without issue, and that E. S., the widow of F. S. was entitled to dower, notwithstanding that the executory devise over took effect. Smith v. Spencer, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 778 ; 4 W. R. 729.

—— Equity of Redemption.]—A widow is not dowable of an equity of redemption. Dixon v. Saville, 1 Bro. C. C. 325.

The legal estate of a property being vested in A., for the benefit of himself and B. in equal moieties, he mortgaged it unknown to B. B. afterwards paid off the mortgage, and had the legal estate conveyed to him, subject to such equity of redemption as the lands were subject to :—Held, that there was not such a perfect union of the legal and equitable estate in B.'s moiety of the estate, as to give his widow a title to dower. Knight v. Frampton, 4 Beav. 10.

A party died in 1830, having vested in him a mortgage in fee, and the lapse of time and circumstances were such as to render it very improbable that any party could establish any right to the equity of redemption :—Held, nevertheless, that the widow was not entitled to dower. Flack v. Longmate, 8 Beav. 420.

Copyhold.]—A widow of tenant in tail of copyhold is entitled to her freebench, though there is no custom as to the freebench of widows of tenants in tail, but only as to the freebench of widows of tenants in fee. Doe d. Norfolk (Duke) v. Sanders, 3 Dougl. 303.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, does not apply to freebench. Smith v. Adams, 5 De G. M. & G. 712 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 258 ; 18 Jur. 968 ; 2 W. R. 698.

The purchaser of a copyhold held of a manor, the custom of which entitled widows of the copyholders to freebench in one moiety of the lands of which their husbands died seised, and took a surrender, but died before admittance :—Held, that his widow was not entitled to freebench at law or in equity. Ib.

Copyholds surrendered to a purchaser to uses similar to the common uses to bar dower, on which surrender the purchaser was admitted to hold as tenant in fee simple, and continued to hold on that admittance till his death; his devisee is bound by the terms of the admittance, and not entitled to claim as appointee under the surrender, so as to defeat the widow's right to freebench. Powdrell v. Jones, 2 Sm. & G. 407; 24 L. J., Ch. 123; 3 Eq. R. 63; 18 Jur. 1111; 3 W. R. 32.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, does not extend to copyholds. Ib.

A., by a settlement on his marriage with B., in order to make some provision for B., in case she should survive him, settled a copyhold estate upon himself for life, with remainder to B. for life:—Held, that B.'s right to freebench out of other copyholds, of which A. died, seised and intestate, was not barred by the settlement. Willis v. Willis, 34 L. J., Ch. 313; 13 W. R. 533.

A widow's freebench is not subject to her deceased husband's debts. Spyer v. Hyatt, 20 Beav. 621; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 3 W. R. 294.

A widow held not entitled to freebench out of a moiety of copyholds to which her husband was seised in remainder, subject to an existing life estate. Ib. And see Goodwin v. Winslow, 2 Atk. 256.

—— Customary Lands.]—By the custom of a manor, as settled by Car. 1, the widow of a copyholder is entitled to dower out of all the customary lands of which her husband was tenant during the coverture, although he did not die tenant, such lands having been aliened during the coverture by the husband alone, without the wife having been examined in court, or having joined in the surrender. Doe d. Riddell v. Gwinnell, 1 G. & D. 180; 1 Q. B. 682; 10 L. J., Q. B. 212. S. P., Riddell v. Jenner, 10 Bing. 29; 3 M. & Scott, 673; 2 L. J., C. P. 248.

—— Gavelkind Tenure.]—The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, extends to lands of gavelkind tenure in Kent. Farley v. Bonham, 2 Johns. & H. 177; 30 L. J., Ch. 239; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 3 L. T. 806; 9 W. R. 299.

—— Equitable Interest.]—The widow of the cestui que trust of a copyhold estate shall have her free bench, as well as if her husband had had the legal estate. Otway v. Hudson, 2 Vern. 585. S. P., Banks v. Sutton, 2 P. W. 712. Overruled, id. 719, n.

A widow shall not have freebench of trust estate in a copyhold; the entry of the widow as guardian to the son, does not prevent his having such a seisin as to convey title to his customary heir. Forder v. Wade, 4 Bro. C. C. 521.

Mines.]—Dower is due of mines wrought during the coverture, whether by the husband or by lessees for years; whether paying pecuniary rents or rents in kind; and whether the mines are under the husband's own land, or have been absolutely granted to him to take the whole stratum in the land of others. Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402; 11 R. R. 810.

Semble, that a widow dowable of the real estate of her husband, not having done any act to preclude her from doing so, may claim one-third of the income of the proceeds arising from the royalties of mines opened after her husband's decease, but that she is not entitled to one-third of the royalties as corpus. Dicken v. Hamer, 1 Dr. & Sm. 284; 29 L. J., Ch. 778.

Timber.]—If timber be cut down upon estates, of which a widow is dowable, before her dower is set out by metes and bounds, the dowress is entitled during her estate to the income arising from one-third of the fund produced by the sale of the severed timber. Bishop v. Bishop, 10 L. J., Ch. 302.

Trust Estate or Mortgage.]—A. devises a trust estate to B. and his heirs, and dies; B. dies; the wife of B. cannot be endowed of it. Att.-Gen. v. Scott, Forrest, 138.

Where the husband was only a trustee, it was held, that the wife was barred of her dower, though contrary to Nash v. Preston (1 Cro. 191). And such was said to be the constant practice of the court. Noel v. Jevon, 2 Freem. 43.

A party died in 1830, having vested in him a mortgage in fee, and the lapse of time and circumstances were such as to render it very improbable that any party could now establish any right to the equity of redemption:—Held, nevertheless, that the widow was not entitled to dower. Flack v. Longmate, 8 Beav. 420.

Shares.]—The shares in the navigation of the river Avon, under the statute 10 Ann, are real estates, and subject to dower. Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. J. 652.

Mines—Other Lands.]—Dower may be assigned of mines, either collectively with other lands, or separately of themselves: it must be assigned by metes and bounds, if practicable: otherwise, either by a proportion of the profits, or separate alternate enjoyment of the whole for short proportionate periods. Ib.

—— Open Mines.]—If land assigned for dower contains an open mine, a tenant in dower may work it for her own benefit. Stoughton v. Leigh, 1 Taunt. 402; 11 R. R. 810.

A. died intestate, seised of real estates under which were seams of coal, but no mines had been opened at the time of his death. Upon a bill being filed in equity by his infant daughter and heiress-at-law by her next friend for the administration of his estate, it was by the order of the court declared that the intestate's widow was entitled to dower out of his freehold estates, and it was referred to the master to inquire what was due to the widow for dower from the death of the intestate, and the widow was appointed receiver of the rents and profits of the estate, and was directed to pay the interest of a sum to be raised by mortgage, to retain a sum for the maintenance of the infant, and to pay the residue of the rents and profits into court to the account of the infant, and the master was ordered to prosecute an inquiry directed by a decree on the hearing, respecting the leasing the estates for coal mines. Under an order of the court the widow, as receiver, felled poles and small timber on the real estate, and accounted for the proceeds of the sale in passing her accounts. Afterwards the widow again married. The master found it would be fit that the whole estate should be let for coal mines. An order was made approving of a provisional agreement entered into for a lease, and directed that the agreement should be carried out by a lease to be settled in chambers. A lease was afterwards settled, in which the infant granted and demised, and the widow as guardian, with the consent of her second husband, granted, demised, leased, and confirmed all the mines under the estate, except within a certain area round a house, the rents and royalties (and a rent or sum of 4*l.* 4*s.* for every acre of the surface used for raising coal) being reserved to the infant. All the covenants were entered into by or with the infant:—Held, that the proceedings which had taken place did not amount to an assignment of dower. Dicken v. Hamer, 1 Dr. & Sm. 284; 2 L. T. 276.

When land belonging to an infant, subject to his mother's right of dower, was taken by a railway company, and the purchase money, as determined by two valuers, was paid into court:—Held, that the dowress was entitled to have the value of her right of dower, as determined by the valuers, paid to her out of the fund in court. Hall's Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 392; L. R. 9 Eq. 179.

Assignment—Of Excessive Dower.]—If the heir, being of full age, assigns excessive dower, he has no remedy at law; if the sheriff assigns excessive dower, the heir may have a scire facias to obtain an assignment de novo; or if the heir under age assigns excessive dower, he may have relief by writ of admeasurement of dower. Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. 652.

—— Fraud of Sheriff.]—Equity will relieve against a fraudulent and partial assignment of dower by the sheriff. Hoby v. Hoby, 1 Vern. 218; 2 Ch. Ca. 160. And see Sneyd v. Sneyd, 1 Atk. 442.

—— Ascertaining Lands.]—Where a widow claims dower merely upon a legal title, but cannot ascertain the lands, equity will assist her to find them out. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 130. See col. 1258.

Non-Assignment.]—The heir, on the death of his ancestor in possession, may enter and remove everybody, except the widow, who has a right to stay until her dower is assigned to her. Lloyd v. Trimleston (Lord), 2 Moll. 81.

—— Removability of Widow.]—If dower has not been assigned, a widow has not such an interest in her husband's lands, of which she was dowable, as to render her immovable from the parish in which such land lies. Rex v. Northweald Bassett, 4 D. & R. 276; 2 B. & C. 724.

2. How Barred or Released.

a. Alienation.

See Dower Act, 1833, s. 4.

Freeholds.]—If a man, previously to marriage, contract to sell an estate, and marries before the conveyance is executed, his wife is not dowable out of the estate. Loyd v. Loyd, 2 Con. & L. 592; 4 Dr. & War. 354.

Purchase for value, without notice, is not a defence to a suit instituted to enforce a mere legal right, such as dower. Corry v. Cremorne, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 136.

Plea of purchase for valuable consideration, not good to a bill for dower. Williams v. Lambe, 3 Bro. C. C. 264.

Certain lands were conveyed to A. B., his heirs, &c., to such uses as C. D. should by deed appoint, and in default of, and until appointment, to the use of C. D. in fee. Afterwards C. D., in execution of power, appoints lands in favour of E. F. in fee; C. D. was married at time of making the appointment. Quære, is wife dowable. Ray v. Pung, 5 Madd. 310:—Held, she is not. S. C., 5 B. & Ald. 561.

Copyholds.]—If a husband became entitled to copyhold estates by copy of court roll, and granted them out again by copy of court roll, his wife is not entitled to dower out of those estates. Sneyd v. Sneyd, 1 Atk. 442.

A copyholder for life, where by the custom there is a widow's estate, agrees to sell for his own life, and the life of such widow as he should leave at his death; his widow not bound by this agreement. Musgrave v. Dashwood, 2 Vern. 45.

Copyholder having power to bar the widow's freebench by surrender, any act by him for valuable consideration will bar her in equity. Brown v. Raindle, 3 Ves. 256.

Copyhold land purchased by the husband was surrendered to the use of him and his assignees for life, and after his decease to the use of such person for such estate and upon such trust as he by any surrender or by will should surrender or devise; and in default of such surrender or devise, and so far as the same, if incomplete, shall not extend to the use of the husband, his heirs, and assigns for ever at the will of the lord, &c. The husband was admitted in fee, and by will devised the land to a trustee on trust for sale. By the custom of the manor, the title of the wife could only be destroyed by her voluntary surrender:—Held, that she was entitled to her customary dower. Powdrell v. Jones, 2 Sm. & G. 407; 24 L. J., Ch. 123; 18 Jur. 1111; 3 Eq. R. 63; 3 W. R. 32.

The Statute of Dower, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, does not extend to copyholds. Ib.

Copyholder contracts, for valuable consideration, to sell to his son, and dies before actual surrender; the son held entitled to performance, and to compel the widow to surrender free bench. Hinton v. Hinton, 2 Ves. 631; Ambl. 277.

b. Testamentary Gifts.

See Dower Act, 1833, s. 7.

General Principle.]—As the right of dower is itself a clear legal right, an intent to exclude that right must be demonstrated by express words, or by clear and manifest implication. Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 452.

In order to exclude such right, the instrument must contain some provision inconsistent with the assertion of the right to demand dower. Ib.

Election.]—In determining the obligation of the widow to elect, the court will regard the intention of the testator apparent on the whole of the will. Warburton v. Warburton, 2 Sm. & G. 163; 23 L. J., Ch. 467; 2 Eq. R. 414; 18 Jur. 415; 2 W. R. 300.

The amount of the provision made by the will is a material circumstance in indicating the testator's intention. Ib.

A married woman can elect, so as to affect her interest in real property without deed acknowledged under 3 & 4 Will 4, c. 74, and where she has so elected, the court can order a conveyance accordingly; the ground of such order being that no married woman shall avail herself of fraud. Barrow v. Barrow, 4 Kay & J. 409; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1049; 6 W. R. 714.

Whether a wife electing by answer to take her dower, and not under her husband's will, is bound by such election. Johnson v. Richardson, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 78.

C., by will, directed that the annual interest only of all the residue of his property should be divided into as many equal parts as there might be children living of W. and his wife, as each came of age; and in case any one of them should die without any children, then his or her share of the annual interest should devolve to the surviving children, share and share alike, and so on successively until the whole amount of the interest of the residue came into the hands of the grandchildren and great grandchildren of W. and his wife. C. bequeathed to his wife, "upon condition of her making no claim upon the residue," an annuity for life; but if she made any claim upon the residue of his property, he bequeathed unto her no part of his property (the annuity was not to be paid); and he directed that all property reverting to his estate, whether leasehold or copyhold property, should, as soon as the amount was obtained, be immediately invested, and the interest to be received for the children of W.:—Held, that the widow was entitled to dower and also to the annuity; that the children of W. living at the death of the testator were entitled, as tenants in common for life, to the income of the real and personal estate, with remainder to all the children of such children, as tenants in common, absolutely; and that in case any child of W. should die without having had a child, his or her share would belong to the survivors for life, and to the children of the survivors absolutely. Wetherell v. Wetherell, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 814; 7 L. T. 89; 10 W. R. 818.

A testator devised all and singular his freehold and copyhold estates upon certain trusts for the benefit of his family, subject to an annuity to his wife during widowhood, and bequeathed to her the use of his household goods and furniture, also during widowhood:—Held, that she was entitled both to the annuity and to her dower. Dowson v. Bell, 1 Keen, 761; 1 Jur. 471. S. P., Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Keen, 765; 6 L. J., Ch. 276.

An annuity is given to a wife in bar of dower, which annuity is to be applied for the maintenance of herself and her children. She may renounce the annuity, take her dower, and yet take any other benefit given her by the will. Brown v. Parry, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 84; 2 Dick. 685.

Examples.]—A testator, by his will (made in 1861), devised all his real estate and bequeathed his personal estate to trustees upon trusts for sale and conversion; and he directed his trustees, out of the proceeds of such sales, to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to invest the surplus, and out of the income of the investments to pay an annuity to his widow, and subject to such annuity to stand possessed of the investments upon trusts for the benefit of his children. The testator (who had married after the Dower Act came into operation) died entitled to freeholds and copyholds which he had purchased. The conveyances of the freeholds were not made to uses to bar dower, nor did they contain any declaration against dower. The copyholds had not been surrendered to the uses of his will:—Held, that the widow was barred of any right to dower both by s. 4 and by s. 9 of the Dower Act. Lacey v. Hill, 44 L. J., Ch. 215; L. R. 19 Eq. 346; 32 L. T. 48; 23 W. R. 285.

Held, also, that she was deprived of any right to freebench by virtue of the Wills Act, s. 3. Ib.

A testator made various bequests in favour of his wife, including some property to which she was entitled in her own right, and he also gave her an annuity, charged on specified real estate in lieu of dower and free-bench. The wife survived her husband, and during her life received the benefits given her by the will, but never elected whether to take under or against the will, and died intestate, leaving four next of kin, three of whom elected to take under the will, while the fourth, who was her administrator, elected to take against it:—Held, that each of the next of kin had a separate right of election, that neither the election of the majority nor that of the heir and administrator bound the others, and that in taking the accounts on such election the annuity specifically charged in lieu of dower must be brought into account, credit being given for the due proportion of dower. Fytche v. Fytche, L. R. 7 Eq. 494; 19 L. T. 343.

A widow is not entitled to priority over other legatees in respect of an annuity bequeathed to her by her husband, "in lieu, bar, and satisfaction of dower," where the only real estate of the testator was conveyed to him with a declaration against dower. Roper v. Roper, 3 Ch. D. 714; 35 L. T. 155; 24 W. R. 1013.

A. seised in fee, devises his houses and demesnes to his wife for her life, at a rent below the actual value, she keeping the same in repair, and not aliening except to the persons in remainder; A. devises the residue of his estate, together with the remainder, after the death of his wife, to B. in fee; the wife electing to take the house and the demesne under the will, cannot have dower thereout, but is entitled to dower out of the residue of the estate. Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 444.

Testator gave his wife real and personal estate, in bar, &c., of all dower or thirds which she can have or claim in or out of any part of his real and personal estate, or either of them; he gave the residue to four persons, and afterwards, by codicil, directed them to dispose thereof in charities; part of the residue being invested in real securities, goes according to the statute as undisposed of, and the widow is not barred. Pickering v. Stamford (Lord), 3 Ves. 332. Affirmed, Id. 492.

A husband having power to jointure the wife, executes that power by will, and dies seised of estates over which the power did not extend; though the testator did not express an intention that the wife should take the jointure in bar of dower, yet she shall not take both jointure and dower, but shall make election. Fust v. Fust, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 90.

A widow will not be barred of her dower by a provision made by will, unless there be a clear indication of the testator's intention, or unless some other part of the disposition of his property would be defeated by the widow's taking both. The testator having given all his real and personal estate on trust, in the first place, to pay such provision to the wife is not itself a sufficient indication of such intention. Thompson v. Nelson, 1 Cox, 447.

Devise or bequest, unless so expressed, does not bar wife's dower. Brown v. Parry, Dick. 685.

Rent charge devised to a wife not a bar of dower, unless so expressed, or the circumstances such as to show it must be so intended. Pearson v. Pearson, 1 Bro. C. C. 292.

A. devises lands in trust to pay one-third of the rents to his wife in satisfaction of dower, until his son, then two years old, attains twenty-one. The wife receives a third of the rents from the trustees, and dies; and afterwards the son dies during his infancy. The administrator of the wife shall have her third of the rents till such time as the son might have attained twenty-one. Coates v. Needham, 2 Vern. 65.

Devise of residue of personal estate to his wife bars not her claim to dower. Ayres v. Willis, 1 Ves. 230.

A., by will, gave his wife a specific personal legacy, and devised to her a remainder for life in his real estate, in default of issue. This devise is not inconsistent with the widow's claim of dower, so as to overturn the will (as in Noys v. Mordaunt, 2 Vern. 581), for the widow takes but a temporary excrescent interest, and shall not be excluded. So decreed, on the authority of Lawrence v. Lawrence (1 Bro. P. C. 591). Incledon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 436.

Devise of lands to a man's wife who was entitled to dower, without saying in recompense or satisfaction of her dower, held to be a voluntary gift, and no bar of dower. Hitchin v. Hitchin, Pre. Ch. 133.

Where the devise of land is in trust for sale, the mode of applying the proceeds does not affect the question, whether the widow is entitled to her dower. Ellis v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 314; 13 L. J., Ch. 210; 8 Jur. 771.

Where a testator by his will provides amply for his widow, giving her a portion of his estate for her life, and also an annuity charged upon his general estate with powers of distress and entry in case of non-payment, and there was also contained in the will a leasing power for the trustees thereof, which overrode the entire freehold estate, these circumstances were held sufficient to indicate an intention to exclude the testator's widow from her dower. Hall v. Hill, 1 Dr. & War. 94; 1 Con. & L. 120; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 27.

A power to lease and manage his real estate, given by a testator to his trustees, does not, by itself, raise an implication of the testator's intention to exclude his wife from dower. Warburton v. Warburton, 2 Sm. & G. 163; 23 L. J., Ch. 467; 18 Jur. 415; 2 Eq. R. 414; 2 W. R. 800.

Powers of or trusts for sale created by will over real estate are not (as leasing powers have been held) inconsistent with a widow's right to dower. Bending v. Bending, 3 Kay & J. 57; 26 L. J., Ch. 469; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 535; 5 W. R. 435.

There is no such rule as that, where a testator's widow is entitled under his will to what would exceed her dower, she is thereby put to her election. Ib.

Nor is her claim affected by any direction as to the distribution of the proceeds. Ib.

In two manors in Durham there is no custom or surrendering to the uses of the will but the tenant divests himself of the legal estate, and by surrender vests it in a trustee, who subscribes a memorandum or defeasance, that the surrender is to the uses of the surrenderor's will. In this case, the father and maternal grandfather of the testator R. N. both being copyholders, had respectively caused their copyhold tenements to be surrendered to the other, who had subscribed the usual defeasance. The legal estate in both descended to the testator. But with regard to the tenements in the manor of H., they were devised by the father of the testator to trustees, to the intent that his widow might receive an annuity thereout, and subject thereto to the testator R. N. in fee. The widow being alive at the time the testator, R. N., made his will, and died, it was held, that the copyholds in the manor of H. passed by his will. With respect to the tenements which were in the other manor, the testator's maternal grandfather, who had the beneficial interest in them, devised them unto trustees upon trust for the testator R. N.:—Held, that there being nothing to separate the legal estate and equitable interest, the equitable interest had merged in the legal estate in the testator, and could not be devised by him according to the custom of the manor:—Held, that his widow was entitled to free-bench. Nicholson v. Nicholson, Taml. 319.

Where a testator, by will, made a provision for his wife, who was married to him before 1834, but did not declare that the provision was to be in bar of dower:—Held, that the wife was not dowable out of freeholds which the testator had devised to trustees, with a discretionary power of sale, and power to let from year to year in the meantime. Taylor v. Linley, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 701.

A testator made a provision for his widow, expressly in lieu and satisfaction of any estate or interest to which she might be entitled as his widow, out of his real and personal estate. The widow enjoyed this provision, but in ignorance of her right to dower:—Held, that the lapse of sixteen years after the testator's death had not affected her rights. Sopwith v. Maughan, 30 Beav. 235.

A husband, after directing his debts to be paid by his executors, devised his real and personal estate, subject as aforesaid, to trustees, upon certain trusts, being partly for the benefit of his widow:—Held, that the widow was deprived of her right to dower by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 9. Rowland v. Cuthbertson, L. R. 8 Eq. 466; 20 L. T. 938; 17 W. R. 907.

Legacy in Satisfaction of — Abatement — Priority.]—A testator married after the 1st of January, 1834, devised all his real estate to his son, and bequeathed to his widow an annuity in satisfaction of her dower. At the date of his death he was seised of lands out of which, but for his will, his widow would have been dowable. The personal estate being insufficient to pay all the legacies in full, the widow claimed, under s. 12 of the Dower Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105), to be paid her annuity in priority over the other legacies:—Held, that alienation by a husband in his lifetime, and alienation by his will, were placed by s. 4 of the act on identically the same footing, and that the right of the widow to priority was not preserved by s. 12 of the act. Dictum in Roper v. Roper (3 Ch. D. 714), dissented from. Greenwood, In re, Greenwood v. Greenwood, 61 L. J., Ch. 558; [1892] 2 Ch. 295; 67 L. T. 76; 40 W. R. 681.

Evidence of Election.]—In a writ of dower, in support of a plea of election by the widow to take an annuity secured to her by deed in lieu of dower, the tenant proved a receipt by the demandant, after issue joined and before trial, of certain dividends mentioned in the deed:—Held, that this, standing alone, was not sufficient evidence to warrant the court in holding (after verdict for the demandant) that the demandant had elected to take the annuity in satisfaction of her dower. Slatter v. Slatter, 1 Scott, 82; 1 Bing (N.C.) 259; 4 L. J., C. P. 25.

Held, also, that an order made in a suit in equity to which the tenant was no party, and which contained a proviso that the receipt of the money by the demandant should be without prejudice to her right to dower, was admissible to show quo animo she received it. Ib.

Priority of Electing Wife over other Legatees.]—A widow dowable out of her husband's lands, having elected to take an annuity given by the will in lieu of dower, the testator's estate being insufficient to pay the legacies in full, is entitled to priority over the other legatees. Stahlschmidt v. Lett, 1 Sm. & G. 421.

But not if the husband's only real estate was conveyed to him with a declaration against dower. Roper v. Roper, 3 Ch. D. 214; 35 L. T. 155; 24 W. R. 1013.

c. Dower Uses.

Conveyance to such uses as A. shall appoint, and for default of appointment to him in fee, a mode used to prevent dower. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 263.

Husband having power of appointment paramount to right of dower, in default thereof to himself for life, remainder to his right heirs, if the power could have effect, yet a purchaser taking a conveyance adapted to pass the interest in the estate as a limitation in fee, was held to take in that way, not by way of appointment, and therefore subject to dower. S. C., 22; 7 Ves. 567. And see S. C., 10 Ves. 246.

A widow, married since the operation of the Dower Act, is entitled to dower out of lands conveyed to her husband before the passing of that act (he being then married), with the ordinary uses to bar dower. Fry v. Noble, 24 L. J., Ch. 591; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 767; 3 W. R. 599.

d. Declaration.

See the Dower Act, 1833, ss. 6, 7.

When a Bar.]—A widow is not entitled to priority over other legatees in respect of an annuity bequeathed to her by her husband, "in lieu, bar, and satisfaction of dower," where the only real estate of the testator was conveyed to him with a declaration against dower. Roper v. Roper, 3 Ch. D. 714; 35 L. T. 155; 24 W. R. 1013.

Dower of a woman, married after the Dower Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, out of an estate made subject to dower by that statute:—Held, not to be excluded by a declaration against dower contained in a conveyance prior to the act. Fry v. Noble, 20 Beav. 598; 24 L. J., Ch. 591; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 767; 3 W. R. 599. Affirmed, 7 De G. M. & G. 687; 25 L. J., Ch. 144; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 128; 4 W. R. 145.

In 1827 freeholds were conveyed to A. B., a married man, to the usual uses to bar dower, "to the intent that his then present or any future wife might not be entitled to dower." In 1834 the Dower Act passed, giving dower out of estates thus limited (s. 2), but allowing the right to be defeated by a declaration against dower in the conveyance (s. 6), and providing that the act should not extend to any widow married before 1834, or give to any deed previously executed the effect of defeating any right of dower. A. B. contracted a second marriage in 1838, and died seised:—Held, that the declaration in the conveyance did not defeat the second wife's right to dower out of the estate. Ib.

In order to prevent a widow from having dower out of lands purchased by her husband, a declaration contained in the deed of conveyance that she shall not be dowable is sufficient, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 6, and the deed need not be executed by the husband. Fairley v. Tuck, 27 L. J., Ch. 28; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1089; 6 W. R. 9.

Dower of a woman whose marriage was since 1 January, 1834:—Held, following Fry v. Noble (supra), not excluded by the ordinary limitations to uses to bar dower in a conveyance before the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 105. Clarke v. Franklin, 4 Kay & J. 266; 6 W. R. 836.

A general devise of real estate is a bar to the widow's dower under the Dower Act, s. 4, and a devise in trust for sale and conversion, with a direction to pay an annuity out of the proceeds to the widow during her life is a like bar under s. 9. Lacey v. Hill, 44 L. J., Ch. 215; L. R. 19 Eq. 346; 32 L. T. 48; 23 W. R. 285.

A husband, after directing his debts to be paid by his executors, devised his real and personal estate, subject as aforesaid, to trustees upon certain trusts, being partly for the benefit of his widow:—Held, that the widow was deprived of her right to dower by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 9. Rowland v. Cuthbertson, L. R. 8 Eq. 466; 20 L. T. 938; 17 W. R. 907.

Dower of a woman, married after 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, out of an estate made subject to dower by that statute, is not excluded by a declaration against dower contained in a conveyance prior to the act. Fry v. Noble, 20 Beav. 598; 24 L. J., Ch. 591; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 767; 3 W. R. 599. Affirmed on appeal, 7 De G. M. & G. 687; 25 L. J., Ch. 144; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 128; 4 W. R. 145. S. P., Clarke v. Franklin, 4 Kay & J. 266; 6 W. R. 836.

Freebench.]—Freebench can be barred by a mere devise without a surrender to the use of the will. Lacey v. Hill, supra.

A testator, by his will (made in 1861), devised all his real estate and bequeathed his personal estate to trustees upon trusts for sale and conversion; and he directed his trustees, out of the proceeds of such sales, to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to invest the surplus, and out of the income of the investments to pay an annuity to his widow, and subject to such annuity to stand possessed of the investments upon trusts for the benefit of his children. The testator (who had married after the Dower Act came into operation) died entitled to freeholds and copyholds which he had purchased. The conveyances of the freeholds were not made to uses to bar dower, nor did they contain any declaration against dower. The copyholds had not been surrendered to the uses of his will:—Held, that the widow was barred of any right to dower both by s. 4 and by s. 9 of the Dower Act. Ib.

Held also, that she was deprived of any right to freebench by virtue of the Wills Act, s. 3. Ib.

e. Deed of Wife.

A surrender by the wife of a copyholder with his consent, and after having been separately examined to the use of a purchaser from the assignees of the husband who had become bankrupt, held effectual to bar her right of freebench, if any such existed, by special custom, although at the time of such surrender the purchase not having been completed, the purchaser had not any legal estate in the premises. Wood v. Lambirth, 1 Ph. 8 ; 5 Jur. 741.

The wife joins in a mortgage, and levies a fine to bar her dower, and in consideration thereof the husband agrees the wife shall have the equity of redemption in lieu of her dower, and afterwards he makes a second mortgage : this agreement was fraudulent as against the second mortgagee, so far as to entitle the wife to the whole equity of redemption, but decreed she should have her dower, notwithstanding the fine. Dolin v. Coltman, 1 Vern. 294.

Tenant in tail, and his wife, join in a mortgage of the husband's estate, by lease and release, and fine : the proviso reserves the redemption to the husband and wife and their heirs, &c., but the latter part of the deed declares the uses of the fine after payment of the mortgage to the husband and his heirs : the husband dies :—Held, the husband was solely entitled to the estate, and the wife had only a power of redemption to secure her dower. Jackson v. Parker, Ambl. 687.

A widow of an intestate, whose estate was being administered in chancery, being entitled to dower out of his estate, joined with her infant daughter, who was the intestate's heiress-at-law, in granting a lease of unopened coal mines, all the covenants and reservations being entered into between the infant and the lessee. The widow, who was appointed guardian of her daughter, received the rents and royalties from the coal mines, and paid them into court on her daughter's account. Some time afterwards she claimed dower out of the coal rents and royalties :—Held, that the widow stood in the same position as a tenant for life of the property as to one-third ; and although she had no power to open mines herself, she had power to prevent the remainderman from opening them, but that the effect of the lease and the transactions between the parties was such as to prevent the widow from supporting her claim to dower. Dicken v. Hamer, 29 L. J., Ch. 778 ; 2 L. T. 276.

By a deed to which a husband and wife were parties, the equity of redemption of the husband was conveyed in lands. The deed recited that the husband and wife had both agreed to join in it, and that the wife intended to acknowledge it, in compliance with the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, and it was executed by husband and wife and acknowledged by the wife, but her name was not inserted as a co-grantor, nor in the covenants for title :—Held, that, notwithstanding the omission, the wife had extinguished her right to dower. Dent v. Clayton, 33 L. J., Ch. 503 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 671 ; 10 L. T. 865 ; 12 W. R. 903.

Refusal of Wife to Join in Releasing.]—A lessee, who was married in 1832, created a term by way of mortgage of the lands comprised in his lease, and subsequently acquired the fee. He afterwards became bankrupt. Subsequently, by a deed made between his assignees, the mortgagor and the mortgagee, in consideration of the release by the latter of his mortgage debt, the fee simple was conveyed to the mortgagee freed and discharged from all equity of redemption. The wife of the mortgagor was joined as a party to the deed for the purpose of releasing her right of dower, but she refused to execute it, and after her husband's death she filed a bill to enforce her right to dower :—Held, that, as the widow had not executed the deed, the term was not satisfied, and that it protected the mortgagee against her claim to dower. Anderson v. Pignet, 42 L. J., Ch. 310 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 180 ; 27 L. T. 740 ; 21 W. R. 150.

A wife, married before the Dower Act, joined, for the purpose of releasing her dower, with her husband in mortgaging his freehold estate to secure his debt. By the mortgage deed the equity of redemption was reserved to the husband :—Held, that the wife's right to dower was extinguished in equity as well as at law, and that she had no right to redeem the estate. Dawson v. Bank of Whitehaven, 46 L. J., Ch. 884 ; 6 Ch. D. 218 ; 37 L. T. 64 ; 26 W. R. 34.

Held, also, that, as she had pledged no estate recognised by a court of equity, and had undertaken no personal liability on behalf of her husband, she had no right in the character of a surety for his debt to have the value of her dower made good after his death out of the surplus proceeds of sale of the property which had been during his life sold by the mortgagee under a power of sale contained in the mortgage deed. Ib.

Release by Widow to Mortgagee—Re-conveyance.]—The owner in fee of certain lands died intestate, leaving a widow entitled to dower thereout. The heir-at-law executed a mortgage of the lands to secure a sum of money advanced to him by a building society. The widow was a party to the mortgage deed, by which, "for the purpose of extinguishing her right to dower," she granted and released the lands to the mortgagees, the trustees of the building society. It was provided by the deed that, upon repayment of the moneys secured thereby, a receipt should be endorsed thereon in the form given by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, to the intent that the deed should be vacated and the property comprised therein be revested in the person or persons for the time being interested in the equity of redemption therein. The moneys secured by the deed having been repaid, and the statutory receipt indorsed thereon :—Held, that the widow was, notwithstanding the release of her dower contained in the mortgage deed, entitled to have dower assigned to her out of the premises comprised in the deed. Dawson v. Bank of Whitehaven (6 Ch. D. 218) distinguished. Meek v. Chamberlain, 51 L. J., Q. B. 99 ; 8 Q. B. D. 31 ; 46 L. T. 344 ; 30 W. R. 228.

Joint Agreement to execute Settlement.]—Marriage articles were executed by a tenant in tail in remainder and his intended wife, whereby he agreed to execute, when he should become entitled in possession, a legal post-nuptial settlement to secure her a jointure of a specified amount ; he subsequently became entitled in possession, but died without executing any such settlement :—Held, that the articles were in equity a bar to the wife's right of dower. Pennefather v. Pennefather, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 171.

f. Incontinence.

Birth of Bastard Child.]—By the common law of the Isle of Man, confirmed by an ordinance of the court of tynwald and governor in 1687, a widow is entitled to dower only "dum sola et casta vixerit," and was held to have forfeited it by the birth and affiliation of a bastard child. Cain v. Cain, 2 Moore, P. C. 222.

A wife forfeits her dower under the 13 Edw. 1, c. 34, by her adultery, though it may have been brought about by the misconduct of her husband. Bostock v. Smith, 34 Beav. 57. And see Walker, In re, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 326.

Commission of Adultery.]—If a woman leaves her husband of her own free will, and afterwards lives in adultery, she forfeits her claim to dower. Hetherington v. Graham, 3 M. & P. 399 ; 6 Bing. 139 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 253 ; 31 R. R. 361.

A woman forfeits her dower, under 13 Edw. 1, c. 34, by adultery, without reconciliation, even though she originally departed from her husband's house in consequence of his cruelty. Woodward v. Dowse, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 722 ; 31 L. J., C. P. 70 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 413 ; 9 W. R. 870.

—— Divorce on Ground of Husband's Misconduct.]—A wife having obtained a decree for dissolution of marriage in the court for divorce and matrimonial causes on the ground of her husband's misconduct :—Held, by so doing to have lost her right to dower. Frampton v. Stephens, 51 L. J., Ch. 562 ; 21 Ch. D. 164 ; 46 L. T. 617 ; 30 W. R. 726. And see col. 798.

g. Settlement.

Attitude of Equity.] — Equity will execute a contract in bar of dower entered into before marriage, by an adult woman not under disability, where such contract is reasonable, although by its terms the lady, being left a widow, has no provision out of her husband's property, and the provision made for her out of her own is insufficient to support her in her rank of life. The court, however, will see that the widow gets what she contracted for in lieu of dower. Herons, In re, Fl. & K. 330.

Equity makes no distinction between the right of dower and other rights. The dictum in Power v. Shiel (1 Moll. 296), considered. Ib.

After-acquired Lands.]—An ante-nuptial settlement recited that the intended wife was entitled to certain choses in action, and that the intended husband being then in trade, it was considered more beneficial for the parties that he should not for the present make any settlement of any part of his property. The choses in action were then conveyed to a trustee in trust to pay the interest, &c., arising from them to the husband for life, and after his death to assign them to the wife if she should survive, but if not to assign them to him ; but in case he should secure to her, at any time thereafter, an annuity of 250*l.* during her life, then in trust to assign the choses in action to him, "such annuity to be taken by the wife in lieu and bar of dower, and thirds or claim to any share of his personal estate under the Statute of Distributions." The husband, subsequently to the marriage, acquired, by purchase, the lands of T. in fee farm, and died without having secured to the wife the annuity of 250*l.* :—Held, that she was entitled to dower out of the lands of T. Robinson v. Wilson, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 168.

Lands, the property of A., held under leases for lives renewable for ever, and long terms for years, were, upon the marriage of A. with B., conveyed to trustees, upon trust to pay the yearly rents, issues, and profits to A. for his life, so long as he should continue solvent and able to support and maintain B., and no longer ; and from and after his death, or his becoming insolvent, failing in his trade, or being unable to support the said B., then to pay the said rents and profits to B., for her life, for her own sole and separate use, &c. :—Held, that this settlement did not bar B.'s right to dower out of fee simple estates acquired by A. subsequently to his marriage. Fyan v. Henry, 2 Dr. & Wal. 556.

—— Copyhold Subsequently Purchased.] — Covenant by deed before marriage to settle on his wife, if she survive, part of the real estate for her jointure, and in full recompense of all dower or thirds which she can any way claim, &c., out of any lands, &c., of which he is or shall be seised, of freehold or inheritance, she is thereby barred from claiming as her freebench copyhold purchased afterwards. Walker v. Walker, 1 Ves. 54.

Provision out of Moiety.] — By marriage articles the intended husband covenanted that in case he should die in the lifetime of his intended wife without issue by her, she should be entitled to one-half of what property real or personal he should die seised or possessed of ; and that in preference to any creditor of his, or to any deed or will which he might make or execute in his lifetime contrary to the true intent and meaning of the articles. There was no issue of the marriage, and the husband died, leaving his wife surviving. She is not entitled, in addition to the moiety of her husband's real and personal estate given to her by the articles, to dower out of the other moiety of his real estates of inheritance. Hamilton v. Jackson, 2 Jo. & Lat. 295 ; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 195.

Husband's Mother Surviving Wife.]—By the settlement made on the marriage of a female infant, an estate was settled on the husband's mother for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, with remainder in bar of dower ; the settlement will not bind the wife in regard the mother might (which she did) survive the husband. Caruthers v. Caruthers, 4 Bro. C. C. 500.

Acceptance of Future Contingent Provision.] —A future contingent provision accepted by an adult female upon her marriage in lieu of dower is in equity a valid bar to dower. Herons, In re, Fl. & K. 330.

Contingency not Estimable.]—The bankrupt, previously to his marriage, entered into a bond, that in case his wife should survive him, and should, within two months after his death, at the costs and charges of his heirs or devisees, release her dower, his heirs or executors should, within three months after his death, pay to her 2,000*l.* The wife survived the bankrupt, but did not within two months after his death release her dower, although she was always ready and willing to do so :—Held, that the bond was not provable, either under the first or the last part of s. 56, of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, inasmuch as the contingency had not happened, and no value could be set upon it. Davies, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 115.

Wife bound to see to Husband's Title.]—Where an adult female before marriage agrees to accept in lieu of dower a rent charge, she is bound to see that the grantor has title to the lands charged therewith; and therefore, a purchaser of other lands belonging to grantor, which might otherwise have been liable in case of failure of such security, is not entitled to see by title deeds that grantor has title to such charged lands. Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Madd. 609.

Statute of Distributions — Share under, no Satisfaction.]—Settlement previous to marriage of the wife's fortune on herself, with a covenant by the husband, in consideration of the marriage, &c., and for making some provision for the wife and her issue, to pay within three months after his death, 6,000*l.* to the trustees in trust, if the wife should survive him, and there being no issue (which was the case), to pay 1,500*l.* to the wife, her executors, &c., and to pay the interest of the remaining 4,500*l.* to her for life; she is entitled to dower, and her share under the Statute of Distributions is not a satisfaction or performance of covenant. Couch v. Stratton, 4 Ves. 391.

Settlement During Wife's Infancy.]—Dower barred by settlement, previous to marriage, but during the infancy of the wife, of stock and leasehold property partly the husband's, partly the wife's. Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. 545.

Precarious provision — Custom of London.]—A provision previous to the marriage of a female infant in bar of dower, thirds, and all claim upon the real and personal estate of the husband, if precarious and uncertain, as that the personal estate shall go according to the custom of London, does not bar her. Smith v. Smith, 5 Ves. 189.

Unsatisfied Bond.]—By a settlement made on the marriage of an adult female, it was declared that, in consideration of the intended marriage and for providing a competent jointure and provision of maintenance for the wife and issue of the marriage, the father of the husband had paid him 3,000*l.*, and that the husband had given a bond for the payment of 2,000*l.* six months after the marriage, to be settled on trusts for the benefit of himself, his wife, and the issue of the marriage. During the coverture, the husband bought certain lands, which he subsequently sold to a purchaser from whose devisees the defendant purchased, with notice of the settlement: the husband died without satisfying the bond. On a bill by the wife for dower out of the lands so sold:—Held, that her right was barred by the settlement, and that she had no lien or right to resort to the lands for the satisfaction of the amount due on the bond. Dyke v. Rendall, 2 De G. M. & G. 209; 21 L. J., Ch. 905; 16 Jur. 939.

Undisposed-of Estate.]—Provision by settlement in lieu, &c., of all dower or thirds, which wife might otherwise be entitled to of real or personal estate:—Held, to bar her interest in what was not disposed of by will of husband. Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 385.

Provision by marriage settlement not held a purchase of all the property of wife, unless that is expressed or clearly imported. Ib.

Annuity or Jointure Guaranteed.]—By a marriage settlement, 400*l.*, the wife's fortune, was given to the husband, and some terminable interest was conveyed by his father to trustees to pay the wife, if she survived, an annuity or jointure of 40*l.*; and the husband covenanted that if these properties should fail or be deficient, all the real and personal estate he should die seised of, &c., should be vested in the trustees to raise 400*l.*, or buy an annuity of 40*l.* for the wife:—Held, sufficient to bar her right to dower. Killen v. Campbell, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 461.

Wife a Feme Covert when joining in Settlement.]—The husband, previously to the marriage, gave a bond to the wife's mother, conditioned for the settlement of land to the wife for life in bar of dower, and after her decease to the uses of the marriage (which settlement was liberal and reasonable in regard to the wife's fortune); and after the marriage, but during a period of disagreement and separation, the settlement was executed accordingly, the wife being made a party: this shall preclude the wife from her legal claim of dower, and it is no objection that the wife was no party to the bond, or was a feme covert at the time when she joined in the execution of the settlement; and as the bond was good for the issue of the marriage, so it must be for the wife, for it cannot be set aside as to one party, and deemed good as to the other. Estcourt v. Estcourt, 1 Cox, 20.

Intention should be Expressed.]—Dower is not barred by settlement, unless so expressed therein. Charles v. Andrews, 9 Mod. 152.

Compensation by Creditors.]—Where settlement was made on a wife after marriage, in bar of dower, &c., and by wife's waiving it the land would go to heir, to prejudice of creditors, she was decreed to have the estate for life, according to the settlement, but that she should assign it over in trust for the creditors, who should convey to her a third for dower. Mills v. Eden, 10 Mod. 487.

Bar Limited to Settled Property.]—By a marriage settlement, part of the husband's real estates and of the lady's fortune was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the rents and interest of the lands, tenements, hereditaments, and premises, stocks, funds, and securities to the husband for life; and, after his death, to pay the wife, for her life, an annuity, to be in full for her jointure, and lieu, bar, and full satisfaction of and for her dower and thirds at common law, which she could or otherwise might have or claim out of, &c., "the said lands, tenements, hereditaments, and premises, stocks, funds, and securities whereof or whereunto" the husband, at any time during the said intended coverture, should be seised or entitled for any estate of inheritance to which dower or thirds is incident; and subject thereto, and in the event which happened, viz. there being an only child of the marriage, to 7,000*l.* for such child, in trust for the husband absolutely:—Held, that the settlement barred the wife of dower and her distributive share of the real and personal estate comprised in the settlement, but not of dower or of her distributive share out of or in the other real and personal estate of the husband. Sambourne v. Barry, 6 Ir. R. Eq. 28.

Contingent Provision for Intended Wife and Issue.]—In an ante-nuptial settlement any provision for the intended wife in the event of her surviving her husband, will bar her dower, if such intention be expressed or appear clearly from the construction of the deed. But provisions for the wife to her separate use for life, for the maintenance of herself and her children, in the event of the husband failing in his credit or becoming a bankrupt or insolvent, and inter alia a proviso that the trustees should, whenever they might think fit or expedient, that is to say—in the event of the husband becoming embarrassed in his circumstances, or there should arise some good and sufficient reason therefor, so as to render a sale consistent with, and in aid of, the trusts of the settlement, and provision for the wife and the issue of the marriage, realise out of the property of the husband a bond for 1,000*l*., executed to them, and invest the proceeds for the wife to her separate use for life, and after her death for the issue of the marriage, provided that the amount of the bond should not be levied after the husband's death without the consent in writing of the wife:—Held, not a bar to the wife's right to dower. O'Rorke v. O'Rorke, 17 L. R., Ir. 153.

Share under Statute of Distributions Barred.]—A marriage settlement made provision for the wife out of real and personal estate, and declared that such provision was in lieu of dower or thirds:—Held, that the widow was not only barred of her dower, but took no interest in her intestate husband's estate under the statute of distributions. Thompson v. Watts, 2 Johns. & H. 291; 31 L. J., Ch. 445; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 760; 6 L. T. 817; 10 W. R. 485.

Custom of London — Infancy of Wife.]—The widow of a freeman of London is barred of her customary part by an ante-nuptial settlement, whereby the parents of the husband and wife make a provision for her, after the death of her husband, of which she takes the benefit. Hutchinson v. Newark, 17 Beav. 393.

The same rule applies though the wife be an infant on the marriage, and the husband becomes a freeman afterwards. Ib.

"Thirds," Meaning of.]—The word "thirds" is a general expression which may signify, according to the intent and scope of the instrument in which it is used, the interest of a widow in any property, personal or real, of her deceased husband in case of his intestacy. Sambourne v. Barry, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 28.

Copyholds — Intention to Bar Freebench not so readily Presumed.]—Semble, an intention to bar freebench, which attaches only on copyholds of which a husband dies seised, will not be so readily inferred from an ante-nuptial provision as under the old law an intention to bar dower. Willis v. Willis, 34 Beav. 340; 34 L. J., Ch. 313; 13 W. R. 77.

A., by a settlement on his marriage with B., in order to make some provision for B., in case she should survive him, settled a copyhold estate upon himself for life, with remainder to B. for life:—Held, that B.'s right to freebench out of other copyholds, of which A. died seised and intestate, was not barred by the settlement. Ib.

h. Jointure.

Statutory Provision.]—By the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. VIII. c. 10), ss. 6—9, if a competent provision is made for a man's wife by way of jointure, to take effect in possession immediately upon his death, the wife is not to be entitled to claim dower. See Vernon's Case, 4 Co. Rep. 1, a.

Jointure No Bar at Common Law.]—Though at law a jointure upon a woman of full age would not bar her of her dower, yet the statute of 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, makes it a bar. Harvey v. Ashley, 3 Atk. 612.

Acceptance of Substituted Provision.]—The principle that the wife cannot have both dower and what is given in lieu of dower being acknowledged at law as well as in equity, the only question in such cases must be whether the provision alleged to have been given in satisfaction of dower was so given or not: if the provision results from contract the question will be simply whether that was part of the contract. Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 444. And see Dyke v. Rendall, 2 De G. M. & G. 209.

Agreement by Tenant in tail for Jointure on Possession.]—Marriage articles were executed by a tenant in tail in remainder and his intended wife, whereby he agreed to execute, when he should become entitled in possession, a legal post-nuptial settlement to secure her a jointure of a specified amount. He subsequently became entitled in possession, but died without executing any such settlement:—Held, that the articles were in equity a bar to the wife's right of dower. Pennefather v. Pennefather, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 171.

Wife Accepting Covenant to Pay Jointure.]—Adult female before marriage agreeing to accept a covenant by the husband, that his heirs, executors, or administrators shall pay the wife an annuity for her life, which if paid would be an equitable jointure, and she being an executing party to the instrument, purchaser of lands which would be liable to dower, if no jointure, is bound to see that there is an available fund, or in default, by failure of assets, unless he protects himself by a fine, he is liable to make it good; and plaintiff having purchased real estate of defendant's husband, who had acquired it during coverture, the widow was held, the security having failed, not to be barred of dower out of the land which was purchased and aliened by her husband at the time when equity would restrain her action of dower. Adult female cannot contract on marriage to relinquish dower, without compensation, and although she may accept of an adequate jointure, both at law and in equity equally, it must be available, accordingly, an injunction to restrain the widow from proceeding at law to enforce her dower was refused, Lord Chancellor declaring he had sought a principle to protect the purchaser, the widow admitting that she would have levied a fine if asked, but could not go further than to limit it pro tanto. Equity may dispense with the form, but cannot with the substantial requisite of a solid satisfaction of the provision made for the surviving wife, which, out of regard to her peculiar circumstances, is carried beyond the analogy to any general rule touching the disposition of contingent interests. Even at law, although the wife has accepted a jointure in lieu of dower, the right to dower is not extinguished, but exists to give effect to that provision, and it would be illusory to adjudicate as upon an equitable jointure, when in fact no provision was actually received. Power v. Sheil, 1 Moll. 296.

Purchaser of Dower Lands—Negligence.]—An injunction to restrain a widow from proceeding at law to enforce her dower out of lands of inheritance purchased from her husband during marriage refused, the purchaser having "through negligence neither insisted on having a fine, nor used common diligence to ascertain and preserve evidence that a jointure had been settled on her; but the widow having, in her answer to the original bill, admitted that her husband, previous to marriage, had executed an instrument settling an annuity of 150*l.* on her, in case she survived him, together with a collateral bond, but of which she knew not the contents, restrained from proceeding to execute her writ of dower till after she had answered the amended bill." She is not, as a condition connected with the order, entitled to a receiver, which would be an equitable execution; neither is she entitled to her costs at law. S. C., Beat. 48.

Wife No Party.]—A jointure settled on a wife by articles previous to marriage, but to which she was no party, will not bar her dower. Daly v. Lynch, 3 Bro. P. C. 478.

Eviction of Wife.]—Wife evicted of jointure is, by statute 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, s. 7, entitled to dower only pro tanto. Corbett v. Corbett, 1 Sim. & S. 612; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 108. Affirmed, 5 Russ. 254; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 9.

A Bar to Share under Statute of Distributions.]—Jointure being made in bar of dower, or any claim or right by common law, or custom of the city, containing the words "any law, custom, or usage notwithstanding," debars the wife of her share under the statute of distributions. Glover v. Bates, 1 Atk. 439.

Incumbrances.] — A., on his marriage with C., being equitable tenant in tail of certain lands, conveyed, by deed of 1804, these lands to B., as an indemnity against incumbrances on other lands purchased by B. from A.; the legal fee subsequently descended upon A., on the death of his father. C. then, in 1813, joined in a deed, by which A. conveyed the estates to the use of himself, his heirs, and assignees habendum free from dower, and A. and C. levied a fine to the uses of the deed; and A., by the same deed, charged certain lands held pur autre vie, with an annuity of 200*l.* a year for C. by way of jointure. A. died; the lands charged with the jointure were not more than sufficient to pay the prior incumbrances. C. filed a bill claiming dower against all persons interested in the lands, except bonâ fide purchasers for value subsequent to 1813:—Held, that the bill should be dismissed with costs as against B., but that the account prayed for should be decreed against the heir of said parties claiming as volunteers under A.; but the bill would have been dismissed against them also, if previously to the levying of the fine there had been an actual conveyance of the legal fee simple for the indemnity purposes, and that the court would have no jurisdiction to relieve against the fine. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Con. & L. 592; 4 Dr. & War. 354.

Semble, on the legal fee descending on A., C. became dowable out of the lands. Ib.

Lands not Comprised in Power to Jointure.]—A husband having power to jointure the wife, executes that power by will, and dies seised of estates over which the power did not extend; though the testator did not express an intention that the wife should take the jointure in bar of dower, yet she shall not take both jointure and dower, but shall make election. Fust v. Fust, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 90.

Infant.] — Widow held barred of dower in equity, by rent charge granted in trust for her by way of jointure by marriage settlement, to which her father was party, although she was infant at the time of marriage, and rent charge failed by defect of husband's title, and was afterwards confirmed by deeds and recovery during coverture, which, though they proved a valid confirmation, might have been defeated if there had been a son of the marriage. Corbett v. Corbett, 1 Sim. & S. 612; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 108. Affirmed, 5 Russ. 254; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 9.

Grant of rent charge out of particular lands to an infant in consideration of marriage, for her jointure, though grantor be afterwards evicted, being in equity a general agreement to grant rent charge of that amount out of some lands, will bind infant if her parent or guardian assent to it. S. C., 1 Sim. & S. 621.

—— Stat. 27 Hen. 8, c. 10.]—Though, at law, a jointure upon a woman of full age would not bar her of her dower, yet the stat. of 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, makes it a bar, and a jointure will bind an infant and preclude her from dower, even though the jointure be very inadequate. Harvey v. Ashley, 3 Atk. 612. Doubted by Lord Northington, see Caruthers v. Caruthers, 4 Bro. C. C. 499, 507.

—— Rules as to Jointures.] — The following points were ruled, per Northington, Ch., in this case: 1st, that the statute of 27 Hen. 8, which introduces jointures, extends to adult women only, infants not being particularly named, and, therefore, that notwithstanding a jointure on an infant, she may waive the jointure and elect to take dower; secondly, that a covenant by the husband that his heirs, executors or administrators shall pay to the wife an annuity for her life in full for her jointure, and in bar of dower, without expressing that it be charged on any particular lands, or be secured out of lands generally, is not a good equitable jointure within the statute; thirdly, that a woman being an infant cannot, by any contract previous to her marriage, bar herself of a distributive share of her husband's personalty in case of his dying intestate. Drury v. Drury, 2 Eden, 39. Reversed on appeal by the house of lords. S. C., nom. Buckingham (Earl) v. Drury, 3 Bro. P. C. 492; 2 Eden, 60; where Lord Hardwicke reviewed the authorities. Lord Thurlow, however (as was observed by Eldon, Ch., in Milner v. Harewood (Lord), 18 Ves. 275), said great doubts had been entertained as to the propriety of the decision of the lords, and expressed himself strongly in favour of Lord Northington's opinion. The result of the subsequent authorities (which are collected, 2 Eden, 75), however, is that an infant cannot be bound by any article entered into during the minority as to her own real state, which nothing but her own act when of age can fetter or affect. 2 Bridg. 86. See also Drury v. Drury, 4 Bro. C. C. 505, n.

—— Election on Coming of Age.]—A provision is made for a wife in articles before marriage (which marriage took place in her infancy), and declared to be a full satisfaction of dower, or any claim or right by common law, custom of the city, or any other usage, law, or custom notwithstanding. The wife survived the husband, and accepted of the terms mentioned in the articles. Declared that at her husband's death she had her election, which she made by accepting the satisfaction for her dower. Glover v. Bates, 1 Atk. 439.

i. Terms.

Satisfied Term.] — Subsequent incumbrancer cannot protect himself by a satisfied term against a prior incumbrance, unless in some sense got in either by an assignment, or making the trustee a party to the instrument, or taking possession of the deed creating the term, nor if he has notice before he pay his money; distinction upon that as to the dowress upon no principle, but established by practice. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 7 Ves. 567; 10 Ves. 271.

—— When not Available against Dowress.]—At law all terms are considered terms in gross, and therefore, without regard to purpose, prevent dowress from any legal benefit from recovery in dower, as she recovers with stay of execution during the term: but equity regards the purpose for which the term is created and subsists; and if only for the benefit of the owner of the inheritance it is considered part of inheritance, not absolutely merged, but so attendant as to accompany it, and every right and interest growing out of it by operation or agreement; not to be used, therefore, against the owner of the whole or any part of the inheritance; every description of ownership having a use in the term commensurate with the interest in the inheritance; when dower arises, therefore, the term in a proportion is as much attendant upon that interest as during the husband's life upon the inheritance, and protects it against either heir or purchaser. S. C., 7 Ves. 577. See also S. C. on appeal, 10 Ves. 246.

Purchase for value, without notice, is not a defence to a suit instituted to enforce a mere legal right, such as dower. Corry v. Cremorne, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 136.

A purchaser, in 1840, obtained possession of a deed, creating an attendant term, but did not procure an assignment of the term:—Held, that he could not rely on this term as a bar to a claim for dower. Ib.

Ascertaining Lands.]—Where a widow claims dower merely upon a legal title, but cannot ascertain the lands, equity will assist her to find them out, and, if her title to it is established, will give her the profits from the time her title accrued. If a dowress comes into equity to have a term removed which is established, equity will decree her an account of the rents and profits from the time her title accrued; secus, if the term had been out of the way, and she had no need to come into equity. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 130.

Term Protecting Purchaser.] — Defendant purchased a real estate of plaintiff's husband, and, the estate being in mortgage for a term, it was paid off out of purchase-money, and the term assigned to a trustee for the purchaser to attend the inheritance. Several years after husband's death, she brought her bill against defendant for an account of profits, and to be paid her dower. Sir T. Abney decreed dower, but Lord Chancellor reversed decree, and dismissed bill without costs. Hill v. Adams, 2 Atk. 208.

Since the case of Radnor v. Vandebendy (Show. P. C. 69), it has been a settled rule, that if purchaser have taken a term precedent to the right of dower, be it a satisfied one or money for it, it is a bar to the wife's dower; but if the mortgage had subsisted at the husband's death, the wife might have redeemed, and been entitled to dower; or if he had paid it off, and taken an assignment of the term to attend the inheritance, and died seised, the wife would have been endowed. Ib. And see Bodmin v. Vandebendy, 1 Vern. 356.

Heir or Devisee.] — A dowress shall have the benefit of a trust term against an heir or devisee, but not against a purchaser. Banks v. Sutton, 2 P. W. 707.

A dowress shall have the trust of a satisfied term removed against the heir-at-law. Dudley v. Dudley, Pre. Ch. 241.

Trust Terms.]—Dower allowed though there was a trust term subsisting. Williams (Lady) v. Wray, 1 P. W. 137; Pre. Ch. 151; 2 Vern. 378.

Whether a dowress shall be relieved in equity against a term for years. S. C., 2 Vern. 680.

A husband was seised in fee, subject to a trust term to secure life annuities, and to pay him half the surplus rents:—Held, that his widow was entitled to have her dower set out at once. Sheaf v. Cave, 24 Beav. 259.

Aid of Equity in Removing Trust Term.]—A court of equity will not assist a dowress, who has had judgment at law with a cesset executio, in removing a trust term. Brown v. Gibbs, Pre. Ch. 97.

Mortgagee.]—Husband seised in fee, mortgages for years, and marries; the mortgagee never enters; the wife on the death of her husband shall be endowed. Hamilton v. Mohun, 1 P. W. 121.

A dowress may redeem a term against a mortgagee, and remove it out of the way against an heir. Swannock v. Lyford, Ambl. 7.

Wife not entitled to dower against a purchaser of the inheritance who has got an assignment of a term, originally made previous to her right of dower. Ib.

Mortgagee may protect himself against a claim of dower by taking an assignment of an old mortgage, term prior to the right to dower. Wynn v. Williams, 5 Ves. 130.

Outstanding Term.]—A person being seised of an estate of inheritance, subject to a term outstanding for a purpose still unsatisfied, married in 1796. In 1805 he mortgaged his estate, and died in 1829:—Held, that his widow having obtained a judgment in dower, is relievable in equity against the outstanding term, and shall have her dower, subject to one-third of the charges affecting the term. Wilkins v. Lynch, Hayes, 98.

Where a bankrupt himself by taking an assignment of a mortgage term, prior to his wife's title of dower, could not have protected his estate against it, there his assignees shall not, for they stand in his place. Squire v. Compton, 9 Vin. Abr. 227 pl. 60.

Bankruptcy of Husband.]—An attendant term having become vested in the wife of the owner of the inheritance, as the administratrix of the trustee, and her husband becoming bankrupt, his assignees agree to sell the estate, and file a bill for specific performance of the agreement, pending which suit the husband dies:—Held, that the widow was not entitled to dower; that she was bound to assign the term to the purchaser, and that he was bound to accept the title. Mole v. Smith, Jac. 490. And see 1 Jac. & Walk. 665.

Satisfied Terms Act, 1845.]—A., being the owner of leaseholds for a term of ninety-nine years, mortgaged the property to B. for the term, less five days, and also to G. and R. for the term, less three days. He also demised to M. for the term, less ten days, in trust for G. and R. He then acquired the fee subject to the mortgages. B.'s mortgage was paid off to his executors, who assigned the term upon which it was secured to a trustee for G. and R. Then A. became bankrupt, and he and his assigns, in consideration of a release by G. and R. of their mortgage debt, by a deed to which A.'s wife was named a party, but which she refused to execute, granted the fee of the premises to them. They sold the estate, and A. died. His widow then filed a bill against the purchaser to enforce her right to dower out of the premises. Bacon, V.-C., held that upon the release of G. and R. of the mortgage debt, the mortgage terms became satisfied, and were extinguished by the Satisfied Terms Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, s. 2, and thereby the inchoate right of the widow to dower was let in. But on appeal this decision was reversed, and it was held that the term was not satisfied within the meaning of the act. Anderson v. Pignet, 42 L. J., Ch. 310; L. R. 8 Ch. 180; 27 L. T. 740. Reversing 19 W. R. 807.

A term does not become satisfied within the act unless the beneficial interest in the whole charge secured by the term, and the beneficial interest in the whole estate, are united and merged in one person. Ib.

3. Arrears.

Limitation of Time.]—No limitation in equity to arrears of dower any more than at law, without special ground. Account therefore decreed from husband's death (twelve years). Oliver v. Richardson, 9 Ves. 222. And see White v. Parnther, 1 Knapp, 179.

3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, applies to a bill filed thirty-one years after the death of a tenant in tail in possession, by his widow and her present husband, praying for a declaration that they were entitled to dower out of the hereditaments which the former husband was, during his marriage with her, seised for an estate of inheritance, dismissed, with costs, on the ground that dower is an interest in land, and that proceedings to recover it must be commenced within twenty years after the right to it accrues, by virtue of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Marshall v. Smith, 34 L. J., Ch. 189; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1174; 11 L. T. 443; 13 W. R. 198.

Both the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and the general doctrines of the court as to lapse of time apply to a right to dower. Ib.

A bill filed by a widow to raise the arrears of her jointure, charged upon certain lands by settlement. Defendant, by his answer, denied the husband's power to jointure, as he had at the time of the settlement only an estate tail, which had not subsequently been barred. An amended bill was then filed, praying for dower in case plaintiff was not considered entitled to jointure. Defendant neither answered amended bill nor appeared at the hearing, and the court decreed plaintiff entitled to dower, and directed an account of the arrears:—Held, that the amended bill was a continuation of the original suit, and that in taking the account the defendant could not set up in the office the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, limiting the recovery of arrears of dower to a period of six years, although the amended bill was not filed until after the act came into operation (31st December, 1833), the original bill having been filed previously thereto. Smith v. Walsh, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 167.

Bill for dower. The defendants in possession denied the title of the widow, alleging that her husband had not been seised of an estate of inheritance in the premises; that allegation being founded on information as to the time of his death, which was believed to be correct, but afterwards found to be erroneous: decree for dower, and arrears for six years before the filing of the bill, but without costs. Bamford v. Bamford, 5 Hare, 203.

Account of.]—To sustain bill for account there must be mutual demands. The case of dower stands on its own specialities; so the case of a steward, &c. Dinwiddie v. Bailey, 6 Ves. 141.

Question, whether widow is entitled to arrears of dower from the death of her husband, or only from her claim, cannot be decided on a writ of dower. Account would be decreed upon a bill on a mere right of entry, if the defendant admitted the title and receipt of the rents and profits. Mundy v. Mundy, 2 Ves. J. 128.

—— Future Profits.]—Court, in taking general accounts, making an allowance to widow for arrears of dower, will not put her to a fresh suit for future profits, but will decree them. Graham v. Graham, 1 Ves. 262.

—— Ascertaining Lands.]—Where a widow claims dower merely upon a legal title, but cannot ascertain the lands, equity will assist her to find them out; and, if her title to it is established, will give her the profits from the time her title accrued. If a dowress comes into equity to have a term removed, which is satisfied, equity will decree her an account of the rents and profits from the time her title accrued. Secus, if the term had been out of the way, and she had no need to come into equity. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 130. And see Curtis v. Curtis, 2 Bro. C. C. 620; Wild v. Wills, Dick. 3. S. P., Megott v. Megott, id. 794.

Mesne Profits.]—Bill for mesne profits by a woman who recovered in dower dismissed; for, where the husband dies seised, there shall be no mesne profits until demand, per Statute of Merton. Delver v. Hunter, Bunb. 57.

Interest.]—The court will not give interest on the arrears of an annuity, secured by a bond which had been taken in satisfaction of dower. Tew v. Winterton (Earl), 3 Bro. C. C. 489. And see 1 Ves. J. 451. S. P., Knight v. Maclean, 3 Bro. C. C. 496.

Death of Widow.]—The claim to dower is extinct on the death of the widow. White v. Parnther, 1 Knapp, 179.

4. DOWRESS' RIGHT AGAINST OTHER CLAIMS.

Intestate's Estate—Widow's Charge—Priority.]—The proportionate part of the widow's charge for 500*l.* to be borne by the real estate of an intestate under the Intestate's Estates Act, 1890, has priority over her right to dower. Charrière, In re, Duret v. Charrière, 65 L. J., Ch. 460; [1896] 1 Ch. 912; 74 L. T. 650; 44 W. R. 539.

Right to Redeem Mortgage.]—A dowress has a right to redeem a mortgage, and hold over till satisfied. Palmes v. Danby, Pre. Ch. 137.

Legacy in Substitution—No Abatement.]—W. gives, by will, his wife an annuity of 100*l.* for life, and 500*l.*, which, together with the annuity, he declares to be in full for her dower, or thirds, out of his real and personal estate; on deficiency of assets:—Held, the wife should not abate in proportion with the other legatees. Davenhill v. Fletcher, Ambl. 244. See also Heath v. Dendy, 1 Russ. 543; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 59.

—— Priority over other Legatees.]—A legacy to a widow in lieu of dower or thirds, at common law or by custom, has no priority over other legacies, where the testator leaves no real estate. Acey v. Simpson, 5 Beav. 35.

A widow is not entitled to priority over other legatees in respect of an annuity bequeathed to her by her husband "in lieu, bar, and satisfaction of dower," where the only real estate of the testator was conveyed to him with a declaration against dower. Roper v. Roper, 3 Ch. D. 714; 35 L. T. 155; 24 W. R. 1013.

A widow dowable out of her husband's lands having elected to take an annuity given by the will in lieu of dower, the testator's estate being insufficient to pay the legacies in full:—Held, entitled to priority over the other legatees. Stalschmidt v. Lett, 1 Sm. & G. 421.

Sequestration.]—After a decree for a personal duty, a sequestration issues, and then the defendant marries and dies; if the sequestration shall take place of the wife's dower. Quære. Burdett v. Rockley, 1 Vern. 118.

Assignment—Right to Dower—Whether passed.]—An assignment of "all and singular the legacies, debts, moneys, estate, and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature or kind soever, of or to which J. H. in right of his wife or otherwise was possessed," will not pass a claim of the assignor's wife to dower out of the estates of her former husband. Brown v. Meredith, 2 Keen, 527; 6 L. J., Ch. 361.

Assignees in Bankruptcy.]—Dower established against assignees under a joint commission of bankruptcy upon estates purchased with the partnership fund, but conveyed to one partner under a specific agreement that the estates should be his, and he should be debtor for the money. Smith v. Smith, 5 Ves. 189.

Mortgagee of Husband.]—Under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, a widow has no right, as against the heir-at-law of her deceased husband, to be indemnified in respect of a mortgage created by the deceased. Jones v. Jones, 4 Kay & J. 361.

Therefore, where in a case of that description the mortgaged property had been sold by order of the court, in a suit for administration of an intestate's estate:—Held, as between his widow and his heir, that the right of the widow to dower was limited to one-third of the income of the clear surplus of the proceeds of the sale, after deducting what was due upon the mortgage. Ib.

Creditors' Rights prevail over, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104.]—By the 3 and 4 Will. 4, c. 104, freeholds and copyholds of a deceased are assets for the payments of his debts, and by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 5, all debts to which the land of a deceased are subject, are "valid and effectual as against the right of his widow, to dower":—Held, nevertheless, that the widow's right to dower or freebench has still priority over mere creditors of a deceased. Spyer v. Hyatt, 20 Beav. 621; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 3 W. R. 294.

Emblements.]—Dower is an excrescence or continuance of the husband's estate, which jointure is not; therefore a dowress shall have emblements, but not a jointress. Fisher v. Forbes, 9 Vin. 373 pl. 82.

5. PROCEEDINGS FOR RECOVERY.

Dower may be demanded by another person on behalf of the widow; and a demand in the presence of witnesses is not necessary. Watson v. Watson, 10 C. B. 3; 20 L. J., C. P. 25.

Husband must have Died Seised.]—To entitle a widow to damages in dower, it must be alleged and proved that the husband died seised of an estate of inheritance. Jones v. Jones, 2 Tyr. 531; 2 C. & J. 601.

Ascertaining Lands.]—Where a widow claims dower merely upon a legal title, but cannot ascertain the lands, equity will assist her to find them out, and if her title to it is established, will give her the profits from the time her title accrued. If a dowress comes into equity to have a term removed which is satisfied, equity will decree her an account of rents and profits from the time her title accrued; secus, if the term had been out of the way, and she had no need to come into equity. Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 130.

A widow filed a bill for dower against alienees of her husband. In order to make out her title to dower, she was obliged to give in evidence a deed by which the estate had been conveyed to the person from whom her husband claimed. This deed contained a recital, that the legal estate was outstanding in trustees. She also gave in evidence certain orders of the court of chancery, to show that such recital was mistaken:—Held, that she was entitled to a reference to ascertain the lands of which she was dowable. Kernaghan v. M'Nally, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 52.

—— Number of Acres Claimed need not be Specified.]—In a writ and count in dower, the exact number of acres of land in respect of which dower is demanded is not material; in order therefore to sustain a plea alleging that the tenements mentioned in the count were subject to an outstanding term, it is sufficient for the tenant to show that all the lands held by him in the parishes named in the count are subject to the term. Garrard v. Tuck, 8 C. B. 231; 18 L. J., C. P. 338; 13 Jur. 871.

Separate Account — Incumbrances.]—A separate report directed of what was due to a dowress, without entangling her in a general account of incumbrances. Eccleston v. Berkeley, Ridgw. 253.

Remedy at Law or Equity.]—A. dies seised of land, which descend upon B. and C. in coparcenary. B., before receipt of rent, or partition made, dies; his widow brings a bill to have dower assigned, suggesting that C. had all the title-deeds; upon demurrer, resolved, that this court will relieve in such case. The demurrer overruled. Moor v. Black, Forrest, 126.

Demurrer to bill for dower overruled, though it stated no impediment to succeeding at law. Mundy v. Mundy, 4 Bro. C. C. 294. And see 2 Ves. J. 122; and Wallis v. Everard, 3 Ch. Rep. 161.

Inspection of Husband's Conveyance to Purchaser.]—A demandant in dower is not entitled to inspection of the deed under which the property out of which she claims to be endowed was conveyed away by her husband, as against a bonâ fide purchaser for value without notice of the marriage, the balance of authorities being assumed to be in favour of the position that a bill for discovery in equity could not be sustained in such a case. Gomm v. Parrott, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 47; 26 L. J., C. P. 279; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1150; 5 W. R. 882.

Wife Living in Adultery.]—A plea in bar to a writ of dower unde nihil habet alleging that the wife, during her coverture, voluntarily left her husband, and without his consent lived away from him in adultery with C., is sufficient, without alleging that she lived with C. willingly, and that she had been convicted of adultery. Hetherington v. Graham, 3 M. & P. 399; 6 Bing. 139; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 253; 31 R. R. 361.

Lapse of Time.]—A widow's right to sue in equity for dower will be barred, where she has not for upwards of thirty years taken any proceedings, either at law or in equity, to have it assigned to her. Marshall v. Smith, 34 L. J., Ch. 189; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1174; 11 L. T. 443; 13 W. R. 198.

6. Costs.

No Costs.]—No costs to plaintiff in a writ of dower. Mundy v. Mundy, 4 Bro. C. C. 294; 2 Ves. J. 128.

Though in an ordinary suit for dower no costs will be allowed, yet where a defendant set up an assignment which he failed to prove, and went into evidence as to improvements made by him in the property after the plaintiff became entitled to dower, he was ordered to pay so much of the costs of the suit as were occasioned by his entering into such evidence, and setting up the assignment. Stormont v. Wickens, 13 L. T. 533.

Title not admitted.]—Where a dower suit was not occasioned by any difficulty as to the assignment or mode of payment of the dower, but solely by the defendant not having admitted the title till he put in his answer to her bill, she was allowed her costs up to the hearing. Harris v. Harris, 7 L. T. 411; 11 W. R. 62.

Vexatious Resistance.]—Though by analogy to rule of law, costs do not follow decree of dower merely, yet where there is a vexatious resistance they are given. Worgan v. Ryder, 1 Ves. & B. 20. S. P. Lucas v. Calcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 134; Dick. 594.

Costs Allowed.]—Costs allowed to a widow, in a suit for dower, her right thereto being contested by the party to whom the estate has been sold by the heir-at-law. Fry v. Noble, 20 Beav. 598; 24 L. J., Ch. 591; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 767; 3 W. R. 599. Affirmed. 25 L. J., Ch. 144; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 144; 4 W. R. 145.

Lapse of Time.]—Where the widow's right to sue for her dower was barred by lapse of time, her bill was dismissed with costs. Marshall v. Smith, 34 L. J., Ch. 189; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1174; 11 L. T. 443; 13 W. R. 198.

VIII. PIN-MONEY.

1. In General.

Must be used for Dress.]—There is annexed to wife's pin-money an implied duty of applying it towards her personal dress, decoration, and ornament. Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45; 15 L. J., Ch. 17; 9 Jur. 1022.

Disposal of as Separate Estate.]—A wife may dispose of pin-money as separate estate. Herbert v. Herbert, Milles v. Wikes, 1 Eq. Abr. 66.

Subject to Property Tax.]—Pin-money was subject to property-tax, though not to deduction for alimony, as it is clear of maintenance. Ball v. Coutts, 1 Ves. & B. 292.

Suit for Alimony.]—In a suit for alimony, separate maintenance or pin-money is not a good plea. Colmer v. Colmer, Mos. 121.

Settlement by Way of.]—In settlements where the husband and wife are living together, and the case is not one of contempt, it is not the course to settle any part on the wife to her separate use by way of pin-money, unless the property be a large one; such a provision refused where the sum to be settled was under 1,400*l*. Harpur v. Ball, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 404; 2 Jo. & Lat. 599.

2. Arrears.

No Account beyond a Year.]—No account of arrears of pin-money beyond a year. Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. 267.

Account of wife's pin-money, never carried back beyond the year. Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 190. And see Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 1; and Howard v. Digby, 5 Sim. 330; 8 Bli. (N.S.) 224; 2 Cl. & F. 634.

Recovery of Arrears where assigned for Value.]

—The rule that after the wife's death no arrears of pin-money are recoverable does not apply where either the wife has parted with her right to the personal enjoyment of the pin-money, or the husband has been deprived of the enjoyment of the estate on which the pin-money is charged. Assignees for value are therefore entitled to resort to arrears of pin-money. Tuffnell v. O'Donoghue, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 360.

Wife accepting Less.]—A. had 300*l.* per annum pin-money; the husband, for several years before his death, paid her 200*l.* only, but promised her she should have the whole at last. Declared, that, if the wife accepts less, or lets her husband receive what she ought to receive to her separate use, it implies a consent in her to submit to such a method. But where the pin-money is paid to her eo nomine, her agreement with the husband relating to her separate estate, amounts not to a new agreement, and his promising she should have it at last is an undertaking to pay the arrears. Ridout v. Lewis, 1 Atk. 269; 2 Atk. 104.

Where the wife for several years acquiesced in her husband's receipt of her pin-money, and there was no evidence to sustain a contract or promise to pay it, or of continued claim of it:—Held, that the master had properly allowed only one year's amount. Thrupp v. Harman, 3 Myl. & K. 513.

Husband finding Clothes.]—Where pin-money is secured to the wife, and the husband finds her in clothes and necessaries, this is a bar as to any arrears of pin-money incurred during such time. Fowler v. Fowler, 3 P. W. 355. And see Arthur v. Arthur, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 511; Foss v. Foss, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 215.

Husband, on marriage settlement, settled 100*l.* per annum pin-money, in trust for wife for her separate use, which becomes in arrear, and then the husband, by will, gives the wife a legacy of 500*l.*; after which there is a futher arrear of the pin-money, and then the husband dies. This legacy, being greater than the debt, decreed even in the case of the wife to be a satisfaction of the arrears of pin-money due before the making of the will. Ib.

Annual sum secured for the wife's pin-money, for her apparel and expenses; if they cohabit together and the husband maintain her, the arrears of pin-money are not recoverable. Thomas v. Bennet, 2 P. W. 341.

Arrears charged on Trust Estate.]—Term raised to pay 200*l.* per annum pin-money to the wife, with covenants from the husband for payment of it. A year's arrear at the husband's death held such a debt as should be charged on his trust estate, settled for payment of his debts. Offley v. Offley, Pre. Ch. 26. And see Warwick (Countess) v. Edwards, 1 Eq. Abr. 140; Cornwall v. Mountague (Earl), id. 66.

Presumption of Release.]—A receiver was obtained by a married woman over her husband's estate for the arrears of an annuity settled to her separate use. By an order made with her consent, the receiver was discharged, without prejudice to her proceeding as she might be advised for the arrear then declared to be due, or the accruing gales, and the husband went into possession. A creditor, subsequent to the consent order, obtained an order for a receiver and the wife reappointed the receiver in her cause:—Held, that the presumption of release, or payment of arrears of pin-money, did not arise, and that the wife was entitled to the arrears due at the date of the consent order, and the subsequent gales. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 348.

Principles of the court as to the arrears of pin-money. Ib.

IX. PARAPHERNALIA.

Jewels.]—Old family jewels do not constitute paraphernalia. Jervoise v. Jervoise, 17 Beav. 566; 23 L. J., Ch. 703; 2 W. R. 9.

Pearl ornaments presented to a married woman by a third party held to be part of her paraphernalia. Ib.

So likewise brilliant bracelets bought by the husband and given to the wife, though worn with the family jewels, constitute part of her paraphernalia. Ib.

A husband who was entitled to family jewels and diamonds bequeathed to his wife all "his" jewels for life, and afterwards as heirlooms:—Held, that this bequest did not include pearl ornaments presented to her, or brilliant bracelets bought by the husband and given to the wife, and worn with the family jewels, so as to put the wife to her election. Ib.

Diamonds given by the husband's father to his son's wife on marriage are a gift to her separate use, and she is entitled to them. So is a gift by a stranger to the wife. So are trinkets given to her by her husband: but where given expressly to be worn as ornaments they are to be deemed as paraphernalia, and the husband may alien them, though, if considered as a gift, the wife may dispose of them contrary to the husband's intention. Graham v. Londonderry (Lord), 3 Atk. 393.

Pledge by Husband.]—If a husband pledges his wife's paraphernalia, and leaves a sufficient personal estate, it shall be liable to redeem the pledge. In the present case Lady D.'s diamond necklace was sold, and an account of the value was decreed to her. Ib.

Gifts of Jewellery by Husband to Wife.]—Gifts of jewellery made by husband to wife on occasions such as Christmas-day or on her birthdays, or in order to settle differences that had arisen between them, are not paraphernalia, unless it can be shown that the husband intended to impress the character of paraphernalia upon them. The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not affect a gift of paraphernalia. Vansittart, In re, Brown, Ex parte ([1893] 1 Q. B. 181), distinguished. Tasker v. Tasker, 64 L. J., P. 36; [1895] P. 1; 11 R. 619; 71 L. T. 779; 43 W. R. 255.

Disposal by Will by Husband.]—Wife was entitled, as her paraphernalia, to jewels, which the husband had disposed of by will to his executor, and of which the wife was possessed in the husband's lifetime, bought partly with her own and partly with his money. Northey v. Northey, 2 Atk. 77; 9 Mod. 270.

A wife, with respect to paraphernalia, has been considered as a creditor, and having a lien upon real estate. Ib.

And the value of the jewels makes no alteration. Ib.

A wife has been admitted creditor to the value of paraphernalia, upon a trust estate for payment of debts. Ib.

Possession by Husband.]—The husband's possession of jewels makes no alteration where the wife has worn them as ornaments whenever she was dressed. Ib.

The wife is not barred of her paraphernalia by a devise of the use of all household goods, furniture, plate, jewels, linen, &c., for life. Marshall v. Blew, 2 Atk. 217.

Such a bequest entitles her to use the goods anywhere, or even to let them out to hire. Ib.

Husband devises wife's jewels to wife for life, remainder to his son; the wife makes no election or claim to have the jewels as her paraphernalia, her administrator cannot make this claim. Clarges v. Albemarle, 2 Vern. 247; Nel. Ch. 174.

Jewels bought out of Pin-money.]—Jewels and chamber-plate bought out of pin-money allowed the wife as her paraphernalia. Offley v. Offley, Pre. Ch. 26.

Agreement in Bar of.]—A woman, on her marriage, agrees to have no part of her husband's personal property but what he should give her by will. This bars her of her paraphernalia. Cholmely v. Cholmely, 2 Vern. 83.

Husband's Debts, Liability to.]—Where husband's personal estate is not sufficient to pay his debts, wife cannot set up any claim to jewels, rings, pictures, dressing plate, and other trinkets given her before marriage. Ridout v. Plymouth (Earl), 2 Atk. 104.

Where a man's real and personal estate are charged by his will with the payment of his debts, and afterwards turn out insufficient, his wife's jewels and paraphernalia should be sold towards making good the deficiency. Parker v. Harvey, 4 Bro. P. C. 609; 14 Vin. Abr. 458.

One dies, indebted by covenant more than all his personal assets can pay, and leaving real assets sufficient, the widow shall have her paraphernalia, in regard the creditor does not suffer thereby, there being real assets for him. Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. 729.

Where the wife's paraphernalia will be liable to the husband's debts. Willson v. Pack, Pre. Ch. 295.

Wife not entitled to paraphernalia when husband dies indebted. The court will, however, let her in on other funds, if any. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 1.

Charge on Real Estate—Priority.]—A real estate charged with payment of debts, in aid of the personal estate, shall be applied before the widow's paraphernalia. Boyntun v. Boyntun, 1 Cox, 106.

Jewels of the wife, though given by husband's will to her for life, shall not be sold for payment of husband's debts, charged on a real estate in aid of personalty. Boynton v. Parkhurst, 1 Bro. C. C. 576.

Next-of-Kin.]—Where a lady was possessed of jewels and ornaments of the person before her marriage, and after her marriage they were in all writings spoken of by her husband as hers, and were deposited with bankers, with whom she, with his consent, kept a separate account, and after her lunacy, the husband made his will, giving her the use of his plate, furniture, linen, jewels, and household effects, including the jewels and effects "which belonged to her before her marriage," and which he "had assumed by marital right" during her life, upon the death of the lunatic, who survived her husband, the court held that the next-of-kin of the husband were entitled to such of the articles as did not consist of paraphernalia as their property, but as to such as formed paraphernalia, the next-of-kin of the wife were entitled to elect whether they would take them or the benefits given by the will. Hewson, In re, 23 L. J., Ch. 256—L.JJ.

Exhaustion of Personal Estate.] — Where the personal estate has been exhausted to pay specialty creditors, the widow shall stand in their place for her paraphernalia, upon the real assets of the heir; yet, though paraphernalia shall be applied to satisfy simple contracts, it shall not go to satisfy legacies. Snelson v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 369. So where there is a trust estate charged with the payment of debts. Incledon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 438.

Wife barred by Ante-nuptial Agreement.]—A wife who, by articles before marriage, is by express words barred of everything she could claim out of her husband's personal estate, by the common law, custom of London, or otherwise, has no right to paraphernalia. Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 642.

X. GRANTS AND GIFTS TO AND BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.

1. To Husband and Wife.

Unity of Person.] — A. purchases copyhold estate, and takes the surrender to himself and his wife and daughter, and their heirs. The husband and wife (as one person) take a moiety by entireties, and the daughter the other moiety. Back v. Andrew, 2 Vern. 120; Pre. Ch. 1.

Bequest of the income of a fund "equally between my brother, W. S., and his wife Jane, and my sisters, M. M. and S. S., during their lives and the life of the survivor of them"—Held, that W. S. and wife took two-fourths, and not one-third. Marchant v. Cragg, 31 Beav. 398.

Legacies given to A., B. and C., and the wife of C., equally to be divided amongst them. C. and his wife shall have but one-third. Bricker v. Whatley, 1 Vern. 233.

Bequest to Captain A., his wife and children. There were two children:—Held, that each child took one-third absolutely, and the husband and wife one-third between them. Gordon v. Whieldon, 11 Beav. 170; 18 L. J., Ch. 5; 12 Jur. 988.

A bequest of the sum of 700*l.* unto and amongst J. C. and C. his wife, and W. L., in equal shares and proportions:—Held, to give one moiety to J. C. and C. his wife, and the other moiety to W. L., although the will, in another part of it, gave three legacies of 200*l.* each to each of them, J. C., C. his wife, and to L. Wylde's Estate, In re, 2 De G. M. & G. 724; 22 L. J., Ch. 87; 16 Jur. 1029; 1 W. R. 9.

Bequest to A., his wife and children. There were three children:—Held (inter alia), that A. and his wife together were only entitled to one-fourth share. Atcheson v. Atcheson, 11 Beav. 485. See Dias v. De Livera, 5 App. Cas. 135, 136.

—— Married Women's Property Act, 1882.]—The rule of construction whereby, under a gift to a husband and wife and a third person, the husband and wife take only one moiety between them, has not been altered by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. A testator by his will made in 1887, directed that a share of his residuary estate should be divided between his "sister M. B., D. B., her husband, and H. B., her step-daughter, in equal parts." M. B. and D. B. were married previously to the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882:—Held, that M. B. and D. B. each took one-fourth, and H. B. one-half of the share, the one-fourth of M. B. being her separate property according to the act. Jupp, In re, Jupp v. Buckwell, 57 L. J., Ch. 774; 39 Ch. D. 148; 59 L. T. 129; 36 W. R. 712.

A testatrix, by her will, dated in 1880, gave her residuary personal estate "to C. J. M., and J. H. and E. his wife," to and for their own use and benefit absolutely, and appointed C. J. M., and J. H. and E. H. his wife, her executors. The testatrix died in 1883, after the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. J. H. and E. H. were married in 1864:—Held, that as the will was made before the Married Women's Property Act came into operation, it must be construed in accordance with the law at that time, and that the three residuary legatees were entitled to the personal estate as joint tenants, C. J. M. taking one moiety, and J. H. and E. H., his wife, taking the other moiety between them, J. H. in his own right, and his wife for her separate use. March, In re, Mander v. Harris, 54 L. J., Ch. 143; 27 Ch. D. 166; 51 L. T. 380; 32 W. R. 241—C. A.

How the court would have construed the gift if the will had been made after the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, came into operation, quære. Ib.

Gift Construed as Separate.]—The testatrix gave the residue of her real and personal estate equally between her brother, her sister, and her "nephew W., and E. his wife" (E. being the niece of the testatrix):—Held, that the husband and wife took one share each, and not merely one share between them. Warrington v. Warrington, 2 Hare, 54; 6 Jur. 872.

A testator gave his residue to A. and B. his wife, C. the wife of X., D. the wife of Y., E., F. and G. his wife:—Held, that the residue was divisible into sevenths, A. and B. his wife, and F. and G. his wife, taking separately. Warrington v. Warrington (2 Hare, 54) followed. Jupp, In re (39 Ch. D. 148), commented on. Dixon, In re, Byram v. Tull, 42 Ch. D. 306; 61 L. T. 718; 38 W. R. 91.

—— Nephews and Nieces—Class—Shares.]—Testator gave to S. and his wife, whom he called his nephew and niece, memorial rings. He also gave to each of certain other "nephews and nieces," naming them, a legacy of nineteen guineas. He gave his residuary estate in trust for all and every his nephews and nieces living at his death, to be equally divided between them, "including my nephews and nieces to whom I have given legacies as aforesaid." S. and some of the others named were nephews and nieces of the testator's wife. The wife of S. was not the niece of the testator or of his wife. The court, holding on the construction of the will that S. and his wife took as nephew and niece in the gift to the class, held, further, that they took each a share. Gue, In re, Smith v. Gue, 61 L. J., Ch. 510; 40 W. R. 553. Affirmed, 67 L. T. 823—C. A.

2. By Husband to Wife and Wife to Husband.

a. By Husband to Wife.

Gift must be clear and irrevocable.]—A gift may be made by a husband to his wife, which, though bad in law, will be supported in equity. Though the property does not pass at law, yet, in equity a husband, being the legal owner, may become a trustee for his wife, and if by clear and irrevocable acts he has made himself a trustee, the gift to his wife will be conclusive. Mews v. Mews, 15 Beav. 529.

To constitute a gift between husband and wife there must either be a clear irrevocable gift to a trustee for the wife or some clear and distinct act of the husband, by which he divested himself of his property and engaged to hold it as a trustee for the separate use of his wife. If a man were to deposit money with bankers directing them to hold it for his wife, that would probably be sufficient. Ib.

A farmer's wife, with his knowledge and sanction, deposited the produce of the surplus butter, eggs, and poultry with a firm in her own name, and he called it "her money." On his death-bed he gave his executor directions to remove the money, and do the best he could with it for his wife:—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to establish a gift between them, and that the husband had neither made the firm nor himself trustees for his wife. Ib.

—— Must be evidenced beyond Suspicion.]—A gift by a husband to his wife, either as a donatio mortis causâ, or as a donatio inter vivos to her separate use, must be established by evidence beyond suspicion; a claim of that nature negatived. A defendant by her answer having claimed a gift from her husband as an absolute donatio inter vivos to her separate use, whether evidence can be received to establish it as a donatio mortis causâ, quære. Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 92; 1 Wils. 445. And see McLean v. Longlands, 5 Ves. 71.

In order to constitute a valid gift from husband to wife, there must be some clear and distinct act by which the husband divests himself of the property, and engages to hold it as trustee for the separate use of his wife. It is not necessary that he should deliver the property to a trustee for his wife; but to establish the fact of the gift, the testimony of the wife must be corroborated by clear and independent evidence. Grant v. Grant, 34 Beav. 623; 34 L. J., Ch. 641; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 787; 13 L. T. 721; 13 W. R. 1057.

Presumption rebutted.]—The dividends of stock purchased during coverture in the name of the wife out of funds placed at her disposal for family purposes by her husband, then an aged person, were paid into a bank to her account, and by her applied for domestic expenses. The wife dying in the husband's life ime, in a suit to administer the husband's estate:—Held, that the presumption that the stock was a gift to the wife arising from the purchase being made in her name, was rebutted by the mode of dealing with the dividends. Hoyes v. Kidersley, 2 Sm. & G. 195.

Gift to Trustee for Wife's separate Use, good.]—If a gift by a husband to his wife be made to a trustee for her separate use, in possession, it will be good, semble. Coomes v. Elling, 3 Atk. 676.

Assignment operating by Way of Declaration of Trust.]—A husband by a deed-poll recited as follows: "Whereas I am beneficially possessed of the ground-rents hereby intended to be settled," and continued as follows: "I do hereby settle, assign, transfer, and set over unto my wife as though she were a single woman" several leasehold houses and the ground-rents thereof. The deed was voluntary:—Held, that this deed was not void as being an intended assignment from husband to wife, but operated as a declaration of trust. Baddeley v. Baddeley, 9 Ch. D. 113; 38 L. T. 906.

A husband, being about to leave England for a residence in India, executed an assignment by deed to his wife, who was to remain in England of a leasehold dwelling house, "to hold the same unto" the wife, "her executors, administrators, and assigns, as her separate estate." No trustees were appointed, the husband and wife being the only parties to the deed. The title deeds were allowed to remain in the possession of the wife:—Held, that the deed of assignment operated as a valid declaration of trust in favour of the wife. Fox v. Hawkes, 49 L. J., Ch. 579; 13 Ch. D. 822; 42 L. T. 622; 28 W. R. 656.

The wife, having parted with possession of the deeds (all but the assignment) to an agent, in order to raise a sum or 200*l.* upon them for the wife, and having asked for a return of the deeds without success, the agent, by forging the name of the husband to a mortgage deed and other instruments, raised a sum of 1,200*l.*, which he appropriated to his own use:—Held, that there was no negligence on the part of the wife so as to bar her title to relief against the mortgagees. Ib.

A husband, by three letters written and signed by him and handed to his wife, gave her furniture and other articles for her sole and absolute use. He afterwards made his will, bequeathing certain legacies and making other dispositions of his property, and giving the residue of it to trustees in trust for his wife for life with remainder to six nieces absolutely. The furniture and other articles were at the time of the husband's death in the house which had been occupied by him and his wife, and the whole had been used by them in the ordinary way:—Held, that there was no declaration of trust, but that the furniture, &c., formed part of the husband's estate. Baddeley v. Baddeley (9 Ch. D. 113) and Fox v. Hawkes (13 Ch. D. 822) observed upon, and Milroy v. Lord (4 De G. F. & J. 264) followed. Breton's Estate, In re, Breton v. Woollren, 50 L. J., Ch. 369; 17 Ch. D. 416; 44 L. T. 337; 29 W. R. 777.

Imperfect Voluntary Gift.]—A., being sued in fee executed a deed-poll, whereby he voluntarily granted the estate to his wife as her sole and absolute property for ever:—Held, that this was an imperfect voluntary gift; that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust had not thereby been created, and that a court of equity would not interfere to assist either party. Price v. Price, 14 Beav. 598. Affirmed, 1 De G. M. & G. 308; 21 L. J., Ch. 53.

Grant by Husband to Wife of whole Estate.]—A man cannot make a grant to his wife in his lifetime, nor will equity suffer her to have the whole of her husband's estate whilst he is living; for it is not in nature of a provision, neither will such a grant revoke the husband's will giving everything away from her. Beard v. Beard, Atk. 72.

Ante-nuptial Parol Agreement.]—By a parol ante-nuptial agreement in 1879, it was agreed that the intended wife should retain 1,400*l.* as her separate property. The money was paid into a bank in her maiden name, and for two years after the marriage, she received the interest with her husband's acquiescence, and she afterwards drew out the principal. The money was claimed by the trustee in liquidation of the husband:—Held, that it was unnecessary to decide whether s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, or the doctrine of part performance, applied to the case, because the transaction amounted to a gift by the husband to the wife of the money, which thus became her separate property, and therefore the husband was a trustee for the wife, and his trustee in liquidation was not entitled to the money. Whitehead, In re, Booth, Ex parte, 54 L. J., Q. B. 240; 14 Q. B. D. 419; 52 L. T. 597; 33 W. R. 471; 49 J. P. 405—C. A.

Paying off Mortgage.]—Previously to a marriage then in contemplation, the intended husband, by his agent, paid off two equitable mortgage debts of the intended wife, secured by a deposit of title deeds belonging to her. He did this apparently to save the expense of a legal mortgage, which would otherwise have been required by the mortgagees. The title deeds still remained in the custody of the mortgagees. The marriage was solemnised; there was no settlement, or agreement for a settlement. There was no issue of the marriage; the husband predeceased the wife, intestate. His widow took out administration to him:—Held, that the husband did not intend to make a gift to the wife of the money which he had paid for her, and that the debt still existed on the security of the equitable mortgage in favour of the personal estate of the deceased husband. Gooch v. Gooch, 15 Jur. 1166.

Profits of Eggs and Butter.]—A husband voluntarily after marriage permits the wife for her separate use to make profit of all butter, eggs, &c., beyond what is used in the family, out of which the wife saves 100*l.*, which the husband borrows and dies; the court will allow of this agreement to encourage the wife's frugality, and the wife shall come in as a creditor for this 100*l.*, especially where there is no deficiency of assets. Slanning v. Style, 3 P. W. 337.

So where the husband agreed that the wife should take two guineas of every tenant that renewed a lease with the husband beyond the fine which the husband received; this was allowed to be the wife's separate money. Ib. See col. 1027.

Parol Agreement before Marriage — Possession.]—Although a parol agreement, before marriage, that particular chattels of the wife shall be possessed by her for her separate use, is not binding upon the husband ; yet if the agreement be acted upon by the chattels being placed under the dominion of the trustees and treated as separate property, the agreement may be made effectual. Simmons v. Simmons, 6 Hare, 352 ; 12 Jur. 8.

To a bill by a husband claiming in his marital right against his wife and the trustees of their marriage settlement part of the furniture of a house which was let furnished at an entire rent, the whole of which had, from the time of the marriage, been received by the wife for her separate use, and seeking to have the rent apportioned. The answer of the wife set up a parol agreement by the husband, made before the marriage, that the wife should possess the furniture in question for her separate use, although it was not included in the marriage settlement :—Held, that the plaintiff had no equity to sustain a suit nor an account of an apportioned part of the past rents ; that the plaintiff had no equity to sustain a suit for the apportionment of the rent of the house and furniture, in respect of his alleged interest in the latter, unless it appeared that he was by some reason precluded from bringing his action at law to recover the furniture which he claimed ; and that the plaintiff not having shown that he had no remedy at law, the bill must be dismissed. Ib.

Legacy—Gift by Husband.]—A legacy to a married woman was paid by cheque for 995*l.* drawn to the order of husband and wife. They indorsed it to husband's bankers, and with the husband's consent ; and in his presence the manager of the bank opened an account of 800*l.*, part of the 995*l.* in the wife's sole name. The wife afterwards drew cheques from time to time on this account in her sole name, and part was invested in bonds ; afterwards her husband requested her to charge this account with payment of his overdrawn balance with the bankers, which she refused to do :—Held, that even if the legacy had been reduced into possession there had been a gift of the 800*l.* by the husband to the wife. Parker v. Lechmere, 12 Ch. D. 256.

Conditional Gift—Fulfilment of Condition.]—A testator promised his wife a piano, on condition that she would learn to play it ; the condition was fulfilled :—Held, that this was a valid gift from the husband to the wife. Whittaker v. Whittaker, Whittaker, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 737 ; 21 Ch. D. 657 ; 46 L. T. 802 ; 30 W. R. 787.

b. By Wife to Husband.

Evidence.]—Gift by wife to husband of her separate estate is not to be inferred without clear evidence, nor on the other hand against the husband a gift to her separate use. Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 369 ; 7 R. R. 227.

—— Law of Scotland.]—By the law of Scotland, as well as by that of England, a married woman may make an effectual gift of her separate income to her husband ; with this difference, that by Scotch law she has the privilege of revoking the donation, even after her husband's death, and reclaiming the subject of her gift in so far as it had not been consumed. The same circumstances which are in England held to imply donations between husband and wife are sufficient to sustain a similar inference in Scotland. Edward v. Cheyne, 13 App. Cas. 385—H. L. (Sc.)

Separate Estate—Shares—Receipt by Husband—Presumption of Gift.]—A testator, who died in 1860, bequeathed a portion of the residue of his personal estate to his daughter, a married woman, for her separate use. Shares in certain companies were allotted to her in respect of this bequest, which shares were transferred by the executor of the will into the name of her husband. In 1862 a deed of release was given to the executor, which was executed both by the husband and the wife. The testator's daughter and her husband lived together on affectionate terms until 1884, when the husband died, having by his will bequeathed to his wife a legacy, and given her a life interest in all his property. During the whole of the time from 1860 to 1884 the husband received the dividends on the shares. He kept very careful books of account, from which it appeared that he did not pay the dividends to his wife, although he did pay to her the dividends of certain other property, which also belonged to her for her separate use. Before 1862 the shares were always referred to in the books as having originally belonged to the wife, but this mode of reference was discontinued after that date. The wife died in 1884, a few days after her husband, and the question, was, whether the shares, which still remained in specie, formed part of her estate or of that of her husband :—Held, that the mere transfer of the shares into the name of the husband was not per se evidence of a gift thereof to him ; that the burden lay upon those who represented him to show that the wife had given him the shares, which burden they had not discharged ; and that, therefore, the shares must be treated as forming part of the wife's estate. Curtis, In re, Hawes v. Curtis, 52 L. T. 244.

3. By Wife to Stranger.

A wife, though living apart from her husband, cannot lawfully dispose by gift (even accompanied by actual delivery of possession) of chattels acquired by her during the coverture. But, in an action by the donee against a wrongdoer, for the conversion of chattels so given, it is not competent to him to set up the title of the husband. Bourne v. Fosbrooke, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 515 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 164 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 202 ; 13 W. R. 497.

4. Advancement.

To whom Doctrine applies.]—This presumption will arise where a purchase is made in the name of a wife, a legitimate child, or a grandchild whose father is dead, and also upon a purchase in the name of an illegitimate child. Soar v. Foster, 4 K. & J. 152 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 406 ; 6 W. R. 265.

Chase.]—A. purchases a walk in a chase, and takes the patent to himself and to his wife, and J. S., during their lives and the life of the survivor. The wife decreed the benefit of the patent during her life, but after her death J. S. to be a trustee for the executor. Kingdon v. Bridges, 2 Vern. 67.

Mortgage and Bonds.]—Husband lends out money in the names of himself and his wife, upon mortgages and bonds ; the wife is entitled to this by survivorship, if there are assets sufficient without this to pay debts. Christ's Hosp. v. Budgin, 2 Vern. 683.

Bankruptcy of Husband.]—Purchase in joint names of husband and wife by trader, afterwards a bankrupt, is void against creditors. Glaister v. Hewer, 9 Ves. 12 ; 8 Ves. 195 ; 11 Ves. 377.

Money in Funds—Will.]—A husband transferred money in the funds into the joint names of himself and wife, for the purpose of making a provision for her ; and by his will he bequeathed to his wife a life interest in "all his property that he was in possession of" :—Held, that the stock did not pass. Low v. Carter, 1 Beav. 426.

Death before Completion.]—A. directed his bankers to invest money in the joint names of himself and wife. The bankers purchased by their brokers the day before, but the transfer was not made till the day after the death of A. :—Held, that the wife was entitled to the stock by survivorship. Vance v. Vance, 1 Beav. 605.

Purchase after Will.]—A husband transferred 4 per cent. and 5 per cent. stock, the whole of his funded property, into the joint names of himself and his wife. By his will he gave interest of all his funded property upon trust to his wife for life, and after her decease upon trust to pay legacies which took most of the 4 per cent. stock. He afterwards made some further purchases of 5 per cent. stock in the joint names of himself and his wife, and died leaving no other funded property :—Held, first, that all the stock standing in the joint names, whether transferred before or after the will, became, by survivorship, the absolute property of the wife ; secondly, that the will did not put the wife to her election. Dummer v. Pitcher, 2 Myl. & K. 262 ; Coop. t. Brough. 257. Affirming 5 Sim. 35.

Promissory Note—Debt.] — A. holding a promissory note from B. for a debt, directed B. to transfer it to A. and his wife, expressing an intention to benefit his wife, and he cancelled the note and took a fresh one to him and his wife :—Held, that the debt belonged to the wife. Gosling v. Gosling, 3 Drew. 335.

Power of Attorney to Wife.]—Money was invested in the funds in the joint names of husband and wife, and the wife, by power of attorney from the husband, sold out a portion, and with his knowledge kept it in her own custody till his death :—Held, that the portion which remained in the joint names survived to the wife, but the other portion, which was sold out by her, formed part of his personal estate. Gadbury, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 780 ; 11 W. R. 895.

Purchase-money not Paid.]—M. contracted to purchase freeholds in the names of himself and wife, and died before the whole of the purchase-money was paid or a conveyance executed :—Held, that the contract was in the nature of advancement to the wife ; and that the doctrine of advancement applied to the unpaid purchase-money, and upon payment the vendors would become trustees for the widow. Drew v. Martin, 2 H. & M. 130 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 367 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 356 ; 3 N. R. 637 ; 10 L. T. 291 ; 12 W. R. 547.

A purchase by way of advancement is not within the 27 Eliz. c. 4. Ib.

Banking Accounts.]—A man for years lodged money in two banks on deposit receipts, some of which were in his own name, and others in the joint names of himself and of his wife, and he frequently changed deposits already made in his own name into their joint names :—Held, that the joint lodgments were advancements for the wife, who survived. Talbot v. Cody, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 138.

Receipts in the joint names of husband and wife at law and in equity considered. Ib.

A husband transferred his banking account into the joint names of himself and his wife, and directed the bankers to honour cheques drawn either by himself or by his wife. All cheques were drawn by the wife at the direction of her husband, and the proceeds were applied in payment of household and other expenses :—Held, that the transfer of the account was not intended to be a provision for the wife, but merely a mode of conveniently managing her husband's affairs ; and consequently that she was not entitled. Marshall v. Crutwell, 44 L. J., Ch. 504 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 328.
